Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE need scarcely ask the special attention of the reader to the editorial communication on "The Crisis in Greece" which appears on a subsequent page. Owing to the important current events with which it deals, we have given it precedence of insertion over a letter already in type which refers to an earlier portion of the cruise of the Midnight Sun.

The Editor's letter affords a view of matters, bearing upon the European crisis, which will supplement the information given in the daily press. The prevailing opinion of the people of this nation, we judge, will be entirely in favour of the utmost consideration being extended at this juncture by the Great Powers to Greece. While we cannot for a moment doubt that the sympathies of the British Government are all in favour of freeing the Cretan subjects of the unspeakable Turk from the galling yoke under which they have so long suffered, there seems a danger lest, as a nation, we should be involved in coercing Greece by force of arms. Against such a causeless crime as that, every true Christian patriot must pray and protest.

The eminently wise and conciliatory reply of the Hellenistic Cabinet to the Collective Note of the Powers, opens the door for a righteous way of escape from the present embroglio. The Powers, conscious of their overwhelming strength, can well afford to disregard any fancied slight to their amour propre. Let them invoke the aid of the Greek forces in Crete to restore order, and let them consult the Cretan people, as Greece suggests, with respect to the ultimate government of the island. Such a course will conserve present peace, and satisfy the just aspirations of a sorely oppressed people. No man can truly say that in this case God is on the side of the strongest battalions.

When the terrible massacre of Christian missionaries took place in China in 1895 loud and indignant protests against "a shameful and useless waste of life" were raised by the secular press and by some of its correspondents. The families of the martyrs, the hearts most sorely stricken, did not complain, but gave thanks amid their tears. The churches did not complain, but set to work to fill the vacant places, and not only filled them but sent forth more labourers than had fallen. Now comes the letter of Dr. Griffith John, which we published last week, showing how completely the faith and devotion of the Church have been justified. But, unfortunately, the outside world will know nothing of this news; the secular press will not copy it from our columns; and the old lessons, taught by all persecutions from the days of the apostles until now, will not make their due impression. But the workers at home "observe these things," and will trust afresh the faithfulness and love of God. The work of the Lord is to be carried on as in his eye, and not as before men.

Mr. McKinley has touched the hearts of the English people by his remarks on arbitration and peace, in his address to his own nation; and they will watch with keen interest his attempts to realise his ideal. He has his foot on the solid ground of principle when he says that "arbitration is the true method of settlement for international, as well as local or individual, differences." The Senate, which has denied the retiring President the satisfaction of seeing the ratification of the international treaty between this country and the United States, can hardly refuse to hear the new President, who urges upon it early action, "not merely as a matter of policy, but as a duty to mankind." He points out that this treaty presents to the world an example of reason and peace certain to be followed by others, and that the good results of its ratification can hardly be overestimated. It is to be trusted that the new President may persuade the Senate to confirm the treaty.

Dr. Mackennal has been calling attention to the difference there often is between the meagre results gathered in ordinary congregations and the rich results which reward workers in forward movements among the people. He thinks that one of the surest ways to diminish one's faith in the power of the Gospel is to join a wealthy middle-class congregation, while the surest way to have it increased is to work in connection with some live forward movement. His remarks are timely and true; but why are congregations too often content with the humdrum routine of so many regular services per week? Or, rather, are they content with them? Some members are, no doubt, or the thing would not go on; nevertheless we are confident that a large number, and those the best, are not content. It is the worldly few who bar the way, the men who will say when they see the poor crowding in: "Yes; an increase, but of what sort? Penny people." The churches must free themselves from this influence wherever it exists, and at all costs.

A correspondent to a contemporary, draws attention to the deplorable condition of many Christian ministers who find themselves out of a charge, burdened by a large family, and entirely without means of livelihood. He suggests that the time has come for a self-help Society, whose resources would be available for such cases. Many cases of this kind happen owing to illness and other unavoidable causes, and there are no existing institutions whose funds are available for such contingencies. It would be difficult to exaggerate the quiet heroism of many ministers and their families when reduced to abject want by temporary loss of work, and there ought to be some way of relief other than by appealing to Christian charity. With due care in administration, a self-help fund would be an unspeakable boon, and relieve those who would benefit by it from any taint of dependence on the goodwill of other Christian people.

The urgent needs of the London Hospitals are powerfully expressed in two advertisements, one following the other, in the daily papers. University College Hospital advertises its present debt to bankers and tradesmen as exceeding £9,900. This debt will presumably be making fresh debt, for the money will not be advanced for nothing. The Middlesex Hospital, W., announces an ordinary income of £20,055 2s. 4d., whilst the ordinary expenditure reached £80,407 19s. 11d. At this rate our public charities will soon have to close their doors. The Prince of Wales's fund is being formed at the nick of time to save them, and we are glad to see it is receiving liberal support. Happily it is being drawn, to a large extent, from sources which are not already well taxed for ordinary religious and philanthropic work. If it develops as well as it has begun, it will prove a great addition to London's resources for aiding her suffering poor.

The startling announcement that a discovery has just been made on the scene of the work of the Egyptian Exploration Fund of the so-called Logia or "discourses" of our Lord, is one of interest to all students of Scripture, and may lead to the final settlement of not a few vexed questions of speculation. Every recent "find" of lost ancient works has tended to the establishment of the authenticity of the Gospels, and the refutation of sceptical conclusions. If this discovery is that of Papias's missing "Exposition of the Logia of the Lord" it will dispose of not a few wild and doubtful theories, built on the fact that no trace has been preserved, except by tradition, of this important work. Since Papias is known to have illustrated the "sayings" of Jesus with first-hand reports from people who had seen and heard Him, this recovered treasure may contain priceless information of a date earlier than what is contained in extant literature, and throw much light on the Gospels. The world will wait with eagerness for further news of this remarkable discovery.

In Professor Rendel Harris's "Letters from Armenia" (Nisbet), we are forcibly reminded of the sorrows of that unhappy country, which we are in danger of forgetting in the turmoil in Crete. The familiar story is retold of the infamous misrule and cruelty of the Turkish Government, but the revelations made by Professor Harris of the corruption of the European press, and of the widespread bribery of journalists by the Sultan, reveals a phase of the question that should have special attention in this country. It is humiliating in the extreme to learn that though our own press is mainly free of this infamy, there has been an Englishman at Constantinople who has received large sums to contradict the accounts of massacres published in English newspapers. Fortunately, this has had no appreciable effect here, but it throws a strong light on the mystery of the attitude of the Continental press, which has kept the nations practically ignorant of the real state of things. Where the trouble has been suppressed, it is no wonder that human sympathy and moral indignation has been conspicuous by its absence.

The Rock gives prominence to a letter from a gentleman to Mr. A. J. Balfour on the subject of education, in which the writer adduces evidence of the Romish nature of much of the teaching given in public and elementary schools, called "voluntary schools," and asks whether it is unreasonable that a demand should be made for the protection of children from such teaching? This "lay member of and earnest worker in connection with the Church of England" protests against public funds being used "for subsidising any such poison, as an act of injustice to those who hold the supreme authority of the Word of God apart from other formularies." The Rock itself rightly says that the opposition to the making of any further grants to denominational schools is because the laity have not the power to prevent these schools from being used as hot-beds of Romanism. If they are not saved from this, it believes that "eventual extinction will certainly overtake them at no distant date, even though the present Grant-in-Aid Bill be forced through by the Government." These candid words from a friend should awaken serious thought amongst those who, while Churchmen, have certainly no wish to propagate Romish teaching. Is it not a fact that on all essential points, and, generally speaking, the religious teaching of the Board Schools is quite equal to all that can be reasonably imposed on young people of a school age?

Public Opinion.

LET us not be slow to acknowledge our debt to public opinion. Certainly it is an obstacle to the young or timid Christian, but it is a powerful deterrent from sin. It shames wickedness into hiding her face. It compels, at least, to outward morality. Bring public opinion to bear on an abuse, and often it will slink away from sight. Though present, surely it is some gain that it shall not openly stalk abroad. Thus many are shielded from temptation, restrained from the rapids of iniquity. The world is looking at them. They have a character as yet to maintain. They are ashamed to sin.

A young man leaves his quiet native village, and is swallowed up in a great city. At home he was known, and every action was marked. In London he is a stranger. He plunges into follies, from which the public opinion of his old home restrained him. Another is placed in some mushroom city, where as yet lawlessness rules. Then can be seen how powerful was the restraining hand of public opinion in England. He acts like the rest, even though he lay aside his habits when he returns to the old country.

But public opinion fails. It gives the man whom it influences no support. He who follows it has no real principle to guide him. He changes as often as the opinions around him change. Public opinion is fickle. He becomes fickle, too. It is not the fear of God, but the fear of men, which keeps him from open sin. The god of many is public opinion. They seek out the respectable level around them, and descend to it. The Bible might not exist, nor the standard which Jesus Christ set up. They consider, not what God commands, but what their neighbours think, and, when they cannot please both, they give preference to the latter, being led by public opinion, not by principle.

Our duty is plain. We must rise superior to public opinion. It must not influence us, but we must mould it. The Christian should recognise what a mighty power it might be for good, and endeavour by every lawful means to lift it to a high level.

This can be accomplished by the Press. Here is a mighty tool wherewith to form a healthy public opinion. If you cannot use the pen, then spread broadcast papers which uphold truth and the right.

It must be done by the Pulpit. Let preachers rise superior to any influences which would close their mouths, and elevate public opinion, by boldly uttering the truth.

It can be raised by Personal Influence. The mass of Christians, if united, could soon direct, and at last control, public opinion in this country. If public opinion is the pulse of the nations, we must see that it beats true upon public matters of moral and spiritual concern. If we wish for a change in the policy, there must be a change in the pulse; and in regenerating public opinion every Christian should take part. Shall the voice of the people be the voice of God, or the voice of the devil? The people decide our national policy. Let us, therefore, train them that they may decide aright. H. D. Lampen.

Letter from Mr. Moody.

MY Dear Lord Kinnaird,—Through you I wish to extend my most sincere thanks to the friends in Great Britain for their expression of love and fellowship on the sixtieth anniversary of my birthday. There is no greater earthly blessing than a wealth of friends, and no greater honour than the knowledge of their confidence and esteem. My associations with the Christians of Great Britain have always been cherished as a most sacred privilege, and this added kindness is but another token of the love which the Master is ever bestowing upon me.

The chapel at Mount Hermon will stand upon a promontory overlooking the Connecticut Valley and my native town. My earnest prayer is that God will so hallow it that there may ever radiate from the teaching within its walls influences which may be felt to the uttermost parts of the world, and be lasting as Eternity itself.

Let me say, in closing, that I hope to visit your country again some day; but if not, I shall trust to see all the friends who have toiled with me in the blessed work of the Master in a brighter, and better, world.—With much love to all, your true friend,

Boston, Feb. D. L. Moody.

Out and Out Mission, Old Ford Road.—We have secured a piece of land for our mission work among the poor in the district of Old Ford. We have a population of about ninety thousand people, of which not more than seven or eight thousand attend any place of worship. We have for some years tried to remedy this by going out in the open air to tell them about our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and we have reason to believe many have been blessed. We have also carried on meetings for adults and children in the little mission room in Appian Road, Roman Road, but this room has become too small. The building we propose to erect is at the back of 363, Old Ford Road, and the entrance will be from Usher Road. The building will be 35 feet deep, and 17 feet broad, and will hold about 150 people. The cost for materials will be about £60, of which we have in hand £30. We have men in the mission belonging to various skilled trades who have offered their services to erect the building free of cost. Address, The Secretary Out and Out Mission, 363, Old Ford, E. O. F.

Mr. Meyer's American Visit.

TO a large company of friends at Aldersgate-street, Rev. F. B. Meyer gave, on Monday at noon, a deeply impressive account of his recent visit to the States. So far as our readers are concerned, the statement was substantially forestalled by the brief letters we have given from Mr. Meyer's pen. He expressed the conviction that if he had never been enabled to do anything else in the world than this bit of service he should have lived to good purpose. In a letter received a few days ago Mr. Moody had said that time would never tell the results of that fortnight in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

The movement has been prepared for, said Mr. Meyer, by past failure, dissatisfaction, and a consciousness of need. For many years the American pulpit has been much given to sensational as opposed to textual or expository preaching. Such preachers have left the clear crystal waters of the Word of God, and have largely given to their people the muddy waters of political and social discussion. There has also been a growing spirit of worldliness on the part of the churches, and the introduction of elements which we in this country would taboo as unworthy of God's service. Of course, the whole of the American pulpit and pew has not been thus lowered in tone, but the tendency has been to adopt these and other spurious methods of arousing church interest. With this there has been a prejudice against teaching on holiness, produced to some extent by the promulgation of exaggerated and unsound views on that subject.

After some references to the growing influence exercised throughout America by the Northfield Conferences and the recent teaching there on the spiritual life, Mr. Meyer alluded to Mr. Moody's late campaign in New York and Boston as a further preparatory element in the latest developments. The evangelist has sought mainly to arouse the churches to a sense of their privileges and responsibilities; while he has also attacked the prominent evils of society in the most uncompromising fashion.

Passing on to his brief stay in Boston, Mr. Meyer described the large audiences which he was enabled to address in Tremont Temple and elsewhere. At the close of the general gathering he met some 400 ministers, who closely questioned him as to certain aspects of his teaching, and his answers were deemed satisfactory. Then all united in earnest prayer to God for the enduement of the Holy Spirit. The speaker said he believed that night would prove the beginning of a new era in the lives of many beloved ministerial brethren in Boston. The experiences of New York were of a similarly remarkable kind. Into the great Carnegie Hall were gathered vast congregations, embracing "the best people" of the city. It was stated that seven millionaires were present on one occasion. The area was reserved for over 500 ministers, all of whom were most brotherly and sympathetic to the visitor. At a closing assemblage of ministers again Mr. Meyer was freely questioned, he was able to cast Scriptural light on the difference between such opposing views as "daily dying to self" and "the death of self"—which latter he declared to be utter rubbish, and entirely opposed to God's Word. Again there was a waiting humbly before God for the fulness of the Holy Ghost.

The two days' subsequent meetings at Philadelphia were perhaps still more encouraging and full of promise for the future of the American churches. For the moment the religious interest in the land has been shifted from the conversion of the worldlings to the reviving of the Christian life. But the other will come in due time. Meantime, pastors and people alike are being brought back to God and to Pentecost. This is as greatly needed to-day in England as in America.

Christian Life-Boat Crew.—"I will bless the Lord at all times," was the subject of the speeches delivered at the last muster of the Christian Life-Boat Crew at Miss Child's Welcome Home in Ratcliff Highway. Several who had come in for the first time into the Fo'c's'le felt deeply their need of salvation. Miss Child asked prayer for the opening of a new mission by one of the crew at Sheerness-on-Sea, and for a new effort among the Dutch seamen frequenting the port of London.

The Cross of Jesus Christ.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

THE New Testament presents a beautiful and sublime system of ethics; it also presents a beautiful and heaven-born fabric of theology; and they are interdependent. The Christ is a living model for pure and holy living; He is the Divine Teacher who reveals the thoughts of God to us. But He is more than our Model, He is more than our Master; He is our Saviour. "Thou shalt call his name JESUS, for He shall save his people from their sins." He came to earth to seek and to save the lost, and this only could be accomplished by the Cross of Calvary. No example that He has set for us, however faultless, no teachings that fell from his lips, however sublime, could save the meanest soul that lies under the condemnation of sin. The creed of all true Christians, of whatever name, was condensed by Dr. Ray Palmer into just three lines:

My faith looks up to Thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary,
Saviour Divine!

Good Christianity means cross-bearing for our Master; good preaching means cross-lifting before the eyes of all men. "And I," said the loving Redeemer, "if I be lifted up will draw all men unto Me." How unwarranted is the assertion that Jesus preached chiefly a Divine system of ethics, but did not make prominent the Atonement, or the salvation of sinners by his Cross! From the manger of Bethlehem, every footstep of Jesus moves straight toward that Cross; his whole earthly mission converges there. After the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, the only Gospel that was preached was the Gospel of atoning blood. It was the keynote of the mightiest human preacher that ever trod our globe. Whatever else Paul omitted, he never omitted the "faithful saying, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." When recalling his ministry among the Corinthians he reminded them that he was determined not to know anything among them save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. In an ecstasy of self-forgetful adoration he cries out: "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world!" Toward that Cross his finger constantly pointed; beside it he loved to linger.

And the central theme of the great Apostle's teaching has been the central theme of the greatest preachers the world has ever known. No story has such power to move and melt and change the hearts of men as the story of the Cross. "No mother ever sang it over the pillow of her babe without tenderness; no child ever read it without a throbbing heart; no living man can peruse it with utter indifference; and no dying man ever listened to it without emotion. The Cross will be remembered when everything else in the history of this earth is forgotten."

I am fully persuaded that the most effectual antidote to the current scepticism is to present the incarnate Son of God, and with the omnipotence of the Holy Spirit to press his claims. The crucified Saviour is the only cure for infidelity. Brethren in the ministry! cut that truth as with the pen of a diamond on your heart, and on your sermons. No sceptic can out-general you on that ground. If you can get him there, and hold him there, the Cross of Christ may conquer him. Exalt the Cross! God has hung the destiny of the race upon it. Other things we may do in the realm of ethics, and on the lines of philanthropic reforms; but our main duty converges into setting that one glorious beacon of salvation, Calvary's Cross, before the gaze of every immortal soul.

Brooklyn, N.Y.

Ministries of Daily Life.

Every day and every hour,
Every gift and every power,
Consecrate to Him alone
Who hath claimed you for his own.

IS it not the heart-wish of every true Christian that the music of his life should be in harmony with his profession as a follower of Christ? We cannot all stand in the front rank in the battle-field of service for our King; but each can live the Christ-life by fulfilling faithfully and lovingly the small ministries of every-day life. "Ye are my witnesses," said Christ, and as He came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," so we may by service for others show that we belong to Him. If our hearts are full of love to Jesus, we shall be willing to take the lowliest forms of service: a smile of encouragement or a tear of sympathy will not be lost upon those who receive them.

Each drop uncounted in a storm of rain
Hath its own mission.

Many are the needy ones around us, to whom the friendly clasp of a sympathetic hand, or a kindly deed of thoughtfulness, would be as dew in a hot and weary land. Let not our thoughts be so much of getting help and profit for ourselves as of what good we can bring into some other life. Let us pass on what we have learned in our daily companionship with Jesus, and experienced of his love. It may inspire some soul with a desire to have more intimate communion with Christ, and to press forward less fearfully in the heavenly race.

Then may we not, like Peter, cast a healing shadow on the sick and sorrowful. Our Lord cares very specially for these. We must follow in his steps and let his love shine through us. We have his promise:—"The works that I do ye shall do also."

A very sweet ministry is that of song; those endowed with the "gift" hold a trust to be used for Jesus—

Sing of the gentle Saviour
In the simplest hymns you know,
And the pain-dimmed eye will brighten,
As the soothing verses flow.
Better than loudest plaudits,
The murmured thanks of such;
For the King will stoop to crown them
With his gracious "Inasmuch."

Witness for Christ in this way, those of you who can. Your voice is lent to you to use for Him; place it at his disposal, and He will open opportunities for you to make known to others what He has done for you. A dear sister, now gone to her rest, often spent a bright hour in singing the Gospel to the aged inmates in the union wards. The joy she gave was not greater than that she received, from the consciousness that she was using her God-given gift to his honour and praise.

Who does not recognise the beauty of friendship? We value the friend who thinks of us, prays for us, and writes to us loving, helpful letters. Can we not be such a friend to at least one sad or lonely heart? It may help them to understand something of that divine friendship that brings such gladness into our lives. How is it that so many Christians seem to forget the injunction, "Be courteous," and exhibit an unfriendliness that chills one like an icicle? If we remembered that our influence affects for good or ill everyone with whom we come in contact; that we either help or hinder, just in proportion as we bring sunshine or shadow to those around us, surely it would lead to greater suavity of manner, and a desire to win by love, rather than repel by coldness. It is pitiful to see unloveliness in those who profess to be Christ's. Arrogance, pride, selfishness, discontent, are weeds that should never grow in the Lord's garden.

Let us ever bear in mind that the strength we need and the power to do any service for Christ come from Himself. Therefore, we must lay aside everything that would hinder our quiet hours with Him when we sit at his feet and learn of Him. The fragrance of his presence will then be with us, and his power will work in us to will and to do those things that are pleasing to Him. May our eyes be ever watchful, and our hands ready to do the bidding of our King. M. B.

Revival in Guastalla.

ON the right bank of the Po lies the beautiful little city of Guastalla, in the province of Reggio Emilia. The inhabitants are industrious, bright, and generally speaking liberal.

As a means of bringing back the population of this town into the fold of the "holy Mother Church," the Roman Catholic Bishop sent, last November, three missioners, who did nothing but utter the greatest exaggerations for more than a month. Our brethren in Guastalla are gentle, quiet, and respectable, but were nevertheless insulted by these three missioners with every sort of infamy. Hence it was decided to hold a course of meetings to let the citizens of Guastalla know who we are and what we desire for the good of Italy. The ex-priest Rev. C. Barana commenced to confute the clerical accusations, and not without success. In order to give to these meetings a more marked direction and public interest, it was thought well to hold them in some larger and more central place than the Waldensian Church. Meanwhile the large hall of the Caffe Victoria Emanuele was courteously conceded, free of charge, by the proprietor for the purpose.

The first meeting, having as subject "The Priest and Society," was well attended. The second, the following evening, was entitled "Jesus of Nazareth," and drew a larger audience still, whilst the listeners were attentive, respectful, and warm in their applause. Among those present were the delegates of public security, gendarmes, municipal councillors, and others in authority, as well as a few priests. The next evening "The Power of the Great Keys" was announced as the title of the discourse, and, notwithstanding snow and rain and very inclement weather, again a very large audience filled the hall, many coming from the villages round, necessitating a walk of three and sometimes even eight miles. In fact, it was a real anti-Romanist revival.

But a larger place in which to hold the meetings became necessary. The Municipal Theatre had already been sought for, and was now courteously conceded. On Dec. 20, three meetings took place—the morning service in the Waldensian Church, where many strangers sat side by side with the members; the afternoon service in the Municipal Theatre, where the subject treated was "Let the Dead Speak." It is impossible to describe the aspect which the public presented. Many were obliged to turn away, although the theatre would hold comfortably 2500 persons. The subject of the discourse was chosen as a refutation of the false accusations of the before-mentioned three missionary priests, who threw all the guilt of the persecutions and atrocities of the Inquisition on the kings and the princes, declaring that the Popes and the priests were innocent of these crimes. The subject—which was the protest of the martyrs of liberty, of thought, of conscience, and of country—was one of keenest interest, and brought forth great enthusiasm from the audience. What a beautiful sight was that great sea of faces, from all the country round, and who that same morning had attended mass and listened to the basest calumnies of the priests against the Evangelicals—now hanging on the words of the Evangelical pastor, and declaring afterwards that they had never listened to such before in all their lives.

Will the friends of Italy remember our missions there, and especially the Guastalla religious movement, at the Throne of Grace.

(Rev.) O. GOLIA-MAURO.

Clyde Park, Redland, Bristol.

God the Holy Ghost.

AN ADDRESS

By Professor A. McCAIG, B.A., LL.D.

THE subject of which I have briefly to treat is a very important one; it is highly desirable that we should have a right understanding of the Scriptural testimony concerning the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity. Many titles are given to the Third Person, in the Scriptures, the most common being "the Spirit," "the Spirit of God," "the Spirit of Christ," "the Holy Spirit," "the Holy Ghost." Of course, you know that the phrase "Holy Ghost" is exactly the same as "Holy Spirit," "Ghost" being the old English word for "Spirit"; we use the word now, mainly, when speaking of a disembodied spirit, a supposed visitant from the other world—a ghost. We still use it, however, in such expressions as "giving up the ghost," and, figuratively, "the ghost of a chance," etc. The adjective "ghostly" used to be very common, and is not yet quite obsolete—as ghostly (spiritual) father, ghostly counsellor, applied to a priest. The American Revisers have given the expression Holy Spirit in every passage where our version has Holy Ghost.

I am not going to give you a theological disquisition about the doctrine of the Trinity. We believe it without trying to explain it. The child who can intelligently read his Bible may know almost as much about that mysterious theme, as the most philosophic theologian. The doctrine is revealed in the Word, and faith accepts it. My business is to speak to you of the Personality and Divinity of the Spirit.

I.—HIS PERSONALITY.

Some have contended that the Spirit is only an influence, a power, but his Personality is proved in various ways.

1. Personal pronouns are used in describing him. Christ says, "I will send Him unto you; He will teach you all things; I will pray the Father, and He will send you another Comforter, that He may be with you for ever." (Here He is distinguished as a person from the Father who sends, and from the Son who prays the Father to send Him). In Acts xiii. 2 we read: "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Such language can only rightly apply to a person. An influence, an abstract power, or a lifeless thing might be personified—as we speak of "justice bearing the sword," "virtue being its own reward," of "the trees clapping their hands," "the earth rejoicing," etc; but we easily understand that these are figurative and poetical expressions, but it is in the plainest statements of truth that you find the Spirit so described, it is no poetry but simple fact. Of course the operations of the Spirit are sometimes set forth in figurative language, and He is compared to Fire, to Wind, to Water, &c., and the thought of His influence or power is then made prominent; but in such passages as i. Cor. xii., 4-11, the gifts and influences of the Spirit are expressly distinguished from Himself.

Some of you may have noticed or had it mentioned to you as an objection that in certain passages neuter pronouns are used of the Spirit, Rom. viii. 16, "the Spirit itself beareth witness;" viii. 26, "the Spirit itself maketh intercession;" 1 Peter i., 11, "the Spirit of Christ...it testified beforehand." You may think that as we use neuter pronouns of things without life, these passages suggest that the Spirit cannot be a person. You know that our language makes a proper division as to gender, male creatures being classified as masculine, females as feminine, and lifeless objects as neuter; but you must not suppose that is strictly the case in all other languages. Some of you are learning French, and you are aware that in that language there are only two genders, masculine and feminine. Perhaps some of you are studying German, and you have found that the division in that language is not nearly so exact as in English. For instance, "stick" is masculine, "pen" is feminine, and, strange to say, "child" is neuter. Now in the Greek language, while generally the names of male creatures are masculine, and female feminine, many words take their gender from their particular form. Thus the word for Spirit, Pneuma, like all words with the same termination, is neuter, and so in strict grammatical order you have the pronouns referring to it in the neuter also; but that does not at all prove that what is signified by the word Pneuma is without life. Indeed, those very passages where you find "itself" and "it" used proclaim the personality, since the Spirit is represented as doing personal work, bearing witness, interceding, testifying. It is further worthy of notice that in those great passages descriptive of the Spirit, John, 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters, while in some you have the neuter pronouns in the Greek, though generally the masculine is given in the English, in others you get the masculine in the Greek. Specially notice John xvi. 13, 14: "When He, the Spirit of Truth, is come...He shall glorify Me." So prominent is the thought of the Personality that the sacred writer departs from the strict grammatical order, and makes the pronoun agree, not with the neuter names of the Spirit, but with the living person indicated by the name.

2. Personal properties are ascribed to Him. A person is an individual having conscious rational existence, and the distinctive properties of a person are knowing, feeling, willing, acting. A stone or a tree cannot know or feel; an influence cannot. The Holy Spirit is constantly represented as an individual existence.

(a) He knows. Many passages show this, e.g., 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11, "The Spirit searcheth...the things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God." 1 Cor. xii. 8, "the word of knowledge by the same Spirit." Acts xv. 28, "it seemed good to the Holy Ghost." Rom. viii. 27, "the mind of the Spirit."

(b) He feels. Rom. xv. 30, "The love of the Spirit; Isa. lxiii. 10, "They rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit," etc., etc.

(c) He wills. 1 Cor. xii. 11, "The selfsame Spirit dividing to every man severally as He will."

(d) He acts. 1 Cor. xii. 11, "But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit;" and so all the passages which speak of the offices and operations of the Spirit. It may be added here, that the statements about the Spirit assuming a visible form, as a dove at the baptism of Christ, tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost, are in keeping with the idea of His Personality. We cannot suppose a mere influence or an abstract power taking an outward form.

3. Personal relations exist between Him and men. (a) Believers are baptized into his name (Matt. xxviii. 19), indicating belief in Him, union with Him, dependence upon Him, obedience to him.

(b) He dwells in believers (John xiv. 17; 1 Cor. iii. 16; Rom. viii. 11; 2 Tim. i. 14, etc.) The dwelling in each case indicates, not simply the presence of an influence, but the actual abiding of an individual, personal inhabitant.

(c) Men may blaspheme and speak against Him (Matt. xii. 31, 32; Mark iii. 29). You cannot blaspheme an influence or speak against an abstract power. In these peculiarly solemn passages it is evident that the Holy Ghost is as really a person who may be spoken against as is the "Son of Man," mentioned in the same connection.

(d) Men may lie to the Holy Ghost.—Acts v. 3. "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost."

(e) Men may tempt Him.—Acts v. 9. "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?" We cannot speak of lying to an influence; of tempting, provoking an abstract power.

(f) Men may grieve Him.—Eph. 4. 30, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God." You can grieve only a person, and perhaps we may say, only a person who loves you; you may enrage, or annoy, or mortify an enemy, or an indifferent one, but it is a friend who feels grieved when you do wrong.

(To be Concluded.)

Priestism in Ireland.

BY means of the spread of education and the earnest, prayerful work of evangelists, light is dawning once more on our beloved Ireland. Day by day the power of the priests is waning, and they are now making every possible effort to keep hold on the reins which are slipping through their fingers. Only those who live in close intercourse with Irish peasantry can have the least idea of the tyranny which is exercised over these poor people by their "clergy."

Although schools under the National Board o Education are strictly undenominational, no mother dare send her children to be taught by anyone but a Romanist, and the poor little ones are forced by the priests to trudge many weary miles, suffering in health and happiness, in order to attend the school which they patronise. Those who cannot go so far remain in utter ignorance—"better darkness than light which might reveal too much" is the priests' maxim. A poor widow lately told me with tears of earnestness how God's Word was the very joy and comfort of her life. "My daughter keeps the Gospels hidden by day," she said, "because they would be stolen from her if anyone knew we had them; but, when night comes and the door is shut, we light our lamp and read for hours." She proved the truth of her statement by the knowledge she had gained in the Scriptures during these secret studies.

Even Poor Law Guardians, when Romanists bring pressure to bear on those who receive relief from the Local Government Board. I know of a penniless delicate widow with two children being threatened with the warning that her weekly pittance would be withdrawn unless she obeyed the priest's directions more implicitly, and showed herself "a better Catholic."

A lady who kindly visited the sufferers in an infirmary and workhouse, and ventured to read aloud amusing books in order to lighten the pain and weariness of illness and want, has suffered from the priest's anger. After much public discomfort, she has been forbidden by the authorities to continue her labour of love, though we may notice that no volume even touching on religion was ever introduced by her, her sole aim being to distract the attention of the patients from their troubles.

Sometimes the priests, in their eagerness, overreach themselves and defeat their own aims. A friend of mine, brought up a Romanist, married a Protestant gentleman, and in course of time a little son was born. When Mrs. L—— came downstairs for the first time, Father M—— hastened to visit her and admire the young heir.

"You must have this fine boy baptized at once, and bring him up a 'holy Roman,' to the glory of our Lady and the Mother Church, Mrs. L——."

"I cannot do anything without my husband's leave," she replied. "You had better see him yourself and tell him your wishes."

"When could I see Mr. L——? The child ought to have been baptized long ago."

"My husband is called away by business tomorrow, but this evening he will be at home."

The priest's face brightened. "I tell you what we will do, then. Just wait until Mr. L—— is safely off, and then I will baptize the child a Catholic at once, and you need say nothing about it."

Without another word Mrs. L—— rang her bell for the servant to "show his reverence the door." "I will not have our son received into a Church which teaches a wife to deceive her husband," she said briefly, and next day a Protestant clergyman baptized the child.

Many a sad case rises up before me, but the few I have mentioned may show that we are still in the heat of battle. This will, I trust, lead to more earnest prayer and effort that poor Ireland may be speedily brought "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

An Irish Deaconess.

With the "Midnight Sun."

THE CRISIS IN GREECE.

GREECE is a country of supreme interest just now. The eyes of the world are upon her, for she is the pivot on which the destinies of Christendom, and even of the world, may turn. All thinking men must feel, and to a great extent sympathise with, the difficulties with which "the Powers" have to contend. Their diplomatists inherit the consequences of the mistakes of their forefathers, as well as of their own. They have not only the conflicting interests of each country to consider, but several conflicting interests in each country—the interests of capital and labour, of commerce and finance, and, not least, of Christianity and Mohammedanism.

The Times and other papers speak contemptuously of Greece as an inconsiderable trifle in European politics; but a little country has often exercised a decisive influence, and turned the balance between peace and war. Men and nations that are not afraid to die must exercise such an influence. A Christian in a prominent position at Athens said to me, "We certainly shall fight to the death, rather than that Crete, which naturally and geographically belongs to Greece, shall be put under the Protectorate of Austria and the suzerainty of Turkey. It is better to die free than to live slaves."

This is the general feeling throughout Greece. It is so intense that there is no interest in amusements, and the theatre is closed. The shops where arms are sold bear witness to it, and even the toy shops make prominent soldiers' guns, and every variety of naval and military toy. You may see a man stand gazing at these warlike indications for several minutes, lost in thought. The Albanians have been called down from their mountains, and two "ages" of reserves from their various occupations. From end to end of Greece the conviction is evident that this is

A CRISIS IN THEIR HISTORY.

And Greece is not so insignificant as not to be worth taking seriously. In 1832, Wordsworth said that Athens scarcely existed—that the ruins were the least ruinous thing in it. Its population could not have exceeded a few hundreds. Now it is a beautiful, busy, and prosperous city, with 100,000 inhabitants, and its port, the Piræus, like the city of the Acropolis, has undergone a resurrection.

There were a Greek and an English warship near each other in the harbour. An English-speaking Greek came up to me, and said, "The English ships have done their duty at Candia very well." "What do you mean?" I asked. "Oh, they have done very well what they were sent out to do. They have bombarded Candia, and sent their shells among Christians who were fighting for their lives and liberties, and the honour of their wives and daughters. We know we have the sympathy of the British people; but we want the sympathy of the British Government. We owed you a debt for Navarino, but this anti-Navarino has wiped out the debt, and we are quits. The Turks have massacred the Cretans; plundered and burnt their houses. Greece is full of Cretan refugees, and England says she must still be under the Turkish yoke."

Dr. Kalopothakes told me that he said at Baltimore to an influential assembly, "You say the Greeks are liars. I know that unconverted people of any nation, with few exceptions, do not always speak the truth. When your Civil War was on, the armies of the North and South plundered each other, and each concealed whatever could be concealed, and deceived and told lies to preserve their goods and property. They were brothers of one race, and the war was short. But Greece was for 400 years under the oppression of the Turk, whose cruelty was indescribable. Do you wonder that four centuries of enforced concealment, deception, and lying have left the Greeks deceitful and untruthful?" If any nation or any class of people has any evil characteristic peculiarly its own, it must have arisen from its environment or its internal circumstances. It has been so with Greece. Is it altogether otherwise with England, although its environment and internal circumstances have been so much less unfavourable?

There are said to be within the borders of Greece 30,000 Cretan refugees, and the number is constantly increasing. Of these 17,000 are in Athens and the Piræus, partly under the care of the Government and partly scattered among the population; some with small means of their own, others provided for by private beneficence. At Athens there are 6000. Many of those wounded or mutilated by the Turks are in the Evangelical Hospital, including those who were wounded by seventy of which were thrown among the Christians during ten minutes, when they were pursuing the Turks who had attacked them. One of the injured was a doctor, who had been among them not to wound any but to heal. Three sisters of charity are said to have been killed.

THE SHELLS OF THE UNITED FLEETS,

It is asserted that the better classes have no interest in this movement; that it is entirely got up and forced upon the Greek Government by agitators, and that the people, ever eager for excitement, too readily take it up. Before these words are in print all this may have become ancient history; and its truth be either proved or disproved.

In company with Dr. Kalopothakes, of Athens, Archdeacon Wilson, of Manchester, and some ladies, I visited an asylum for aged people, soldiers' barracks, and one of the primary school-houses, where these desolate and destitute women and children are domiciled—ten families in some of the larger rooms. There are few men in proportion, those able to bear arms having been left at Crete to fight. Those who fled would return, with their wives' consent, if supplied with arms, but now no troops are permitted to land in Crete.

Some of these refugees made their escape by breaking through the walls of their houses, one after another, until they reached the sea. Several children were born on the steamers which brought them away, some have been born since, and not a few of the women are near their confinement. Mdme. Schliemann told an English lady who was visiting the refugees, that two babies were to be baptized on March 2, one of whom was to be named Liberty.

The Government only provides the refugees with one loaf per day, but the Queen and Crown Princess resolved that they should have a pint of good hot soup with it. But in some cases where there is no cooking accommodation they have dry bread only. The cost is about a penny a day for each person. Some time ago Miss Jane Hay came out, commissioned by friends in Scotland. She only stayed a week, but in that time she put before the Athenian ladies plans for organising a system of cookery, and in eight weeks they had a beautiful kitchen, which is now in constant operation.

The Queen has given 2,000 drachmas (about £50) towards the erection of a similar kitchen in the Piræus. She is devoting herself enthusiastically to the relief of the sufferers, and the ladies of Greece are nobly following her example. One day, Her Majesty, attended by Count Magsala, went to a house she had given up to the refugees, and where she habitually visits them. There she found a woman who told her that her husband and two sons had been murdered, and four of her six daughters had been carried off by the Turks. The mother is now at the Piræus with her two remaining daughters. The Queen was so overcome by this painful recital that she was obliged to leave for that day.

Madame Kefallà, a Greek lady trained in England as a nurse, is the president of the Ladies' Committee. She told me that someone in authority wondered why they should want to give the refugees a hot meal daily. But the ladies knew that if they had only bread and whatever vegetables they could pick up, their health would suffer, and there would be sickness as well as hunger to contend with.

In a few cases the refugees have brought bundles of clothing, etc., but the majority have only what they stand in. One woman had seven children from three months old to seven or eight years, without a rag of change. In one room last summer Miss Kalopothakes (who has a medical practice in Athens, but has for the present partially relinquished it, to give herself to this work and training nurses for the Red Cross) saw in one room, containing a hundred people, a woman dying, while another was in the throes of childbirth—cases not unlikely to be repeated many times during those painful weeks.

Are these ill-looking and rapacious people, justifying the ancient adage, that the three K's—Kappadokia, Kilikia, and Krete—were all bad—a saying endorsed in his time by the Apostle Paul, so far as Crete is concerned—"for the Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, fierce over wine"? By no means. Whether they have been cradled into better things by wrong, or from whatever cause the change has come, their appearance would compare favourably with any other peasantry. The countenances of the boys and girls were declared by Archdeacon Wilson (who, as late head-master of Clifton College, has had large experience of young people) to be as pleasant, ingenuous, and intelligent, as alert, observant, and active as any he had ever seen; while the women were cheerful, clear complexioned, and attractive. Though they have suffered the loss of home and country, and have no certain dwelling-place, and are very insufficiently fed, no word of complaint was heard from them. Of course, these views of the Cretans are only first impressions, but they are endorsed by those who are labouring among them. R. COPE MORGAN.

The Gospel in Italy.

IN a recent letter to some friends in Dublin, Mrs. Wall, of Rome, says:—

You will be glad to hear that the distribution of copies of God's Word, kindly given by friends in Dublin, and sent by us to a large number of towns and villages where they had never seen it, is now after many years bearing fruit. After reading, little groups have met together to study the Word. We have several letters begging us to send some one to preach the Gospel in these places. Last week we sent our evangelist to visit quite a number of these towns. He found the people prepared not only to listen, but to give their names for instruction with the idea of forming churches. He had very large congregations; at one place 300 came.

From other parts the cry comes, "Do send us someone to preach the Gospel," but as yet we have not the labourers to send. Only this week my daughters and one of my Bible-women went to a town by the sea (Civita Vecchia) where we have a small church, but cannot give them an evangelist. They held two meetings, and had the hall both times crowded. The Lord is opening doors everywhere for the entrance of his Word.

You will be glad to hear that through our Medical Missions and the visitation of our workers to the women who come, our Sunday-schools have nearly doubled the last year. We have now about 400 children under religious instruction. The mothers' meetings, which were only two are now four, and in several other families little groups of women come for prayer and singing. We have also girls' sewing-classes every Thursday afternoon, when we get a large number of children who attend the Nuns' schools, but come to us to learn to sew, and to have a little Bible lesson. Last week two of the dear girls from our Sunday-schools were admitted to the church.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, March 14.

"Unto Thee do I lift up mine eyes, O Thou that sittest in the heavens."—Psa. cxxiii. 1.

THESE exquisite Songs of Ascents, prepared for the bands of worshippers as they went up from distant parts of the land to the great annual festivals, are very precious to pilgrim-souls, as from many lands and ages they are gathering home to the throne of the exalted Lamb, who sits at the right hand of God the Father in the highest heavens. And as we journey, we lift up our eyes to his dear face—the face that once was wet with tears and dewed with bloody sweat; but ere long will shine as the morning when He is anointed with the oil of joy above his fellows. Here is the Old Testament counterpart of the New Testament attitude—looking off unto Jesus.

The slave at the table kept the eye steadfastly fixed on the hand of master or mistress, to obey its least sign and to make it needless to speak. Keep your eye on the pierced hand, child of God; watch its smallest indication; wait patiently until it give some sign. We have too long acted on our own initiative; let us wait on our exalted Lord for the indication of his will. Let us not look askance at the proud, with their contempt, or on the heaving billows of the world's restless strife, but away to those azure depths and beyond, far above all principality, power, might, and dominion, where God hath exalted Him to be a Prince and a Saviour. Let his least gesture be our law.

MONDAY, March 15.

"If it had not been the Lord who was on our side."—Ps. cxxiv. 1.

Here is an If which cannot be an if. It is not a matter of uncertainty whether the Lord will be on our side or not. For the Lord Jesus in his incarnation and death has taken his place beside us for evermore. He is always on our side, so long as we keep his paths and walk in his ways.

Though unperceived by mortal sense,
Faith sees Him always near,
A Guide, a Guardian, a Defence;
Then what have you to fear?

There are in all lives hours of overpowering anxiety, when we feel as though it were impossible to live another moment—exposed to danger, separated from dear ones, not knowing what an hour may bring forth. Then, as you look up, you find that the Lord is beside you, sharing your anxieties, and affording you his inviolable protection. You cannot descry Him by the eye of sense, but you know Him to be there, and neither man nor devil can prevail against you.

When we look back on life, as the Psalmist does here, we become aware of the myriad instances of Divine protection. We were not so vividly conscious at the time; we might even have had fits of depression and counted ourselves bereft. But if we narrowly consider the perils from which we have been rescued, when we were about to be swallowed up quick, we see that He was there. In life and death and judgment, Jesus, your Advocate, will ever stand at your side and silence all who would condemn.

TUESDAY, March 16.

"The Lord is round about his people."—Ps. cxxv. 2.

It is a beautiful conception. Around the chosen city the mountains stand like sentinels, leaving no part without its barrier. So is God around us, and this enables us to understand how his permissions may become his appointments. It is easy to accept pain and disappointment which come to us direct from his hand; but not so when they approach us from the plotting and malevolence of a Judas or Shimei. We shall, however, never arrive at a settled peace, so long as we make a distinction between the afflictions which come to us from the Divine, and those which visit us from the human; and indeed the distinction is untenable. For the assaults of our foes are at least permitted by God, and his permissions are his appointments.

This will become evident, if we clearly apprehend that God is round about us, as a rampart to the city, as an envelope to a letter, as the atmosphere to the configuration of our bodies. If then He chooses, He can pass off from us any arrow that might harm us, but if He opens his environing protection, so as to let it pass through to us, by the time it has traversed the atmosphere of his care, it has become his will for us. Put God between yourself and everything. Plenty put their anxieties between them and God, and see God as the sun through a fog; mind that you put God between you and the entire world of men and things.

WEDNESDAY, March 17.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."—Psa. cxxvi. 5.

Some husbandmen steep their seeds before they sow them. It is well when Christian workers steep their lessons and addresses with their prayers and tears. It is not enough to sow; we may do that lavishly and constantly, but we must add passion, emotion, tender pity, strong cryings and tears, if the second half of the text is to be fulfilled, and we reap in joy.

But what a promise is here! You have sown long and patiently among young or old, sometimes on the point of giving all up in despair; but to give up now, would be to miss the harvest and guerdon of all your toils. Be patient, persevere a little longer. God guarantees the harvest. He says, "You shall reap; you shall doubtless come again, bringing your sheaves." Even though you were to die, without reaping, yet in another world you would come again, bringing your sheaves.

We are all sowing tears—tears over our darling Absaloms, tears over our failures and mistakes, tears over our disappointed hopes. But each tear overflowing from a consecrated soul is a seed-germ dropped into God's keeping, and it shall have its reward. God is not unrighteous to forget. He guards the buried seed, and stands sponsor for the harvest. No sigh, no tear, no prayer, inspired by the Spirit of God can possibly be lost or unproductive. Like your Lord, you shall yet see of the travail of your soul, and be satisfied.

THURSDAY, March 18.

"He giveth unto his beloved in sleep."—Psa. cxxvii. 2 (R.V.).

All day long we may have been fretting and fuming, running hither and thither, and doing our little best to build the house and keep the city. Sometimes we have turned to look to our faith, to see if that were in good condition, and sometimes to our friends. But we have not done much to forward matters. The weight of our anxiety is unrelieved, the heavy load presses still. Finally we can hold up no longer; with one last helpless look to God we fall back on his everlasting arms, and sleep. We rest long and deeply till morning taps at the window. We spring up relieved; the storm has ceased, and there, beside us, given whilst we slept, is the boon we had craved and yearned for. It has been given us whilst we slept.

What an emblem of death! We may have been fretting and worrying all our life, have attempted much and done little, have questioned God's love and care; then, tired and heartbroken, we shall fall asleep on the bosom of Christ, and awake to find the house built, the New Jerusalem set up, with her gates of pearl and walls of jasper, and the kingdom of God come.

Begone, dull, worrying care, let me rest; sweet Faith and Hope, close mine eyes and still my heart; Jesus, give me sleep, and in sleeping give me my heart's desire, that I may awake and be satisfied.

FRIDAY, March 19.

"Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord."—Psa. cxxviii. 1.

The special phase of blessedness here, is that of the home life. The Jews have always been distinguished for this. A recent writer, describing the Jews of the middle ages, says: "The sanctity of the home was an affectionate tradition, linking them with a golden chain to their fathers before them; and amidst the degradation heaped on them, they were emancipated in at least one spot on earth, and learned from their domestic peace to look with pitiful rather than vindictive eyes upon their persecutors."

Our religious life, when it is genuine, will always cast a halo of blessedness on the home. Not lightly does Wordsworth blend "the kindred points of heaven and home," for the man who fears God brings heaven into his home. We must not be sullen or self-absorbed there. We must divest ourselves of business cares and anxieties, of irritation and fretfulness, of the brooding clouds that have gathered on our faces, and be our sweetest, gladdest, loveliest selves.

What a charming cluster of images! The wife as a vine twining round the carved trellis work of the inner court of the Oriental home, as though the woman gives the rich wine of life, which is love, as well as shadowing fertility and graceful beauty; whilst children as olive plants are sources of perennial joy. Would you have such a home? Fear the Lord!

SATURDAY, March 20.

"Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up, yet they have not prevailed against me."—Psa. cxxix. 2.

What a wonder it is that Satan and man do not prevail against the saint. There is no way of accounting for it, except in God's election. Because God has chosen us for Himself, and redeemed us at great cost, He cannot afford to hand us over to the will of our enemies. He may allow our backs to be furrowed by the heavy scourge, because the servant must be as his Lord; but He will cut our cords in the day selected for our execution, and let us go free from the hand of our foes. So it was with Peter, and many a time with Paul.

Let us then walk with God. Fellowship with Him should be the daily bread of our souls. If we come fresh from fellowship with him, we shall not give way to fear, be our foes never so venomous and their plans never so insidious. But we must walk with God in order to escape them. We must be guided by his eye, if we would have him interpose for us, as the tender parent does for the children who keep under his watchful care.

This daily fellowship is only possible through the blood of Jesus, by which we draw nigh unto God; and it can only be maintained by constant watchfulness in little things. "Let us be very zealous over ourselves for the Lord, watching against the least shyness between the soul and Himself. Where there is much love between friends, a cold look is matter of complaint." No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord.

F. B. M.

Liverpool Town Mission.—The important office of superintendent of this Mission, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Bain last November, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Alexander Armstrong, of Glasgow. Mr. Armstrong has had six years' experience of missionary work in China in connection with China Inland Mission, and for a more lengthy period has been associated with evangelistic work in his native county of Lanarkshire. Mr. Bain's devoted labours on behalf of the Town Mission, and the keen interest he manifested in every effort for the true elevation of the masses in the city, will will be most gratefully remembered, and as Mr. Armstrong comes with excellent testimonials it is hoped he may prove a very worthy successor. He is expected to enter upon his duties about the end of this month.

"This Poor Widow."—I.

Luke xxi. 1-36.

By the Author of "THRESHOLD SERVICE."

IN all probability this incident took place in the Court of the Women, so called because, except for sacrificial purposes, women were not permitted to penetrate further into the sacred enclosure. The court was a large one, covering a space of upwards of two hundred square feet, the entrance being by the Beautiful Gate; while, at the opposite end, the Gate of Nicanor led into the Court of Israel, on the steps of which the Levites sang the Psalms of Degrees at the Feast of Tabernacles. A colonnade ran round three sides of the square, and here it was that the Treasury was situated. Thirteen trumpet-shaped chests were fastened to the wall of the portico, each bearing an inscription stating the object to which it was devoted—nine receptacles being for legal offerings, and four for voluntary gifts. There was a constantly shifting crowd passing to and fro between these columns, and the scene must necessarily have been a deeply interesting one. Poverty and riches elbowed each other; fanaticism and piety stood side by side, each with a gift in its hand; while to one able to read beneath the surface, what secret histories must not those faces have revealed!

The Treasury had developed in the time of our Lord into being one of the most prominent features in the religious life of the day. It had become the fashion to make costly votive offerings; frequently whole fortunes were left to the Temple; families vied with each other for the possession of certain purchased rights, as, for instance, the privilege of supplying the wood with which the priests lighted the altar fires, so that the expression Corban had acquired a significance which was menacing the security of the most sacred domestic ties. Nor was this altogether surprising when we consider the forces that were at work in the nation, undermining its strength.

The passionate enthusiasm of the Jew for his people, and for his own unique form of religion based upon irrefragable facts, was intensified by the bitter consciousness that Rome was steadily encroaching on all sides; that the Holy City was becoming a spectacle to the outside world, and was no longer a self-centred, self-organised polity. The note of luxury that pervaded the Herodian Court, passed in a reflex manner into the Temple, tinging even priests and Levites with customs and habits of thought contrary to purely Jewish principles, while lavishness of expenditure increased as the nation approached its doom.

But though the second Temple far surpassed the former in architectural grandeur, the true elements of Temple glory were wanting. The Holy of Holies was empty; the Urim and Thummim were no more; the altar fire, lit of old from above, was extinct; and the visible presence of God in the Shechinah had been withdrawn. Therefore it remained to the Rabbis to inculcate fictitious sentiments of reverence in the place of the old devotion, and by additional precepts to stimulate the spirit of legalism.

Yet we may believe that in some hearts, at least, there dwelt a more spiritual sentiment, which drew its strength from the knowledge that Zion was beloved of God, and that here the prophecies and promises culminated. It must have been the presence of this belief in the poor widow which led her to cast into the Treasury all her living, in order that she might have some fractional part in the sacred organisation, and which won for her the tenderly appreciative notice of our Lord. No narrow patriotism, no unilluminated devoteeism would have drawn from Him that precious comment, which lifted for a moment the veil hiding the real from the false, the quickening motive from the artificial act.

Through the chapter flow two streams of thought, like veins of gold and quartz in an auriferous rock. The Lord begins by speaking of persons, of living entities, and the Divine estimate of actions. The easy gifts of superfluity are contrasted with the supreme effort of penury, and the hearers are shown by a flash what is God's judgment of such donations. With one of Luke's careful touches, we are given to understand that the widow's poverty was apparent from her appearance, for twice in three lines she is called concisely a "poor widow."

The spectacle of this forlorn and needy woman slipping her insignificant coins into the bulky coffer, in which the heavy pieces of the rich fell with a continuous clang, could not fail to move the Lord to compassion; and had his listeners been more sympathetic, we might perhaps have had from his lips some further priceless teaching as to the spiritual results that are worked out in the souls of men by the accidents of riches and poverty. But the principal speakers in the group were more set upon things than upon lives, upon externals than upon realities, and they turned the conversation to the "goodly stones and offerings," which doubtless sparkled before their gaze. What was one widow and her paltry contribution in comparison with those noble monuments of princely liberality? This magnificent edifice, testifying of power and wealth from end to end, was surely an evidence of the august nature of religion, which takes of the great things of the earth and dedicates them to the Almighty! The answer must have come with a shock to these uninspired talkers. What a message from another world it was—a world where "actions are weighed" in balances set to another scale than this short-sighted, biassed, incomplete standard of ours!

One can fancy what amazed, troubled eyes were turned upon the Speaker as He unfolded the terrible future, and as He spoke of the breaking down of the greatest things of all, not merely of stones and buildings, but of nations and kingdoms, aye, and of the powers of heaven also. Where is reality? He seems to ask. You must delve deeper than all phenomena. The world and its ways will be tried through and through; spiritual forces will test every part of man's realm. But behind all are the eternal verities which even now you can make your own, if you will take heed. Beware of things; watch; look not down, but up. Search through actions to the motives prompting them. Learn to see in a widow's mite an intrinsic value far transcending that contained in the heaped offerings of opulence!

The infinitesimal gift was indeed great in results, for from it followed a discourse which is the very touchstone of prophecy. But this is the law of the kingdom of our God, who chooses "the weak things of the world, that He might put to shame the things that are strong."

Rotherhithe.—The anniversary of the Rotherhithe Free Church, held last week, showed many tokens of success. Since Mr. Richardson took up the work it has grown rapidly, and there are now 609 members. The service on Sunday week was crowded, as was also the public meeting on the following Tuesday. Lord Kinnaird presided. The report showed that great results had followed the aggressive work carried on, and every class of the people seem to have been reached. Hearty addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. H. Seagram, F. A. Graham, G. Nokes, F. N. Charrington, and Rev. A. V. G. Chandler.

Barry Dock.—The Gospel Tent Mission, started in July, 1895, in a canvas tent in Barry Dock, South Wales, opened an additional hall on Wednesday week. The afternoon sermon was preached by Pastor W. Spurgeon, followed by a public meeting. The whole of the services were seasons of great spiritual power. Addresses were given by Messrs. Thos. Gammon, George Rutter, A. Marcus Coultas, and others. This new building will be the centre for Gospel work amongst the young. Barry Dock being a new place, thousands flock here in search of work, who bring with them, in many instances, large families. The cost of the new mission-room has been nearly meet—a balance of about £10 remains. We trust friends will kindly remember us in their gifts. The last annual report will be sent upon application. Gerald R. Coultas.

Great Assembly Hall.

THE Brothers Weaver have lately concluded one of the most successful missions ever held in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. They commenced with the new year, and it was manifest at the outset that great interest was being displayed by those who frequent the hall, as the meetings were attended by larger numbers than usual. As time wore on these increased. To say that the great building was filled on Sundays would not give an adequate idea of the large gatherings. They were crowded out, many standing around the galleries and at the end of the hall. The stillness of the audience, the uplifted faces of that vast congregation, were most inspiring. No wonder a Dutch minister expressed himself a few Sundays ago in the following terms: "I have never seen such a sight before. It is wonderful. I shall never forget it to my dying day."

During the mission a special feature has been the Saturday night march out. This took place after the prayer meeting, and was accompanied by three brass bands of music. The by-streets and courts were visited, when Mr. Charrington and his fellow-helpers, with about 400 praying men and women, followed, giving away notices of invitations to the Sunday meetings, and speaking a few words at intervals at convenient places along the route. A large illuminated notice upon a waggon, with "Come and hear the Brothers Weaver to-morrow" upon it, also advertised the meetings.

Hundreds have been dealt with about salvation during the two months that Messrs. Weaver were preaching and singing in the Great Assembly Hall. On their last night many were turned away for want of room. Mr. Bewley Weaver spoke with great power. Before delivering his address from the text, "The great day of his wrath has come," he said, "This last immense gathering nearly overcomes me. It is a most solemn time; my brother and I have laboured among you for over two months, and our hearts are filled with gratitude for the power and blessing given for the manifest presence of God the Holy Spirit in our meetings. Night after night victory has been stamped upon all that has been done. Our greatest joy has been to see hundreds professing to decide for Christ."

After a most solemn and powerful address, many stayed to the after meeting. The hush that pervaded the whole assembly as Mr. Frank Weaver sang "Eternity; where will you spend it?" was felt to be an awful time in which many hearts must have been drawn to decide for Christ. The evangelists have left, followed by the prayers of many who had never learned to pray before listening to their voices, and their return next year will be looked forward to with delight. K.

The Law of Kindness.

Proverbs xxxi. 26; Ephesians iv. 32.

Let the law of kindness, ever be your guide,
And your daily motto, "Jesus crucified."
So shall truth and mercy meet, your soul to bless,
With their gladsome echo, peace and righteousness.

Have a thought of kindness, often as you may—
It shall make sweet music in your soul each day;
For 'tis like the Master, who is throned above,
Thus to cherish kindness in a heart of love.

Cast a look of kindness on the face that's sad—
It shall soothe some suffering, make a lone heart glad;
Or, perchance, some wanderer back to hope restore,
And before the homeless set an open door.

Keep a smile of kindness for the little child;
Beam forth Gospel gladness, pure and undefiled;
And the youthful learner thus may truth receive
As a joyful message firmly to believe.

Say a word of kindness, it shall win its way,
Melt some harden'd sinner who has gone astray;
Or, it may be, gladden some poor child of God
Who is full of sorrow from affliction's rod.

Do a deed of kindness— silent though it be,
It shall clearly witness, words and acts agree;
And the harshest discords cease their jarring strains
When your kindly actions tell where love remains.

Live a life of kindness— such shall surely be Christ-like preparation for eternity;
And your daily duties, done as to your Lord,
Show the present value of his living Word.

J. M.

The Revival in Sardis.

IT was the noon hour at the conference in Peacedale. Deacon Hart had joined a group of delegates who were talking about the dearth of revivals, and why it was that outside the church there was so little interest in religion, and inside the church so little concern for the conversion of men.

"Well, deacon," said they, as he joined them, "we hear you've been having a regular old-fashioned revival over at Sardis."

The broad, happy face of the deacon lighted up afresh as he answered: "Yes, praise the Lord, we've had a great blessing. We waited years for the Lord to come, but when we just stopped waiting and every one of us set to work, we found that the Lord was there all the time waiting for us."

"Tell us about it. What methods did you use? How did you go to work?" were the eager questions as they gathered about him.

"Well, you see, it was this way. We didn't have no evangelist, 'cause some o' the members said if we'd any money to give away we'd better give it to the parson instead of to a stranger. Besides, you know, they all loved the parson, and they said, 'He loves us, and he knows all about us; and no man from outside can come here to Sardis and talk to us heart to heart the way parson does.' And so we didn't have no evangelist.

"And it appears to me we didn't have no methods, neither. The parson, he always kept telling us, 'It don't matter much about methods. The Lord wants men and women, and when they're ready to do what's got to be done, the Lord will provide the methods.' The parson kept at us till we all begun to feel that something ought to be done. And then 'twan't long before we begun to feel that we ought to be doing it ourselves.

"Come to look back on't, it does seem cur'ous how we all acted so sort o' blind-like. There we was all waiting for the Lord to come, and all praying that He would come. And every time our reg'lar prayer meeting was through we shook hands all round and said we'd had a blessed meeting, and it did seem as though the Lord was going to come to Sardis, and then we all went home, and things run on just the same till next week's meeting, and then the parson would ask us 'What are we going to do about these people round us that ain't Christians?'

"Then we'd pray and exhort each other to be up and doing, and the meeting would close, and we'd shake hands and say the Lord was good, and we hoped He would come to Sardis, and then we'd go home again, and all the time there didn't seem to be no sinners in Sardis that wanted to be saved, and somehow we began to get discouraged like 'cause the Lord didn't come.

"Well, one night, right in the meeting, when everybody was waiting and listening to the ticking o' the clock, parson says right up quick like, 'Deacon Hart, do you know anybody in this town that needs to be saved?'

"You see I'd already prayed and made some remarks, and the parson's question come so sort o' sudden like that I was took all aback, and I stammered out, 'I—I—suppose there are. Why, of course there are. Lots of 'em.'

"'Deacon Hart,' says he, 'will you name one person that needs to be saved?'

"Well, now, do you believe it? I was dumb as a post. There were lots of people I thought about. But somehow I couldn't seem to bring myself to name a single one. There was Joe Smith. I knew he needed to be saved. His wife joined 'fore she was married, but Joe, he always said, 'I don't mind coming to church once in a while 'cause it can't do no harm if it don't do no good.' And he would say that every time he was spoke to on religion, and you couldn't get no further with him. So when I thought of Joe I said to myself, 'It's no use to name him 'cause 'tain't likely Joe wants to be saved.'

"There was old Bill Whitman, a quarrelsome, mean sort o' chap. I knew he needed to be saved if anybody did. No one could remember ever seeing him to church. But when I thought of him I thought, 'Why, Bill Whitman! why, it's no use to think of him as being saved.' There was Charlie Sprague, bright, but wild and full of ridicule for religion, and how could I bring myself to think of him as a hopeful subject for our prayers that he might be saved? Then there was George Slocum, a respectable citizen, with his mind full of politics, but with no use for religion.

"And so I thought of Frank Skillings, who was breaking his mother's heart by his love of drink; and of Aleck Danvers, whose wife with tears had told me only the day before that he seemed to get farther and farther away till it almost seemed as if she must go with him and give up being a Christian; and of James Brown, who was disgracing the church every day with his backsliding. And so on, pretty much all over town, I thought of men that needed to be saved, but I didn't have no faith about any of them.

"I knew the parson was waiting to say, as soon as I named anybody, 'Deacon Hart, will you lead us in prayer for him?' and so, sort o' helpless like, I just said, 'There's men enough as needs to be saved, but I don't see no encouragement to pray for 'em.' Now, I guess everybody there thought just the way I did, but, you see, nobody had ever said it out loud, and so when I said, 'I don't see no encouragement to pray for 'em,' everybody looked up quick, just as if their own consciences had spoke, and they was ashamed to be caught distrusting God's power to save.

"Widow Brown was the first to speak. ''Pears to me we've all been doubting the Lord, and that's why sinners ain't converted. We're just like the disciples when they asked the Lord, "Why couldn't we cast them out?" and the Lord told them, "Because of your little faith. This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer." If we believed as much in the Lord's readiness and power to save old Bill Whitman or Charlie Sprague as we believe in his power to save us, religion would mean a good deal more in this town than it does now. And I believe,' she continued, with her eyes full of tears, 'that the Lord is right here in this meeting to-night to rebuke us, same as He did the disciples when He said, "O ye of little faith."'

"Then John Coburn got up, and everybody was surprised as they saw him through their tears, 'cause he never somehow had anything to say in meetings 'cept to pray, and he said, ''Tain't no use for us to be awkward in religion 'cause the disciples were. They was all helpless and discouraged like, same as we, and they made an awful poor showing of religion 'fore them Pharisees and that poor, unbelieving father who wanted his boy cured. But when they see Jesus was among them then they knew it was all right, as it will be here in Sardis when we make our religion a real thing among scoffers and unbelievers. Don't you remember the Lord turned his sad face to those faithless disciples and told them, "Bring that poor boy hither to me"?

"'And don't we all know that that's what we've got to do here in Sardis—bring Bill Whitman and Charlie Sprague and all the rest of 'em to the Lord in prayer, with the same faith that the disciples had when they brought that boy to be cured? They knew the Lord could cure him, and I believe the Lord can save Bill Whitman and wants to, too.'

"'Yes, and my boy Charlie,' sobbed Mother Sprague. 'And my husband,' said another. 'And mine,' 'and mine,' said several women with eager, trembling voices.

"Well, there the Lord was in that meeting. Our hearts all sort o' melted in common sympathy, and we all see each other heart to heart, and the Lord helped us mightily to pray, and when the parson raised his hands for the benediction, and in broken voice asked that the Lord would go with us as he sent us out into the world, we somehow all felt as the Lord had come to Sardis, and souls was going to be saved.

"We didn't have no methods to speak of, but every one of us went first to God in prayer, and then from prayer to men and women about us, and it wan't long 'fore we began to rejoice in the most remarkable conversions. Old Bill Whitman come into the meeting one night and said as how he had always hated religion and Christians. No man had ever seemed to care for his soul, and he'd made up his mind that he was going to die game, and never let anybody know that he ever thought about God and the hereafter and his own wickedness. 'But blessed be the Lord,' he said, 'there was an angel from heaven come to me one day when I was sawin' wood, and talked with me so tender like, and come again, and again, and prayed with me, and here I am, old Bill Whitman, saved by the grace of God! And the angel that the Lord sent was that woman over there in the corner, God bless her!'

"I can't tell you about the rest, 'cause there ain't time. We had a great refreshing, and there wasn't a home in Sardis that didn't have reason to praise God and rejoice with the angels in heaven over a sinner repenting and turning unto God. It does seem as if the Lord had come to Sardis to stay, blessed be his name for ever."

There was not a dry eye as that group of honest men looked into the deacon's glowing face and grasped him by the hand.

"Why can't we have just such a blessed revival over in our town?" said one. "And in our town, too," said another. "Yes, and in ours," said a third.

And as they passed into the church, for the afternoon session of prayer was just beginning, I said to myself, "Yes, sure enough, why can't we have just such a revival?"

And I found myself saying in answer: "We can if we will. The Lord wants it. Our neighbours need it. It will come if we do what we ought to do—tenderly, persistently, believingly pray and labour, man with man, heart to heart, as guided and helped by the Holy Spirit of God."—Boston Congregationalist.

Modern Gambling.

SOME months ago a proposal was brought before the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations by the executive of the North-East Metropolitan District Union, that a series of mass meetings of young men should be organised throughout the metropolis and the provinces, to protest against the rampant vices which are threatening the very existence of the coming generation—gambling, drink, and impurity. The National Council did not see its way to respond to the suggestion. They referred the matter back to the North-East Metropolitan Union to show how the thing should be done.

This district Union accepted the challenge. Two series out of five have already been held: the first in the Victoria Theatre, Walthamstow, the second in the Conference Hall, Stratford. The third series is being held this week in the Town Hall, Shoreditch. The others are arranged to be held in Hackney, and in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road.

The speakers and chairman have been men of popular influence, including Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Canon Fleming, Hon and Rev. E. Lyttleton, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Mr. J. F. Victor Buxton, Rev. F. B. Meyer, etc. The meetings have commanded a nightly average attendance of a thousand men. Amongst the most forceful utterances was an address given last week by Mr. Lyttleton, Headmaster of Haileybury College, on gambling. By this evil (he said) thousands of young men are ruining themselves body and soul. To test the extent of the betting mania a friend of the speaker ran round one of the West-end squares on a recent occasion, shouting "Winners! winners!" Out of every house in the square but three, the butler or the footman came running to buy a paper. Some men think themselves safe from the power of this passion, but none who begin are safe. Many a story may be read in the newspapers of men who have lost their bets, shooting themselves on the Thames Embankment and elsewhere. Gambling is ruining our sports, our commerce, and our national life.

Why should the law of the land be unequal in the matter of impurity and gambling? The law does not interfere with a man's liberty if he chooses to live a vicious life, but directly he proceeds to make a living for himself by leading others into sin the law steps in and stops him. It is not so with gambling! The Anti-Gambling League has been perplexed to find a bench of magistrates who would convict a betting man in a public place. After years of litigation the question has been for months, and still is, under legal consideration. Mr. Lyttleton closed his highly practical remarks by pointing out the sin against God involved in gambling, and the awful issues which faced the gambler at the judgment seat of Christ—a point searchingly followed up by Dr. Guinness, who conducted an after-meeting.

Mr. F. L. Porter, the district secretary, has organised these meetings in conjunction with his committee. He is to be congratulated on the marked success which has attended the effort.

Rev. J. Legge, LL.D., D.D.

MISSIONARY AND PROFESSOR.

THE professor and missionary whose portrait we give this week has had a varied and laborious career. He occupied a foremost place among that band of distinguished men who stood for so many years on the confines of the Celestial kingdom praying that the door might be opened. They "learned to labour and to wait," with the result that when an entrance was afforded they were ready equipped for the arduous task. The hand of God is now seen in this delay, as well as in the fact that some of these men were dowered with special aptitude for linguistic studies essential for the accurate proclamation of the Gospel in the most colossal language that the world possesses, and for the literary work necessary among a highly-civilised people.

Professor Legge was born at Huntly, N.B., in 1815. He was educated in the Grammar School there and at Aberdeen. He entered King's College, and graduated at the Aberdeen University in 1835. After a theological course at Highbury College he married, in 1839, Miss M. J. Morrison, and was appointed to the Malacca Mission of the London Missionary Society, where he laboured three years. In 1843, upon the opening of the ports of China, he removed to Hong Kong, which was the centre of his labours until his retirement from mission work in 1873. In August, 1843, a general Convention of Missionaries appointed Dr. Medhurst and Dr. Legge to deliberate on the rendering of the names of the Deity into Chinese.

In addition to his preaching, visiting, and other duties as a missionary, Dr. Legge was tutor of the Anglo-Chinese College, which was also removed to Hong Kong, where he continued to direct the studies of some promising young men. Notable among these was the eloquent and learned Ho Tsun-Sheen, and the zealot Ch'ea Kum-Kong, who ran a glorious though brief course of faithful service among his own people at Pok-lo, and after laying the foundation of more than one Christian community won the crown of martyrdom.

These young men also assisted him in the evangelistic work of the Mission, and learned much from his well-prepared and earnest preaching. He adopted a plan which was most effectual among audiences ignorant of the simple truths of Christianity. An outline of each discourse was printed at the Mission press and distributed before the service began. The subject having been amplified and enforced, the people carried these away and were enabled to recall and convey the teaching received to their families and friends.

In 1852 Mrs. Legge died at Hong Kong, and in 1859 Dr. Legge returned to England. Before his return he married the widow of Rev. G. Willets, of Salisbury.

In 1841 he had formed the opinion that he should not be qualified for the duties of his position until he had thoroughly mastered the classical books of China, and investigated the thoughts of the sages in which were the foundations of the moral, social, and political life of the people. This task he steadily pursued, though never neglecting the practical duties of a missionary. Carefully husbanding his time, he devoted what scanty time he could spare to the great work. In 1865 he was relieved of the English chapel work in Hong Kong by Rev. J. Anderson, and wrote:—

> I am thus free to be altogether in Chinese labours directly missionary, and of the literary character to which I have been, as I believe, guided by Providence. I venture to cherish the assurance that it is of the Lord that my way has thus been brought to pass.

Thus modestly does he refer to that distinguished portion of his work by which his name will ever be remembered—the making known to English readers the ancient classics of China. It is impossible to convey in popular terms the difficulties besetting such a task, or its magnitude. It was not a mere question of translation from one set of known terms into another language which contains exact or approximate equivalents, though a textual translation is given. Many of the root ideas cannot be concisely rendered, and the full meaning is explained in notes critical and exegetical, and copious prolegomena. Dr. Legge did not "build upon other men's foundations," but dug for himself. After he had carefully worked out his translation he referred to others which were available. He candidly acknowledges that he has thus been led to adopt some happier phrases, but the work is his own. "The Four Shu" were published in 1861 with the munificent help of the late Mr. J. Jardine. "The Five King" were included in his original plan. Three of the "King" have been published, in two vols. each, in 1865, 1871, and 1872, and with these were incorporated translations of various other important ancient Chinese works.

From photograph by Mr. Donovan, St. James-street, Brighton.

The other publications from Dr. Legge's pen are too numerous to detail, notably his contribution to the discussion about the proper rendering in Chinese of the words "God" and "Spirit," and his book on "The notions of the Chinese concerning God and spirits." He has also contributed in recent years several volumes to Professor Max Müller's series of "The Sacred Books of the East."

In 1875, a Chinese merchant, the Marchess T. Hanbury, now resident in Italy, projected a chair of the Chinese language and literature at Oxford, to be occupied in the first place by Dr. Legge; and several gentlemen connected with the China trade formed a committee to promote its establishment. The University liberally responded to the proposal, and the chair was constituted in March, 1876. Corpus Christi College was forward in aiding the foundation, and Dr. Legge is now a Fellow and M.A. of it.

Space forbids the mention of the numerous scholastic distinctions, all so well merited, which have been bestowed on Dr. Legge, while it is impossible to enumerate the vicissitudes through which this venerable and devoted servant of Christ has passed. Like St. Paul, he has been "in perils oft"; exposed to fever and cholera; in a ship on fire, and near death by drowning; he has been shot at, stoned, poisoned, and pursued by a body of Chinese, who had orders to behead him. Preserved by a Divine hand to run his appointed course, he is in his eighty-second year, working hard at writing, and also lecturing to students.

Marylebone Medical Mission.

IN his new report Dr. Chambers says:—"Since the starting of the Mission, twenty-one years ago, over a quarter of a million attendances have been made at the dispensary, apart from, and in addition to, those large numbers who have been visited in their own homes. This fact alone is something calling for hearty and devout thanks to our Father in heaven. With regard to the work of the Mission, it may be noted that all sorts of diseases come under our care. Indeed, two or three lady doctors who have come to help for a time in order to gain experience (one has since gone to India as a Medical Missionary) have spoken of our work as a splendid sphere for practice in all classes of disease and injuries, such as they are likely to have to deal with in their future service.

"On dispensary days (three times a week) we have usually from eighty to 120 men, women, and children of the poorest classes. Among the cases we may mention one old man who came to get medical attention. He avowed himself an infidel, believing in nothing and caring nothing for God or man. He seemed to be shut up in blind, dense ignorance and prejudice, never having really heard the Gospel he professed to reject, or having read the Bible he flouted. Apparently he had merely adopted second-hand the views and scoffs of other men. At first he objected to our services; then he began to attend, becoming gradually interested. At length he yielded to God's call, and was converted. Some time after he left the district and went to live at Highbury. He died during last year, and subsequently his wife came to us, charged with a message from her dying husband, who had passed away rejoicing in Christ, and praising God he had ever been led to come to the Marylebone Medical Mission, where his eyes were open to see his own folly and sin."

Many such incidents are detailed in the report; while cheering accounts are given of the house-to-house work, the mission services, the Bible classes, and the labours of two trained nurses who co-operate with the medical superintendent. A strong appeal is made for help, and very specially for the relief fund, the distress among the sick poor being very deep. The superintendent is Dr. Robert Chambers, 12, Bell-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

Blissett Street Mission, Greenwich, reports that the Gospel Services on Sunday evenings have been a great blessing; in the Children's Sunday Morning Services and Sunday School, several scholars have yielded to Christ. The Temperance and other meetings have been carried on throughout the year with profit. The Greenwich branch of the Y.W.C.A. continues its unassuming work in the mission rooms The treasurer is Mr. G. Brading, Bellicroft, Station Road, Sidcup.

Rev. J. McNeill in Liverpool.

[By our Special Correspondent.]

ON SUNDAY last Rev. John McNeill began a mission at Liverpool under very encouraging circumstances. Like other large cities, Liverpool has the reputation of being "stony ground," and those who are specially familiar with it, and have also had a hand in Gospel work elsewhere, declare the city to be "very difficult to move" in religious matters. Yet great things have been wrought in Liverpool by Mr. Moody and others, and what with Scripture assurances and historical precedents, there is ground for expecting good results through the effort now launched.

For some years Mr. McNeill has promised himself the pleasure of a visit to Liverpool, and his present work is undertaken at the earnest request of the various churches of the city and neighbourhood. Clergymen of the Church of England and ministers of the various Nonconformist bodies joined in the invitation, and the mission is united in the true sense of the word. As they could not attend on Sunday, the opening day, the ministers gave Mr. McNeill a welcome on the previous evening in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant. Kind words having been exchanged between Mr. Charles McArthur, as representing the committee, and the well-known mission preacher, on the other part, there was a happy season of handshaking and heart-cheering, hopefulness being the keynote of the entire proceedings.

During recent weeks the mission has been on the hearts and in the prayers of many Christian people in Liverpool; and while the preparations needful for outward success have gone forward, there has been an accession of spiritual strength in weekly meetings at the Y.M.C.A., at which believers have taken the entire enterprise to the throne of grace. Merchants and ministers are working in harmony in the mission, in the fervent hope of making a decided impression upon the stolidity and indifference to spiritual realities under which many thousands of the people pass their lives.

The ordinary meetings of the mission are being held in Hengler's Circus, in the West Derby-road. A substantial structure, capable of holding several thousand people, it was all but full on Sunday afternoon when the mission opened. In some general remarks, Mr. McNeill explained his appearance in Liverpool—that he was not there on his own account, but at the express wish of the clergy and ministers of the various churches; his straight talk and cheery style won him a ready and sympathetic hearing. A band of friends led the Gospel singing, and in this the great assembly joined with much heartiness. The discourse was founded on Mark iii. 1-6, in which Christ's healing of the man with the withered hand is narrated. The words specially emphasised were "stand forth" and "stretch forth"; and alike in the delineation of the scene and the pointing of its lessons, the sermon was exceedingly powerful and striking. In conclusion, attention was called to another distinctive expression—"went forth"; and the action of the Pharisees, in "taking counsel to destroy the Saviour," was made the basis of a timely and forcible appeal.

In the evening the Circus was densely crowded. As in the afternoon, the audience included a goodly number of Christian people who wanted to hear the evangelist. These were delighted at the sight that met their gaze—arena, stalls, parterre, and galleries, all filled. The choir had grown since the afternoon, and the influential friends sitting around the improvised platform, supporting the work with their presence, were also more numerous. The free and unconventional address of the preacher was a refreshment to many who through long years had been accustomed to the strictest rules of precision in Gospel work. One moment came a gay and mirthful word; the next, a heart-searching question bringing to mind the terrors of the law and the day of judgment. The aim was to bring men to Christ; this was the point of every illustration, the object of every home-thrust and rebuke.

The evening sermon was founded on the story of Blind Bartimæus, as recorded in Mark x. 46-52. To begin with, the beggar was earnest; when rebuked he was more earnest; when the way was clear for him to get to Jesus, he was more earnest still; and when he reached Christ he got what he wanted. These were the points worked out in the address, attention being called to the fact that when the beggar had received his sight, "he followed Jesus in the way"—as all who are saved are privileged to do. The incident well suggested the words of the psalmist, "Deep calleth unto deep"—the deep of Christ's power and pity, and the deep of the man's faith and need.

Reviewing the meetings of the opening day, they must be pronounced singularly promising. A crowded house in the evening was encouraging in a greater degree than appears on the surface, for there were many other attractions for persons disposed to worship God and hear his Word. While, however, it may be said that such people very generally come out in the evening, the same cannot be said as to people leaving home in the afternoon. To whole classes of the community this is largely a time of rest and quiet in the house. In a word, the afternoon meeting was somewhat of an encroachment upon a custom rather stubbornly observed, and the large attendance was, on that account, all the more significant that the mission had been well brought under public notice.

Monday's meeting was also largely attended, a number of clergymen, ministers, and missionaries surrounding the preacher. The hour for beginning was half-past seven; but it had been made clear that eight o'clock would be the time for those who could not arrive earlier. Consequently, during the first half-hour men and women were coming in steadily, and, when preaching began, the big structure was more than three parts full. Monday night is not everybody's opportunity; therefore the gathering was very encouraging for the evenings to follow. The sermon was on conversion, given "straight from the shoulder," from a text which Mr. McNeill calls the Old Testament story of the Prodigal Son (Psa. cxix. 59, 60). The deliverance was quite a rouser, and the attention was all that could be desired. At the close there was a season of private prayer, in which the evangelist sought to lead to decision those whom his faithful message had brought to the point of turning to Christ.

The mission will continue until the 28th inst. In addition to the meetings each evening in the Circus, there will be on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, a mid-day meeting for business men. This, of course, will be held in the centre of commercial activity—in the City Hall, in Eberle-street, which has been secured for the purpose.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—I have had several most kind responses to my letters in The Christian. I have received £5 from a Christian, who, I am told, is a ploughman. The gifts of people of the working class are most touching. Few among the rich—even Christians—seem to understand that, if they are to be "disciples," they must "deny themselves."

Meanwhile the accounts are more and more terrible. In one place many children, left orphans, are wandering about, not knowing where to go. When one missionary was giving relief two men dropped down and died, and then two more. The widow and children, too weak to wail, only sat down by the roadside awaiting death. In other places there have been sad scenes of emaciation and death. Even on the relief works some are so feeble that they earn only enough to buy a pound of flour, perhaps to support wife and two children. Pundila Ramibhai writes of mothers selling their children for a rupee, or even a few annas (i.e., few pence), or even a few pounds of flour. Yet this is only the beginning of suffering, which must grow worse for a month, and not much better till September.

I have been able the last four weeks to send help to missionaries of the principal societies working where the famine is worst—in Gabalpur, Banda, Delhi, Allahabad, Agra, and other places. Steady, persevering, self-denying work will be needed at any rate till October, and even the wreckage will last for months in acute form.—Yours faithfully,

Radstock.

March 7.—Since writing the above, I have heard from Bishop Thoburn, who perhaps has as large a range of information as any man in India, and to whom among others I had sent cheques. He telegraphs:—"Urgent Need." This is a call which should awaken the Church of Christ.

SITAPUR ZILA, OUDH.

Dear Sir,—Government is doing what it can; in this zila (country) there are some fifty thousand people out of one million inhabitants being helped—40,000 on relief works and some ten thousand in poorhouses and many by relief at their homes. But how thankful we would be to receive money to help the needy that we come across; there are cases in the zenanas that need immediate help. As we go along the roads on our itineratings we meet so many who say, "Madad ko jâte" (We go to the relief works); some of them just like sticks walking or staggering, some of them so weak we cannot pass without giving them a few pice to enable them to go on to the works.

We have not gone away from home to gather orphans; but we take the little famine boys that are sent to us from the two zilas. My husband, Rev. Dr. Peachy T. Wilson, has opened relief works for poor Christians here from February 1, and already some fifty are upon the works, so grateful that they can earn enough to drive away their hunger. We appeal for funds to feed these Christian lads, and to tide over the famine time our hungry Christians who come to our works for relief.

(Mrs.) Helen Johnston Wilson.

Sitapur, Oudh, India, February 15.

Royal National Life-Boat Institution.—The committee of management have pressed the Government to agree to the early appointment of a Select Committee of the House of Commons to inquire fully into the administration of the Life-Boat Service as conducted by the institution. They have adopted this course in consequence of the constant, serious and unfounded charges against the administration which have for some time been widely circulated, tending to impair and injure the great national work which has been carried on by the Institution since 1824, contributing to the saving of the lives of nearly 40,000 persons from shipwreck on the coasts of the United Kingdom.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Ted, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

The Christ-like Life.

Text for Sunday: "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Gal. vi. ii.

Hymns: Sacred Songs and Solos, Nos. 568 and 35.

EVERYTHING that lives must first be born, that is, life must be given to it by God, the Lord and Giver of life. So if we would live the Christ-like, God-like, life, we must not forget what we saw last week, that we must be born into that life of the Spirit, as we were born into this life of the body. Even grown people are told that they must become "as little children." "Except a man be born again," Christ said, "he cannot see the kingdom of God."

To be born again we must pray from our hearts to God for Christ's sake to cleanse us from sin, and to give us his promised Holy Spirit—a prayer which He will never refuse if we only ask in real earnest. Here is a beautiful prayer in verse which I was taught when four years old. Will you learn it and offer it up?

"Jesus, take this heart of mine,
Make it pure and wholly thine.
Thou hast bled and died for me;
I will give myself for Thee."

When this is fully answered we shall live the Christ-like life. All around us will know it, for we will be always helping others to bear their burdens, as Christ bears ours. His love will fill us, and his Spirit will be our Spirit. Uncle Ted.

My Very Own Saviour.

At a deaf and dumb institution the scholars were undergoing their periodical examination by an inspector, who, amongst other questions wrote this one upon the black-board, "What do you know of the Lord Jesus Christ?" The scholars were required to write their answers upon their slates, which were then passed up to the examiner to read. As the inspector read the replies to the question, he paused at that written by a little girl, and was so struck with the difference between it and those he had previously read, that he wrote upon the black-board in view of all the scholars these words, "Many of you have answered my question, 'What do you know of the Lord Jesus Christ?' very correctly, as far as historical facts go, but the reply of one little girl I should like you all to read, and I will write it upon the black-board." The examiner then proceeded to write the little girl's answer to his question. It was no historical fact or detail about the Lord Jesus, as the other children had written, but, what was far better, the expression of a young heart that knew and loved the Lord Jesus. It was an answer of but six words, which were these—"He is my very own Saviour."

Happy little deaf and dumb girl to be able to write so! How many who have heard much about the Lord Jesus could not write truthfully, "He is my very own Saviour!"

You may know a great deal about the Lord Jesus without knowing Him. You may know correctly the story of his lowly birth; you have, perhaps, been touched with the record of the beautiful and holy life on Earth of Him who "went about doing good." You may possibly have wept over the sacred pages that tell how, with wicked hands, men took and crucified Him, thinking, had you been there, how differently you would have acted. You may have done and felt all this, and yet be still far from Him. You may call Him the Saviour; but can you say from your heart, as this little girl wrote upon her slate, "He is my very own Saviour"? Ask yourselves, each one, dear children, and rest not until you, too, know the Lord Jesus as "your very own Saviour." *

H. A. Burleigh.

A Hint For Little Tapers.

One night a man took a little taper out of a drawer and lighted it, and began to ascend a long winding stair.

"Where are you going?" said the taper.

"Away high up," said the man; "higher than the top of the house where we sleep."

"And what are you going to do there?" said the little taper.

"I am going to show the ships out at sea where the harbour is," said the man, "for we stand at the entrance to a harbour, and some ship far out on the stormy sea may be looking out for our light even now."

"Alas, no ship could ever see my light," said the little taper, "it is so very small."

"If your light is small," said the man, "keep it burning brightly, and leave the rest to me."

Well, when the man got up to the top of the light-house—for this was a lighthouse they were in—he took the little taper, and with it he lighted the great lamps that stood ready with their polished reflectors behind them. And soon they were burning, steady and clear, throwing a great, strong beam of light across the sea. By this time the lighthouse man had blown out the little taper and laid it aside. But it had done its work. Though its own light had been so small, it had been the means of kindling the great lights in the top of the lighthouse, and these were now shining over the sea, so that ships far out knew by it where they were, and were guided safely into the harbour.—Children's Record.

* From the "Bristol Gospel Book Series," to be obtained of the author, Gordon House, Clifton. (6d. doz.)

"Respect the Burden-bearer."

It is related of Napoleon Bonaparte that on one occasion he was walking with a lady up a steep, narrow mountain path, and as they were turning round a rocky corner they saw a peasant coming down the mountain towards them, carrying a large bundle of wood on his shoulders. The lady was passing on, expecting the man to stand aside for her, but Napoleon moved out of the pathway, and waving with his hand for the lady to do the same, called to her, "Respect the burden-bearer, madam; respect the burden!"

Is there not in this little anecdote a lesson for us? For children to be helpful, considerate and kind, to honour their parents, and to respect the burden of their cares, anxieties, and in some cases, their old age, ill-health, and infirmities; this is Christ-like.

For grown-up persons to be patient and sympathetic with each other—for we all have our separate burdens, and we all like to have our own special burdens respected—is, in beautiful words taken from the Bible itself, to bear one another's burdens, and so to fulfil the law of Christ. G. W.

Personal.

The Indian Famine.—Several of the letters this week tell of toys and delicacies given up for the starving in India, but one tells of a little boy and girl who worked for some weeks making little things which they afterwards sold to a party of friends in the schoolroom for 11s. 3d. I do not think it was at all a bad idea. Do you? Another family is going without sugar and jam three days a week, butter three days a week, and meat one day a week "for a month anyway."

Many thanks for the blotters, which have been sent to the Soldiers' Home; and the babies' shoes, etc., which were sent to Walworth Crèche. W. Campbell.—You may use a Reference Bible, either version. Agnes Jones.—Send your paper in an envelope, it will come for a ½d. if not sealed. Willie Dowsett.—I think you would perhaps write better on lined paper. D. and W. Millar.—Very glad you are making a start; tell the girls at school about the Searcher. Gracie Dodington.—Delighted you are so happy at school. I recognised your friend's paper this week. Ida Cole.—Hope you will soon be well again. Gladys Isaac.—You may use a pencil as you are so small. Arabella Onslow.—The extra stars were only given last week for a change. Helen Gartshore.—I hope Winnie has been quite well for a long time ere you get this, and that Charlie will send regularly. Uncle Ted.

Donation List.

Poona (Mrs. Bruere).—Stoke, £3 6s. 8d.; Ada, 3s.; Mrs. L. W., 10s.; F. W., £1; Mrs. A. I. P., £3 6s. 8d.; Mrs; E. A. B., £3 6s. 8d.; L. R. C., £3 6s. 8d.; G. M. C., £3 6s. 8d., Jessie, 1s.; E. C. G., 8s.; H. N. D., £2; Miss J. M. E. £3 6s. 8d.; A. E. P., Bath, £3 6s. 8d.; O. A., 7s. 6d.; C. G., 15s.: Alfred, 5s.; M. E. S., 1s. 3d.; E. A. S., 1s. 3d.; E. P. S., 1s.; A. E. B., £3 6s.; M. R., £3 6s. 8d.; Miss A. S. T., £3 10s.; A. E. L. C., 5s.; Collected by St. Leonards Y.W.C.A., £3 6s. 8d.; H. E., £1; E. S., £3 6s. 8d.; Elsie, S. C., 3s.; A Mother, 4s. 3d.; W. E. D., 10s.; B. B., 1s.; Mrs. G. and Mrs. R., £3 6s. 8d.; A Talent, H. S. B., £3 6s. 8d.; M. G. B. C., £10; Hilda, £3 8s. 6d.; Scripture Union, Huntly, per Mrs. B., £3 6s. 8d.; Aberchirder Young Folks Service, U.P., £1 10s.; Banked, £1; A. H. G., £3 6s. 8d.; E. B., Lee, 10s. Total, £77 14s. 1d. Total to March 8, £264 10s. 11d.

Indian Famine.—E. L. M., 6s.; A Father, 2s.; T. G., 1s.; B. M., G. M., and W. C., 3s.; Collected Scripture Union, Dartford, per Mrs. E. H., £1 8s. 6d.; Beryl, 1s.; A. C. and R. M. K., 3s.; Mrs. B., B., and G. B., 5s.; A. T. and Aunt, 2s. 6d.; Five Children, per W. H., 2s. 6d.; Cake, 2s.; E. D. V., 7s. 6d.; B. M., 2s. 6d.; Montague-road Hall, Leyton-stone, S.S., 13s. 6d.; Y. P. C. E., 10s.; Children at Rock House, 14s. 6d.; J. M., 1s.; Collected, M. E. P., 7s. 6d. Total, £5 13s.

Ragged School Union (Cripples' Bathing Machine).—Muriel N., 3s.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S.	Mark	v. 1-20.	Th.	Mark	vi. 14-29.
M.	,,	v. 21-34.	F.	,,	vi. 30-44.
Tu.	,,	v. 35-43.	Sat.	,,	vi. 45-56.
W.	,,	vi. 1-13.

Membership cards sent on receipt of penny stamp.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham and neighbourhood, to March 31. Mr. Hankinson, Staplehurst, March 12. Mr. George Goodman, Peckham, to March 14; Leyton, March 20-28. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Stowmarket, March 20 to April 5. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, Reedham, to March 13. Mr. Seyler, Gospel Oak, to March 12.

Bible Searcher (No. 62).

Rules published Jan. 7, sent on receipt of penny stamp.

All answers to be quoted from the Epistle to the Galatians, ch. iv.-vi. Number of question the first, then chapter and verse, then answer in the fewest possible words from the text. Children under ten do any three; under thirteen six.

1. By what are we told to serve one another?
2. How can we fulfil the law of Christ?
3. What is our duty if anyone be overtaken in a fault?
4. In what commandment is the law fulfilled?
5. Of what are we told not to be desirous?
6. Who has God sent to us because we are sons?
7. What are the fruits of the Spirit?
8. In what one thing was Paul willing to glory?

KEY TO BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 61).

1. Gen. xv. 6. Gal. iii. 6.	5. Gen. xxiii. 19, xxv. 8, 3, xxix. 31, l. 13.
2. Gen. xviii. 25.
3. Gen. xix. 26; Lu. xvii. 32.	6. Gen. xvii, 1, xxv. 7.
4. Gen. xxi. 20.	7. Faith; Gal. iii. 9, etc., or Heb. xi., 8-19.

8.—The story of Abraham teaches us first to obey God (Gen. xii. 4, xiii. 18, xxii. 9, etc.), and then to trust Him (Gen. xv. 6, etc.).

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 56.—Llewellyn and Queenie Dale (Bombay). No. 48. Graham and Christine Pearson (Tasmania). Nos. 48 and 49. J. A. Field (Sydney). Nos. 51 and 52. Alice Henderson (Jamaica). No. 52. Daisy McArthur*. Nos. 53, 54, and 55. Bessie Whitehead. Nos. 53 and 54. Una Whitehead (South Africa). No 57. Helen and Chas. Gartshore. Nos. 57 and 58. Frank and Vera Sjostrom (America). No. 58. Dorothy Grove (Rathlin). Nos. 52 and 54. Walter B. Henderson (hon. mention), Alice Henderson (second certificate).

No. 60.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

Nellie and Fanny Ames, Hugh*, Arnold, Ernest, Allen, Arnold, and Owen Akers, Constance, Olive, Gordon* Andrews, Dorothy Arbuthnot*, Violet Ashworth, Wm. Aston, Wallace and Millicent Bentley, Frances Bennett*, Willie and Victor Bellerby, W. S. Buchanan*, Alice Bazett, Rhoda Bentley, Bert Brotchie, Allen and Massy Baker, Irene Benny*, L. and Herbert Berry, Louis Berthe, D. A. Bennie, Chas., May, and Jessie Baker, Ralph Bourne, Gracie Barnes*, Mary Ballingal*, Edith Bell, Lily and Stanley Boxer, John Baring, E. B. and Janet Black, Mary Barton, Charlotte Bailey, Henry Bone*, Annie Boniface, Phyllis Boyd, Lavinia Barnes*, Annie Couch, Susie Cumbers, Nina Coote, Mary Clarke, Maggie*, Willie*, and Mary* Charles, Marjorie Collins, Bessie Cheale, Elma Cheal, W. Campbell, Anna and Elsie Cowley, Gladys Calvert*, Lottie Carter, Vernon, Jack, and Rosalind Clarke, Ruth Coupe, Arthur Cole, Walter, Maggie, and Jessie Carter, Violet Chamberlin, Henry Cheney, Edith and Dora Corric, Mary Colville, Dora Colebrook, Lilian Collins*, Katie and T. O. Cross, Carrie Dawe, Kenneth Dunbar, Helen Daniels, Margaret Davison, Ellen Drake*, Jessie Dunlop, Edith Daisley*, Frank Dean, E. A. and Cecil Dodd, Gordon Duncan, Marjory and Dorothy Dyke, Louie Daw, Eva Edmundson, Kathleen Foweraker, Kate Fletcher, Amy Foster, Fannie and Wm. Field, Willie, Reginald, and Ernest Findlay, Frances Figgis, Christopher and Lilian Fidler, Edith, Herbert, and Winifred Fowler, Bessie, Maggie, and Mabel Fletcher, Constance Gabbett*, A. D. and Christabel Goodwin, Minnie Giddings*, Constance and Sybil Godfrey, Jimmie and — Grieve, Edith and Margaret Gray, Thea Guinness, Euphemia and Mary Graham, Gladys and Irene Gill, E. C. S. Hogge, Winifred Harvey, Marjorie Hogg, Stanley and Francie Hoyte, Annie Hazledine, Mena*, Edith, and Chas.* Hunter, Rose Hamilton, Theodora Hill, Dorothy Harris, Cecil Harvey, Tony*, May*, Helen*, and Harcourt Hunter, Violet Holford, Winifred Hoyte, Jack Harris, Margaret Hasse, Fredda Hunton, F. E. E. Harris, Clarice and Lilian Herivel, Lexie, Jack*, Lucy, and C., and Archie Jacob, Agnes Jones, Norman Johns, Elsie Johnson, Dora, Grace, and Dudley Joyce, Moffat and J. S. Jackson, E. V. and Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Isa and Tom Kay, A. C. and Rebe King, Emily and Lucy Kelk, Wm.* and Susie* Keen, Maggie Kirkbride, Hubert, T. A. and Jane Kirkpatrick, Alex, Agnes, and Willie* Kay, Flora King, Dorothy Keable, Lydia Ladd, Doke Lewis, Dorothy Lennard, Arthur Llewellyn, Alice Loveridge*, Guinefred and Elsie Leigh, Margery and Trevor Matthews, Bessie Millar, Stanley Marinet, Frank Morris, Tita, Wm., and Colin Mackenzie, John and Maggie Menzies, Laura Macaulay*, Margaret Macphee, Ivy Maunsell, Dora Marples, Willie and Constance D. Mears, Dora Muir, Louis Matthews, Evelyn and Arthur Moir, Harry Malaher, Wm. Mitchell, Charlotte Millar, Barbara Maconely, Eva Monti*, Frank Medcalf, Ian Macgregor, Gladys Mather, Hilda Matheson, Lewis Morice, S.E. Mackintosh, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Bella, Thos. Abraham and Nellie Mack, Alan Maples, S Murley Oldham, Arabella Onslow, Mabel Owen*, Eva* Oakes, George O'Beirne, Lottie and Harriette Orr, Ethel* and Kathleen, Pasley, Muriel R. Palmer, Norman, Daisy, May and Vera Petrides, Maggie, Willie, and Jessie Palmer, Daisy Phillips, Jessie, Lillian*, and Margaret Pook*, Victor*, Louie*, and Nellie Pearney, Nancie Parker, Ethel and Gladys Palmer, Gladys* and Isabel Phipps, Duncan Payne, Francis Phillips, Douglas Paige, Louie Penny, Connie and Alice Rouse, P. M. Read, Martha —, — Rogers, Matilda Robinson, Gordon Pennington, M. L. Richards, Edward Rainey, Arthur and L. M. Ramsay, Gordon, Gracie, and Edyth Reeve, May Seddall, Maggie Smith, Sidney and Dora Smith, Constance* Scott, Evelyn Shaw, Emily Stuart*, Dorothy and Muriel Shaw, Rosetta Sherwin, Dorothy Sharp, Winnie Shaw, Nellie Skinner, Bob and Dollie Salt, B. H. Spencer, Mabel and Arthur Sanders, Lily Taylor. Herbert Tomkins, Gladys Tingley, Mary Tongue, Ethel Taylor, Janet, John*, and Angus Thomson, Frank Thompson, Hugh Tufnell, Herbert*, Arthur*, and Lawrence Turnbull, Louie Tibbits, L. E. Vigars, Gertrude Vellacott, Nellie Walker, G. Wood, Florrie White, Gladys Webb, Jessie West, Elsie*, Ida, and Grace Wright, Harold Wodson, Arthur and Herbert Wright, Maggie Wight, Willie Wheeler, Lilian and Helen and Elsie Willoughby. Horace and James Williamson, Cicely and Marjorie Washington, Ronald and May Watson, Evelyn Wood, Dorothy Warner, "Winwich," Fanny* Waring, Edith Whradon, Edgar Yerbury.

No. 61.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Marion*, D. and Ernest Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth*, Herbert Braddon*, Ethel M. Barclay, Katharine Blackie, Clara Barnes, Florence, Willie, and Albert Bellerby, Millicent and Wallace Bentley, Mabel Birney*, Emily Bridgewater*, Henry S. Bone, Phyllis Boyd, Elma Cheal*, Dorothy Cooper*, Herbert Compton, Albion Close, Ruth Coupe*, Annie, Edith, and Mabel Cole, Kathleen and Brereton Code, Randolph Daintree, Helen C. M. Daniels, Margaret Davison, Stanley Douglas-Jones, Gracie* and Kathleen* Dodington, Nellie and Willie Dowsett, Stuart* and Lilian* Ellacott, Ernest Edmonds, Tilly Feuchter*, Bessie, Kate, and Maggie Fletcher, May Fooks*, Jane Forman, Lee Gardner, Constance Gabbett*, Thea Guinness*, Dorothy and Frances Harris, Dorothy* and Evelyn* Hewer, Elizabeth and A. Hill, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games, Annie and — Jepson, Agnes Jones, Robert* and Frank* Jones, Norman Johns*, Grace, Dudley and Dora Joyce, Emily Kelk, May and Sidney Law, Teddie Lawrence, Geo. and — Macdonald, Dora Marples*, Hilda Matheson, Reginald Measor, Daisy and Winnie Millar, Lewis Morice, Ernest Nash, Arabella Onslow, Charles Parkin*, Alice M. Palmer, Horace H. Palmer, Edwin Peters, Katie, L. M., and Alfred Penny, Myrtle Perry, J. Ernest Pearce*, Nellie Pitt, Geo. W. Powell*, Hilda Rawson, Nora Read, Marion* and Robert* Richards, Sydney* and Cecil* Robertson, Jeanie Robertson, Margery Smart, Edith Saunderson*, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Rosetta Sherwin, Kenneth Soltau, Ethel Snowball, Betty Stocks*, Constance, Gertrude, and Mildred* Scott, Eric Studd, Annie Tawse, Arnold Taylor, Muriel Taylor, Angus, M. M. and Winifred Thomson, Howard Toller, Gertrude Vellacott, May Vickers*, Ethel Williamson, R. H.* and W. F. Williamson, Henry J.* and Queenie* Williams, Cecile*, Phillis*, and Noel* Wright, G. M. Wood, Allan Woodman*.

Children at the Cape.—The Cape Town Children's Service Mission reports a revival of interest in direct labour for the conversion of the young, and the calling out of many fresh workers in this field. These happy results have sprung from the special effort put forth by the Mission, and the activity of its many branches.

Free Church Council.

DR. MONRO GIBSON'S ADDRESS.

THE meetings of the Council of the Evangelical Free Churches being held this week have started with much enthusiasm and vigour. The opening reception on Monday night, at the Mansion House, gave promise of good things to come.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached at the City Temple on Tuesday morning, while at ten o'clock the president (Dr. Monro Gibson) followed with his inaugural address. After stirring passages on the unity of believers, he drew attention to the main positive doctrines of the New Testament, for which we are called as Evangelical Churches to bear witness, and inquired how far we are giving a demonstration of them to the age in which we live :—

Doctrines of the New Testament I say, because, though we yield to none in our appreciation of the majesty and true inspiration of the Old Testament Scriptures, we cannot forget that the forms and orders of the Old Covenant are superseded, because fulfilled, in Christ. For the great principles of sacred truth as gradually unfolded, especially through the prophetical teaching, to the Children of Israel, and for their application to the national life under continually varying conditions, we betake ourselves to the Old Testament; but for things ecclesiastical, for the doctrines of the Church, its forms, its orders, its worship, its administration, we are expressly prohibited from going back to the Old Covenant, which, on the testimony of the prophets themselves, notably of the Prophet Jeremiah (xxxi. 31), as well as of Christ and his Apostles, is replaced by the New. What, then, are the great doctrines of the New Testament for which as Free Churches we stand, and of which we are called to give a demonstration?

SPIRITUALITY.

For the spirituality of the New Testament Church as distinguished from the formality of ecclesiasticism. The great difference between the Old Covenant and the New is the difference between the outward and formal on the one hand, and the inward and spiritual on the other. So long as we are in the body it is impossible that form can be altogether dispensed with, but it is reduced to a minimum in the New Testament. The whole drift of our Lord's teaching was against laying stress on form, and for concentration of thought and energy on the things of the Spirit. Whole books are written for the express purpose of guarding against the disposition to revert to what the apostle calls "the beggarly elements" of the superseded Judaism. To us it seems nothing less than astounding that ritualism should be able to rear its head in England, in a land where the Epistle to the Galatians, with its crushing condemnation of it all, is freely circulated among the people. And it is no less marvellous that things outward and visible, such as external organisation, priestly succession, and sacramental forms, should be made the essential notes of the Church, in defiance, not of particular passages merely, but of the entire drift and scope of the great Epistle to the Hebrews.

PARTICULAR DOCTRINES; (I.) THE CHURCH.

Leaving now the general idea of spirituality, we come to the particular doctrines for which as Free Churches we stand. These are the spiritual doctrine of the Church of God, of the priesthood of Christ and of his people, and of the ministration of the Spirit.

(i.) The doctrine of the Church. We find in the New Testament references to local churches, such as the church at Jerusalem, or at Antioch, the church in the house of Nymphas, the church throughout all Judea and Galilee, and Samaria (Acts ix. 31, R.V.); but beyond these, above them all, or rather comprising them all, we find reference made to the Church, not local, but catholic, which is "the Body of Christ." This in the New Testament is alone dignified with the title "The Church," without any limiting geographical description. It is not an aggregate of separate units, but a body, constituted such, not by any outward bonds, but by the indwelling of one Spirit, who animates each and all of its members. The lucid exposition by our last president of the Scriptural catholicism as distinguished from that which is merely Roman or Anglican, will be fresh in the memory of us all. I have seen no attempt to disprove what he said; and I do not wonder, for it is impossible. The Scriptures of the New Testament lend no countenance whatever to any smaller conception of the Church Catholic than that which includes in it every true disciple of Christ, every member of "his body the Church."

THE PRIESTHOOD.

(ii.) The New Testament doctrine of the priesthood. Here again it is very easy to show that the only priesthood recognised in the New Testament is the priesthood of Christ and of all believers, that the term priest is not once used to designate an order of ministry in the Church, and that not once are sacerdotal functions assigned to any of the Church's officers. But here again, while we have stoutly protested against the unscriptural priesthood, have we faithfully and fully set before the people of England the true priesthood? Has not the priestly work of Christ become obscured or relegated to the background in much of our preaching? We may exalt Him as the Prophet of Humanity, we may proclaim Him as Lord and Master, we may set forth his life as our pattern and ideal and yet fail entirely to do justice to his high priesthood, the sacrifice of his Cross, the power of his intercession, the efficacy of his absolution, the wealth of his benediction. Sinful man must have a priest. So long as the consciousness of sin is not awakened, men may be satisfied to hear of duty and ideals and the like; so it is possible for an essay-writer or lecturer to get round him a congregation—of a sort, of people who are perhaps moral and respectable, but in no true sense Christians. Unless the sense of sin be awakened, the need of Christ will not be felt, and true devotion to Him will be unknown. But as soon as the sense of sin is awakened, the cry of the soul is for a priest, and if the great High Priest is not set forth in the all-sufficient sacrifice He offered for us on earth, and the intercession He is making for us now in heaven, men will clamour for an earthly priest, and find security in the unsupported claims of a usurping hierarchy.

MINISTERIAL ORDERS.

(iii.) The ministration of the Spirit. Here again we stand for the doctrine that the Spirit was given, not to the officers of the Church for distribution to the rest, but to the whole Church: "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost," and this, we are told, in fulfilment of the prophecy of Joel, which extends the privilege even to the slaves. We believe indeed that there are special gifts for specific work, so that there is a bestowment of special grace on those who are called to preach, qualifying them for their sacred office. We believe, therefore, in ministerial orders. We believe that in addition to "the Apostles and Prophets" who, and who alone, are associated with Christ Himself in laying the foundation, there has been a continual succession of "evangelists and pastors and teachers," "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." These all have the promise of "grace sufficient;" but the giving of it is retained in the hands of the ever-living Head of the Church, not delegated to any set of men.

SACRAMENTAL GRACE.

As with orders, so with the grace of the sacraments. It is in no sense material and fleshly, but only and wholly spiritual. The association of regeneration with baptism we gladly acknowledge; but that the mere form or act of baptism, by whomsoever administered, accomplishes regeneration, we strenuously deny. Again, that by the ordinance of the Holy Communion we are so made partakers of Christ, that not only are our spirits refreshed, but our very bodies become sanctified as temples of the Holy Ghost—this we acknowledge and rejoice in; but that the mere eating of bread and drinking of wine, by whomsoever blessed, accomplishes this great result, we are constrained, in loyalty to the truth of God, wholly to deny.

This movement we firmly believe to be not of man but of God. Those of us who were present at its inception had no idea whereto it would grow. It has been born, not made. Had the house been of our building, we should have laboured in vain, but we humbly believe that its builder and maker is God. There has been no sound of axe or trowel. The Spirit of God has been moving in the hearts of our people all over the land. Difficulties which seemed insurmountable have disappeared. Valleys have been exalted and mountains and hills brought low, the crooked has been made straight, and the rough places plain. Is it, then, presumptuous to believe that it is the way of the Lord which has been prepared before us?

An R.S.U. Conference.

ONE of the latest developments of the work of the Ragged School Union, with all its wide ramifications, is that of the cripple department, in connection with which nearly 6000 crippled children in loneliness, pain, and weakness, scattered all over the Metropolis, are lovingly visited, cheered, helped, taught, and their dull lives illumined by the story of the love of Christ.

In connection with this branch a conference of workers and leaders was held at the R.S.U. offices, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, on Tuesday week. Mr. James Robertson presiding.

Mr. C. H. Grinling read a thoughtful paper, full of practical suggestion and earnest counsel, on "More Thorough Help for the Cripples." His chief points were friendship and fellowship. These weary sufferers, to be really helped, must be dealt with as personal friends and not as mere "cases." Friendship towards those needing aid, and fellowship in regard to other workers and societies in the same field, ought to characterise all engaged in this very important service.

The conference being open, many suggestions of a practical kind were made by a number of workers, the general outcome being the desire for a more scientific system of relief, the avoidance of overlapping in district visitations, the more ready supply of surgical instruments in urgent cases, and some method of dealing with dissipated parents who parade their crippled children for the sake of gain. Some of the questions thus raised were not easily answered on the spot, but the workers generally concurred in the view that crippled children should be taught by the State, while voluntary effort might be left to meet their needs in the ways suggested, as well as in the provision of seaside homes, such as that opened by the R.S.U. at Southend, where afflicted children find rest, access of strength, and gladness of heart. As the chairman and others emphatically urged, the aim of the whole work is to save souls, to bring the light and love of the Gospel into dull hearts worn by pain, to minister to those who so sorely need it the comfort of Divine grace. The urgent need for more personal workers, and for a large increase in funds, if this great work is to be thoroughly carried out, was earnestly insisted upon.

Rev. W. H. Aitken at Oldham.

A PARTICULARLY encouraging Mission has been conducted by this missioner at St. Mark's, Oldham, in connection with the general mission in the town. The interest steadily increased from day to day, until, on the last Sunday evening, the church, crowded to its utmost capacity, proved too small for the numbers attending. An overflow meeting had to be held by the vicar, Rev. G. J. Watts, who is himself an experienced and successful mission preacher.

The work has been largely amongst the young people employed in the mills, a very large number of whom seem to have decided for Christ during the Mission. The meetings for women have been specially encouraging.

Mr. Aitken was assisted during the first week by Mrs. Aitken, who addressed large gatherings of women daily, with manifest tokens of Divine blessing resting on her work. She was followed on the second Sunday of the Mission by Miss Bazett, who also undertook the work amongst the children, and whose glowing words were much blessed of God to young and old.

Mr. Aitken expressed his conviction that the apparent results of the Mission were much above the average. The local friends are rejoicing in showers of blessing, and ask earnest prayer that those who have seemed to accept Christ may be kept firm and stedfast to the end.

The Foreign Field.

SIERRA LEONE.

A PRINTING-PRESS is much needed for the furtherance of the work of the C.M.S. in the hinterland of Sierra Leone. There is a vast field for itineration. It is estimated that there are some 200,000 Temnes who need the Scriptures in their own tongue. Translation work is going on, and a printer is available, but a press is required. About £100 will purchase one that is suitable. Mr. J. A. Alley, of the C.M.S. Mission House, Bake Loko, Sierra Leone, sends these and other particulars.

SAILORS IN YOKOHAMA.

A good work is in progress among seamen here, under the direction of Rev. Mr. Austen and his wife. As in other foreign ports, there are numberless traps set for the sailors, and the need for Christian effort is very great. Mr. Austen has recently secured a steam-launch, which he finds extremely useful in conveying the men to and from their vessels. Services are held on the ships and in the hall; while Christian literature is distributed and other agencies employed to influence the sailors and help them in leading a good life.

In a communication respecting the work, Rev. Robert Wallace, of Belleville, Canada, informs us that Mr. Austen is anxious to engage a Japanese helper, who will visit the ships and reach many seamen who do not come to the hall or reading-room. Mr. Wallace says that he and Mrs. Wallace were delighted to find so efficient and useful a work in progress.

A CONFERENCE IN MEXICO.

A delightful inter-denominational assembly has been held in the City of Mexico. Eleven missionary societies were represented. The greatest harmony and unanimity pervaded the meeting. Among other important things discussed was the matter of native support. The members of all denominations seem to have but one mind on this subject, which is that we must have self-supporting and self-propagating churches. It was decided to adopt the Modern Version of the Spanish Scriptures, a translation which is mostly the work of one of our fellow-missionaries, Rev. H. B. Pratt. It will be published by the Bible Society of New York.

It was agreed that the different denominations should co-operate in prosecuting evangelical work in this country. The early morning devotional exercises were of unusual interest and power. We are in need of tracts, Gospels, and cards.

Toluca, Mexico, Feb. 6. W. D. Powell.

CONVICTS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

About eight miles from Cape Town there is a first-rate health-resort, Wynberg. It boasts of a military camp with its thousands; also its gaol, where the scum of Cape Colony is found lodged within its walls. The Gospel has been faithfully preached every Lord's Day for the last fourteen years. The Great Day will declare how many have been born of God within its walls.

The preacher is a master monumental mason, Mr. R. Cane, a native of London. Fourteen years ago Mr. Cane went one Lord's Day to see one of his workmen, who had been put in gaol. When leaving him he put a few tracts into his hand, asking him to give them to his fellow-prisoners. The gaoler told Mr. Cane that he could come and give tracts out himself. Such was the beginning of this interesting work. For some time Mr. Cane laboured amongst the convicts in their cells and in the yard. Ultimately the authorities were led to offer the court-room.

About eight years after the work began, the present magistrate, Mr. Clote, met Mr. Cane in the street, and told him that Government had voted £18 per year for that work, also for the eight years that were past. After due consideration, Mr. Cane said he was thankful for the kind offer, but had decided not to take anything from Government. His heart was more set on the work than the money—a needful thing in every servant of the Lord. Would God there were more of that spirit in the Master's vineyard.

Cape Town. P. Whitwell.

THE WESTERN SOUDAN.

The remarkable opening of regions long closed to the Gospel, resulting from recent events on the Niger—both at Nupé and Benin—is felt to be a call from God to missionary advance. Bishop Tugwell writes to The Times, challenging the Christian churches "to enable me as their representative to enter this country before the close of this year. It can be done and should be done. I know the country, Hausaland and Sokoto, and am prepared to enter it, but I shall need men and I shall need money. Leaders we have ready to hand. There are at this moment in Lokoja awaiting reinforcements, Mr. Nott (formerly Lieut. Nott), who speaks the Hausa language fluently, and Rev. J. L. Macintyre, who is making rapid progress in the Nupé language. Before leaving the Niger last year I arranged on my return to rejoin Mr. Nott in November of this year, and to proceed to Yakoba, and possibly to Kano. The Yakoba country is reputed to be healthy and to stand upon a plateau of some 2000ft. to 3000ft. above the level of the sea. From this country we shall be able to strike north, east, and west. This plan I shall, God willing, in any case carry out.

"The capture of Benin opens up a large district lying within my diocese. This city has long been notorious for its atrocities committed with its Ju Ju worship; it is now thrown open to the Christian world. Meantime I am anxious to organise a band of from twenty to thirty men. We need ordained men, laymen and medical men. Ere long ladies will be able to proceed to these countries with a minimum risk to life and health. Proceeding further, as we should now be prepared to do, to Sokoto and Gando, and other important centres, we should necessarily need considerable sums of money. A sum of £10,000 to £15,000 at least would be required effectively to man these centres."

The hon. sec. of this Advance Fund is Dr. Harford-Battersby, 14, Earlham-grove, Forest Gate, E.

MARASH ORPHAN GIRLS.

Armenian Orphans.

THROUGH the generosity of friends in Great Britain, Rev. Krikor Behesnilian was enabled a few months ago to open an orphanage for fatherless girls at Marash. In a booklet entitled "For Christ's Sake," he gives an account of some of the inmates, and we reproduce a picture of the party, attended by the missionary's devoted wife.

In the course of his interesting paper, Mr. Behesnilian says he is anxious that each girl received into the Home should have a friend in Great Britain, willing to defray the cost of her support, which is £10 per annum. Readers who would like some particulars of the life-history of the poor girls, should procure the pamphlet from Mr. Behesnilian, at Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Expansion at Haifa.

AN interesting drawing-room meeting has been held at Oakleigh, Grove-road, Sutton, to hear from Mr. D. C. Joseph some account of the work carried on under his superintendence at Haifa, Mount Carmel.

It will be in the recollection of friends of the Evangelical Mission to Israel that Mr. Joseph was formerly resident in Jerusalem. The power of the rabbis was brought to bear, and every hindrance was put in his way so effectually that he was assured it was the mind of God for him to seek another part of Palestine to carry on his work amongst the seed of Abraham. He was manifestly guided to Mount Carmel, where his mission has expanded in several directions.

During a time of sickness, Mr. Joseph realised, as never before, the value of a hospital in work among his people. At Mount Carmel there is nothing of the kind to which the Jew will go; and while contemplating measures to supply the need, Mr. Joseph learned that a small bequest (£200) had been left in aid of his work. One half of this was expended without delay in the purchase of a freehold site. He has now come to this country to interest Christians in his work and its needs.

What has been done already in this direction of dealing with bodily ills has been the means of bringing many within the influence of Gospel preaching and other services, such as night-schools and exposition of the Word of God. With £1000, our brother will be enabled to raise a good substantial building. Meantime, the land bought is not unproductive; it brings in some small amount, as it is let as a vineyard. F. Newth.

The Children's Mission, Camberwell, reports encouragement in connection with the Sunday School and Gospel services and other operations. The free breakfasts have been the means of relief to many poor children who otherwise must have gone hungry to school. The secretary is Mr. A. H. Roe, 251, Southampton Street, Camberwell, S. E.

Southern Morocco Mission.—In a booklet entitled, "The Land of the Setting Sun" a stirring account is given of a part of the Dark Continent which is sadly dark for a region so near to enlightened lands. The details of Gospel work under the auspices of the Southern Morocco Mission are deeply interesting. Particulars may be had from Mr. John Anderson, Bible Training Institute, Glasgow. Copies of the booklet may be had (one penny each) from the office of the Mission, 1, Blythswood-square, Glasgow.

Evangelistic Notes.

In our issue of February 25, we gave a striking incident entitled, "Switched at Lydney Junction." We have since learned that it was from the pen of Mr. Newton Jones, the well-known evangelist, and was the story of his own conversion. This fact was not within our knowledge when we inserted the narrative.]

Rev. J. Burnham has conducted a ten days' mission at Penge Tabernacle. All the meetings have been "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Mr. George Hunter, of Aberdeen, has closed a three weeks' special mission (under the auspices of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission) at Kingswood. The meetings have been marked with great interest, and many have professed decision. Mr. Hunter has also conducted meetings in Aston Clinton, Westcott, and Grendon with marked blessing.

In connection with the Ramsbottom Sunday-school Union a ten days' mission has been conducted by Mr. Newton Jones. His afternoon Bible-readings and talks to workers were much enjoyed. The young people's meetings were very popular, and resulted in many being seriously impressed about salvation. With regard to the work amongst the adults, Mr. Jones found a harder task. Several, however, found their way into the inquiry-room, and in the case of others the spirit of conviction was working. Jas. McCleery, Sec.

Mr. Chas. Inglis has closed a four weeks' mission in Winnipeg. The interest continued to grow each week, both in the Bible readings and the Gospel services at night. Special meetings were held at C. P. Ry. Co.'s shops, and one service was held at the provincial jail. No record was kept of the inquiries, but the effect is being felt in the churches already, by the increased interest among Christians and by the new members joining. The meetings were the means of uniting the different sections of the church. One outcome will probably be the establishment of a railroad Y.M.C.A. work. Several of the railroad employees have taken the matter in hand. Another result will be the emphasising of the need of a Y.M.C.A. building for this city. Mr. Inglis held a four days' mission in Brandon, Man., and four days at Portage La Prairie. At both of these places blessing has been the result. Mr. Chas. Inglis, who has been on the Pacific coast, hopes to reach London about March 16.

Mr. T. H. Ibbott, evangelist, from Manchester, has concluded a mission in Chestergate, Stockport. Every service proved a time of refreshing to the workers themselves, and the Word was with power making many feel their need of salvation. One important feature in the mission was a meeting on Friday, Feb. 26, for young men, which proved a great blessing, and led many to cry out for pardon and purity. Sunday, Feb. 28, was also a time of great power, and numbers decided for Christ.

A Worker.

Mrs. Baeyertz has concluded a most successful fortnight's mission in Holderness-road Presbyterian Church, Hull. The evening services and afternoon Bible-readings were well attended from the first, but the numbers increased day by day, until at the close of the mission every available space in the large church was crowded. The power of the Holy Ghost was most manifest, while Mrs. Baeyertz with touching pathos pleaded with the unsaved to yield themselves to Christ. Her addresses on "Tears," "Doors," and "But," were especially powerful, and many confessed that their conversion resulted from hearing her speak on the "Unpardonable Sin." Three hundred were dealt with in the enquiry-room, many of whom were gathered in from Bible-classes and Sabbath-schools. Two cases were confirmed drunkards, whose change of heart is very evident. The blessing received by Christians at the Bible-readings was a marked feature of the work.

Mr. Thos. L. Johnson, although advancing in years and enduring great bodily suffering, has had the joy of seeing great blessing in Croyens Chapel, Hereford. The mission began February 14, and all three services were well attended. The week evenings were a surprise, for it was hard to get seating accommodation for the people, so on the Sunday, 21st, the Drill Hall had to be engaged, which holds 1200, and both services were crowded. There are many results we know of, but we believe many more will yet confess Christ. Burt Sharp.

A ten days' Christian endeavour misssion has been carried on in the Congregational Church, Watton, Norfolk, by Rev. Herbert E. Ryder, of Philadelphia. During each afternoon an hour was devoted to Bible readings, which were greatly appreciated. At the close of each evening service the inquiry room was well filled with anxious souls, and many intelligently accepted Jesus as their Saviour. The number of young converts who came boldly out and confessed Christ was most pleasing to witness. The Endeavourers are rejoicing much and praising God for the blessing attending these services.

Mr. Samuel McKenzie has conducted a fortnight's meetings at Maryhill, Glasgow. The church was well filled on Sabbath evenings, and the attendance on week nights steadily increased. His faithful dealing and urgent entreaties met with marked attention from the hearers, and found their way to many hearts, so that some professed their acceptance of the Saviour, while the people of God were refreshed and stimulated.

Mr. Frank L. Smith sailed for New York on Wednesday, March 3, on the Dominion Line steamer Canada. During his stay in England he rendered excellent service in Christian work. He conducted successful missions at the Edinburgh Castle, Exeter Hall, Talbot Tabernacle (Bayswater), Aberdeen, Belfast, etc., in addition to addressing many meetings at Aldersgate street Y.M.C.A. He carries back with him to America the warm esteem and brotherly love of all with whom he has been associated in England.

On Monday evening last, Mr. George Clark concluded a fortnight's mission at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, which has been accompanied by many proofs of the Divine blessing. Night after night, says a correspondent, large audiences gathered to hear the Gospel, and upwards of 300 found their way into the Inquiry Room. There have been several cases of striking conversion; some rather noted people from the district have been laid hold of, and have undergone a wonderful transformation. The number of men attending these meetings has been remarkable, and many young men have given themselves to God. Miss Rose sang the Gospel message.

In connection with the Keynsham Baptist Church, a Gospel mission was recently conducted by Mr. Thomas Moremon, evangelist, of Staple Hill, Bristol. The services were well attended, and much blessing rested upon the effort. Many of the young people from the Sunday-school and Bible-classes were brought to personal decision for Christ.

W. M.

Bible Society Birthday.

Juvenile collectors who have helped in the course of the past year to raise the funds of this Society assembled in the Guildhall on Saturday afternoon, by invitation of the committee, to celebrate its ninety-third birthday. Taking in the friends and teachers who accompanied them, there were about 1500 happy-looking young people in the old hall.

Sir Whitaker Ellis, representing the London Corporation as chairman of the day, said in opening his address that he had never spoken in the Guildhall on any occasion which gave him greater pleasure.

Rev. J. Macgowan gave an interesting address based on his thirty-five years' experience as a missionary in China, and upon the influence of the Bible among that ancient people. One of the most recent editions of those issued by the Society in no less than 340 different languages is that for the people of Uganda. It is printed in their language phonetically constructed, and so forms the very foundation of what may one day become an Ugandese literature. For the present the native carries this, his whole library, in a biscuit tin.

An interesting feature of the occasion to the young collectors was a presentation cake of 93lb. weight given this year by Miss Gillett, of Upper Tooting, and representing one pound in weight for every year of the Society's existence. Each visitor was entitled to take away a piece of the cake, and was made welcome to tea served in the crypt.

London City Mission.

The thirteenth conversazione on behalf of the London City Mission was held in the Mansion House on Thursday evening, and, in response to invitations issued by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress, was attended by a large number of the friends of the Mission. After the reception of the company by the Lady Mayoress, a meeting was held in the Egyptian Hall, at which the chair was occupied by Alderman Sir Joseph Dimsdale.

Mr. James Dunn, district secretary, made a brief statement, in which it was explained that the society's annual income amounts to about £55,000, or £5,000 short of the sum required to maintain the work, in which no fewer than 486 missionaries are now engaged. He urged that this year, which is to be marked by the celebration of the Queen's diamond jubilee, should also be characterised by a largely-increased income for the London City Mission, which has now been at work for over sixty years.

The Chairman, having remarked that the Lord Mayor, although conscientiously unable to be with them, nevertheless wished them God-speed, went on to say that the financial support given to the society ought to be such as not only was sufficient to sustain the present efforts of the Mission in the great metropolis, but to secure a continuous development of the work.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer, presented statistics which showed that while the churches of all denominations were doing what they could to reach the poorer part of the community, yet out of the five and a half millions of London population only about 1,300,000 attended any place of worship. It was amongst those non-attenders at church or chapel that the Mission did its work. One plan adopted was to send certain missionaries to certain classes of people whose special habits of life and temptations they thoroughly understood. Such classes, for instance, as the butchers of Smithfield, the fish-dealers of Billingsgate, the men employed at the different gas works, and others were regularly visited, and had the way of salvation pointed out to them.

Canon McCormick, D.D., said the work of the London City Mission was a work which would not only have to do with the glory of the Master, but with the stability of our kingdom and empire, because just in proportion as they diffused Christian principles would they make men good citizens of the State and loyal and obedient servants of the Queen.

Rev. J. B. Meharry expressed his belief that there was no fear of any minister of the Gospel finding fault with the London City Mission. The churches of the city could not do the religious work of the city. They required help, and among the many auxiliaries that were assisting the churches in the great work of furthering the kingdom of Christ, he knew of none that deserved more liberal support or more kindly advocacy than the London City Mission.

Dunkerque Sailors' Rest.—The report of this work shows that the reading-room and coffee-bar continue to prove attractive, whilst the Bethel services are full of encouragement. The Gospel is preached in various European tongues, so that Basques, Scandinavians, Finns, Italians and Greeks, as well as French and English heard the Word of God. Summary of work from June to Dec., 1896: In connection with the Sailors' Rest, 2,023 visits were paid on board ship; twenty visits to the hospital; 2,462 seamen visited the Rest; 355 seamen attended the English Bethel services, and 278 the Scandinavian services. The directors are Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, Dunkerque.

West Indians for West Africa.—There was an extremely interesting gathering at the Church Missionary House last week when the committee welcomed home Bishop Tugwell and Rev. D. H. D. Wilkinson after their official visit to the West Indies on matters connected with Bishop Ingham's scheme for the employment of West Indian missionaries in West Africa. The deputation stayed a month in Jamaica, during which they interviewed the Bishop, the leading clergy, and the leading laity of the place, and the conclusion they have come to is that the scheme is workable and that some definite step forward should be taken at once. The subject is not altogether free from difficulties, and great care will have to be taken in the selection and training of suitable candidates. There is also the financial question, which may perhaps prove the crux of the whole matter. But Bishop Tugwell and his coadjutor have approached the position with considerable statesmanship, and it is confidently expected that all obstacles will be surmounted. There are not a few who believe that in the large introduction of West Indian recruits is to be found the solution of the problem of the evangelisation of West Africa.

Letters to the Editor.

THE HEALTH OF OUR ARMY.

Sir,—I have read with surprise in The British Medical Journal of February 27 that a committee has been appointed by the Royal College of Physicians "to advise the College on the desirability of making a formal declaration of opinion to the Government in favour of the re-enactment of the Contagious Diseases Acts."

I am advised that it was not intended thereby to assume that the College is in favour of the re-enactment of the Acts; but, if so, it would have been sufficient to appoint a committee to inquire into the subject; taking care, however, that the members of that committee should be specially qualified to form an opinion on it, and that a fair proportion of them should be those who are known to be at least not already "in favour of the re-enactment."

For my own part I am opposed to the re-enactment of these Acts on this simple ground—that they are so obviously immoral; and I do not care to justify my position by an appeal to the fact that there is so much conflicting testimony. God's commandments are to be accepted without questioning, and man's attempts to shield transgressors are something worse than futile.

That the Royal College of Physicians, London, should ever seem to countenance immorality under the shallow plea of expediency, is a blot on its noble escutcheon, and if it be not removed I shall be ashamed to sign myself as now, Your obedient servant, F.R.C.P.

Sir,—In 1863 I was ordered to India to assume command of a Field Battery in Oudh. Passing up country I stayed with an old friend who had been years in command of a F.B.R.A. in India, and as I was fresh out he kindly gave me every information. When in his native lines I saw some twelve or fifteen women. Asking who they were, I was informed, "The battery women." On inquiring what that meant, I was given every detail. "Well," I replied, "as soon as I reach my station out they go." My friend replied, "Impossible, they are there by order." I replied, "Order or no order, out they go."

On reaching my station one of my first acts was to send the battery women to their homes, and to rebuild my native lines, excluding all women other than the native men's wives. I was most closely watched and inspected. My hospital sheet was as clean as, if not cleaner than, any battery in India. The Inspector-General of Artillery and the Commander-in-Chief came in turn, and told me mine was one of the best batteries in India.

Finally, the Chief Commissioner in Oudh inspected my natives and their lines, and said he had never seen cleaner homes or happier faces than my natives. Well did someone say at a public meeting in London the other day: "How would those who wish to reimpose the C.D. Acts on the women in India, like it to be applied to their wives and sisters and daughters by a strong ruling foreign power?" Talk of cant; do not these committee-men attend church and hear the seventh commandment? The cant is with the would-be reimposers of the C.D. Acts; not with those who treat women, white and black alike, as possessors of immortal souls.—Yours truly, Justice.

THE GOSPEL IN THE ARMY.

Sir,—Are you aware that a commanding officer is possessed of the power to stop all religious services in the regiment under his command, however much such help may be desired by the soldiers themselves? This is a lamentable fact, and soldiers have told me that it is exceedingly difficult to be Christians in the Army.

I have a relative living at Eshowe in Natal, who for some time past has been most usefully employed in conducting religious services amongst the Eshowe soldiers, with the approval of the commanding officer and to the delight of the soldiers. Through her instrumentality I believe souls have been saved. A new commanding officer, however, has appeared on the scene, who disapproves of such things. He has forbidden the lady to go on with her services, whereupon she appealed to the General, who declined to interfere.

She sent the whole correspondence to me, and I wrote to Lord Wolseley on the subject, directing my letter to the War Office, whence the correspondence was returned informing me that the Commander-in-Chief was ill. I once more sent the correspondence to the War Office, and received a reply informing me that the Marquis of Lansdowne declines to interfere with the general officer commanding the forces in Natal.

How can this wrong be redressed? Some years ago I appealed to the Duke of Cambridge, then Commander-in-Chief, against the decision of some commanding officers, who refused to allow me to preach the Gospel to the soldiers in barracks. The Duke refused to attend to my appeal. But I frequently preached in barracks, though I had been expressly forbidden to do so. I suppose, however, that they felt it would be a shame to turn an old officer out of the barracks merely for preaching the simple Gospel. Anyhow I was never interfered with.—Yours truly, S. Dewe White (Colonel).

37, Upperton Gardens, Eastbourne.

THE JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

Dear Sir,—I was thankful to observe in your last issue a letter calling attention to the serious danger that missions and societies—well established and doing important service—should suffer from the exceptional demands now being made on the public. The pitiful cry of famine-stricken India and outraged Armenia is finding a response in which I heartily rejoice; the Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund is also securing generous response.

But may I reiterate the plea made by "A. B.," that Christian responsibility for homes, orphanages, missions, medical missions, rescue and prisoners' missions, and so on, is neither discharged nor diminished by these great drafts on public charity.

The paralysis threatening at present some of our grandest institutions, may best be illustrated by a concrete case. One important mission is at this moment going behind—in carrying on the minimum of its special work—no less than £20 a day. Such a loss obviously cannot long be borne. It may be said, "We must not go into debt in doing the Lord's work." But let a fact of this kind be pondered. What are the leaders of this mission to do? Close their Homes, dismiss the inmates, discharge faithful and skilful servants—and it takes long care to find and form a qualified staff for such delicate work—and thus disorganise the whole operations because for some weeks or months the funds fall off.

This state of things exists in greater or less degree in several valuable institutions, and these considerations show that it is by no means a simple thing to avoid running into debt by abandoning the work in hand. May I urge in the name of our own perishing people, and of God's work among them, that earnest heed be given to this view of the case. Surely no one with a due sense of responsibility may, whatever the special calls, permit these to lessen customary gifts to home and foreign workers doing most important service for the spread of the Gospel and rescue of lost men and women.—Yours faithfully, T. P.

CONTINENTAL SCHOOLS.

Sir,—I must take exception to Mr. Kilburn's wholesale depreciation of Continental schools contained in your issue of March 4. There are to my certain knowledge many schools both in French Switzerland and Germany which will bear comparison with our best English middle-class schools, if parents would only seek them with the same care they give to the choice of a confidential clerk or even a horse. The light-hearted way in which children are consigned to the unknown foreigner is lamentable, and the worthy schools suffer for the faults of the others.—Yours truly, E. Glanville.

Neuweid, Prussia, March 9.

Deptford.—The City Missionary in this district is doing excellent work amongst drovers, slaughtermen, hawkers, costermongers, dock labourers, mechanics, and others. Through the death of a lady who generously gave us £50 a year for the Missionary's support, his retention in the district has become uncertain. The City Mission will be most grateful to any friends who will kindly assist in keeping him at his present post.

Seaman's Christian Friend Society.—The monthly muster of the "Christian Harbour Lights," held at this society's headquarters on Thursday last, was largely attended. Many seamen and others gave cheering testimony as to the gracious change wrought in themselves, and the good they had been enabled to accomplish for others. Some had come through the recent terrible gales, and special thanks were given on their behalf. Rev. G. J. Hill, who presided, gave a gratifying account of the work at the Society's coast stations, and also stated that all branches of the mission at the headquarters were in a healthy condition, the Gospel services, limelight lectures, temperance and other meetings were well attended, and, best of all, since the beginning of the present year many sailors had been led to the Saviour. Funds were, however, very very greatly needed at the present time for the support of the work.

International S.S. Lessons.

March 21.

"Christian Self-restraint."—1 Cor. ix. 19-27. Golden Text, verse 25.

THE title "Christian self-restraint" suggests two things:—(1) That it cannot be limited in its application to any one thing. Total abstinence is included, and seems to us to be the necessary outcome of the apostle's words. But self-control means much more than that. All our passions and appetites, our emotions and affections, our faculties and powers, are to be under control. There is none greater than the man who rules his own spirit (Prov. xvi. 32). (2) The other thought is that the lesson applies strictly to those who are converted. "Christian self-restraint" cannot be required of one who is not a Christian. It is not proposed as the condition on which we may become Christians. Being must precede doing. What we do is always the outcome of what we are.

I. What was his crown?—Paul has before his mind the great Grecian contest, which included leaping, running, boxing, and wrestling; and for which prizes in the form of olive or pine wreaths were given. In contrast with those fading wreaths he sees an incorruptible crown, much more worth striving for (24, 25). This crown is described in the words, "that I might gain the more" (19); "that I might by all means save some" (22). He looked forward to meeting those whom he had been the means of saving, and he called them his crown (Phil. iv. 1; 1 Thes. ii. 19). This was his ambition (see Dan. xii. 3).

This was a noble object because of its unselfishness. It occupied his thought with others, and left him no opportunity for the miserable occupation of thinking of himself. Anything that tends to unselfishness is to be desired. Next, because of its Christlikeness. It was the work Christ came to do (Luke xix. 10). The highest honour that a Christian can have is that of carrying on the work of Christ. And, last, because its results reached into eternity. Many a successful life, as men call it, may prove to have been a miserable failure when seen in the light of eternity. Paul's fruit would remain (John xv. 16); his works would follow him (Rev. xiv. 13). Have the same object before you. Life will then be worth living.

II. How he hoped to gain it.—His example may help us. (1) His earnestness appears in all these verses. It may be difficult for us to realise the picture of these Grecian games, but we know enough of athletic contests among ourselves to apply the illustration. Who has not watched the racers as they stand toeing the line, with every muscle strained, with eye looking on to the goal, waiting the signal to start? or, having started, how eagerly they press forward, how insensible they are to other objects, however attractive, until, panting and exhausted, the first man touches the tape, and the plaudits of the crowd hail him as victor? Paul says, "So run I" (26). He was as earnest in the work of saving men as the racer is in seeking to reach the goal. This lesson needs to be applied. Much Christian service is of an easy-going, indifferent character. Put first things first.

(2) This earnestness made him the willing servant of all men. Guard against the false application of the word, "I am made all things to all men" (22). He was under law to Christ (21), and could not, for the prospect of saving men, do anything that Christ forbade. But within this limit he would do anything that would give him an influence over men (19-22). He would submit to legal restrictions from which the Gospel had freed him if he might win any who deemed themselves bound by these restrictions. If any were weak he would not chide them for their weakness, but would be one with them in order to win them. Is not that the way in which men are won? Total abstinence may not be necessary for our own sake, but how shall we save the drunkard unless we abstain for his sake? The Moravian missionaries who lived with lepers in order to save the lepers, and others who gave up their freedom in order to save the slaves, were acting upon this principle. If we are as much in earnest as Paul was we shall be ready to manifest his spirit.

(3) This earnestness led him to practise the most vigorous self-control (25-27). The athlete in the Grecian games put himself for months under a course of the most rigorous training. His success depended not only upon his earnestness in the contest, but upon his preparation beforehand. He denied himself even lawful things if they were calculated to injure his prospects of winning the crown. Paul says, "I thus control my body; I buffet it" (27 R.V.). Its demands for ease, for indulgence, he would not heed. It should not master him; he would master it, and make all his powers subservient to his great end. Lest he "should be rejected" (27 R.V.). He does not dread being finally lost, but being unsuccessful in winning the crown.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE annual soirée of the Doncaster Association was largely attended, and passed off with much success.

A very successful joint meeting of the Y.W.C.A. and Y.M.C.A. was recently held in connection with those Associations at Fairfield, Buxton.

A recent mission to men, conducted by Mr. De Burgh Rochefort, has resulted in a deepening of spiritual life among young men attending the meetings of the Shrewsbury Association.

Dr. Nansen's visit to Sheffield, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., with the Duke of Norfolk in the chair, brought a great audience to the Albert Hall, and over £300 to the exchequer of the local Association.

The new Association at Barnsley is making steady progress. At the instance of the Mayoress a ladies' auxiliary has been formed. Rooms have been secured in a main thoroughfare of the town, and are to be opened on the 15th inst.

At the annual meeting of the Kingston and Surbiton Y.M.C.A., under the presidency of Captain Cundy, the secretary, Mr. Arthur Hill, reported that during the year they had had an accession of thirty-four members and seventy associates, several conversions had taken place, and much good work done, and a clear balance-sheet was presented.

The Chinese Inter-Collegian is the official organ of the College Y.M.C.A.'s of China, and is printed in Chinese. The contents include an account of the first convention of the College Associations of China, an article on "Secret Prayer" by Mr. J. R. Mott, and various other contributions of particular interest to Association members and Chinese young men generally.

The forty-seventh anniversary of Dublin Y.M.C.A. was held on Monday evening, Sir Frederick Falkiner presiding. The report showed much practical work done during the year. Among those who took part in the meeting were Dr. Lefroy (Dean of Norwich), Canon O'Connor, Pastor Hugh D. Brown, Rev. Wm. Newham Hall, Rev. Samuel Prenter, Rev. John Elliott, and David A. Black, Belfast. The new building it is hoped will be opened in April.

On Wednesday evening a large gathering of the members and associates of the Aldersgate-street Centre was held in the reading-room, at which a presentation, consisting of an illuminated address, a handsome office desk and chair, and a cheque, was made to Mr. Burn. Mr. Charles Hartnoll, one of the oldest members of the Association, presided; and brief addresses were given by a number of past and present members, all testifying to the benefits they had personally received from their intercourse with Mr. Burn, and to their great regret at his relinquishment of office.

The monthly meeting of the National Council was held at Exeter Hall on Friday afternoon, when, in the absence of Sir George Williams, the chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Seagram. The reports presented by the travelling secretaries of the work in various parts of the country embodied many features of encouragement. Missions held by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the Council's auspices, at several prominent Association centres had, it was stated, been attended by much blessing among young men. Gratifying accounts were also to hand as to the work of the Council's agents in India.

Mr. T. A. Bailey, who, with Mrs. Bailey, has been on a tour round the world en route to India, has accepted a very cordial invitation from leading missionaries and others to take up work in Poonah amongst educated native students, thus continuing an effort which has been successfully carried on for the past eighteen months by Mr. R. P. Wilder, who leaves it in response to an urgent call from America for a year's special work in the colleges of that country. Mr. Bailey writes:—"There are said to be about 25,000 Brahmins in this district...The work is mostly evangelistic, and the students attend meetings well, and are very open for personal conversation...We earnestly ask for the prayers of God's people in the home land."

Venice.—The fact is worth chronicling that at the banquet given here in Venice the other Sunday night, partly in honour of the distinguished delegates attending the sittings of the International Sanitary Conference and to which all were invited, not a single English delegate attended. Their action has done two things: (a) It has once more shown the Italians that Englishmen are men of principle whose religion does not permit them to bargain for the breach of God's law as the Papal Church does; and (b) it has helped the effort now being made in Italy by the laity to work six days and keep holy the Lord's Day, which involves the throwing overboard of saints' days, which cut into a workman's time and become a source of demoralisation. A. R.

[214]

The Y.W.C.A.

THERE are 400 branches of the Y.W.C.A. in Denmark, one being allied to every parish church in the country.

A social reception was given lately to the members and friends of the Dawlish Y.W.C.A. by Sir Thomas Lea, Bart.

A sale of work in aid of the Y.W.C.A. Holiday Home, Woodmount, Clevedon, was held on the 18th ult., when a good sum was realised.

The fourth annual meeting of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch will be held in the Stoke Newington Wesleyan School on the 11th inst.

The Dean of Windsor held a special service in St. George's Chapel on Sunday afternoon, the 21st ult., in connection with the Windsor branch, and gave an address.

In connection with the Total Abstinence Department, Mrs. Hind Smith, who is hon. secretary, is organising a temperance week throughout the Association from March 28 to April 4 next.

The day-school teachers' branch of the Leeds Y.W.C.A. held its annual meeting in the Methodist Chapel. There was a large attendance. Mrs. Brunton read the report, which showed steady progress.

The annual report, just issued, of the Brooklyn (U.S.A.) Association testifies to good work being done and excellent results achieved. This branch has increased its membership more than 1000 during the year.

The annual meeting of the York branch was held at the Mansion House, when Rev. Canon Machell presided over a large attendance. Miss Kitching read the report. New premises have been secured at 19, Priory-street, which have proved an immense advantage to the Institute.

A sale of work in aid of the Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund was held in the Y.W.C.A. Hall, George-street, Edinburgh, on the 15th and 16th ult. Her Majesty is the patron. The Marchioness of Tweeddale was amongst those who were present, and there was a very good attendance.

A new branch at Genoa has lately been opened through the efforts of Miss Miller. Over ninety members have joined at the start. Madame Schalck, who is doing a splendid work in Turin, spoke at the inauguration meeting, when over 130 were present. Kindly help was also given by Miss Reynolds.

The annual meeting of the Liverpool branch was held recently, the Lord Bishop presiding. The average number of boarders per week was twenty-three, while 123 passed through the house during the year. The Bible-classes had been well attended. Unfortunately the financial position of the Institute was not altogether favourable, there being a deficit of over £145. The Lord Bishop, in his closing address, advocated very strongly the claims of the Association.

A very encouraging report of the work at the Percy Institute, King's Cross, was recently given to the Council. There are 238 members, the attendance at the Bible classes has kept up, and the members at the weekly prayer meeting have increased. During the past year three missions were held, with many conversions. Warm interest is taken in Foreign Mission work, sixty-five collecting boxes being in use by the members. Factories are visited, and much other useful work carried on.

The report of the Princess House, Brompton-road branch, testifies to increased interest shown in all the departments with most encouraging results. A new feature has been a weekly prayer union members' meeting, which has been well attended. Missionary effort has been steadily maintained, many members having joined the foreign field from the institute, and reports are sent home at different intervals. The home has been full throughout the year, but needs extension owing to the demands made upon it.

The twenty-ninth anniversary meeting of the Pittsburg (U.S.A.) Association was held in January last. All the reports in connection with the work were very encouraging. The temporary home had accommodated 642 persons during the year. The work of the East Liberty branch had been energetically carried on; hundreds of families had been visited, and an industrial school, with an enrolment of more than 200, had been conducted. In all the branches the spiritual side of the work had been faithfully carried on.

A circular, headed "Our Queen's Diamond Jubilee," has been issued by the British National Council, stating that it is proposed to hold a thanksgiving celebration in the Royal Albert Hall early in July next. The arrangements are to include a loyal address to Her Majesty, a limelight exhibition of the changes in the condition of women during Her Majesty's reign, special Y.M.C.A. choirs, etc. It is desired to make the occasion a thoroughly representative gathering of members and workers from all parts of the Empire. A committee of the British National Council, with several sub-committees, has been appointed to carry out the arrangements.

During the week of prayer for the Y.W.C.A. meetings were held in Dumbarton by the honoured president, Lady Overtoun, assisted by Mrs. Geo. C. Stebbins, of New York. Each evening a large attendance of young women greeted the speakers. Bible readings were given upon the topics assigned—the Fruit of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, etc. Mrs. Stebbins gave five Bible readings, Lady Overtoun presiding and conducting the inquiry meetings. At the meeting held with the Milton branch two earnest seekers were shown the way of life. On Tuesday afternoon a special meeting was held for the ladies from the county. Over one hundred invitations were sent out and many responded, coming in by train and private conveyances. The closing evening was taken by Lady Overtoun, as Mrs. Stebbins was kept in by cold. She also gave two readings the following week in Helensburgh and Borling with much blessing.

Christian Endeavour.

DENMARK has lately formed its first Christian Endeavour Society.

Dr. Clark is now on the way to South Africa, and expects to spend March in that country.

A mission band has been formed by Tacoma Endeavourers to do work in the rescue missions of the city.

All the barber shops and the railroad stations in Spencer, Ia., are supplied with good literature by the Friends' C.E. Society.

The Junior Epworth League of Christian Endeavour of Vancouver, B.C., supports a native teacher in Japan, at an expense of 50dols. a year.

Forty prominent speakers have already accepted invitations to address the British National Christian Endeavour Convention at Liverpool, June 5 to 8.

There were only fifteen persons present at a recent mid-week prayer-meeting in a church in Kasson, Minn., held in a terrible snowstorm, and every one of these was a Christian Endeavourer.

A splendid report comes from the C.E. Society in Howard University, Washington, D.C. During recent revival services conducted by the Society more than sixty of the students took a stand for Christ.

It is said that every young person within a radius of five miles of Hainos City, Fla., is enrolled as a member of the nine-months'-old Christian Endeavour Society. Two Endeavourers ride eleven miles to attend each meeting.

Eighty-one ships were boarded within a year by the floating committee of a single Philadelphian Christian Endeavour Society, that in the Kensington Methodist Episcopal Church. Meetings were held on forty of these ships and more than a thousand periodicals distributed.

Irish Notes.

A Mothers' Union, an organisation of praying mothers earnestly bent on stemming the tide of infidelity, vice, and intemperance, has been founded in Dublin.

The Society to Brighten Workhouse Infirmary Life has been doing a useful work in Belfast. During the year it has been able to provide a supply of healthy literature and a large number of pictures to gladden the poor bedridden sufferers in the infirmary.

The late Rev. John Kinghan, whose life was devoted to the welfare of the deaf and dumb, has left £2000 towards building a hall in Belfast for the deaf and dumb, and also £200 for the blind towards helping them to obtain a trade after they have been trained.

The Belfast Midnight Mission has taken a new departure in holding small tea-meetings, to which the women and girls are personally invited, near the abodes of many of those whom the Mission seeks to reach. In this way several girls have been rescued from a life of shame.

A conference in connection with the Church Extension work of the Belfast Presbytery was held on Friday evening in the Assembly Hall, Belfast. It was pointed out that 3000 new houses were built in Belfast last year. It was resolved to make a strenuous effort during the year to raise a building fund of £20,000 towards meeting the cost of ten new churches in the city.

Borough, S.E.—The report of the Shaftesbury Memorial Hall, Union-street, shows interesting progress in this poor corner. The Gospel and temperance and open-air work has been greatly blessed. The secretary is Mr. R. Moser, 23, Maresfield gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

Gosport Seamen's Mission.

It has been found necessary to make some changes in this mission, the most important of which is the sale of the mission ship Good News. The coasting work was carried on after the death of the founder, Henry Cook, for two years with much blessing, but in March last the vessel returned from France, and since then it has been laid up. We have earnestly waited upon God to show his will in the matter. There has not only been a serious falling off in the funds contributed, but the management involved responsibilities which it was not found possible to meet. Acting, therefore, upon the advice of the trustees and other friends of the mission, this particular branch of the work has been discontinued.

Out of the proceeds it is determined to purchase a steam launch suitable for harbour work in visiting lightships, forts, and ships of all nations which are continually anchoring in the Solent, as well as ports within easy distance of Portsmouth. The need for this is found to be increasingly great. It is also intended to enlarge the work carried on amongst seamen and sailors both in Gosport and Portsmouth, and to concentrate effort within these lines. We hope to be able to secure a suitable missionary, and it is believed that the arrangement will greatly conduce to the furtherance of this good and much-needed work.

We greatly regret that the French house at Deauville is again closed for lack of someone to carry on the operations. If one could be found able and willing to take it up, there is ample sphere for its continuance with success and blessing. We ask prayer and practical sympathy in these matters, and feel sure that He who has blessed and helped hitherto will continue to be gracious. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. Henry Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport. A. M. G.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD.

The Oxford Sunday-school Union had their annual winter gathering at the Y.M.C.A. on March 4, the speakers being Mr. Jas. Tillett and Rev. Dr. Ferguson, of the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham.

The anniversary of the United Temperance Council for Oxon, Berks, and Bucks has taken place. There was a conference in the afternoon presided over by Sir William Herschel, and a public meeting in the evening, when an address was delivered by Canon Barker.

Efforts have been made to stir up interest in regard to Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Miss C. E. Birtell gave an address to the Young Helpers' League, stating that 35,000 children had been rescued, trained, and placed out in life through the efforts of Dr. Barnardo. The league now numbers 14,000 or 15,000 children, and last year about £8000 was collected by its members. Rev. A. G. Cleminson, the clerical deputation secretary, delivered a lecture for the same cause, entitled "Rags and Tatters, and How We Mend Them."

Rev. J. W. Goddard, the organising secretary, gave an interesting account of the work of the Church of England Society for Waifs and Strays, and Miss Barter dealt with the work carried on at the Girls' Industrial School, Cold Ash, in connection with the society.

The University Missionary Union have had the pleasure of a visit from Mr. Eugene Stock.

A conversazione in connection with the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union has been held at the Hannington Hall. Mr. Nixon gave an account of the Railway Mission.

The C.M.S.—The Record states: "The financial position of the C.M.S. does not improve as the year draws to its close. A very large proportion of the Society's income is received in the closing weeks of March, and there may yet be time to avert the threatened heavy deficit; but for the ten months ending January 31, the expenditure was £18,400 ahead of that for the corresponding period of last year. In the matter of income, associations are £6500 to the good, and appropriated contributions are £1800 more than last year; but legacies are £10,000 to the bad, and the statement published in this month's Intelligencer points to a possible deficiency of nearly £30,000. Well may the position be described as one of 'grave importance.' But the friends of the society need not be discouraged. Such an issue, as The Intelligencer remarks, is not inevitable, for 'it is a law of Christ's kingdom that it shall be unto us according to our faith. God is ready to be entreated, and waits to be gracious.'"

Temperance Notes.

At a recent mission in Llanelly, South Wales, by Mr. Tennyson Smith, over 1600 pledges were taken.

A Middlesbrough clergyman has purchased a local theatre for a Temperance club and coffee-house. The first floor is to be used as a mission room.

The Prince of Wales's appeal on behalf of the London hospitals has called forth a calculation that a week's national self-denial in the matter of drink would yield £2,692,307.

The physician-superintendent of the Royal Edinburgh Asylum, in his annual report, calls earnest attention to the large increase of insanity arising from the consumption of alcohol.

The sixtieth anniversary of the York Temperance Society has just been celebrated. The existence of the Society is almost day for day contemporaneous with the reign of the Queen. Over 600 people attended a public tea, which was followed by a torch-light procession.

The Society of the Temperance Ironsides report a marked increase of favour in the eyes of many abstainers in consequence of the altered phrasing of their constitution, whereby it is made clear that the object is not to disqualify non-abstainers for church membership, but to create and cultivate such a sentiment on the matter that it shall be felt to be inconsistent for any Christian to be a non-abstainer.

A week of special temperance effort is being arranged in the Metropolitan Y.M.C. branches, March 28 to April 4. An earnest letter has been issued to local workers by Mrs. Hind Smith, urging personal abstinence, active co-operation, and suggesting the use of a little blue "T. A." stamp to be affixed to every member's card, if she is an abstainer. Full details may be had of Mrs. Hind Smith, c.o. 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

The U.K. Railway Temperance Union has held its annual meetings at Carlisle. The gatherings were large and enthusiastic. The speakers included Messrs. R. Shawyer, Allison, M.P., MacInnes, and Col. Hobbs. The chairman stated that there are about 50,000 total abstainers on the different railway lines in the country, and their society consisted of over 16,000 members, whilst the Great Western line, which was not affiliated to them, had 7000 members in their union.

The nation's drink bill for 1896, according to Dr. Dawson Burn's annual summary, is distinctly discouraging, not only to temperance workers, but to all who have at heart the general welfare of the community. It reached the enormous sum of £148,972,230, an increase of £6,500,000 on the previous year, and in excess of any previous year. The causes which led to this iniquitously high expenditure are difficult to discover, but Christian workers in the poorer parishes of our great cities and towns know only too well what are its effects. It is time that the whole Church awoke to the fact that we are face to face with a gigantic evil which is a menace to the spread of the Gospel.

The Glasgow Free Church Temperance Society held last week its annual meeting, Lord Overtoun presiding. The secretary (Mr. Arthur) reported that the organisation was in a healthy and active state, a great deal of excellent work having been accomplished. The number on the roll of the adult and juvenile societies was over 25,000, the average attendance over 16,500, and the workers, at least, 1533. Lord Overtoun, in the course of a stirring address, spoke of the drink traffic as the Moloch of the nineteenth century. It is sapping the strength of the nation and destroying unnumbered multitudes. It was time the conscience of the nation was stirred, and effective measures taken to stop this evil. Rev. D. Forsyth and Professor Murdoch Cameron followed, while Lady Murray delivered a graceful and telling speech.

The Royal Commission continues to hear witnesses from widely severed districts. Hawick and Devonport were represented, a vicar from the latter making serious statements as to the police. Rev. J. Traviss, rector of Widford, near Ware, and a magistrate, also gave evidence, speaking of the system under which cyclists keep village publicans and their servants employed serving drink all day on Sunday. He would close village public-houses on Sundays except for two separate hours, and only at such times should cyclists and other travellers be served. Mr. John Richardson, an engineer employing 1400 men in Lincoln, said there was an excessive number of public-houses in that town, being one to every 200 persons. In one area of the town the licensed houses outnumbered the bakers by five to one. Another witness, Mr. Batty, of Manchester, said there was a deal of Sunday drinking in that city, but he believed local public opinion would support entire Sunday closing.

Obituary.

DR. COBHAM BREWER.

The well-known author of the "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable" died on Saturday night at Edwinstowe Vicarage, Notts, the residence of his son-in-law, Rev. H. T. Hayman. For over a week he had been suffering from the effects of an apoplectic seizure, the fatal termination of which was an almost inevitable consequence in the case of a man so advanced in age. Dr. Brewer, who was born in London on May 2, 1810, was ordained in 1836, but the after-course of his life was mainly devoted to literature. His first publication of importance was his "Guide to Science," which appeared in 1850 and speedily attained a large circulation. His famous "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable" has passed through twenty-five editions, and it is noteworthy that the entire revision of the work was undertaken by the author in his eighty-fifth year, the magnitude of which task may be gathered from the fact that the result was virtually a new work though on the old lines that had commanded so constant a sale for the preceding quarter of a century. Among other fruits of his pen may be mentioned his "Reader's Handbook" and "History of France," both of which passed through a number of editions, his "Theology in Science," "Dictionary of Miracles," and "Historic Note Book."

MRS. WHITING, OF LEEDS.

The Leeds Mercury, announcing the death of this lady, says:—"No woman was better known or held in higher respect in this community. She was a practical philanthropist, whose work was all the more useful because conducted on systematic as well as sympathetic lines. To many hundreds of orphan children she proved a veritable mother, and there are many men and women in all parts of the world who will regard her removal as the loss of one who held the most sacred place in their affections. The oversight of the orphanages at Headingley was, however, only a part of the good work for which Leeds will ever be indebted to Mrs. Whiting. They were her chief care, no doubt; but she found time also for beneficent labour in other channels. An earnest advocate of temperance and purity of living, she did much in both directions, and that, too, over a considerable area. She was a clear and persuasive platform speaker, and as such her services were in demand in many parts of the country, particularly in connection with movements instituted by the Society of Friends, of which body she had long been a 'recognised' minister. While so engaged in London she was seized with the illness that in two days ended in death. While she laboured devotedly for the good of others, the claims of her own home were never neglected."

Mr. T. O. Beeman, whose death we noticed last week, was never (as stated in error) a clergyman of the Church of England, although at one time he commenced study with this end in view. His service of many years has been wholly apart from any denomination. His own aim has been to maintain the sole authority of Scripture in all questions of faith, life, and worship, and to reject everything contrary thereto. The last text from which he ever spoke in public was: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of Me."

Personalia.

Professor Simpson, of Edinburgh, we regret to learn, has been seriously ill. The latest information brings the welcome news that he is decidedly better.

Miss Agnes Weston is a specialist among philanthropists. She is a temperance reformer, it is true; but hers is applied temperance, and applied in a highly specialised form to the seamen of her Majesty's Navy. For thirty years she has preached with voice and pen Christianity and temperance to the British bluejacket. But she has done more than preach and teach. She has by her efforts provided them with homes on shore which make the way of total abstinence easy—bright, cheery, almost luxurious buildings, to which Jack steers as to a port—and she has stood their friend whenever and wherever they needed one, and were willing to accept her help. She has indeed earned the title by which the sailors have learned to know her, that of "The Bluejackets' Mother."—Daily Chronicle.

Requests for Prayer.—For a blessing on a mission to young ladies in Bayswater, March 17-24.—For blessing on a mission for young people at Battersea Park Tabernacle, by Mr. J. Albinson.—On behalf of a series of evangelistic services now being held in the Victoria Hall, York, by Mr. Alex. Marshall.—For a mission to be held in Primitive Methodist Chapel, Pollokshaws, Glasgow, by Rev. J Bastow Wilson, beginning March 14.—For blessings at the monthly meeting for Deepening of Spiritual Life at Ipswich, and for a great blessing to rest upon Rev. Chas. J. Moore's visit March 18.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ROME'S PRETENCES EXPOSED.

An Open Letter to Lord Halifax is the title of a remarkable little work by Miss Cusack ("The Nun of Kenmare"). Its subject is Corporate Reunion, a movement for which the name of Lord Halifax is practically a synonym; and the book is a budget of facts and arguments such as need to be kept well to the fore in the present day. When writing on the guiding principles, general teachings, and uniform practices of the Papacy, Miss Cusack is on familiar ground, and even those who are intimate with the subject may learn much from her pages. Though starting with such an academic text, Miss Cusack conducts us into the heart of the controversy with Rome, and her book is calculated to open the eyes of many, and help them to an all-round and intelligent study of the God-dishonouring, soul-enslaving, and liberty-endangering system from which the author rejoices to have been freed. Friends who assist the circulation of this work will encourage Miss Cusack, who, though advanced in years, and in poor health, still wields her facile pen for the cause of Protestant truth and true patriotism. Her address is 6, Norfolk-square, Brighton. (1s. 6d. net. Brighton: D. B. Friend & Co. London: Marshall, Russell & Co.)

Not by Might. (1s. 6d. C.E.Z.M.S., 9, Salisbury-square, E.C.) A vividly-written sketch of lady missionary life and work in the Punjaub from the interior point of view. It ought to awaken practical sympathy for the devoted workers.

The New Poultry Guide, a handbook by Kinard Baghot-De la Bere, claims to show how to make farm poultry a rent-paying industry. It is fully illustrated, and will be of special service to country residents. (1s. Seeley & Co.)

The Gospel of Song, by Rev. William C. Bullock, M.A., curate of All Saints', Eastbourne. ("Home Words" Office.) A choice booklet dealing with Christian Hymnody and the power of Hymnody. The pages are few, but they are filled with good things.

The Life and Work of St. Paul, by Dean Farrar, has been issued in a very cheap form by Messrs. Cassell. It can be obtained for 1s. 6d., and three coupons which were given in the parts of "The Quiver" (6d. each) for November, December, and January last.

The Confessions of a Deacon. By Leo Grange. (1s. A. H. Stockwell & Co., 17, Paternoster-row.) These sketches are, of course, more or less imaginary, but they suggest some of the foibles and weaknesses as well as the more admirable traits of modern church life. They are written in an excellent spirit.

When were our Gospels Written? (1s. Religious Tract Society) A new and handy edition of a larger work, giving the matured and well-instructed conclusions of Tischendorff, the eminent German scholar and critic, with a most interesting account of his discovery of the priceless "Sinaitic" MS.

Village Sermons. By the late R. D. B. Rawnsley. (4s. Ellis and Keene, 9, Ray-street, E.C.) A reissue of discourses of the good old Evangelical type—less pretentious than many modern disquisitions, but much more helpful to the spiritual life. Canon Rawnsley, the son of the author, contributes a filial preface.

Cassell's Cheap Reissues include some very useful works. This week the fifth part (6d.) of Old and New London sees the light. It is fully illustrated, and fifty weekly parts will complete the work, which is enlarged by the inclusion of "Greater London." The third part of Bishop Ellicott's Bible Commentary is also published this week. This work is of great value, and many Christian workers are taking it in. Thirty-six parts (6d. each) complete the eight volumes, giving the sacred text in full as well as introduction and notes throughout. The weekly reissue (in 21 parts at 6d.) of Familiar Wild Flowers—an exquisitely illustrated serial—will be welcomed by many lovers of nature.

Appeals.

Country Towns Mission.—The committee of the Mission (18, New Bridge-street, E.C.) appeal for the sum of £500, to enable them to clear off a debt which is a heavy burden on their resources. The work of the Mission, especially in our rural districts, is more needed than ever, and gifts towards clearing off the debt will be thankfully received by the treasurer, Mr. Harry C. Nisbet, 35, Lincoln's-inn Fields, W.C.

Bethesda Town Mission.—In 1857 this mission had two agents for a population of 80,000 persons. In 1897 it employs three missionaries only and the borough now numbers 180,000. The present staff is quite inadequate to cope with the wants of the districts worked, to say nothing of extending the operations. There is much need of employing another missionary, and friends are asked to send £35 a year extra for this object. The present time seems a good one also to extend the midnight and rescue work, and the committee ask further support for this branch, say £50 a year.—George H. Fison (Supt.), 1, Cavendish road, Southsea.

[216]

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. Henry Sutton, of Aston, has received a canonry.

The Archbishop Benson Memorial Fund now amounts to £4500.

Rev. J. T. Fowler, Hebrew Lecturer at Durham, has been appointed hon. canon.

The Lay Helpers' Association reports a membership of 6000 male church workers in London.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Birmingham friends of the C.P.A. was held last week in the Town-hall.

Canon Lewis has completed twenty-five years' devoted and successful labour at St. Ann's, Nottingham.

A lecture was given last week in the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, by Rev. George Sandford, the venerable vicar of Ecclesall, on "Clerical Reminiscences of Sheffield."

An Anglican sisterhood, "The Grey Ladies," is to work in connection with the new South London Cathedral.

The Nyanza steamer (C.M.S.) is not only afloat on the great lake, but has made her first voyage to Buganda.

The rector of Kilymaenllwyd, Carmarthenshire, states that his church is in a very dilapidated state—quite unfit to serve as a place of worship. He is now making efforts to restore the church, but the task is very difficult. The cost is estimated at £350. Rev. B. Harris Jones, The Hermitage, Login, Carmarthenshire.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells has sent invitations to over one hundred bishops to meet at Glastonbury Abbey on August 3, with the object of drawing attention to "the existence of the British Church in these islands before the arrival of St. Augustine and his companions, and to the connection of the Church of England with that Church, and, through it, with some of the earliest efforts to spread the Gospel in the West."

The spring conference of the Church Association was brought to a close by a public breakfast, held on Friday at the Mosley Hotel, Manchester. Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, who presided, said that the work which the Church Association was doing was of deep importance. It had indeed of late years changed in its character. They had given up litigation, but he did not regret the time or money they had spent in vindicating the law of the Church. But their present work was of deeper importance. It was to form a sound, intelligent, and Christian opinion in the country.

Congregational.

Ebenezer Chapel, Dewsbury, reports 331 members.

The work at Caterham show, tokens of vigorous life.

Rev. Edward Lee has been recognised as pastor at Stonehouse.

Rev. A. E. Abel, of Albion Church, Hull, has accepted the pastorate at Rectory-road, Woolwich.

The examinations for the young in religious knowledge, arranged by the Congregational Union, were held on Tuesday.

The work under the care of Rev. W. Skinner, at Forest Gate, is reported as full of encouragement. The church has now 646 members.

Spring Church, Grimsby, reports a net increase of twenty-eight in membership during 1896, and development in most branches of work.

Rev. J. W. Thompson, late of Morecambe, who left a month ago for a trip to the Mediterranean, having become worse, had to enter the hospital at Marseilles.

Rev. Alfred Rowland has commenced, at the Memorial Hall, on Tuesdays, a course of five lectures on "A Character Study" in continuation of his Merchants' Lectures.

Rev. John May, who for some months past has been taking the oversight of the mission hall work at Caterham, has been accepted by the L.M.S. for service in Central Africa, and will leave England in May.

The annual meeting of the East London Congregational Union was held on Thursday last at Latimer Chapel (Rev. J. W. Atkinson's). Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Lawson Forster, A. Mearns, J. T. Davies, and others.

Park Chapel, Crouch End, reports much vigorous work and extension in various directions. The membership is now 1035, while, under the lead of Rev. A. Rowland, numerous missionary agencies are in full activity, calling forth the energies of the workers. The Sunday-school and Bible Guild are well sustained, together with a host of other operations.

Calls.—Rev. D. H. Rees, late of Barry, to Fareham; Rev. J. S. Simpson, of Runcorn, to Green Mount, Tottington; Mr. D. C. Davies, to Pontargothi; Rev. W. J. P. Wright to Chorley; Rev. R. S. Laner to Sudbury, Suffolk.

Resignations.—Rev. Percy Francis, of Long Sutton; Rev. W. P. Dothie, of Parkstone.

Baptist.

Rev. S. J. Somers has been recognised as pastor at Appledore.

Rev. Herbert Trotman has been recognised as pastor at Bridgwater.

Mr. W. H. Williams has been ordained to the pastorate at Nantwich.

Mr. Edgar Packer has been ordained to the pastorate at Commercial-road, Oxford.

Rev. Douglas Brown, of Herne Bay, sailed on Friday for Natal, for the benefit of his health.

Rev. C. Rudge has resumed his ministry at Vine Chapel, Sevenoaks, much improved in health.

An interesting farewell meeting has been held in South Parade Chapel, Leeds, in connection with the return of Rev. G. B. Farthing to China.

At Kingsthorpe, Northampton, on Sunday last, at the close of the evening service, eight candidates for church fellowship were baptized by Rev. F. Neal.

The sixth anniversary of the work at Yalding will be held on April 7, and in view thereof special efforts are being made to clear off the debt on the chapel. Rev. D. C. Chapman is doing a good work.

The work at Regent's Park Chapel is reported as in a prosperous and vigorous condition. The membership is 712, ninety-three being added last year. Rev. E. G. Gange is much encouraged in the work generally.

Rev. A. Streuli's work at Moss Side, Manchester, is full of life; 556 members are reported. "An infants' dedication service" has been arranged for the third Sunday of the month. The announcements of this service state that it is "in no sense a substitute for believers' baptism."

The American Baptist Missionary Union and the Home Mission Society having deficits amounting to £97,200, Mr. John D. Rockefeller lately invited a large number of prominent Baptists to his residence and promised to contribute £50,000 toward the total indebtedness of the two societies on condition that the remainder is raised by July.

Calls.—Rev. W. G. Hailstone, of Reading, to Poole, Dorset; Rev. Ivor H. James, to Andover; Mr. R. W. Davies, of Corwen, to Commaes, Anglesey.

Resignations.—Rev. A. Braine, of Hope Chapel, Devonport; Rev. H. Parker, of Holbeach; Rev. E. Poole-Connor, of Aldershot.

Methodist.

Rev. J. H. Jowett spoke one day last week at the Central Hall noonday service in Manchester.

A new chapel has been opened at Thornton Lodge, a rapidly growing suburb of Huddersfield.

Rev. R. Swallow, M.D., who has been a missionary at Ning-Po, China, for twenty-three years, has arrived in England.

A valedictory service was held in Boundary-street Chapel, Liverpool, on the eve of the sailing for West Africa of Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Ward.

Mr. George Hooper has concluded a mission in Paradise Chapel, Blackburn, which was filled for most of the services, and great blessing has resulted.

Mr. H. Tugby, of Sheffield, who recently died, bequeathed to the Primitive Methodist Connexion some £3000, to revert to the Connexion at his widow's death.

The call for Wesley deaconesses to work in circuits and missions continues and increases. There are, it is stated, twenty applications which cannot at present be met.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has conducted a four days' mission at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham. There were good congregations and a number of conversions.

A Methodist Cyclists' Club, formed a year ago for evangelistic work, reports favourably on the year's experience. A band of members have made runs twice a week to outlying villages, where they hold services.

A Wesleyan Home has been established at Newton, Mass., for the care and education of children whom missionaries may desire to leave there. The Home is under the supervision of Miss Emily Harvey, formerly of India.

Rev. T. Waugh has been holding a ten days' mission at Manchester-street, Oldham. The interest aroused was so great that on the last night the Methodist New Connexion chapel was used, the galleries of the Wesleyan chapel not being equal to the strain of such a crowd.

Presbyterian.

Last week Rev. A. Connell conducted a six days' mission at Finchley.

The work at Greenhill, Derby, is reported as full of encouragement.

Rev. Robert Stewart, late of Gateshead, has entered on his new charge at Benwell.

The anniversary services of the Coleraine Hall Mission, maintained by the Tottenham Church, has been held with many evidences of good result.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, has accepted the invitation to preach again in the coming summer in Marylebone Church. He is expected to occupy the pulpit during August and September.

Rev. John McNeill was asked to supply the Marylebone pulpit for the month of April, but he did not feel able to accept the invitation. Dr. Pentecost preaches his farewell discourses next Sunday. Last week he was the recipient of some valuable gifts from the congregation.

The annual festival of the North London choirs was held on Tuesday week in Highbury Church, twenty choirs being represented. Mr. Robert Wales, president of the Association, urged the choirs to maintain their high standard, and to make their work a spiritual force in the Church. An address was also delivered by Rev. P. Carmichael.

Calls.—Rev. W. Henry, of Pontypridd, to Waterloo, Liverpool; Rev. William Williams Halkin, to Southport; Rev. J. Cavin, of Glasgow, to Crieff (as assistant); Rev. D. Mathers, of Edinburgh, to Roxburgh Parish Church; Rev. J. Johnson, of Aberdeen, to Morningside U.P., Edinburgh (as assistant).

Salvation Army.

Mrs. Bramwell Booth has conducted a series of meetings at Cardiff in connection with the opening of new premises for Salvation Army rescue work.

An urgent request has been received from Cape Coast Castle to open up work there, and premises have been placed at the disposal of the Army.

A London Board of Guardians has desired the Salvation Army to undertake and arrange the emigration of suitable cases from time to time at their expense.

At the earnest desire of Christian ladies, who have provided or guaranteed the cost of the undertaking, a Rescue Home has been opened at Lahore, Punjaub.

It is proposed to allot a considerable sum of the money expected to be raised by Self-denial Week to famine relief in India, whence Commissioner Howard has returned after an extended organising tour.

The Thursday afternoon Holiness meetings for some time conducted by Mrs. Bramwell Booth at Regent Hall will for a few weeks be undertaken by Commissioner Dowdle. During May Mrs. Booth will resume the meetings in the Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour-street, W.

Fallen Asleep.

At St. Davids, Rev. E. Owen Phillips, Dean of St Davids, highly respected as a very active Churchman and an earnest worker.—At Scarborough, on 28th ult., Rev. J. E. Cross, aged seventy-five, late vicar of Appleby.—At Brabourne, Mr. Barton, for thirty years a devoted preacher and "lay" pastor.—At St. Teath, Cornwall, Mr. Edwin Jewell, a prominent leader in Christian work.—At Old Hill, Dudley, Mr. Thomas Yates, for many years an active Sunday-school and Methodist worker.—At Merthyr, on 22nd ult., Mrs. Jones, wife of the minister of Zion Chapel.—At Ipswich, on 28th ult., Mr. R. Main Smith, a devoted preacher, temperance advocate, and Sunday-school leader.—In Leeds, on 26th ult., Rev. F. O. Ellis, a valued curate of All Hallows.—At Redbourn, on 27th ult., Rev. W. A. Pope, vicar of the parish.—At Idle, Mr. W. J. Rawlings, son of Rev. T. E. Rawlings.—At Berkhampstead, Mr. J. N. Wright, a most valuable Bible-class leader.—At Rawdon, Bradford, on 1st inst., Mr. James Wales, aged seventy, a devoted S.S. superintendent and leader in work among young men.—At Stockport, Mrs. Pinn, wife of the pastor of Wellington-road Chapel.—At Ingatestone, Mrs. E. Bowen, aged ninety-two, a devoted handmaid of Christ.—At Leek, on 1st inst., Mr. William Brosten, aged fifty-six, a prominent leader among the Wesleyans.—At Whitechurch, at an advanced age, Mr. John Crewe, who had preached constantly for fifty-two years.—At Leeds, on 2nd inst., Mrs. Sarah Hartley, aged seventy-nine, mother of Rev. Marshall Hartley.—At Canterbury, on 6th inst., Canon Scott Robertson, aged sixty-three, a well-known dignitary at Canterbury Cathedral.—At Cathcart, on 6th inst., Dr. James Smith, aged ninety-three, parish minister, and regarded as "father" of the Church of Scotland.—At Eastwood, Newtonmountkennedy, co. Wicklow, Mr. J. F. Meade, M.A., J.P., an earnest worker.—At Athy, Mrs. Plewman, senior, a devoted Christian.—At Newtownards, Miss Sophia McDonald, a faithful servant of Christ.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Pouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s.	7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

COLONEL MORTON, of Mildmay, has issued the following call to a day of humiliation and prayer :—

The war cloud which hangs over Europe; the famine and pestilence which are working havoc amongst our fellow-subjects in India; and the light-heartedness which seems so largely to prevail even at the near approach of great calamity, demand from God's children a distinct recognition of his hand in permitting these evils, whether actual or impending; and call upon us to come together for united confession and prayer, that in his abounding mercy He would avert from Europe and from our own nation the horrors of war; that He would stay the plague in the Bombay Presidency, and awaken wider sympathy for those who are perishing for want of the bread which perisheth; and that He would solemnise our people to acknowledgment of our manifold sins and failures in the face of all the wonderful earthly prosperity and spiritual privilege He has bestowed upon us. We therefore invite you to gather with others of his believing children at Mildmay, on Monday, March 29, when meetings will be held for waiting upon God, at 3.30 and 7 p.m.

We hear with regret, on the authority of the Evangelical Alliance, that the persecution of Stundists is still carried on in Russia, and that great barbarity has in some instances been shown towards those who have been sent into exile. The hopes that were entertained some time ago that the young Emperor and his wife would speedily put an end to this state of things have not as yet been realised. The Alliance, however, is making special efforts to get an appeal on behalf of these persecuted Christians presented to the Czar. The Council make an appeal for continued and fervent prayer "that God may bless these important steps."

The Anti-Gambling League have achieved a triumph in securing a unanimous judgment from five judges (from whose decision there is no appeal) on the illegality of betting in enclosed spaces on racecourses. As this is a complete change in the interpretation of the law, its consequences, if rigorously carried out, will be important in many directions. It is a severe blow against the professional bookmaker, and were it not that he has so many friends in high places, it might put an end to his occupation. Unfortunately there are many ways of evading an unpopular law. We hope Mr. Hawke and his fellow-workers in the Anti-Gambling League will be as successful in seeing that the law is henceforth respected, as they have now been in securing an interpretation of the law which is on the side of morality and public interest.

Much less is said of the plague in Bombay than we should have heard but for the tremendous famine; its horrors are great, and there is the greatest difficulty in grappling with it; nevertheless, Christian nurses and doctors are trying to do their best. The young ladies who went last year to Bombay, to form a Christian settlement among the Parsees, have turned aside from their ordinary work, and gone to the hospitals to nurse. This devotion may prove to be their best appeal and argument.

Increasing alarm is felt in America at the growing power and tyranny of "trusts," which foster the concentration of the wealth of the country into the hands of a few millionaires at the expense of the general community. The evil effects of irresponsible riches are felt to a large extent in this country; in the States it is becoming a national danger, threatening to control the elections and manipulate the very constitution in its own interests. The beginning of these trusts dates from the Civil War, the liberation of the slaves tending indirectly to the enslavement of "free labour" and commerce. How to remedy this evil, is a question which is being anxiously discussed across the water. Nothing short of a re-awakening of the conscience to the stewardship of wealth can meet the case. Have the churches taken their true place in fulfilling this duty? And are they not unfaithful to the Book that teaches this so clearly, while they neglect it?

We often hear Englishmen speak of the American "almighty dollar"; a Japanese lawyer now accuses Russia of having gold for its god, and self-interest for its religion, while England, he thinks, is sensible of nothing outside of selfish interest. In all these judgments we must first allow for international jealousy and rivalry, and in the next place for the fact that the vices of a nation are far more obvious than its virtues to outsiders. The criminal classes are better known than the quiet citizens who go about their daily duty interfering with no one. It is a far more piquant thing to write about the seamy side of a nation's life than about the side which has only homely virtues. It is safe, therefore, to assume that in Russia and England there are a great many persons who have not bowed their knee to mammon and selfishness, and that the dollar is not quite almighty in America. The love of money is not a new thing, but, happily, neither is it a universal thing.

In the West of England there is a member of the Society of Friends who makes it a labour of love to visit the Sunday-schools, and speak to the children on the subject of peace and war. He is welcomed by all sections of Nonconformity, and urged to come again. If ever the churches as a whole are to be made earnest in the cause of peace, it will be as the result of winning the young, and they are accessible to some such method as is adopted by this messenger of peace. There may be many in the Churches who would find their work and reward in a similar service, were they only to pray for Divine guidance. The face of a visitor is welcome in a Board School, and a few words from him on peace, or kindness to animals, or good manners, or pure and upright conduct, would always be useful. Half a-dozen such quiet workers in a good-sized town might give a high tone to a whole generation of men and women.

The vicar of Warkworth calls attention in The Church Times to what he calls "a very bad practice, which seems to be on the increase," viz., Members of Parliament are continually interlarding their speeches with Scripture illustrations and quotations. He quotes from the "London Letter" in several provincial newspapers the description given of the debate on Crete, in which quotation and misquotation of Scripture were received with screams of laughter and yells of joy. It used to be said that John Bright was the only man who dared quote Scripture in the House of Commons, and he always did it with such seriousness, correctness, and appositeness as to add to the force of his words. What was "bad form" in others was "good form" in him. But we live in freer days, when few things are held in reverence—by some at least. It would certainly be better if politicians would let "the Book" alone, especially when they cannot quote it correctly.

The Christian Church owes a great debt already to Prof. W. M. Ramsay for his services in defending the historical accuracy of the Book of Acts against some of the advanced critics of the day. He has increased this indebtedness by his later studies in the early ecclesiastical history of Asia Minor, of which the second part has just been published. In this book he gives the result of first-hand investigations into the story of the Church in Phrygia during the 3rd and 4th centuries. The relics and inscriptions he has examined dating from that period, prove that the Diocletian persecution was the death-blow of the Roman Empire, removing as it did by massacre the best part of the population—that which was the only hope of progress and enlightenment.

Is there not a sad parallel to this in the recent events in Armenia? Once more an effete and corrupt empire is attempting to improve Christianity from the face of the earth in those parts, instead of welcoming it as the best friend of true government, and the one guarantee of progress. These words, written by Professor Ramsay of that far-off century, might be literally applied to the present policy of the Sultan :—"Massacre then, as always, was proved to be not merely a crime and a stupendous folly, but also a terrible blow to the world, to civilisation, and to humanity." History repeats itself in its disasters as well as its benefits, and the government of the Sultan, like that of Diocletian, is writing its own epitaph in the blood of martyrs.

Another of the "Cowley Fathers"—"Father" Maturin—has gone over to Rome. He is the fourth or fifth who has taken this step. High Churchmen have made him welcome in London for several years past, and his most remarkable oratory has taken captive a multitude of souls. Now, he has openly declared himself. These "Cowley Fathers" have a conventual institution at Oxford, and they take vows and wear the "religious" garb. They are sent to India and to America as "missionaries," and in this country they conduct "missions" in which the hateful confessional is advocated, together with the other heresies of Rome. A spirit of deep slumber seems to have seized upon the authorities which allow such a Society to continue its work without protest.

Bishop O'Dwyer, of Limerick, complains in his Lenten Pastoral of the things which may now be read in "the newspapers that are supposed to be Catholic." Day after day the acts and the sayings of bishops and clergy are criticised with a bitterness and a disrespect and an unfriendliness, he says, "which the better class of Protestant journals would not show." The adherents of Rome cannot go on reading these things from day to day without receiving harm. He contends it is vain to say that these writers mean to confine themselves to politics. They do not do so, but systematically set themselves to work "to undermine the influence of the clergy, to discredit them, and if any incident turns up anywhere which can be used to the discredit of a priest or a bishop, they gladly put it prominently and harp upon it." The bishop warns his flock that anti-clericalism is but one step removed from positive irreligion. In which case they are far on the way to that end. There is evidently a very strained situation, and a change is not likely to be made by the politicians becoming more submissive.

It is cheering to see growing evidence of the deep interest of the churches of every order in the condition of the vast masses of our city population. Mr. Harrison, of Bowdon, writes to The Independent saying that in Manchester the hearts and consciences of the Congregationalists have been exercised with the problem of the city churches, and an organisation, called a Mission Board, has been formed for dealing with it. Two old city churches have already been rescued from extinction, and turned into "busy hives of Christian activity, and centres of wide Christian influence." The Wesleyans, it will be remembered, have a great work in Manchester among the poor, and we are rejoiced to see that the clergy, in many populous but poor centres, refuse to allow the property to be diverted to secular uses. This is really a great revival of pure and undefiled religion, though we may not call it by that name.

A short telegram the other day contained more joy in it than can easily be imagined, and yet it has not received much comment so far as we have seen; it was to the effect that Sir George Goldie has abolished slavery in the Niger district. There is a good deal of difference between a proclamation dooming slavery and the actual extinction of the evil. But it is the sentence of death. The difficulty is that too often white men treat these official actions with contempt, and uphold the abuse. Downing-street is more humane than the colonist, who wants cheap labour and absolute power over the labourer. As two Dutch gentlemen said to the South Africa Committee, the natives must be made to regard the whites as their masters. "Which means," remarked Mr. Chamberlain, "made to work for a master imposed upon them, at a rate of wages fixed for them, at a time and place arranged for them." The English conscience will strengthen its statesmen to make liberty a reality everywhere under the British flag.

The doctrine of "original" sin is a sadly true statement of facts, but in the hands of the new Materialism it is made to do duty for a lie. For when men preach the law of moral heredity, so as to becloud the sense of personal responsibility, it turns the truth into a mischievous error. That we are all born with a "bias," towards wrong doing, no student of human nature can deny. That we give way to this bias, is always the outcome of a voluntary and wilful act. Else how should we be visited with a feeling of guilt at so doing? It may be impossible logically to express the relations of free-will to hereditary tendency, but no theory can be true which ignores or eludes the root-fact of our spiritual life—the irrepressible sense of our accountability for every impulse and deed that issues in character. The Bible is the only book that holds the mirror up to nature, and gives full expression to the contrasts of the human soul, without for a moment rendering uncertain the fact that "everyone of us shall give account of himself before God."

Dr. Flint is so far from considering that excessive regard for dogma is a prevalent fault in the present day, that he deems the lack of doctrinal inquiry and thoughtfulness one of the chief causes of the "ineffectiveness of preaching and of the superficiality of the spiritual life." He holds that the great historic creeds of the Christian Church have done far more to heal divisions than to cause them. His opinion is that the union of Protestant churches may lead to their satisfactory revision of, or right adjustment to, their confessions, but not that any general revision of their confessions will help them towards union. Christians can come close together when they come for prayer and fellowship and service, but as soon as abstract views of truth are broached there is danger of misunderstanding and separation. There may be difference of opinion as to the influence of creeds in producing unity, and as to the condition of the spiritual life among us, but there will be no difference as to the need of the strong doctrines of Scripture for the making of strong men.

In Prison.

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John viii. 32.

I sat in Error's gloomy cell,
The walls were grim and high,
Nor would the narrow grating tell
One secret of the sky:
Yet not for these I made my moan,
"Give liberty!" my cry alone.

Then Justice came, with measured tread,
In answer to my cry;
The terms of mine indictment read
With firm unflinching eye;
And through a darkness dense as night
I heard him call my sentence light.

Proud Reason bade me walk at large,
Mocked at the walls so bare,
Defied the minion who had charge
To keep me prisoner there:
Toyed with my fetters, probed my sore,
Then left me weaker than before.

Joy brought me many a tinsel gay
The tedium to beguile,
And wreathed my chain with floral spray,
And struck her harp awhile;
But when she learnt my cruel fate
Joy vanished through the prison gate.

Love sought me. Round her tender frame
The heavy irons she drew,
And vowed that she would share the blame,
A willing captive too;
Then claimed to know my weight was less—
How heavier far, Love could not guess.

Truth came. I did not feel the blow
Which snapped the bars in twain;
The work of Truth I did not know,
Nor heed my falling chain;
The face of Truth was pure and fair—
I looked, and found my freedom there.

Lucy A. Bennett.

The Free Church Council.

THE meetings of the National Free Church Council are evidence of the existence of a new religious force in the country. Differences can be overlooked in the presence of the great truths in which all are one. The scattered elements of power can be focussed for common service. Each body of believers can go its own way, and yet have a bond of sympathy uniting it with all the rest. For individual purposes each has its own sphere of operations, but there is a new sense of unity and of brotherliness, and a new sphere for all unitedly. How the scheme may work out none can see at present; nevertheless, this much is clear, that the Free Churches in their united capacity may prove an effectual breakwater to the rising tide of sacerdotalism, and an enormous power for the spread of Evangelical religion. Much will depend upon the simplicity of aim and motive with which the whole body throws itself upon the spiritual work which lies at our very doors. Provided the salvation of men is the grand object kept in view, all will go well with this latest and most successful attempt at reunion.

The gatherings were pervaded throughout by a fine free spiritual atmosphere. So late as a dozen years ago, as The Chronicle pointed out, this breaking-down of barriers and bond of practical brotherhood between the denominations would have been impossible. Now it is an accomplished fact. The credit for the movement cannot be traced to the action of individuals, though many have taken earnest part in it; it has come like the breath of spring after the cold and ice of the winter. "It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." It would have been as impossible to bring such a result about by merely human machinery as it would be to interfere with its accomplishment. "This movement," as Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the retiring president, remarked, "is as purely and intensely a religious movement as the Evangelical revival of the last century. It is, indeed, the necessary sequel and complement of that revival, and the true preparation for the religious work of the twentieth century."

The contrast between the present attitude of Christians of different persuasions towards one another, and that of the past two or three generations, is one that should fill us with unbounded hope for the future. A vast fund of energy for doing good is being released. None too soon, we may say, in face of the resurgent wave of Romanism that is flooding so large a section of the Anglican Church. That has gained a large part of its power from the divisions of the Protestant churches. Now that they are banded together in defence of the faith once delivered to the saints, and are joining hands in earnest pursuit of their common service for God and man, we need not fear the result. For behind the 1200 delegates present there were 7,000,000 Evangelical Free Churchmen, whom they directly represented, and a vastly larger body throughout the world in hearty sympathy with the movement.

Slavery in Africa.—In the Niger Company's territory, the sixtieth anniversary of the Queen's accession is to see a proclamation prohibiting any form of slavery for evermore. On the strength of the recent military successes this is, no doubt, possible, and the news of it will fly far and wide through Africa. We hope it will reach at an early date the natives who are held in South Africa to forced labour, in mines and elsewhere, without any voice in the terms of their engagements or of their wages. Their state is virtually one of slavery, although they do get a grudged shilling or so a month. Such a state ought not to be tolerated under the British flag, or that of any chartered adventurers who have got permission to fly it.—Daily Chronicle.

Dark Subways.

IT was a time of trouble. The way was dark; cloud after cloud seemed gathering round me, draping everything in deepest gloom. I had met with serious losses, and very bitter disappointments, and in the midst of all these came to me a great, crushing sorrow. Death entered my home. The wife of my youth was taken from me, and with bleeding heart I laid her in the silent grave. Everything looked dark and desolate, and I was lonely and sad. My path was full of perplexity and uncertainty, and, like Jacob, when the sorrow and mystery of life crushed him to the very dust, I cried out in the midst of my sorrow and despondency, "All these things are against me."

With a burdened heart, and with this thick darkness round about me, I set out on a long journey of some two hundred miles, for the purpose of taking my two motherless girls to the home of a friend, who had promised to care for them, till some other arrangements could be made for their welfare and happiness. The younger of the two was a delicate, timid, nervous child. We changed carriages several times, and at one large busy station we had to go down a flight of steps, and pass through a dark subway to the other side. I held my little girl by the hand, and as we hurried along to catch the train, she said, nervously and anxiously, "Where are we going now, papa?" There was no time to explain. I had fast hold of her hand. I knew the way, and said with confidence: "Come along, my child, it is all right." As if an angel spoke, I thought I heard a voice from heaven, saying to me in my trouble and distress, "Come along, my child, it is all right." My heart responded, Yes, it is all right; my Father holds my hand. He is leading me. He knows the way. He doeth all things well. I will trust and not be afraid. So, lifting up my face to the light of his unchanging love, with renewed confidence and hope, I went on my way.

In the journey of life there are many sad experiences, which are like dark subways through which the people of God must pass on their way from earth to heaven. Painful afflictions, sorrowful bereavements, heavy losses, blighted hopes, heart-breaking disappointments, business difficulties, failure of work, shattered health, pinching poverty—these and other forms of trial come to us as we journey on; and often, when surrounded by their darkness and mystery, we are like nervous timid children, full of anxious fears and dark forbodings, and we cry out, "Where are we going now?" "What next will befall us?" "What will the end of all this trouble be?"

Should these lines meet the eye of any who are passing through some of these dark subways, let me lovingly and earnestly say to them: Hope thou in God. He is our Father. He loves us with a love that never tires and never ends. He holds our hands. "I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." How lovingly and tenderly he cares for his timid, troubled, trembling child! None shall pluck us out of his hand. We are safe in his keeping. "He calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out." He appoints the clouds their course; the winds and the waves obey Him, and it is most assuredly true that the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.

> Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
> Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me.

And should we be called to pass through some dark valley of the shadow of death, He will lead us safely through the thickest gloom; He will not fail us nor forsake. He knows every inch of the journey; knows just where we have to change, and cross from one line to another. He will bring us safely through every dark subway, and when we reach our journey's end He will take us to the bright, happy eternal home prepared for us by everlasting love. Then shall we realise to the full how grandly true it is that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." G. W. O.

Neatishead.

A Missionary "Waterloo."

By The MISSES LEITCH.

Misses Mary and Margaret Leitch, late of Ceylon, have written a lengthy article on the present distressful condition of missionary finance, more especially as it relates to the United States. We give some extracts:—

THE crisis which confronts Foreign Mission Boards at this time may be called "The Waterloo" in the history of the work. If in this hour of peril the cause is to be saved it can only be done by marshalling every available force into the field. Wellington would not have gained a victory at Waterloo but for the timely arrival of Blucher. The officers of the various Foreign Boards, and many other friends of the work at home, have been working to the limit of their strength during the past few years, trying to secure the necessary funds to save the work from disaster. But, owing to the difficulties peculiar to the situation, it now seems evident that unless the missionaries will also give their help now and in the future, the needed funds cannot be secured to carry on the work unimpaired.

Look, for example, at what the missionaries of one Board might accomplish in the way of interesting friends at home. We will take the American Board. It has a staff of over 500 missionaries. These missionaries have each at home a circle of at least 100 friends and acquaintances. Each missionary might write one earnest letter to his dearest friend, making vivid to that friend the need and the opportunity, and asking that friend for some definite thing, such as to tell out this story to at least 100 others, bringing the matter, if possible, before his Sunday-school, Bible class, Young People's Society, and before his personal friends, and to secure from them annual subscriptions, this sum to be over and above their usual contributions to the Board, and to be paid to the treasurer of the Board to the credit of the general fund, to be applied toward sustaining the general work of the Board in that mission. The missionary could have this letter manifolded, and address copies to 100 or more of his friends and acquaintances. We think it probable that at least one-tenth would respond, giving or doing as much as was asked of them. The result from his letters would be 1000 persons informed and interested in the work. "Many hands make light work." This is a task beyond the powers of the Board Secretaries to accomplish, but entirely within the reach of the 500 missionaries of the Board.

In order to maintain the interest which would thus be aroused it would be necessary for each missionary to write, duplicate, and send out a quarterly letter to that circle of friends. This would cost some time, effort, and money, but would be worth all it would cost if it prevented the disaster which now threatens the work.

One of the best ways of reaching the public is through the press. Doubtless each missionary could secure the insertion of his quarterly letter, or of a specially prepared article, in the local papers of the community in which he is known, and perhaps in other papers. Some missionaries have availed themselves of this privilege, and have thus helped to interest tens of thousands in mission work.

There is a growing desire among givers at home to contribute to a definite object, and to hear at first-hand about the work which they are supporting. It is because of this desire that so many, instead of contributing toward the general funds of the Board, are sending their contributions direct to missionaries, for work which is outside of the regular work of the Board, or are giving to the support of independent missionaries or missions not connected with the denominational boards. This desire for a more vital connection with the work cannot wisely be checked, but should be gratified by bringing the givers into contact with some definite part of the Board's work.

The question may be asked, "Will the officers of the various Boards favour such an effort on the part of their missionaries?" While it must be plain to anyone that the Board would be justified in hindering missionaries from making pleas for "special gifts" outside of the regular work, it is quite another question whether this great force of missionaries, men and women of more than average ability and consecration, are to be encouraged to use, or hindered from using their unique influence, from the point of vantage which they hold, in interesting that large circle of friends at home with whom they would have influence, in helping to carry on unimpaired the work of the Board, especially that part of it with which their lives are so closely bound up.

In years past, it may be, it was not necessary to enlist the help of missionaries abroad in interesting friends at home, when there was no lack of funds for the carrying on of the work. The circumstances have now changed, and the work, to which missionaries have devoted the best years of their lives, is being seriously damaged, while multitudes of people at home, who could sustain this work, and would do so if they were aware of the situation, are quite in the dark as to the real state of affairs.

It cannot be supposed that while a great work, to which hundreds of missionaries have given the best part of their lives, is suffering a blow which will cause it an almost irreparable injury, they are to be asked to remain silent, and are not rather to be invited by the Home Committees to do all in their power to let friends know how the work is suffering, and what is needed in order to save it. It is not only the right of the missionaries to do this, but it would appear that it is their bounden duty at this time, both because they know the work as no one else knows it, and they can interest a circle which no one else can interest so well, namely, their own friends and acquaintances.

(To be concluded.)

South American Missionary Society.—Our readers have been already informed that the committee of this Society have resolved to enter upon their work in a more organised and systematic manner. With this view they have appointed Mr. W. C. Morris as evangelist. He is now reading for ordination, and will employ the interval in acting as deputation for the Society in England, and in helping to raise funds both for the general objects of the Society, and for the evangelistic work, which is to be further developed. Any who may desire his attendance and information, at meetings or otherwise, are asked to communicate their wish to the Secretaries, 1, Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street, E.C.

God the Holy Ghost.

AN ADDRESS

By Professor A. McCAIG, B.A., LL.D.

(Concluded.)

4. Personal functions are assigned to Him.—This would lead us to speak of the whole of the special work of the Spirit, but we must only briefly indicate certain points. (a) He is Teacher and Guide (Luke xii. 12; John xiv. 26; xvi. 7-16). No spiritual truth can be apprehended by us apart from the Spirit. He is not only Teacher in the sense of bringing truth to our mind, revealing the will of God, but He guides us into all truth, a word implying leading by the hand along the way, and so bringing us into the heart of truth. Personality is, of course, essential for this teaching work.

(b). Comforter (John xiv. 16, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7). This is the distinctive name of the Spirit in New Testament times, setting forth his special work in the hearts of God's people. We elsewhere read of the "comfort of the Spirit." In many ways He comforts us, by suggesting to us the precious promises, revealing to us our possessions in Christ, pointing us forward to the glories awaiting us. The word, however, here translated "Comforter" means far more than the English word. Our hymns have made us familiar with the original word Paraclete (Gr. Paraklētos). Christ Himself was a Paraclete. He says, "I will pray the Father and He will give you another Paraclete," implying that He himself had hitherto been their Comforter, and all that He had been to them the Spirit was now to be. In 1 John ii. Christ is called a Paraclete. "We have an advocate (the Greek word is the same) with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous." The word literally means "called to the side of another"; the Latin advocatus (from which we get "advocate") had the same meaning. Among the Romans it was the duty of the "Patron" to look after the interest of his dependents, his clients. The client called upon him, appealed to him for help, and as that help was often needed in a law-court, the word came to be used specifically of pleading in law. Christ, called to our aid, pleads for us in Heaven—the Holy Spirit, invoked by us, pleads for us too, but both Christ and the Holy Spirit do far more for us; all our interests are managed by them, and our every need is supplied.

(c) Intercessor.—Rom. viii. 26, 27: "The Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." This is that specific part of the Paraclete's work already mentioned, and is a source of great encouragement to the tempted and troubled child of God.

(d) Witness.—Acts v. 32: "We are witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him." Rom. viii. 16: "The Spirit beareth witness." John xv. 26; Heb. ix. 8; x. 15; Acts xx. 23; 1 Pet. i. 11; 1 John v. 6, and other passages.

(e) Supreme Director in the Church.—Acts xiii. 2, 4: "The Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them....So they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost departed." Acts xv. 28: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost." Acts xvi. 6: "Were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the Word in Asia." V. 7: "The Spirit suffered them not." Acts viii. 29: "The Spirit said unto Philip, Go near." x. 19: "While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit said, Behold three men seek thee; arise, therefore, and get thee down and go with them, doubting nothing, for I have sent them." Acts xx. 28: "The Holy Ghost hath made you overseers." Unquestionably these various functions can only be performed by a person, and cannot be conceived of as belonging to an influence.

[224]

We have to speak

II.—OF THE DIVINITY OR DEITY OF THE SPIRIT.

This cannot well be questioned if the Personality be admitted.

1. The Names of God are given to Him.—The very fact that He is called the Spirit of God so emphatically, is suggestive of his Divinity; but more particularly note, Isaiah vi. 9, 10, compared with Acts xxviii. 25, 26; Exodus xvii. 7 and Psalms xcv. 7-11, compared with Heb. iii. 7-11; Jer. xxxi. 33, compared with Heb. x. 15, 16. In these passages statements made by Jehovah in the Old Testament are quoted as spoken by the Holy Ghost. Acts v. 3, 4: "Lying to the Holy Ghost is lying unto God." 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17, and vi. 19: "Temple of the Holy Ghost" equals "Temple of God"; our bodies are the temples of God, because the Holy Ghost dwells in them. 2 Cor. iii. 17, 18, R.V.: "Now the Lord is the Spirit...transformed into the same image from glory to glory even as from the Lord the Spirit."

2. Equality with the Father and the Son is ascribed to Him.—Matt. xxviii. 19; 2 Cor. xiii. 14; Eph. iv. 4, 5, 6; 1 Peter i. 2; 2 Thess. iii. 5; Rev. i. 4, 5.

(3) The attributes of Deity are assigned Him.—(a) Eternity.—Heb. ix. 14.

(b) Omnipresence.—Psalm cxxxix. 7; 1 Cor. iii. 16. He dwells in all the people of God throughout the world.

(c) Omniscience.—1 Cor. ii. 10, 11.

(d) Omnipotence.—Luke i. 35: "The power of the Highest." Micah ii. 7; 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. The Apostle's preaching was in "the demonstration of the Spirit," that their faith should stand in "the power of God."

4. The operations of Deity are performed by Him.—(a) Creation.—Gen. i. 2; Job xxvi. 13; Psalm civ. 30.

(b) Inspiration, implying power of predicting future events known only to God.—1 Peter i. 11; 2 Peter i. 21; Num. xi. 26; Num. xxvii. 18; Neh. ix. 30; Acts xi. 28, etc.

(c) Miracle-working.—Matt. xii. 28; 1 Cor. xii. 9-11. All the spiritual miracles attending the preaching of the Gospel. Rom. xv. 17-19; Heb. ii. 4, etc.

(d) Regeneration.—John iii. 5; 1 Cor. ii. 4; Rom. viii. 2, 9, 15; 1 Thess. i. 5; Titus iii. 5.

(e) Sanctification.—1 Peter i. 2; 2 Thess. ii. 13; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Gal. v. 16, 17, 22. This is generally indicated also by the epithet Holy, He is the source of all holiness.

(f) Glorification.—Christ was raised from the dead by the power of the Spirit, and so by that Spirit we are to be raised and glorified (Rom. viii. 11).

May we all truly appreciate the greatness of this Divine Person; may we fully recognise His glory, and gladly receive His grace; may we realise our absolute need of Him, and be conscious of continual dependence upon Him. At the same time in all Christian work let us remember that the Holy Spirit is most honoured in the exalting of Christ. Some have thought to honour the Spirit by speaking much of Him, and their hearers have been led to look to the work of the Spirit for peace, instead of "looking off unto Jesus." The Spirit's great mission to the world is to convince men of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; but He does so in reference to Christ. "Of sin because they believe not on Me; of righteousness because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment because the Prince of this world is judged"—judged at the Cross. "He shall glorify me." He takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us. When the Spirit came in power upon the Apostles at Pentecost, He taught them to set forth Christ crucified and glorified. So still we work on the line of the Spirit's purpose, and most please Him when, recognising that only by his power can we hope to succeed, and depending absolutely upon Him, we preach Christ and Him Crucified.

Puritan Theology.

By Principal J. O. DYKES.*

IN order to appreciate any marked historical type of spiritual life, it is necessary to understand its origin—from what root, among what people, and under what circumstances it grew up. Of these the most important circumstance is the theology on which it was nourished. I have no time to discuss that in a short paper, and yet I must be permitted to say, in a sentence, that the great party of English churchmen which in the end of Elizabeth's reign was nicknamed Puritan, and which played so considerable a part in Church and State under the Stuarts, seems to me to have been a legitimate outgrowth of the Reformation. Only we must remember that by the time Puritanism took on its special colour, both of theology and temper, Protestantism had suffered modification. The joyous fervour of its first days had been damped and even embittered by a century of persecution and religious conflict. Its confidence in the newly-recovered Word of God had also been robbed of some of its freedom by extreme views as to verbal and even mechanical inspiration. A hundred years after the movement began we note in Protestantism features of narrowness, rigour, and gloom alien to the contemporaries of Luther and Zwingle. Yet, if due allowance be made for all these changes, Puritanism as a religious party will be found to be a direct, and in the main a faithful, representative of Reformation principles.

It remained intensely loyal to the seed truth which gave birth to Protestantism. That was that salvation is an immediate matter between the sinful soul and God; that with God, in Christ, each one of us has to enter for himself into sacred private relations by penitence and faith; that to hear God's message, and accept his Christ by a personal act of the whole soul, alone brings pardon of sin and peace with heaven. This fundamental conception of religion gives us the key to one great characteristic of Puritan piety—its inwardness and subjectivity. The Evangelical theory of salvation throws each man in upon the workings of his own heart under the might of the Spirit of God. It subordinates outward ceremonies to the changes of the interior life; it concentrates the interests of the soul upon its intimate spiritual relation to the Eternal God. Do I need to say that in these days of revived externalism in religion, whether it take the form of sacerdotal claims on the one hand, or of Christian socialism on the other, this individualising of piety is a feature which we all need to guard?

As a spiritual revival the Reformation was born out of the agonies and the alarms of a sin-stricken conscience. It was the greatest of all awakenings the Church has witnessed, of that inextinguishable cry of the soul, "How shall sinful man find peace with God?" The cry was for an assurance of the Divine favour here and now. No reader of any representative Puritan book, such as Bunyan's "Grace Abounding" or Baxter's "Call to the Unconverted," needs to be told of the part which this problem of human guilt played in the Puritan conception of religion. To escape damnation by a conscious conversion to God—in the presence of that supreme interest, everything else was trivial. The dread of being mistaken here, or self-deluded, haunted the holiest saints. The dread was deepened by the prevalent Calvinism, teaching the sinner's own helplessness to work so great a change. The uncertainty whether God would be gracious; the question, "Am I one of God's elected?"—these things bulked so largely in the Puritan creed that they drove the Puritan to ever deeper and more subtle self-scrutiny.

It was, I think, a decline from the simpler, more cheerful trust in Christ, of the New Testament and the early Reformation age. I am glad that larger views of the Divine love and of the willingness of our Heavenly Father to win back his wandered child, have given to modern evangelism a sunnier and less pallid complexion. Yet I beg you to consider whether we are not distinctly in danger of going to the opposite extreme. Surely many of us are prone to take too easily the question of personal salvation. We preach few awakening sermons. We are not sure nowadays about hell-fire. We are ready to think well of all men. We skim lightly over the crucial crisis of conversion. Many of us are satisfied, I fear, without an assurance of forgiveness. And I am inclined to think that much of this easy-going modern religion springs out of the fact that we have a feebler sense of sin, and of the consequences of its inveteracy in our fallen nature, than our Puritan fathers had. If I were asked to lay my finger on the central characteristic of Puritan piety, I think I should name this first—its profound consciousness of sin. Not of sins merely, but of sin; not of sin only in its defilement, and desert of death, but of the sinful principle in its power to penetrate the nature and vitiate all its action; not of the occasional outbreaks of what Paul calls indwelling sin, but of that subtle virus of ungodliness which cleaves like an infection to the best of us, and calls us often to humiliation of soul before God. We need, I am convinced, to plough deeper into the knowledge of ourselves, as our Puritan ancestors did, if we would be strong enough to recall ourselves and our age to that Gospel which alone is the power of God unto salvation.

* Partial Notes of an Address to the Free Church Council at the City Temple.

With the "Midnight Sun."

IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

ALTHOUGH bearing the complimentary designation of "steam-yacht," the Midnight Sun is in reality a substantial vessel of over 3000 tons. In former days, under another name and other owners, she rendered ten years of transatlantic service. At present, chartered by Messrs. Lunn and Perowne, she is fitted for the comfortable accommodation of 175 passengers, besides officers and crew numbering 110. Viewed from the shore, she does not attain in artistic proportions to the picturesque conception of a "yacht"; but to some of us, at any rate, when on shiphoard, the practical is of more moment than the ideal, and a soft place for a bilious head more to be desired than the elegance of a cross-tree or a gracefully-curving stem. Let the internal appointments of a ship be "grateful, comforting," and we care little for the criticisms of the "small-boat populace" around.

We embarked at Marseilles on the 19th ult., and although the vessel had only been in dock two days from her previous trip, she was cleaned and provisioned with wonderful rapidity ere her new occupants arrived. So, with every berth engaged, and under a delightfully genial sun, we set sail shortly after noon, with weather conditions more favourable than those experienced by our predecessors for several months past, so our captain informed us.

The first port of call, some sixteen hours later, was Ajaccio, the capital of Corsica. Here the Saturday was spent, in visiting the house in which Napoleon Buonaparte was born (still maintained in excellent preservation), driving along the coast, or walking inland, shopping, and in such-like pursuits as inclination and opportunity allowed. Sailing again at midnight, Sunday was spent at sea; but the spirits of the majority were drooping rather than glad, for which the somewhat restless waves were responsible.

With two dozen "clergy of various denominations" in the company, it was not difficult to find preachers for the day, except in so far as diffidence made each wish to give place to his brother. The morning service, conducted by the Archdeacon of Manchester, was but thinly attended. His sermon treated of some aspects of modern thought in its relation to religion; but with some of his conclusions many would not agree, though all would wish to believe that, "in spite of all hostile criticism against Christianity and the Bible, than at any previous period of the world's history."

CHRIST IS MORE TO THE WORLD TO-DAY

In the afternoon a short, bright service for sailors was held on the forecastle, to which quite a large number of passengers were also attracted. The leader was Rev. N. S. de Jersey, late of St. Mary's, Kilburn, who expects shortly to undertake a chaplaincy in the Missions to Seamen. A few well-known hymns prepared the way for a five-minutes' talk from the words, "Without Me ye can do nothing." Then another hymn, and Rev. Eric Farrar, drawing illustration, aptly enough, from the unpleasant experiences of many of his fellow-passengers earlier in the day, gave a direct and earnest address, uplifting Christ as the only Saviour from sin, that dread malady from which all mankind suffers. In the evening Dr. Handley Moule, of Cambridge, preached on the practical subject of glorifying God in the body, in the daily round of life, alike in its duties and its recreations.

Monday morning, the 22nd, found us anchored in the Bay of Naples, but in weather which materially dimmed the preconceived notions of that lovely spot as derived from pictures and photographs of highly-coloured tints. A heavy deluge of rain, and an army of itinerant vendors, singers and begging nuns were the chief elements of our welcome. However, we lost no time in boarding a tug for the shore, whence a special train conducted us at once to Pompeii, the stirring (if painful) interest of which neither clouds nor rain could quench. The solemn silence of miles of streets, erst so full of life, the roofless houses now so desolate, with grass o'ergrown, the partly obliterated frescoes and mosaics of exquisite design of workmanship, remnants of a departed glory, forming a link between the old world and the new—all these inspired the beholder with unspeakable awe. What, indeed, could be more tragic than the petrified corpses of human beings and animals found in the positions in which they were overwhelmed; or more realistic than the ruts made in the paving-stones by hurrying chariot-wheels; and the hollows worn at the fountain by the hands of many, while leaning there in order to quench their thirst; or more pathetic than the marble bust of a councillor standing intact in his own well-appointed vestibule? With sorrowful wonder we turned up this street and that, visited the baths, the theatre, the Street of the Tombs, and last of all the museum, all of which reiterated the warning thought,

"REMEMBER THY LATTER END!"

The latest excavation, completed eight months ago, revealed the finest of all the houses as yet laid bare. In the garden-court, around which the house is built, are beautiful fountains and statuettes of marble (than which no finer are to be found in Europe), the whole having been in some measure restored, and the garden planted, to reproduce, as far as possible, its original appearance. At every turn one met evidence of high civilisation, which suggested how little, in the last 2000 years, the world has advanced in either its arts or ingenuities. The baths were elaborated on practically the same system as the modern "Turkish" bath, while the various appliances and conveniences of domestic life were very much as they are with us to-day.

But what a change, withal! With what irony has Time treated the "Street of Abundance," in its present sorry plight! The indications, only too manifest, of vicious living, the sudden destruction of the city, indeed the whole sad scene, forms a terrible commentary on the warnings of God to Israel—"When thou hast eaten and art full, then beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God." "If thine heart turn away, so that thou worship other gods and serve them, I denounce unto you this day that ye shall surely perish." And in their disobedience was their doom—"They soon forgat his works. They contemned the counsel of the Most High." "So they did eat and were filled; they were not estranged from their lust, but while their meat was yet in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them." As with Israel, so with Pompeii.

A STREET IN POMPEII.

A mile or so distant is a curious settlement of modern growth, conducted on lines similar to that at Lourdes. So-called miracles of healing are performed here; but judging from the terribly crippled beggars asking alms by the wayside, one concludes that local faith must be at a low ebb. But more of this in a future letter. G. E. M.

Korea.—The March issue of The Church at Home and Abroad, the organ of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, says:—"Our churches in Korea received during the past year some 200 into their membership, and besides enrolled a thousand catechumens. In no other mission of our board is the harvest so ripe for the reaper."

Factory and Laundry Visiting. — The factory and laundry sub-committee of the Factory Helpers' Union are in great need of more ladies to undertake dinner (or tea) hour visiting in the factories and laundries of London. There are still many of these places where permission has been granted for ladies to go in for a short Bible talk with their girls, and for which we have no visitors. These talks are genuinely appreciated by the girls. There must be many of your readers who could spare half-an-hour once a week, or once a fortnight, to undertake this service for Christ. I should be glad to receive the names of such, and arrange for them to get into some work-room in their neighbourhood. Isabel M. M. Kenward.

43, Streatham High-road, S.W.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, March 21.

"There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared."—Psa. cxxx. 4.

Yes, thank God, there is forgiveness, because at his right hand He liveth for evermore who put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. Forgiveness at any moment for the sins of a life; repeated forgiveness for the sins of every hour; forgiveness instantaneously upon confession. He pardoneth and absolveth all those who truly repent and unfeignedly believe in Him of whom the Gospel speaks. By this man is preached the forgiveness of sins. And when God once speaks forgiveness it can never be unspoken. Fear and doubt and misgiving may question, but cannot revoke it. Based on the Blood of the Covenant, on promises ratified by the most solemn assurances, there is forgiveness with God. Weary, sinning, ashamed soul, the fountain of God's forgiveness springs perennially from his heart; as clear and full as when that fountain was first opened for sin and uncleanness. Take it and go your way.

Just because God is so ready to forgive, there is wrought within our hearts an ever-deepening dread of giving Him pain. There is forgiveness with Him, that He may be feared. There is a greater fear in the heart of the true child of God of grieving his Father than there is in the unregenerate of the penalty of transgression. The element of fear comes back into our nature, refined and purified through the fires of love. There is no fear in love, and yet love fears with a perpetual dread of giving needless pain. Because God is a consuming fire, let us serve Him with godly fear.

MONDAY, March 22.

"Like a weaned child with his mother."—Psa. cxxxi. 2.

How much the greatest teachers of the world have learnt from little children. Jesus has for evermore set a little child in the midst of us to teach us. It is from the nursery that David got this tender, exquisite conception.

A little child has been brought up by the breast, and has loved to nestle to its mother. But the weaning time has come. With Orientals it is often greatly deferred. The little one is impatient of the change, and highly resents the spoon with which he is fed. Vehemently he cries, and fights, and struggles with hand and foot, little knowing that he is resisting a change which is to make him independent, which shall advance his truest life, and shall ultimately bring him back to that mother again, as her stay and blessing. Finally, however, the passion subsides, the sobs die down to little whimpers, a tear still lies upon the cheek to show where the storm had raged, but on the whole the babe is stilled and quieted.

So with us, we have clung to the breast of some human help and comfort. Presently the strong wise hand of God puts us gently from it, and turns us to other sources of consolation. At first we passionately resist with outcry and strife. But the Comforter comes and hushes us as on the very lap of God. He shows us the love which cannot mistake, and presently the soul calms, becomes stilled and quieted; with chastened hope it turns to the Lord; it thrives on stronger meat; it leaves behind the life of dependence, and is strengthened with all might unto patience and longsuffering with joy

TUESDAY, March 23.

"Lord, remember David, and all his afflictions."—Psa. cxxxii. 1.

This psalm commemorates the removal of the ark to the temple, newly prepared for its reception by Solomon. David had been dead some years, but as they prepared to fulfil the project on which he had set his heart, the men of the new generation could not forget how he sware unto the Lord, and vowed unto the mighty one of Jacob. They remembered David. Throughout this psalm his name often recurs. "For thy servant David's sake." "The Lord hath sworn unto David." "The budding of David's horn."

"Shall man remember, and shall God forget?" He would be unrighteous if he were to forget the work of faith and labour of love of his saints. It was in pursuance of his covenant with David that Solomon's temple at last stood complete. Thus God still bends over the scenes of the life-work of his children. The chapel where a McCheyne pleaded with his congregation; the South Sea Island, where a Williams poured out his blood; the dark forests in which a Brainerd wrestled for his Indians; the great Continent, where a Moffat, a Livingstone, a Hannington wrought, prayed and suffered. He remembers David, and all his afflictions. He recalls the prayers, and tears, and travail of soul, and the time comes when the finished structure stands on the site which to them was waste and void. No effort, or cry, or prayer of thine goes unheeded. Some day a perfect realisation of thy dream, which thou shalt see from heaven's standpoint of vision, shall satisfy thee.

WEDNESDAY, March 24.

"It is like the precious oil upon the head."—Psa. cxxxiii. 2.

Brotherly love binding together kindred hearts is here compared to oil, the chosen symbol of the Holy Spirit, because it is only through his grace that it is possible to love. The love of the brethren is the earthly manifestation of love to God. We have just as much to Him as we have to them, and such love, whether to them or Him, can only be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us. Is love wanting? Seek a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Pentecost meant the most wonderful manifestation of love which the world had ever seen.

The Holy Spirit, as oil, was poured upon the head of our great Aaron as He arose from the waters of baptism, and again when He ascended into the presence of the Father; and it has been descending ever since upon us who are as the skirts of his garments. To the Jew it seemed as though the Hermon range overtowered the land and was able to drop its dews across the intervening distance upon the mountains of Zion. Thus, from the glory of his exaltation, Jesus drops the dew of the Holy Spirit as blessing upon the lowlands of our life—that blessing which is life for evermore. Our response to it is the fertility of heart's love and life's activities.

THURSDAY, March 25.

"Bless ye the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord, which by night stand in the house of the Lord."—Psa. cxxxiv. 1.

This hymn was composed for the night-watch of the Temple, for those that had gone to relieve the Levites who had been in charge during the day. It is to be noticed that these were specially summoned to bless the Lord and lift up their hands. For, after all, is it not they that stand in the house of God by night who are most in need of these exhortations?

It is comparatively easy to bless the Lord in the daytime, when sunshine lies like his smile on nature, and all the world is full of music, and our lives flow on quietly and peacefully. It does not take much grace to bless the Lord then. But when night has draped the earth and hushed the homes of men to solitude, and we stand amid the shadows that lurk around us in the sanctuary, facing the inexplicable mysteries of Providence, of history, of life and death, then the song falters on our lips, and chokes our utterance. We may be strong, stoical, grave, but to bless the Lord—ah! there's the rub.

No sooner, however, do we dare to formulate the words of blessing, pursing our lips in the effort, daring to say, by the strong effort of will, what we may not say gladly and easily, there comes back to us, as to this ancient singer, the assurance that the Lord which made heaven and earth shall bless. Is it possible for Him to have made heaven and earth, and not to be able to bless one soul whom He has not created only, but redeemed.

FRIDAY, March 26.

"Praise Him, O ye servants of the Lord."—Psa. cxxxv. 1.

Here is an appeal to all of us. We are his servants, we stand in his courts, let us praise Him. There is a distinction between thanksgiving and praise. In that we render thanks for the great benefits that we have received at his hands; in this we adore God for all that He is in Himself. Forgetting our own petty interests and concerns, our me and my and mine, we take our stand with angels and archangels and all the host of heaven in crying, Thou art worthy, O holy, holy, holy Lord, heaven and earth are full of thy great glory, glory be unto Thee, O God Most High.

We praise Him with our ascriptions of loyal affection, but we praise Him no less when we suffer silently according to the will of God, when we do his commandments hearkening to the voice of his Word, when we wait for Him to indicate his will, and lead us by a right way.

Oh that life might be one long Psalm of Praise! Awake my soul, awake psaltery and harp, awake all that is within me! Shall angels praise Thee, my God, and shall I be dumb! Shall song awake to thee from every copse and bower, from woodland and grove, from the heart of awakening nature, and shall I hold my peace! I praise Thee, I bless Thee, I worship Thee, I magnify Thee, most loving, most holy, most blessed God; my Father, my Redeemer, my Comforter. Every whit of my nature cries glory. That thy hand seems to lie heavily on me, and that my soul is pressed and straitened from without, shall not stay me. Yea, if it should be my lot to go from the courts of thy house to the nethermost abyss, I would still ask for grace to fill its unaccustomed spaces with adoring songs.

SATURDAY, March 27.

"His mercy endureth for ever."—Psa. cxxxvi. 26.

Twenty-six times in this Psalm we are told that God's mercy endureth for ever. The Psalmist had been reviewing the history of the past. As far back as the creation his eye had travelled, and all through the stormy, troublous days he could detect the silver thread of mercy. Would that we had his eyes to see always the love of God. Amid the murky gloom of chaos there is a silver gleam; it is his mercy. When sun and moon appear, there is a brighter light than theirs; it is his mercy. Above the roar of the Red Sea and the rattle of the thunder-storms, are the flute-like notes of his mercy. Through all the strife and horror of the conquest of Canaan there glides the white-robed angel of his mercy. Deeper than the darkest shades of sin, higher than the highest floods of transgression, is the love of God, in the hand of which the round world and all its inhabitants lie, as a drop on the palm. Look back on your life, and say whether you cannot see the thread of mercy linking all its beads.

A debtor to mercy alone,
Of covenant mercy we sing.

And do you suppose that such mercy is going to fail you? It endureth for ever! You fret and chafe like a restless little child, but you cannot fall out of the arms of God's mercy. Lie still, it canopies you like a mother's face, it beats about you as a mother's embrace. O love that will not let us go! O mercy that hath neither beginning nor end! O God, who hast loved, who lovest, and who wilt love, when the sun is no more, and the things that are now shall have passed away as a dream.

F. B. M.

"This Poor Widow."—2.

By the Author of "THRESHOLD SERVICE."

FOR the Christian of to-day the story of the widow's mite has a message, which loses none of its force although the Jewish Temple has disappeared, giving place to a spiritual building. Among professing Christians, the two classes of religious donors, the poor and the rich, still exist; and the test applied to their offerings—God's standard of reality—is the fire that shall finally try the wood and stubble, the gold and the precious stones. The contributions of superfluity are numerous, and the forms of trumpet-sounding are diverse, but the same spirit that prompted the exhibition of lavish expenditure in Temple decoration, moves men now, though in a totally different guise. The votive gifts of a merely psychical, emotional religion, that satisfies itself with the applause of the world—even of a very religious world—are constantly being poured forth. With tireless energy devotees to their own special cause spend their time, money, and influence. Surely never was there such a race after prominence in philanthropy; and by no great stretch of hyperbole may we not say that certain aspects of religion, represented by the various denominations, owe their attractiveness largely to the scope they afford for ornamental piety? It appeals far more strongly to the self-satisfied heart to be a pillar at a prayer-meeting, or on a committee, than to be silent under reproof or provocation at home; to wear oneself out for a charity is much more flattering to the natural man than to construe 1 Cor. xiii. into the common-place words and acts of daily life. Good as it is that each one should have some outside work to do for God, and that Christians should "spend and be spent" in his active service, still an immense danger exists in the notoriety given in the present day to deeds of benevolence and devotion, and we need very seriously to remember that zeal is no infallible sign of the gifts of the Spirit, neither is talking eloquently of Christ any proof of being alive in Him. After all, humility, patience, forbearance, hopefulness purity, and self-control will never make as much noise in the world as alms-giving, and what is vaguely called "Christian," or "Church work."

But we may go even deeper still, and say that the individual soul has its periods of abundance and poverty. Does the reader follow? Do you know what it is to be reduced to two mites in the inner life, when widowed of all sensible, spiritual comfort, you feel that you are in want? Yet is it not just at this moment that some imperative call to give—to give your all—invariably comes, and you have to rise up from your house of mourning, going out, as it were, alone among strangers, to cast in your unnoticed, beggarly offering, which seems to you so infinitely much, though in the world's eye it appears so contemptibly little?

Let me take an illustration. You are perhaps brought by circumstances into close contact with some person who has the effect upon you at times of trying you to the uttermost, so that you seem stripped of everything except a humbling sense of powerlessness. It is largely physical, doubtless, but it is none the less real to you, and you cannot throw it off by mere mental effort.

Finally a crisis comes. When you are at your weakest, some great demand is laid upon your strength. What then? It is the hour, dear soul, for stretching out the withered arm of impotence, and giving all. Let the two mites go. Put your will and your trembling heart into the treasury. Jesus stands by watching. He knows the real cost, the true value of your gift.

A Christian once told the writer the secret of her influence over a young girl of an exceedingly difficult character. Only by giving up in her own heart every faintest shadow of dislike and irritation towards the child, who at times seemed almost possessed, could she win and lead her. "The discipline to myself," she said, "was more than I can describe. It meant not simply self-control; it meant emptying myself of everything except love." Yes, that is it. All must go except Christ, and the widowed soul has this inestimable encouragement—that while the gift is being made, the All-seeing Eye is looking on with that Divine understanding, which is what the wounded heart craves for.

Do not fear to give. Give with the abandonment of one who stakes everything, that he may win Christ in an ever fuller and fuller degree. And as with the oil-cruse of another widow, when the vessel is empty, the replenishment will be instantaneous.

Dear living stone! when you are set in your place in the wall of the heavenly city, among sapphires and chalcedony, the measuring-reed of the angel will be that of a man. The same test of perfection was also applied to Him "who was in all points tempted like as we are," and it was found that the "breadth and length and depth and height" of that Foundation Stone were exact. Those who go on to perfection, therefore, go on towards "full growth," towards "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," so that this Divine standard is no impossible one, for the norm is that of "the Man, Christ Jesus.' With his Divinely human judgment He estimates the true worth of the gifts cast into his treasury, and this it is that makes his words with regard to the Jewish widow so unspeakably comforting to the poor in spirit of to-day: "Of a truth I say unto you, this poor widow cast in more than they all, for she of her want did cast in all the living that she had."

St. Giles' Christian Mission

TURNING over, recently, at the office of this Mission, the photographic album wherein is preserved the portrait of each boy taken in hand, as he appears when he comes under the care of the Mission, we were much impressed by the bright, hopeful aspect of some countenances—evidently lads led astray, saved in time, and likely to make a good use of the fresh chance afforded them. Alas, however, we found many on whose every feature seemed written the lines of a life of neglect and evil training, a suspicious side-look as if watching for the policeman being the most striking feature. Yet even such lads, trained for and fully committed, as it seemed, to a criminal career, are being saved and set to earning an honest living, to the full satisfaction of their employers. This class of work, rich in result and invaluable to the nation, grows on Mr. Wheatley's hands. There is in fact no limit to its extension—save that of funds. However loud and wistful the demands from India or Armenia, it is fatal to permit such real soul-saving and reforming home work to languish and come perilously near paralysis for want of means.

Nor are the efforts among men who have gone wrong without abundant result. Just as we were in the office a letter was handed us from a commercial traveller, sent to prison for embezzlement. His family were left to starve but for the Mission's aid. Wife and children were helped, and on the man's release he was taken in hand, with the result that he is now on his feet again, deeply repentant and blessing God for the efforts made to save him from hopelessly sinking into a life of crime. Numerous instances of a similar kind, both among convicts and short-term prisoners, are constantly occurring.

But while work grows and opportunities enlarge, and men and boys seek help in escaping from the thraldom of vice and temptation—an escape they can rarely make unaided—the whole operations are threatened by the want of funds. The daily outgoings are far from being met, and if this continue long, the result must be serious. P.

The Danish Mission Party arrived safely in Beyrout on Feb. 22, after a blessed voyage, giving plenty of opportunity of witnessing for the Master to Protestants, Roman and Greek Catholics, Jews and Mohammedans. Prayer is asked that the Lord may bless them richly where He has sent them.

Dives and Lazarus.

One winter evening about two years ago a dinner was given at a Strand restaurant by a wealthy youth, which cost an enormous sum. The dining-room was specially upholstered in red. Fruit-bearing trees were placed upon the table and ranged round the room. The guests plucked ruddy cherries, peaches, grapes, oranges, from the growing branches, A perfumed fountain was improvised for the occasion. Costly presents were given to each diner. The markets were ransacked for expensive food and drink, and the amount of the bill conferred a sense of peace upon those who partook of the feast, but did not have to pay—a sense of peace which religion itself was unable to bestow. Music of the best gratified the sensuality of this Gargantuan exploit.

The same night a silly old man, scantily clad in threadbare garments, took his seat on a heap of stones and rubbish within two miles of the hotel where Lucullus had entertained his friends. It was a bitterly cold night and the old fellow had not broken his fast all day. When the inquest on his shrunken body was held three days later, it was deposed that he was found with a dry mutton bone in his hand, which he had been gnawing. It was not explained why he did this as he had a penny in his pocket.—English Illustrated Magazine.

An Aged Worker.

In a recent letter our aged sister, Mrs. Huntley, of 193, Camp-street, Georgetown, Demerara, writes:—

I am moving up the Demerara River, visiting the different mission stations, especially to seek to help aged widows and orphans. I have the names of twelve widows, aged and very poor, at the village where I am staying, and all Christians. We have given out nearly 200 garments this season, or material to make them. The merchants kindly supply me with materials at a low price, and some friends in England have made up garments for us.

I am only nine nine miles from Georgetown now, but I expect to go up over 100 miles before I return. The steamer, railway, and tramcar authorities all allow me to travel free on account of the work I do, and my age, as well as the length of time I have been in the colony, which was forty years on February 1. If I am spared till April 26 I shall have completed my seventieth year. I had a severe illness after my return from the Indians last year, but the Lord graciously raised me up to distribute 3000 Christmas letters. I was ill again last month with ague and fever, but here I am moving about once more with a goodly measure of health and strength for my age. I must give up my long journeys and settle down in Georgetown, where I can do a little in visiting the sick.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

In the latest issue of his little paper, Immanuel's Witness, Prediger C. T. Lipshytz gives particulars of an important development in connection with the Barbican Mission to the Jews. The present Mission House was procured by a friend, who paid the rent and taxes for seven years. The lease of the premises will run out in about eighteen months, and it has been decided not to renew, but to procure a Mission House more suited in accommodation and situation to the needs of the growing work.

Mr. Lipshytz says:—"A calculation shows that a site may be bought in the midst of London Jewry, and a building of the size and character needed by the work may be erected for a sum which we do not despair to raise. A Mission House free from debt would relieve the funds from the heavy burden of rent which would of necessity be incurred by continuing to hire premises. By making the provision now proposed we should put the Mission on a more permanent basis, and establish it with better prospects than would be the case if we took another house at a high rent."

It has been resolved to associate the new Mission House with the name of the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop, of Highbury, who did so much to promote the interests of the Mission. To purchase site and make a beginning with the building about £3000 will be required. As soon as funds for the purpose are available, negotiations will be advanced to secure a site in East London, where the Jews are so numerous. Further particulars in booklet form may be had from Mr. Lipshytz, at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.

[Copyright.]

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER SEVENTH.

THE BEST WAY OF LEARNING THE ORDER OF THE LETTERS OF A FOREIGN ALPHABET, SO AS TO BE ABLE TO USE DICTIONARIES, LEXICONS, ETC., WITH EASE AND FACILITY.

IT is very important to learn from the very first the exact order of the letters of the alphabet.

If this be not done, some amount of time will be lost on every occasion when there is need to use a lexicon. The "little pieces of time" thus lost, if rightly used at the beginning, would have sufficed for acquiring the order of the letters twenty times over.

No one ought to seek to learn the order of the letters of an alphabet by repetition. Everyone who attempts to do this will spend at least four or five times as much time as is really necessary.

The order of the letters of any alphabet can best be acquired by association, or by combination.

There are two classes of alphabets—those where the order of the letters is similar to that of our own, and those where the order is to a great extent, or altogether, different.

When the order is similar to our own, or to the order of another alphabet with which we are acquainted, all that is necessary is to associate the letters of the unknown alphabet with the letters of the known one. By doing this we shall be able to recall the order of the new by thinking of the old. Prins 15, 22, 23, 24.

When the order of the letters is to a great extent, or altogether, different from our own, and also from any other with which we are acquainted, then another method of association can be used. Probably the method of association which will be easiest to explain in these letters is one similar to that used by the ancients and by so many modern teachers with such striking results for other things, i.e., by associating them with articles of furniture in the room with which you are most familiar.

Let me illustrate this. Suppose you want to learn the order of the letters of the Hebrew alphabet, you ought, according to this method:

1. To select in consecutive order eleven articles of furniture, etc., in the said room.

2. To have the exact order of these articles of furniture, etc., clearly and definitely fixed in your thoughts.

3. To think of the first two letters of the alphabet as being written on the first article, the second two letters on the second, and so on.

By thinking of the letters and the articles together thus you associate them together in your consciousness, and they will remain associated in your mind; and you will be able to recall the letters by merely turning your thoughts to the things with which you associated them. (See Letter Third, January 21.)

It may seem to you incredible that this can be so. Try it, and, like most who have used it, you will be surprised at the results to which it leads.

There is, as already mentioned, another way of learning the order of the letters of an alphabet. That way is by combination.

Some find combination in some respects simpler and more effective than association.

The following five words recall the exact order of the whole of the letters of the Greek alphabet:—

Abgade, Zethik,
Lamanxo,
Prastu, Phachpso.

It is not difficult to remember these five words; neither is it difficult to remember the order in which the words occur. The first two begin with the first and last letters of our own alphabet. The last two begins with "P" and "Ph"; the middle one with "L," which is nearly the middle letter of our own alphabet.

You can photograph them on your mind by looking at them for a few seconds, and then holding them for a brief time before the mind as a mental picture.

Whoever remembers these five words and their order need never be in doubt again as to the exact order of the letters of the Greek alphabet.

Either of these methods can be applied to the letters of any alphabet.

In using the method by combination it is often necessary to add vowels so as to form words. In all such cases it is important that the vowel added be always the same. This prevents mistake as to whether the vowels belong to the alphabet, or have been added to make up the words. It also helps in recalling the words.

South African Compounds.

THE application of the provisions of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to the natives in the compounds has had a wonderful effect, both economically and morally. The managers of some of the mines have confessed that since the New Year they have been able to do as much as twenty five per cent. more work with the same number of natives. Visiting the compounds, as we do almost every night, the order and quiet that prevail are simply astonishing, compared with the babel, the imprecations, and the drunken brawls of former days. Our hearts are filled with a great thankfulness to Him who overruled it all.

We wish the managers of these mines would now co-operate with us heartily in schemes for the moral improvement and employment of their labourers in their spare hours. From many we have carte blanche to evangelise, and from a few we have some kindly encouragement; but it is difficult to get any concessions for schools. We feel more and more the need of daily personal contact with the natives, and some mental exercise for them to lead them out of savagery and superstition. Much as we prize the opportunity of preaching a full salvation to them in masses, it is from individual dealing that we hope for the best results, and there can be no strong spiritual character built up without a personal knowledge and study of the Word of God. Some of the compounds are still closed to the Gospel; yet there are scores still untouched where permission might be obtained to preach the Word.

Since my last contribution to The Christian we have had an accession to our staff of workers. Mr. Frank Rivett, from Bristol, Mr. Harry Agnew, from Inhambane, and Mr. Germond, from Basutoland, have joined us. Brother Agnew has for ten years been working among the East Coast tribes in the Portuguese territory of Inhambane, and is well acquainted with three of their dialects. It was amusing to see how these people thronged around him, and how delighted they were to hear a white man speak to them in their own tongue. Several tendered coins of money in their exuberance. As this brother is one of the "out-and-out" sort, who loves the souls of the natives, and is never tired of going amongst them with the glad tidings, we specially praise the Lord for his advent. Ill-health drove him from the East Coast, and here he finds he can reach more people from that very district in one day than he could yonder in a month. Of course the novelty of his being able to speak their language will soon wear off, and the curious will fall away; but the seed is being sown in some hearts already.

In a former communication we mentioned one of these Inhambane natives, an Umchopi or Umleygi, formerly called Morofin, but who chose the name of Philip at his baptism. He suffered much persecution from his fellows, but remained steadfast. His delight was to carry our baby harmonium round to all our services. Once or twice he had given a short testimony, but always in Zulu. In vain we tried to get him to speak to his people in their own tongue; it seemed as though he could not. He had been converted in Zulu, had learned to sing and to pray in Zulu, and all his ideas on religion took a Zulu mould.

The first day Brother Agnew prayed and sang and spoke in Balengi dialect it seemed as though Philip had a revelation; his tongue was suddenly loosed, and he volunteered to speak. He kept a noisy crowd of East Coast natives in rapt attention for some minutes, whilst he let out his soul in its own native language, to the glory of Christ. He gives evidence of having made a good choice of a new name. God grant he may be another Philip the Evangelist.

Brothers Rivett and Agnew are located at Germiston, and have access to half-a-dozen large compounds, where they have in most cases been very kindly treated by the compound managers. Brother Rivett is handicapped by not knowing any native language, and by our not yet being able to provide him with an interpreter. Many interesting little episodes occur. After one of his services one evening, a native led Brother Agnew away to a stable and away up into the loft where he slept, that there they might have a little quiet talk about and prayer for his soul. Another, passing him on the road, broke off a great chunk of bread from a loaf he was carrying and offered it to him. By accident and quite unintentionally we strayed into a compound into which we had been forbidden entrance, and had two of the finest open-air services we have held on these fields. We must have spoken to a most interested and attentive audience of over four hundred. It makes us hunger to go again. Please pray the door open!

Brother Germond comes from the Paris Missionary Society in Basutoland, and speaks the native language fluently. Will the readers of these lines please pray that every one of our workers may be filled with the Holy Ghost! We feel more and more the need of the might of the Spirit of God as we stand before these crowds of souls dead in trespasses and sins. In some of our hearts the Lord has been creating that hunger for this blessed filling which is the earnest of fulfilment.

Your readers will remember our description of the church built by two native boys on a farm in Weenen, County Natal. On our table there lies a letter from Mahlatini, the unpaid evangelist whom God raised up to do this work, saying that now he has twenty-eight native boys and girls in his school. Brother von Aken, our missionary in charge of that district, writes to say that on his last visit he was surprised to find them all partially clad in self-made European garments.

The work is the Lord's, so that every lover of Jesus may share in the results of our mission, if they will only give us their earnest and unceasing prayers that the Lord Himself may guide and control every detail of our work for Him.

Johannesberg. A. W. B.

Mrs. Ballington Booth is about to establish a Home for discharged prisoners. When, on their own invitation, she talked to the prisoners at Sing Sing, New York State, many of them professed a desire to lead new lives. But one of them said:—"Think of a shipwrecked crew trying to swim ashore, battling with the waves till the rocks are gained, then to have those on shore beat off the cold numb fingers, and push the struggling ones back into the cruel ocean! Yet that is how society deals with us. No one will trust us, or give us a chance to hold on, and help ourselves up to God's earth again." Mrs. Booth's new undertaking will be called Hope Hall.

Dr. G. F. Pentecost.

SINCE the funeral service of the late Professor Elmslie, there has probably not been seen such a densely packed assemblage in Marylebone Presbyterian Church as on Sunday evening last, when Dr. Pentecost made a last farewell to his congregation. For five years he has officiated as its pastor, and now he is returning to the land of his nativity, to take up similar work at Yonkers, on the banks of the Hudson, near New York City. The crowded state of the church was an index of the deep interest felt in the Doctor's departure, not only by the regular congregation, but by many outside friends. The unusually prolonged Presbyterial proceedings, in connection with the call from Yonkers, tended to increase public interest in the translation.

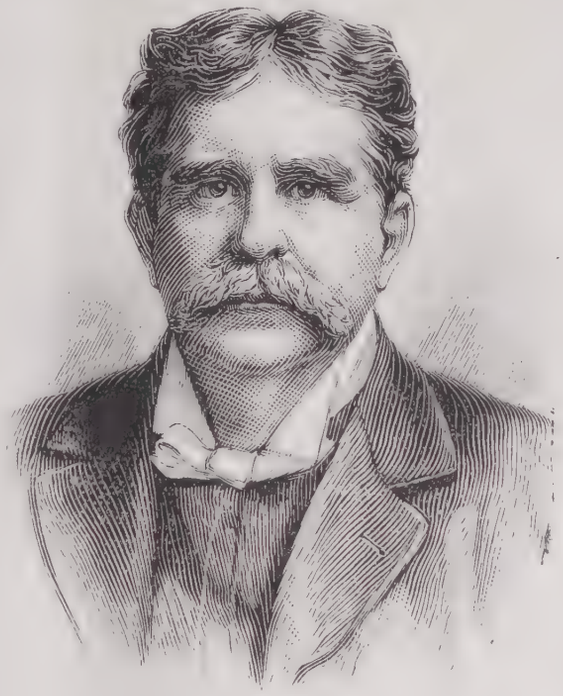
In many respects a man of strong individuality, Dr. Pentecost has created a most welcome precedent in the freedom with which he has successively overleapt the walls of denomination. He has acted in turn as pastor in Baptist, Congregational, and Presbyterian churches, and we understand he has expressed readiness to become an Episcopalian if the call of duty seemed to demand it. If such an example were only to become contagious the world over, the cause of Christian union, we imagine, would advance by leaps and bounds. Different systems of Church government, no doubt have their use in this imperfect world, but in past times so much attention has been devoted to them that the far weightier matters of evangelizing the great outlying masses of the people, and of manifesting the essential oneness of the body of Christ, have been obscured and retarded.

Nearly twelve years ago we gave in these columns a portrait of Dr. Pentecost, with an account of his life-work up to that time. His career has been marked by many vicissitudes, through all of which he has borne himself well; not, of course, without indications of that human proneness to mistake which is the common lot even of the best and most saintly. After resigning the pastoral charge of Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, he devoted himself to evangelism, in which field he has for many years been greatly used of God. He has strenuously and consistently trodden "the old paths," so far as his conceptions of Christ's Gospel are concerned; and wields the Sword of the Spirit with all the freedom and effect gained by deep conviction as well as long experience.

Our readers will not have forgotten the visit which Dr. Pentecost paid to India not long before he accepted the invitation to Marylebone Church. Our pages recorded at the time the important service he rendered in commending the Gospel message, by exposition and argument, to educated natives there. There can be no doubt that if the pointing hand of providence should again lead him to that great country, at some future time, he will further advance the process of breaking up which the Eastern systems of thought are now undergoing, and thus help to bring the peoples of India to the feet of Jesus Christ.

During his five years' pastorate of Marylebone Church, Dr. Pentecost has more than sustained its many-sided congregational activities, while he has also taken a full share in the public Christian life of our great city. It may not have fallen to his lot to accomplish the impossible task of pleasing everybody, but certainly a large section of the church would have hailed his decision to stay at his post in London. He has stated, however, that he always regarded the appointment as a more or less temporary one; and as a true-born American he now feels drawn back to the land of the Stars and Stripes.

The sermon on Sunday evening was a full and impressive exposition of the glorious truth of the oneness of Christ and his believing people, regarding Him in his offices of Prophet, Priest, and King. It was fitting at the close of a thoroughly Biblical ministry of five years that the preacher should, in his last message, exalt in the minds and hearts of the hearers Him who is the central and overshadowing theme of revealed truth. At the close of the discourse there were some brief but touching good-bye words, thanking all for their kind and loving behaviour and co-operation, and appealing to any present not yet at soul-rest, by faith in Christ as the Saviour of sinners and the great Brother Man, to settle the matter without delay. Many in the vast congregation were visibly affected.



(From photograph by Messrs. Russell and Son, Baker-street, W.)

After the service a large proportion of the congregation passed into the lecture hall to get a parting shake of the Doctor's hand, and to "wish him God speed across the sea." He and his family sail for New York from the Albert Dock to-day (Thursday) in the ss. Mohawk, a slow vessel, which will take some ten or twelve days to cross the Atlantic. We earnestly wish for Dr. Pentecost length of days, and continued ability to declare to men the whole counsel of God, in whatever sphere of life or corner of the earth's surface he may be called to move.

Bible-reading.—If you want to be strong, Christian people, hide the Bible in your heart. You make a tremendous mistake for your own soul's sake, if your religious reading consists in what people have said and thought about Scripture more than in the Scripture itself. Why should you dip your cans into the reservoir, when you can take them up to where the spring comes gushing out of the hillside, pure and limpid and living.—Dr. Maclaren.

"The Hand of Love."

THE new report of the Salvation Army Women's Rescue Work is issued with the title "The Hand of Love." This department is under the direction of Mrs. Bramwell Booth, whose life is one of loving devotion to the cause of reclaiming lost and despairing women.

The women's social work of the S.A. has thirty-five centres in this country, with sixteen rescue homes, five shelters, three lodging-houses, and other beneficent agencies. During the year just closed 743 women, rescued from careers of sin, were placed in suitable situations, and 275 were restored to their friends. The principle of self-support is applied, as far as possible, to every branch of the effort, and from this source a large amount was received towards maintaining the work. The balance sheet also shows that "old girls" have contributed nobly of their earnings, so as to help in the reclamation of others who are still leading lives of sin and misery.

Deeply interesting particulars are given of police-court work, cell visitation, and prison-gate kindness. Every page shows that, whether as victims of moral neglect or the prey of cruel deceit, women of the class which Mrs. Booth assists, need above all a protector and friend, and this want is really supplied by the many-handed inquiry department and the rescue homes.

Copies of the report may be had from the International Headquarters, 101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C. We make a brief extract relating to one branch of the work:—"What is a Woman's Shelter? It is a refuge for the despairing. It is a stepping-stone to the needy, and an anchor of hope to the honest, deserving, if ill-clad, and friendless woman. It is adapted to the circumstances of the very poorest City waif. If she has not the twopence to pay for her night's lodging and supper, and has the capacity to work for that sum—and she must surely be beyond social redemption if she has not—she can have the unique satisfaction of effecting her own temporary amelioration. This principle of self-deliverance is interwoven with everything we do for the homeless, and perhaps in no branch of our women's social work is it so conspicuous a success as in the sheltering of the homeless. The Shelter is the hand of love upon the wandering nomads of our civilisation, and the pity is that, hampered for the want of leaders and money, there are so few of them."

How Waifs are Found.

AMONG the cases applying and admitted during the past few weeks to the Manchester and Salford Refuges are many dark and sad ones.

Two bright girls, Annie and Janie, were found with their mother in a miserable dwelling. They never knew their father, or where he was; and all the surroundings were bad.

Little Frank's case was different. He had no mother. His father is in penal servitude for an offence which must not be named, and no one left to look after this bright little boy upon whose early life has rested such a shadow.

Katie and Janie were brought to the Shelter in great need by one who took pity on them. When investigating the case in the neighbourhood where they had lived, we found that the father had poisoned himself a short time before, owing to the drunken habits of the mother, who used to hawk these children about, being turned out of every house they stayed at.

Sailors at Falmouth.—The report of the Falmouth branch of the B. and F. Sailors' Society shows steady and useful work among seamen of all nations, afloat and ashore. The new mission boat has proved a great acquisition in reaching the ships. Information as to this interesting work may be had of the secretary, Mr. J. D. Burchett, Stratton, Penwerris, Falmouth.

Ranelagh Mission, W.—The report shows that the work in new hall is increasingly appreciated by the people. The ragged children of the neighbourhood have had special attention. The mission services, Sunday-school, Bible-readings, as well as the personal work of the missionary and two Bible women, have been used in blessing to many.—The treasurer is Mr. S. Collett, 191, Belsize-road, N.W.

Continental Doings.

MISSIONARY SPIRIT IN FRANCE.

THERE seems to be a real awakening of missionary interest among the Protestants of France. They have been compelled to take over, one by one, various colonial fields of mission work hitherto occupied by others, because the French Government has exacted French teaching in the schools, or shown aversion to foreign influence. Already the resources of French Protestants were taxed to the utmost by the two fields of Barotseland and Basutoland, and now Madagascar is suddenly thrown upon their hands.

Some time ago a great meeting was held at the Oratoire in Paris to welcome back MM. Kruger and Lauga, the delegates sent to Madagascar the year before. The policy of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society was then very clearly laid down by the president, M. L. Soutter. "Madagascar," he said, "is a work we have not sought: it is a duty thrown upon us; but, in accepting it, we must not give up our other work. True mission work must always consist in carrying the Gospel to those who have never heard it; not in building upon another man's foundation, another man's lines, of things made ready to our hand. If the Lord has laid this new duty before us, we must believe He will provide the men and means. Hitherto we have tried to raise money by the usual methods: annual subscriptions, donations from what we could spare, sales of work, and so on, and these resources have been taxed to the utmost. Let us now make the appeal to sacrifice."

But all earnest Christians (and they are not a few) felt, and still feel, that a deeper work is needed to produce the spirit of sacrifice. A profound spiritual awakening among Christians is required, and there are not lacking signs that it is coming. Rev. F. Coillard reports a similar state of things from the South and Centre, especially among the students at the Theological School of Montauban. C. W. M.

THE GOSPEL IN BELGIUM.

In Belgium two great powers are at war—on the one hand, the Church of Rome, which still holds the consciences of a great part of the nation, and on the other hand, Socialism, with its intimate ally atheism. Socialism is specially dominant in the Flemish provinces and in agricultural districts; atheism in the industrial centres, where it is making gigantic efforts to gain the mastery over the minds of the people.

And yet the people of Belgium are not naturally inclined to atheism; if they fall a prey to the agents of infidelity, it is through disgust of the teaching of Rome, which does not meet their wants, and is in contradiction to all their aspirations. Of the Gospel as an elevating and healing influence the bulk of the nation know nothing, for Protestantism was stamped out with merciless cruelty in the sixteenth century. The only hope for the country is in a return to the principles of the Gospel, which were its glory at the time of the Reformation. That is the aim of the Belgian Missionary Church, which has for the last sixty years laboured with unabating vigour to make those principles known in the land.

Thanks be to God, these efforts have not been in vain; in the length and breadth of the land there has been formed a net work of thirty-two mission churches and stations, which are as so many beacons of light in the midst of the encircling gloom. If the powers against which the Missionary Church has to contend are great, yet the truth is steadily gaining ground, and a great number of conversions from Roman Catholicism and infidelity are taking place. In many places where the Gospel was completely unknown only twenty or ten years ago congregations have sprung up, and the converts from Rome are foremost in carrying the tidings of peace and of a renewed life to those who are still in error and sin.

The past two years have been a time of special blessing, and at no time has the progress been so marked and rapid. Out of the thirty-two churches and stations, no less than seven have been obliged by the increase of the audiences and the growth of the work to build new churches, and two have had to seek more extensive premises. Three new stations have been formed; and young men's and young women's unions, Sunday-schools, and temperance societies are in full operation.

There is practically no limit to the work to be done, for on all sides, especially in the French-speaking industrial districts of the South, doors are open, and the people disposed to listen to the message of the Gospel. The only obstacle to the progress of the work is the lack of funds. More than £3000 will be wanting to cover the expenses of the current year, and there is no hopes of receiving them from the members of the Belgian Mission, who with a very few exceptions belong to the working classes. Communications regarding the work may be sent to Rev. Kennedy Anet, general secretary, 129, Chaussée d'Ixelles, Bruxelles.

(Rev.) Charles d'Aubigne.

FROM DR. BAEDEKER.

I am now on my return journey, to-morrow going by steamer to Odessa. After a few days I hope to go again to Constanta (Roumania). My visit to the Caucasus was most interesting and blessed. Russia is still virgin soil for the Gospel, and to sow the precious seed is not a vain thing. The harvest is sure to come in due season, though the difficulties and hindrances are many and great at the present time.

A Russian sister in Christ was my companion and interpreter in some prisons in Trans-Caucasia. In the ancient city of Gori we found a large prison full of the finest men, Grusinians. Amongst them are many noblemen and princes. We had the joy of ministering to about 400 of these prisoners the Gospel in their own tongue. They expressed their gratitude very warmly. As we returned from the prison, and passed through the city, five tall men accosted us in the street, and expressed their gratitude for a visit in the prison at Tiflis and for the New Testaments I had given them. They had returned to their respective homes, and recognising me they spontaneously came out to thank me. A very little love given yields an abundant return.

As we had to stop for several hours at the railway station and were walking about, we were met by a tribe of begging people who came from the mountains. As they came near, they begged in a piteous manner for something to eat. As we gave help to some, they became quite ravenous for more, and they would have laid hold on us if we had not been protected by the policeman of the station. Never have I seen beggars in such a ragged condition, and we were thankful they had not met us in some lonely place. From Gori we journeyed by a night train to Kubaïs, where there is a large prison with some 300 Grusinian prisoners, amongst whom we found fourteen noblemen and princes, who were very thankful for our visit and for the precious book in their own language.

The scenery in the Caucasian Mountains is extremely wild and grand, but the civilisation of Europe has had very little influence as yet. Going on by rail to Batoum, we found again a ready entrance and a very warm welcome in the prison. We found in Batoum many Armenian refugees who had fled from Turkey. An Armenian missionary with his wife and daughter gave us quite a feast by their simplicity and godly sincerity. We found the man lying in bed a sufferer from rheumatism, his wife and daughter working with their hands, whilst the father, with open Bible before him, was occupied with the things of God. It was a great joy to be able to minister to their needs. Several others came and gave us opportunities to help them.

The day at Batoum soon passed away, and the steamboat took us off about midnight. After a somewhat stormy passage we landed again at Yalta, and the Lord had prepared a feast in that place. A lady of Nihilistic tendencies was drawn by the Gospel, and decided to give up all and follow Christ. From Yalta I returned to Sevastopol, and thence I followed an invitation from a friend in Rückenau, one of the Mennonitish colonies, near Melitopol. Leaving Sevastopol at night I arrived at Melitopol early the following morning. A conveyance took me to Orlaff, and thence to Rückenau, where I arrived late in the evening. Time was precious and limited; a programme for three days was at once drawn up, and busy, loving hands copied it, and then it was sent from house to house through the colony, and some copies were taken to other colonies. The effect of this prompt action was that the three days were fully occupied and largely attended by eager listeners.

The Mennonites are a kind of Baptists who are German immigrants, and who very many years have enjoyed special privileges in Russia. They have amongst them many valued servants who minister the Word to their community. Several brethren amongst them took an active part during the three days' conference, and the power of the Lord's presence was evident. Having been amongst them fourteen years ago, I had the joy now to find some precious fruit from those days. They form a large and very influential community, occupying a large district in the Taurische Government in the Crimea, etc. F. W. Baedeker.

Sevastopol, March 2.

POOR IN MADRID.

The want among the poor in Madrid this year is unusually great. One of the principal reasons of this is the war in Cuba and the Philippine Islands. The bread-winners, the husbands and grown-up sons of the poorer families, have been sent away as soldiers. Many women and children have nothing but what they can earn by washing or sewing. Our mission work is in the midst of the homes of the labourers. We have decided to begin a meeting for the poorest. On Wednesdays and Saturdays some fifty women gather in the unoccupied class-rooms to sew for half a franc each.

They listen attentively to what the daughter of the late Spanish Pastor Ruet reads to them. We try to teach them to sing suitable hymns, and hope these hymns may prove to be a seed sown for eternity. We have already been obliged to refuse to receive several, for with the purchase of material for work the expense is about £8 a month. We are sure that through this effort God will seek many a wandering sheep. Fritz Fliedner.

ROME AND THE BIBLE.

New regulations relating to the prohibition and censure of books have been issued from the presses of the Vatican. As to the Bible in the vulgar tongue, one of the articles repeats the old objection that the publication of such is attended by more inconveniences than advantages, and adds:—"All versions in the vernacular, even those published by Catholics, are absolutely prohibited, if not approved by the Apostolic See, or edited under the superintendence of the bishops, with annotations from the Church Fathers and Catholic doctors." Thus, says Le Chrétien Belge, it is not sufficient that the Bible be translated by a sincere Catholic; it must have the approbation of the Pope, and be "enriched" with explanations by great men whose very names are unknown to many!

Another article interdicts "all versions of the sacred books made by non-Catholic writers, whomsoever they may be, in any vulgar tongue, and especially those published by the Bible Societies. Nevertheless, the use of these versions is permitted to those who are engaged in theological and Biblical studies." Yet another article prohibits obscene books, but allows teachers and others to use classical works, although vicious both in tone and substance!

World's Missionary Conference. — The committee which has conducted preliminary correspondence on the subject of the conference to be held in New York in 1900, has received most cordial replies from a large number of missionary organizations in England and Europe. It is expected that representatives of societies from all over the world will be in attendance.

Unobtrusive Work.—I am more and more convinced that the quiet, unobtrusive discharge of the little work of one's own locality—the humble and homely process of making bad men good and good men better—is far before all noisy and ostentatious display of church pretensions, and is the best antidote for the over-sensitive spirit which looks at a church system as a faultless piece of mechanism to be gazed at, and not as a hasty scaffolding to be merely trod on in building up the Church of God.—Dr. John Cairns.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Ted, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

By Night.

Text for Sunday: "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out" (John vi. 37).

Hymns: Songs and Solos, 400; Christian Choir, 11.

HAVE you ever noticed how literally the Lord Jesus kept the promise which we have as our text to-day? When He was so "weary" at the well of Samaria, He was not too weary to talk to a poor sinful woman. When He was so busy, with crowds pressing round Him, He had time to attend to each separate case of need. When He was on a journey He could always wait to bless those who cried to Him, or who even touched the hem of his garment. When He was "asleep on a pillow" He could be disturbed without fear of making Him angry. What encouragement to each of us!

Busy men have often certain "hours for consultation," but there is no hour at which we may not come to Jesus, and be sure of a welcome. Unless the case were very serious indeed, a doctor would not like a patient to come by night for aid. Even the "friend" in the parable (Luke xi. 5-8) was not willing to be roused to give aid to his friend in need. The minister or your Sunday-school teacher, however good and kind, would be very much surprised if an anxious seeker chose the night for a visit of enquiry. But the Lord Jesus uttered no single word of blame or of surprise to Nicodemus.

It was a mean thing to do—to go to Christ when no one would think less of him for going. But the Saviour received him and spoke to him all those wonderful words which for over 1800 years have been the study of men and women, but which we must all feel contain new lessons for us still. Is not our Lord indeed patient and compassionate?

There is none in Heaven,
None on Earth, like Thee, is what we must all confess to Him.

There are still some who come to Jesus, as it were, "by night"—some who are ashamed to own that they need Him and that they desire his salvation. It seems a strange thing that anyone should be "ashamed of Jesus"; but still, if there are any who are conscious of this false shame, let them still come, as Nicodemus did. The Lord Jesus will receive us even in all our weakness, and with all our faults.

And when we really do know Him, and believe all his love to us, we shall not be able to help showing it and telling of it. Later on we find Nicodemus beginning to be more courageous. Do you not think that Nicodemus felt very sorry then that he had ever been afraid to stand up for Jesus? I think He did. And quite sure I am that we shall be sorry (with oh such a very bitter, unavailing sorrow!) if we let the days go by without taking our stand on the side of Him who loved us and gave Himself for us. The very friends some may be afraid would make fun of them are, perhaps, in the very same secret search for Christ. I have heard of a husband and wife, each longing to find Jesus, and yet hiding the desire from each other until it became impossible any longer to keep silence, both coming "by night," but coming alone and secretly. I have heard of brothers and sisters fearing to confess to each other that they loved the Lord Jesus, until some happy chance (as we call it) made them discover the same desire in those they had most feared would object. Friends, cousins, schoolfellows have done the very same thing, over and over.

If you are amongst those who come "by night" to Jesus, are you sure you are not making the same mistake? Even if it is not so, would it not be a far happier thing to tell what Jesus has done for you?

Count it joy to stand beside Him;
Count it joy, though men deride Him.

There is just another thought about the coming "by night." However we may come at first to Jesus, there is still the continual coming to Him of those who have once come; and many of these comings are literally "by night." You, I hope, sleep soundly; but if ever you lie awake in pain, remember Jesus is there. There may be no other at hand, but the ear of Jesus is open. "He giveth songs in the night." To Him you can whisper every need, and every desire for patience or relief. One writer has beautifully said—

He gives his angels charge of those that sleep;
But He Himself watches with those who wake.

Think of that, if you ever lie awake with toothache, or with some unwonted sorrow. "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." As you grow older you will know more of what all this means than you can possibly know now, but you are not too young to learn some lessons of comfort from the history of one who "came to Jesus by night," and was "in no wise cast out." L. A. B.

Hireling Shepherds.

It is so long since I wrote you that perhaps some of you have forgotten my stories about the sheep in the Dauphiny mountains. This time I will tell you something about a boy who should have been a shepherd and who was only a "hireling." You remember the verses in the 10th of John, where the Lord Jesus tells us the difference between the two, do you not? "But he that is a hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not"—and later on "The hireling fleeth because he is a hireling, and careth not for the sheep."

Poor little Charlot had a very kind mistress, and only a very small flock to tend, not a score in all. He had to lead them out in early morning, watch over them on the hillside, which rose steeply close behind the house, bring them in when the sun grew hot, lead them out again in the cool of evening, and bring them home for the night. There were fields of wheat and small vineyards all round, which, of course, were forbidden ground for the sheep; and of course the flock needed continual care in a country where there are no fences.

The misfortune was that Charlot did not care for his sheep. He liked, it seemed to me, all other animals. He would caress and feed dogs, cats, rabbits, fowls, pigs, but he cared nothing about sheep. Sheep are troublesome animals, always ready to stray, and every noon and night the shepherd here counts his sheep. Well, it seemed as if Charlot did not know how to count. One night he and his little flock were coming home when the master's son met them. His quick eye glanced over the flock.

"One of your sheep is missing," he said.

What do you think was the reply of the little hireling? "It's quite likely!"

The sheep were not his own, you see. His master's son made him put the rest of the sheep in safety, and then went in search of the missing one. He knew where the flock had fed that day, high up among the rocks, near the vineyard. He climbed up fast, for darkness was coming on, and there, on the verge of the precipice, he found the lost sheep. She was standing quite still, and looking through the gloom at something far below. Her lamb had fallen, and was lying a tiny white heap at the foot of the rocks, just visible in the dusk. He shouted to Charlot, telling him where to find the poor little creature, so when the mother sheep came down he was there with the lamb in his arms, bruised and bleeding, but still breathing.

It was carried home and laid carefully and tenderly near the fire, and more than once in the night the master himself got up to put a few drops of warm milk in its mouth, and to everyone's astonishment it lived, and was given back to its mother. I saw it weeks afterwards, apparently well, but it will bear all its life the marks of its terrible fall.

I could tell you much about Charlot, how he threw stones at the lambs to save himself the trouble of running after them, how he let the flock go astray while he played with other idle boys, how he fell asleep and did not bring back the flock at nightfall; but you see all this came to pass because "he cared not for the sheep."

Now you know I do not often put a moral at the end of my stories, because when I was a little girl I always skipped the moral at the end of the fables, thinking I could make a moral myself if only someone told me the story. This time I only say that if anyone learns his lessons, or behaves well, or even denies himself in order to give generously to others, only for the sake of the prize or the praise he hopes to win, he is only a hireling after all!

Montelar, France. S. R. Gelderd.

Bible Searcher (No. 63).

☞ Rules published Jan. 7, sent on receipt of penny stamp.

Children under ten do 1, 2, 5, and 6; those under thirteen do 1, 2, 3, and 8, or the first seven. All answers but the last from John's Gospel.

1. Who is mentioned as coming to Jesus by night? What was he?
2. What were our Lord's first words to him?
3. Name two actions showing that afterwards this man grew bolder.
4. Who came with him the second time, and how?
5. How does the Good Shepherd lead his sheep? (ch. x.). Who is the Good Shepherd?
6. What does the Good Shepherd give for the sheep (ch. x.)? Who are the sheep?
7. What happens when the sheep hear the Shepherd's voice? Two verses.
8. From John's First Epistle give six marks of those who are born of God. Quote the fewest possible words.

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 62).

1. Gal. v. 13.	4. Gal. v. 14.	7. Gal. v. 22.
2. „ vi. 2.	5. „ v. 26.	8. „ vi. 14.
3. „ vi. 1.	6. „ iv. 6.

As many of my nephews and nieces have already answered correctly the nine times necessary to enter for the competition, I am going to publish a special "honours list" of those who succeed in doing the whole twelve right. This quarter there are only a dozen Thursdays, so the competition will be set on April 1.

Next week will be Missionary Week, and the Searcher will be from the Scripture Union portions for March.

Lessons from the Life of Abraham.

I have been very pleased with some of the answers to this question in Searcher No. 61, and here I give the best:—

"We learn to trust God and believe what He says, even if we have to wait what seems to us a long while (Gen. xv. 6). We should learn obedience (Gen. xii. 1-4). We should learn to trust God for everything, but Abraham forgot to in Gen. xii. 10 to 13). We should learn to live peaceably (Gen. xiii. 7). We should learn to be unselfish; by right Abraham ought to have chosen (Gen. xiii. 9). We should learn to help others (Gen. xiv. 14 to 16). We should be hospitable to strangers (Gen. xviii. 1 to 8). We should pray for others (Gen. xviii. 23 to 33). We should speak the truth, even if we are afraid of getting into trouble (Gen. xx. 2). We should learn to have faith (Gen. xxii. 1 to 10).—Kate G. Johns (16)."

Personal.

The Starving Children of India.—"A Governess" writes:—"My little pupil, a boy under nine, asked me to read him your page about the starving Indian children. Half an hour afterwards the little one questioned me about them, and I gave him to understand that it is not from our abundance that we ought to give, but the Lord asks us to deny ourselves something we are fond of. A few minutes after the little boy said: 'If I fast, will you fast too?' I answered, 'Yes.' As his sister was present we asked her to join us, which she gladly did, so we had a week of self-denial. Then we thought of asking our friends to help us, and we are glad to say that we got altogether £2." Was that not nice? But the little boy himself writes also:—

"I had a self-denial week in which I had no butter, sugar, oranges, or jam. I hope the children will be able to get 480 penny loaves out of the £2 we send them. I should like to send you a text with the money: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.' I remember the little ones in my prayers; I ask God to bless them and to send them the rain they need so much.—Erny."

Two of my nieces write:—"We have decided to leave off our weekly money (1d. each) for twelve weeks for the Indian famine. We have also made a money-box for that purpose."

There is no fixed date for sending in the money, as it will be needed all the summer, but the sooner the first contributions come in the better.

Dora Colebrook.—If you do more questions than are set for your age, and have the minimum number right, your name will appear in the correct list even if you make a mistake in the extra ones, but you should not do these unless quite sure you have them right. B. Symes.—I am glad to welcome you; you may use a Reference Bible. Matilda Robinson.—There was no mistake about the name. G. Isaac.—The competition paper had better be written in ink. F. J.—The blotters were amongst those acknowledged last week. Many thanks for the dolls. Uncle Ted.

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 54. Maria H. Lister, J. Garrett. No. 55. Daisy McArthur, Charlotte Cane, Bessie and Una Whitehead. No. 57. Edith Meuter. No. 58. D. H. Marshall, Helen and Leslie Gartshore, Jeanie Campbell Scott.

No. 62.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

O. J.* and A.* Akers, J. Alen, V. Annesley*, O., C., and G.* Andrews, M., Wm., and D. Atwinckle, Wm. Aston*, Christine Arnold*, V. Ashworth*, W. J. and H. C. Barefield, D., Elsie, and G.* Bartlett, H. H. Braddon, Janet* and E. B.* Black, Clara Barnes, Ethel Barclay, J., M., and C. Baker, J. and E.* Benger, Nellie, Wm., V., and F. K. Bellerby, E. Bridgewater*, G., M., and D. Bligh, Annie Boniface, Phyllis Boyd, Daisy Bungey, Eleanor and Eric Chance, D. J. Clarke*, Wm. E. Clarke, Jack V., and R. Clarke, Maud Clarke, J. A. Chamberlain, Lottie Carter, M. Cleal*, B. Cheale, Elma Cheal, Wm. and R. Cheesman, Elsie* and Anna* Cowley, Annie, E. M., and M. Cole, R. Coupe*, Lilian Collins, F. and H. Compton, K. and B. Code, Annie Cooper*, Albion Close*, S. and E. Cumbers, Ida* and Madge Cullen, Carrie Dawe, M. Dalzell, R. and D.* Daintree, Ellen Drake, Margaret Davison, May Dring, Vera Dickinson, K., V., and C. Donaldson-Selby, N. and W. Dowsett, Gracie* and K.* Dodington, Stanley Douglas-Jones, S.* and L.* Ellacott, W.* and E.* Edmonds, B., K., Maggie, and Mabel Fletcher, Tilly Feuchter, M. Fooks, V. Fulcher, C. Gabbett*, L. Gardner, Christine Goodman, Daisy Groves, S. Godfrey*, N. and R.* Hatchett, Jack Harris*, D.* and E.* Hewer, Gladys Isaac*, Lexie Jack, Annie and Edith Jepson, Robt. and Frank Jones, A. B. Jones, Agnes Jones, Elsie Johnson, N. and K. G. Johns, E. and L. Kells, Flora King*, Annie Lawrence, M. and S. Law, L. Ladd, May Lewis, E. and K. Light, Geo. and Ch. Macdonald, Hilda Matheson, J.* and Alan Marples, J. H. Mather, Grace* and Margie* Marston, E. and M. McCallum, Winnie Millar, Dorothy Morrison, Lewis Morice,* Ernest and Edie Nash, A. and M. Nottage, T. M., Oldham, A. Onslow*, H. Haden Palmer, Ethel* and K. A.* Pasley, A. M. Palmer*, D. Parkes, Ch. Parkin, Ethel and Gladys Palmer, M. Reeves Palmer, E. Peters, D., A., and K. Penny, Myrtle Perry, Katie Pell, W. M., Mary*, and Louie Penny, J. Ernest Pearce*, W. C. Perryman*, D. Phillips*, Geo. Powell*, L., M., and J.* Pook, M. E. Plumb, Hilda Rawson*, M.* and Robt.* Richards, Florence Roden* Jeanie Robertson, Cecil*, O., and S. Robertson, M. Smart, C. and H. Schaeffer, Edith Saunderson, Kathleen Shackleton*, Arthur Sanders, B. H. Spencer, B. Stevenson, A. M. Sterry, H. Russell Smith*, Florrie Smith*, N. Skinner, F. Simmons, L. and K. Sofian, J. Snowball, M., G. E.* and C.* Scott, Betty Stocks*, E. and R. Studd, M. L. Symon, Hugh and Muriel Taylor, A. Taylor, F. Taggart, A. Tawse, A. M., M. M., and Winifred Thomson, H. M. Toller, M. Tongue, M. and E. Tyson, G. Vellacott, D.* and M.* Vickers, W. Wheeler, Phillis*, N., and Cecile Wright, Pringle Wilson*, R. H.* and W. F. Williams, Hy. and Q. Williams, Helen, E., G., and L. G. Willoughby, Ethel Williamson, Maggie Woods, L.* and A.* Woodman, Wynnie Wylson.

For No. 61, second list, see p. 22.

Donation List.

Mrs. Bruere's Work, Poona.—E. J., £3 6s. 8d.; 2,431, 2s.; H. D., 10s.; Collection, Muirton Church, N.B., per Rev. W. A. M., £3 11s. 3d.; Gravesend Christian Endeavour, £6 13s. 4d.; R. B. C., 5s.; St. Leonard's Y.W.C.A., £3 6s. 8d.; Mrs. H., £3 6s. 8d.; E. A. B., £3 6s. 8d.; Collected, G. S., £3 6s. 8d.; E. C., £1; Miss A., £3 6s. 8d.: E. M. K., £1; Mrs. H. H., 3s. 6d., Mrs. J. M. L., £5 5s.; Mrs. McC. and Children, £3 6s. 8d. Total, £41 16s. 9d. To March 16 £306 7s. 8d.

Indian Famine.—Erny and Friends, £2; Eva M., 3s.; Children, per S. K. S., 7s.; Children, Millport, 13s.; Mrs. L.'s Children, 3s. 6d.; Collected, A. E. C., 2s.; per H. G., 2s. 6d.; B. M., G. M., and W. C., 3s.; Collection, per Mrs. S., £1. Total, £4 14s. To March 16, £10 7s.

Ragged School Union, Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—R. and C. B., 5s.; Alice, 6d.; E. G. and J. W., 2s. 6d.; G. O'B., 2s. 6d.; D. M., 1s.; C. and A. B., 4s.; B. D., 2s. Total, 17s. 6d. To March 16, £1 0s. 6d.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S.	Mark	vii. 1-13.	Th.	Mark	viii. 14-26.
M.	„	vii. 14-23.	F.	„	viii. 27-38.
Tu.	„	vii. 24-37.	Sat.	„	ix. 1-13.
W.	„	viii. 1-13.

Membership cards sent on receipt of penny stamp.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham and neighbourhood, to March 31. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Edinboro' Castle Mission School, Copperfield-road, Bow, March 19. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Stowmarket, March 20 to April 5. Mr. George Goodman, Leyton, March 20-28; Plashet Park, April 3-11. Mr. R. Callender, Bickley, April 7; Underriner, Sevenoaks, April 9. Mr. Hankinson, Maindee, Newport, April 24—May 3. Mr. W. L. Seyler, All Saints' Hall, Caledonian-road, April 9.

Free Church Council.

In connection with the meetings of the Free Church Council held last week in London, a feature of special interest was a gathering of women on Tuesday afternoon, March 9. The first paper described women's work in the Moravian Church, and was by Mrs. Hasse. The story was tender and touching. Mrs. Hassé showed that the Moravian Church is one great missionary society; one out of every sixty members becomes a missionary. She quoted a remarkable instance where one church, numbering 460 souls, had twenty-two sons and daughters in the mission field. The happy result of this devotion is that the converts abroad are three times as numerous as the members at home. The first woman to go out as a Moravian missionary was a German mother, whose son had already laboured in Greenland. There this devoted woman toiled for forty-one years, and her family and descendants have put in 257 years in the mission field. To this day they form an unbroken link with the first woman to enter the foreign work. The paper closed with a striking description of the Moravian Leper Home at Jerusalem.

The second address was by Mrs. Rendel Harris, and related to the subject of Armenia. From March to November of 1896, Professor and Mrs. Rendel Harris distributing relief and cheering the persecuted and scattered Christians. They thus obtained an acquaintance with the missionary work carried on, principally by the American Churches. Mrs. Harris paid a tribute to the heroism and faith of the Armenian Christians when they were brought face to face with death. They had absolutely no fear, for, as one expressed it, "it would be so beautiful to gather on the other side." The outcome of all this is that a great revival of religion is now spreading through Armenia. The churches are crowded for the early morning prayer-meetings, and the prospects of missionary work were never brighter. At the close of this address, the president (Dr. Monro Gibson) called for a few words from Professor Rendel Harris, who raised the enthusiasm of the audience by saying that the hymn in which they had joined ("Jesus shall reign") must not now be sung in Turkey; but yet, he added, we shall yet sing it over the ruins of the Turkish Empire!

TRAVELLED THROUGHOUT ARMENIA,

Before the proceedings closed, Rev. C. H. Kelly moved a resolution protesting against the proposals to re-enforce the Contagious Diseases Acts. He made a strong yet dignified protest against the iniquitous proposal, and appealed to women to protect their own daughters and sisters. The resolution was seconded by Rev. J. P. Gledstone and carried unanimously.

In the evening Dr. Parker preached a powerful sermon from Jer. xviii. 14. "Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?" In conclusion he said: Never let us break with the past. One of the finest things I ever heard occurred in Scotland. It was a poor old Jew of the unmistakable face who came begging to a house where I was lodging. A poor man saw the Jew, recognised the face, and with a gentleman's nobility took off his broad bonnet, held it in the air, looked at the Jew, and said, "This is he to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God and the promises." His beggarliness could not hide his descent. His poverty could not conceal his ancestral dignity. And we are poor men; and when the people see us do they uncover the head and say, Whose are the great Reforming Fathers, whose are the great thinkers and leaders, the Miltons and the Howes and the Bunyans and the Wesleys and the Baxters? Are we connected with anybody, or are we living little, miserable, isolated, selfish lives? When we stand up a host stands up with us, for our fathers are dead indeed if they don't live in us. You are not yourself, and when you insult the old truths you insult the old friends. My call is to you to leave off selfishness, narrowness, little misinterpreted individualism, and so to live the big social life that you will be the bigger individual for doing it. Our strength is little enough and frail enough, but if God be for us, our poverty shall be wealth, our weakness shall be strength, and in the darkest night we shall see the brightest star.

WEDNESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS

opened with a sermon by Dr. C. A. Berry, based on the words, "Thy kingdom come" (Matt. vi. 10). How was the coming of the kingdom to be hastened? He could not fully answer. It had always been coming—in every age; through Moses and Christ; at Pentecost; at Antioch; at Geneva; at Worms; at Plymouth Rock; and so on. The conditions were that God's truth should be clearly perceived and faithfully preached. So had the kingdom always come; so it would come. The Cross had a message for every age. The world yearned for Christ, the one hope of man, the one Saviour of the world. Christ began by self-consecration. So must we. The method of the Master must be the method of the disciple. In this hurrying age preachers ought to be more alone with God.

In the session that followed, evangelistic work was discussed, the subject being opened by Rev. T. Waugh, the Wesleyan missioner. There ought, he said, to be unity between the pastor and the evangelist. It was for some to sow and some to reap, and for some to take care of the harvest. All men should not be equipped to do the same kind of work. Evangelism would save us from pessimism. Evangelism would

KEEP OUR THEOLOGY RIGHT.

He understood it was difficult to keep a husband and wife from quarrelling if they hadn't any children. It took a very great deal to keep a Church right if they hadn't spiritual babies to look after. If they had, they had hardly any time to get wrong, and hardly any time to keep badgering those whom they thought had gone wrong.

Turning to the subject of keeping our cultured young people, Mr. Waugh said some advocated amusements as the method. "I'm an old farmer, and I know the best tether for straying cattle is a good pasture." Lead the young people to Jesus. Apostolic work is the surest evidence of Apostolic succession. Only the saving churches are worth saving.

Rev. F. C. Spurr read a forcible paper on "The Science of Evangelistic Work." On special missions he maintained—(1) As to fitness—They ought to be arranged, not by a handful, but by the whole church. A mission should never be forced on an unwilling church. (2) As to duration—Four or five days was of little use; a mission ought to last fifteen days. (3) As to preaching—There ought not to be a fresh preacher every night, but one man only. (4) As to which was most delicate work—he recommended the plan of a well-known missioner. When giving out the notices, he announced an after-meeting, and that no person would be spoken to in his seat. This secured the remaining of almost the whole congregation. Inquirers were invited to remain or to visit the missioner in private on some week-day. Papers were passed round containing a simple pledge; they were asked to sign them and drop them into a box, or post them to the minister. The pledge was as follows: "I desire to live the Christian life, and to become a member of the Church of Christ." (5) The science of preparation—Church and neighbourhood alike needed preparation.

DEALING WITH INDIVIDUAL SOULS,

Lay preaching and elementary education (with special reference to the Bill now before Parliament) were then considered. In the evening a crowded meeting was held at the City Temple, Sir George Bruce presiding, when addresses on the state of London and its claims were given by Revs. J. Flanagan, Hugh Price Hughes, and others.

ON THURSDAY MORNING

Rev. Dr. Barrett preached a powerful sermon on the importance and beneficence of faith in this age of storm and strife. His text was 1 John v. 10. At the session which followed, the president, Dr. Monro Gibson, read a letter from Mr. George Cadbury on the subject of the subdivision of towns into parishes, so as to facilitate the work of the Free Churches. He said:—"To show my full belief in this method I am prepared during the next twelve months to pay £5 towards the cost of a parish map in any town or district containing at least fifteen churches. This, from our experience in several places, will fully cover half the cost, and would apply to England, Scotland, and Wales, such application to be made direct to me."

SUNDAY SCHOOL REFORM.

Mr. F. F. Belsey read a thoughtful paper on this subject. After remarking upon the growing interest in the work, and pointing with satisfaction to the fact that a higher estimate is now being placed upon the importance of a discharge of the Church's duty to the young, he set forth four attributes which he regarded as essential for the Sunday-school teacher—first, the presence and power of the Holy Spirit; secondly, a loving interest in the individual scholar; thirdly, a thorough knowledge of the subject to be taught; and fourthly, a practical acquaintance with the best methods of teaching. Among the six hundred thousand teachers (at least one-half of them associated with the Free Churches), there is room for reform under all these heads, so that the work may be more efficient. After considering these points in detail, the speaker looked forward to the day when a professor of Sunday-school methods would have a place in the colleges, so that the pastors might be qualified and trained to promote work among the young, not only indirectly, but in the conduct of preparation classes. As the pastor makes the church, so the superintendent makes the school; therefore the best man available should be chosen for such a responsible office.

Mr. Robert White dwelt upon the disadvantages of the present system of a number of classes being conducted in one large room. His watchword was—"one class, one room"; in such circumstances discipline is possible, fewer teachers are required, and better workers may be secured and retained. Other speakers appealed for more encouragement in the work; urged Christians from the towns to visit the villages in some such manner as local preachers do; objected to underground Sunday schools—down in "the cellar"; and maintained that there should be in the school a speaking teacher, a singing teacher, and an order teacher. Preparatory classes were strongly commended; and it was regretted that while hard-worked labourers and artisans take up Sunday-school work, the well-to-do and educated Christians too generally hold aloof, and thin from a class of work which yields more than any other institution to church life and membership.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR MOVEMENT.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin read a paper on Christian Endeavour. He characterized the present as the age of youth and hope. Having held that the C. E. Society has for its object the increased efficiency of the Church of God, Mr. Chaplin claimed for it the warm interest of pastors and teachers. The Society is doing more than any other organisation of the Church to lift anxiety from the shoulders of earnest pastors. Having described and defended the principles and pledge of the Society, the speaker enlarged upon its influence in disciplining and training young Christians, and leading them out in work for Christ. Up to the present time fourteen thousand societies have been formed, and five million members enrolled, not to reckon societies that are Endeavour in all things but name. In conclusion, Mr. Chaplin pointed out that dying and dead churches have been revived by the movement, for God is in it. In the course of discussion, it was maintained that the societies should be used in the effort of instilling into the minds of the young sound views on Protestant and other distinctive topics.

Professor Massie, of Oxford, read a paper on "Secondary Education," which gave rise to vigorous discussion. In the course of some business arrangements, it was resolved that the Council should meet at Bristol next year, and Dr. Clifford was elected as president.

Evangelistic Notes.

A fifteen days' Gospel mission, by Mr. Arthur Mead, of the Evangelisation Society, has been held at the Evangelical Mission Church, Ilford.

An interesting series of Gospel meetings in Loch-end Free Church, Campbeltown, extending over a fortnight, was closed on Friday week. The pastor of the congregation, Rev. John McQueen, was assisted by Rev. John Carson, who was for many years town missionary, and after a seven years' absence in Australia had returned to his native land. The attendance was well sustained during the two weeks of the mission, and many spoke cordially of the blessing they had received. The Gospel was presented in a manner at once interesting, forcible, and tender. Many Christians from all the congregations in town joined in prayer for a blessing both before and after each meeting, and a time of much refreshing was experienced.

Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission in the Wesleyan Chapel, Wix, Essex. Most earnest, searching addresses were delivered to attentive hearers, and believers have been quickened, and souls saved. Many who were led to the Saviour on Mr. Harris's former visits are now earnest workers in the Master's vineyard. A. S.

Mr. Thos. Payne has recently conducted missions at Whitemoor and St. Dennis, Cornwall. The Lord has given much blessing, both to Christians and the unsaved.

Great blessing has been granted during a week's mission held by Mr. Henry Lakin. In one instance a whole class of young people have come out to Christ, and older ones have also decided. The Word has been faithfully and powerfully preached. Not only have we had sinners converted, but God's own people have been greatly blessed and helped.
New Brighton. W. Hobson.

Mr. and Mrs. Corsie, of Campbeltown, have been labouring in different parts of the Island of Arran for the past five or six months. They have had missions at Lamlash, Whiting Bay, Corrie, and Kildonan with many tokens of the Divine blessing.

A thanksgiving meeting for thirty-five years' work in the villages of Bucks and adjoining counties, will be held on Monday, April 12, in the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, London. At the same time there will be a conference on village work. The Lord has been blessing Gospel meetings held all this winter in various parts of the county to the salvation of souls. The meetings continue daily till April; for these praise and prayer are asked.
J. E. Taylor.

An eight days' mission, by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Reading, was concluded on Sunday, March 7. Meetings for men only were held throughout the week in the Abbey Hall. On the Wednesday afternoon an invitation meeting for clerks, shop assistants, and others was held, and large numbers responded. The attendances at the men's meetings were most encouraging, although inclement weather was prevalent throughout. It was felt by all that an extension of the mission would have been most desirable. The cordial co-operation of the Evangelical churches of all denominations was a happy feature of the special effort.

Great crowds have recently been listening to the earnest addresses of Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea in the Windsor Theatre, Brooklyn. The Holy Spirit has endorsed the messages, and many families have been reached. The audiences have been composed of the working classes.

Rev. Edward P. Hammond preached in the First Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, on February 14, and at three services the church was crowded. The pastor, Dr. C. L. Work, stated that it was well known to be a fact that upwards of 5000 were examined by pastors and admitted as a result of God's blessing on Mr. Hammond's meetings in Cincinnati twenty-six years ago. Mr. Hammond met many old friends at the First Church who were with him years ago. They recalled the great blessing granted at that time, the good influences of which remain to this day.

Mr. Henry Thorne has concluded a ten-days' mission at the Presbyterian Church, Bermondsey. The Bible readings were well attended and were a channel of quickening to believers. At the Gospel meeting every night inquirers found their way to the inquiry-room.

Mr. Newton Jones conducted a mission from March 6 to 11 in connection with the Derby Sunday School Union. Much spiritual blessing attended the effort. A good number of children and others went into the inquiry-rooms for help and advice; a real desire to decide for Christ was shown by many.

A Rich Man's Prayer.

Lord, Thou art good and doest good,
Of countless gifts the Giver;
And none have greater cause than I
To praise thy name for ever.
But, Lord, Thou claimest deeds, not words,
Thou bidst us love our brother,
And show our grateful love to Thee
By loving one another.

Then, Lord, if any love of mine
Can make a life the brighter;
If any little help of mine
Can make a heart the lighter;
If any gift of mine may ease
The burden of another,
God, give me love, and care, and heart
To help a toiling brother.

If any hoarded gold of mine
Can help a fellow creature;
Can to the body send relief,
Or to the soul a teacher;
Lord, help me make the sacrifice,
And I shall be the better;
And, while my brother reaps the good,
Thou mak'st thyself my debtor.

The heathen perish day by day,
In sin and darkness dying;
And yet are longing for the light,
So piteously crying.
For them make me a faithful steward
Of thine entrusted treasure;
And may I hold my wealth for Thee,
To use it at thy pleasure!

My life is ebbing fast away,
My earthly days are numbered;
Forbid it, Lord, that I should die
With guilty wealth encumbered.
May I have grace to use my gold
For Thee while I am living,
And thus enjoy, while here on earth,
The perfect bliss of giving!

J. O. J.

Progress of Uganda.—Mr. Berkeley, her Majesty's Commissioner in Uganda, has arrived at Zanzibar from Mengo on his way to England on leave of absence. In reply to inquiries Mr. Berkeley stated that he left the Uganda Protectorate in a very satisfactory state, and the general position of affairs throughout the territories under British protection was peaceful. The trade and the administration of the country were making good progress, and the various experiments made in cultivation had shown promising results. The individual liberty of the natives was well assured, and any attempts to revive the slave trade were closely watched and promptly repressed.

International Arbitration. — The annual meeting of the members of the International League was held at the Holborn Town Hall last week. A resolution was adopted hailing with satisfaction the Anglo-American Treaty of Arbitration, and the proposal which it contains for the establishment of judicial tribunals for the peaceful adjustment of difficulties which may arise. A second resolution was passed protesting against any further increase of the British Army, seeing that the European Powers with the enormous military and naval forces at their disposal had failed to prevent the crimes and wholesale massacres in Armenia, and stating that an increase of armaments in one country was invariably followed by a corresponding or still greater increase in others.

Mr. Moody in Boston.

In summing up the special Mission, extending over eight weeks, held by Mr. Moody in the City of Boston, The Congregationalist says:—

"It is not easy to estimate the results of Mr. Moody's meetings in Boston. That the city is better for his being here two months, that many Christians have been quickened, backsliders restored and outsiders brought into the kingdom can hardly be questioned. At the same time, bearing in mind the special object of the campaign, the awakening of the churches, we cannot, as yet, speak with unreserved enthusiasm. Undoubtedly he has reached a certain class within the churches, perhaps the class whose emotions least need to be aroused; but whether his influence has permeated the rank and file of church membership, and determined methods and policies of activity, we are not yet able to say. We wonder, for instance, how many of the pastors, deacons, and other officers in our ninety-eight churches in metropolitan Boston have attended as many as six of the Tremont Temple gatherings. The meetings have stimulated at least a few churches to special services, and no doubt in not a few prayer-meetings and Sunday-schools the impulse which individuals have received at Tremont Temple has been transmitted to others.

"We would add our hearty commendation of Mr. Murphy's meetings, which have also closed. It has been good to see him and Mr. Moody working together so heartily. The great temperance apostle has certainly been wonderfully successful in reaching the outcast and degraded victims of strong drink. His Faneuil Hall noonday gatherings have been remarkably impressive, and his work at Berkeley Temple and Park-street Church not less noteworthy."

Mr. Moody is now at work in Cincinnati. With reference to New York, a contemporary there says: "It is interesting to know that in response to a request from Mr. Moody that those who had been saved during his work in New York about twenty years ago would send him word to that effect, over nineteen hundred responded and testified to the permanent blessing that followed the evangelist's former labours in this city."

Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel

This useful Institute for the lads of East London was reopened, after being closed for some time, on Tuesday last week, under the superintendence of Rev. Thomas Jackson, of the Clapton Mission. The work among East-end lads will be conducted as heretofore, on distinctly Christian but undenominational lines, and will embrace the spiritual, educational, social, and recreative aspects of boy life. The debt taken over is £8000, and a further sum of £1000 has had to be expended in repairs, renovation, and refurnishing.

Mr. Henry Hill, the founder of the Institute, presided at the opening meetings, which were crowded and enthusiastic. He stated that it was a most remarkable coincidence that the Working Lads' Institute was originated through a letter of his which appeared in The Christian some twenty years ago, and that recently when it appeared that the sale of the Institute was imminent, and there seemed little hope but that it might soon be turned into a music-hall or a theatre, a second letter of his to The Christian should have caught the eye of Mr. Jackson, and resulted in the rescue of the Institute, and its becoming the property of those who would carry on the work for which it was erected.

Rev. Thomas Jackson reported that arrangements were made for weekly evangelistic services, a Sunday-school, and Gospel temperance work, the lads' reading-room, gymnasium, and evening class, and he purposed devoting the whole of his time and energy to the work of making the Institute a centre of manifold ministries for the social and spiritual good of the people of Whitechapel and district. Mr. George Nokes had consented to take a prominent part in the evangelistic work, and he hoped to retain the sympathy and support of all friends of the Institute.

Christian Evidence.—A series of Christian evidence lectures has been delivered at the New Hall, Winson Green, Birmingham. The lectures have been highly appreciated. Gospel addresses were also delivered by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, on Sundays, March 7 and 14.

Light in a Dark Place.

MRS. AITCHISON, of the Ikwezi Lamaci Mission (Harding, Alfred county, Natal), reviewing the work of recent years in that part of South Africa, writes:—

"We have seven schools; some are only small 'lights' in the dark places, but we praise God that we have been enabled to set these lights going. From time to time little bands of natives have embraced Christianity, and being scattered throughout the district these have lived their new life to some purpose amongst the others, and the influence has been spreading.

"For some little time we have had a blind native evangelist on a visit, and it is wonderful how people came from far and near to listen to his preaching. Both here and in the out branches many have accepted the risen Saviour. There are so many now, that I do not like to mention the number. Johannes will remain with us some time yet, and we pray for even greater evidences of the Lord's drawing men unto Himself through his teaching.

"The converts are making progress by leaps and bounds into civilization. True Christianity always does open the windows of the mind—sharpening the intellect and bringing its own refining influence to bear upon its subjects. We have opened fresh sewing and reading classes for these new converts, for they have to begin at the very beginning, and of all things we are anxious they should try and read the Bible. I still keep up the old custom of giving a copy to all, old or young, as soon as they have learned to read the Bible. It is a grand thing to circulate the Word thus.

"I have often expressed a wish to have a boarding school on a large scale for the girls, so as to have the daily opportunity of training them, to develop the great civilizing influence they have in their own hands for the future of this race. My opinion is firmly rooted, that it is the 'mothers' of all nations who have the power for good or evil! This wish is about to become a reality, for a lady friend has sent out a gift sufficient to make a substantial beginning in the enterprise. We can gather the building materials and commence the foundations as soon as our present wet season is past. No greater material work can be done in heathendom than gathering the youth of the land and developing their faculties, and when Christian training is the propeller, what greater work in the world?

"In temporal matters our land is undergoing great depression. The scarcity of grain for the natives is terrible. The locusts still swarm around, and the rinderpest threatens daily to cross our borders. As a people, we need the prayers of all God's believing ones, for his hand alone can stay these plagues, and give the needed food, and all the praise and glory shall be given to Him."

The Bible Searcher.

(Continued from page 19.)

No. 61.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

C. Arnold*, D. G. Arbuthnot, C.* and G. Andrews, O. J. and Arnold Akers, V. Annesley, L. Athole, E., D., and A. Allen, N. and F. Ames, Gracie Barnes*, M. B. Baker, L., T., and R. Blackie, J. C. Bell, E. Beauchamp, L. G.* and S.* Boxer, A. H. Bowker, G. Brand, E. B.* and J. E.* Black, M. Barton, M. Ballingal*, A. and C. Bazett, G. Bonlana, D. A. Bennie, L. Berthé*, R. Bourne*, G. and N. Brookfield, Rhoda Bentley, H. and L. Berry, M.* and G. Bligh, Maggie*, Mary*, and Wm.* Charles, V. I. Chamberlin, Jack and Rosalind Clarke, C. M. and D'Arcy Chapman, Walter Carter, Lottie Carter, M. Collins*, M. E. Clarke*, A. Cooper, Millicent Craven, Lionel and Gladys Calvert, Wm. Christie, Arthur Cole, A. and E.* Cowley, Nina Coote, K.* and O.* Cross, M. T. Colville, S. Cumbers, Wm. Clarke, D. Colebrook. E. Church, J. Coppard, L. Collins, H., Ar., Annie, and N.* Couch, L. Coles, C. Dawe, E. Drake, A. Dougall, E. and R. Dunn, C. and Wm. Devenish-Meares, C. K. and E. A.* Dodd, G. S. Duncan, H. S. and K. Dunbar, D. and M. Dyke, Lilian Fidler*, F. Field. M. and J. Freegard, E., R., and W.* Findlay, Wm. Furmage, E.* and H. Fowler, M. and A. H. Greenacre, Eva Gray, M. Giddings*, E. Grieve, C. and M. Godfrey, D. Groves, E. C. Graham, C. and D. Goodwin, N.* and R. Hazchett, W. Harvey, V. Henry, D. C. Hersey, V. Holford, Francie and Florence Hoyte, N. Horsford, Ch., Mena, and E. L. Hunter, Helen, M. V., Tom, and Harcourt Hunter, M. Hassé, A. Hazledine, Edith Hearn, Theo. Hill, J. B. Horlock, M. and J. Hogg, T. and R. Harrison, Ethel and Eva Hutchings, L., C., and E. Herivel, M. R. Hogge, J.* Harris, E. Johnson*, D. Judd*, L. and A. Jacob, S. and M. Jackson, K. G. Johns, Isa. T., Alex., Agnes*, and W.* Kay, Frances Keable, J. E., T. A., and Hubert Kirkpatrick, R. and H. Keable, A. C. and Rebe King, G. Ringerlee, S. and W. Keen, L. Ladd, G. and E. Leigh, K. and E. Light, Doke Lewis, W. Macfie, B., Thos., A., and N. Mack, Ivy Maunsell, W. M. Mitchell*, M. Menzies, D. and M. A. Morris, Ezra Matthews, Margery Matthews, S. E. Mackintosh*, Hy. Millar, Ethel Morgan, D. Morrison, J. L. Munce, Don Muir, E. and M. Maitland-Kirwan, D. and T. Mackenzie, T. D. Macgregor, N. Meade, E. and A. Moir, L. Macaulay, C. McKenzie, M. Macphee, F. E. Mann, E. Monti, O. Mayor, H. Medill, D. Nathan*, Amy and Maude Nottage, B. Norcock, L.* and Harriette* Orr, M. N. Oakes, E. L. Oakes, Geo. O'Beirne, W. Page*, G. Partridge, Mary Palmer, K. A.* and Ethel* Pasley, D. Payne, L. and N. Peachey, Isabel* and G. M.* Phipps, D. Piper, E. V. Proctor, J., M., and L. Pook, D. Parkes, Mary. W. M., and Louie Penny, F. S. Phillips, N. and D. and V. and M. Petrides, A., M., J., and W. Palmer, N. Parker, Frances Rawle, Matilda Robinson, D. and A. B. Ramsay, Ed. Rainey, Eileen and Theo. Roberts. C. and A. Rouse. T. and J. Deane Roe, Gordon and and Gr. and E. Reeve, P. R. Robinson, R. Shackleton, A. Sterry, C. Saunders, W. Stangoe, D. Salt, T., J., and D. D. Steiner, Muriel and Dorothy Shaw, D. Sharp, M. Seddall, Emily Stuart*, B. Scantlebury, Florric Smith, Maggie Smith, T. Simms, B. Symes*, E. B., D., and H. E.* Stalker, G. Tincey*, R. H. Theobald, John W.* and Janet* Thomson, Frank Tomkins, L. Turnbull, Frank Thompson, M. Tongue, S. Thomas, T. Toop E. Taylor*, L. Tibbits*, N. Walker, E. Wheadon, E. H. Wood, H., L., G., and E. Willoughby, J. G. West, J. and H. Williamson, P. Wilson, M. and R. Watson, M. Walton, J. W. and G. Welbank, E. M. White, Harold Wodson, Dorothy, Elsie, Cicely, and Marjorie Washington, W. Wheeler, Herbert, Harry, and Arthur Wright, L. Youlden, E. and C. Yerbury.

Letter to the Editor.

THE QUEEN'S REIGN.

DEAR SIR,—I was delighted to see by this morning's paper that the Royal Niger Company had determined, by way of celebrating the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, to abolish slavery on the Niger.

It was only yesterday that I was talking with a missionary who has just come back from the Niger, and he tells me that the Hamburg gin is the most valuable currency there. The Niger Company trade with it at their factories, at any rate up as far as Oritsha, and it is found at present to be the most convenient form of money.

A bottle of this stuff is worth about a shilling, but with it you can generally obtain goods for which you would otherwise have to give calico or beads, etc., to the amount of eighteen-pence. The missionary told me that the company were thinking of introducing the English currency. Why has it not been done long ago? How much more convenient it would be for all concerned, and what an amount of sin and misery would be stopped! It would be of untold blessing to all concerned if it could be done at once.

Nothing surely could be calculated to give more pleasure to the Queen, and certainly no occasion for the change could be more auspicious than the present. What a splendid way, too, of celebrating this year it would be if England would renounce the opium trade. Christians deplore it as iniquitous, governments even can speak of it as "objectionable." Oh, that we were wise and would break off our iniquities! Then would our God bless us and our land would yield her increase. A rich ingathering of souls in India would doubtless be the result, attended with such outward prosperity as the land has never yet seen.—Yours faithfully,

March 11. F. E. MIDDLETON.

Scottish Notes.

A GLASGOW branch of the Waldensian Mission has been formed, and at a recent meeting its claims were strongly urged.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, is delivering the Duff Lectures in Edinburgh, the special topic being "The Expansion of Christian Life and Thought, with Reference to Christian Missions."

A writer in the N.B. Daily Mail gives a pathetic account of the condition of many message boys and girls in Glasgow. He declares them to be overloaded, underpaid, and morally neglected.

At the recent anniversary of the Glasgow City Mission, it was reported that thirty-four missionaries are employed in visitation among the poor, in holding Gospel services, and in distributing Christian literature. Many are induced to attend church through the visits of the mission agents.

The Missionary Training Institute of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Free Church of Scotland is being transferred from 31, George-square to 16, Atholl-crescent, Edinburgh. It was established to test and train young ladies who desire to be missionaries abroad. Its superintendent is Miss A. H. Small, formerly of Poona. The course extends over two years, and includes class studies in Scripture, lectures on Old and New Testament introduction, apologetics, Christian doctrine, evangelistic theology, Christian missions, etc. Provision is made for the teaching of Indian languages, singing, ambulance work, etc. Practical training if also given in home mission work under experienced guidance. The summer term will begin on April 17. Intending candidates are requested to send in their names to Rev. William Stevenson, Secretary, Free Church Offices, Edinburgh.

Irish Notes.

AN organisation, to be called the "Church Association of Ireland," has been formed in Belfast for the purpose of opposing the spread of Ritualism.

The Baptist Union Home Mission has given aid in Ireland during the past year to eighty-eight churches, which but for such aid could scarcely have existed.

A convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life has been held in Stephen's Green Methodist Church, Dublin. The speakers included Revs. Geo. Grubb, C. G. Moore, Wm. Gorman, and Thos. Cook. A very gracious spirit pervaded all the sessions of the convention.

A letter has been received from Rev. T. C. Fulton, Irish Presbyterian Missionary at Moukden, Manchuria, in which he says he has had the great joy of receiving into the church by baptism 208, of whom 151 were men. During the last ten years a remarkable set towards Christianity has been in existence in that country.

University Notes.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

OXFORD.

THE annual meetings in connection with the Church Army Labour Home have been held. This branch, largely owing to its energetic friends and its excellent captain, is doing a very useful work.

Missionary interest is growing. The average attendance at the Tuesday evening meetings for University men has this Term been over seventy, besides which there are missionary bands formed for the study of missions.

The first of the Bampton Lectures attracted a large congregation. Rev. R. L. Ottley is the lecturer. His subject, "The Old Testament," is a very appropriate one just now.

Christian Endeavour.

ENDEAVOUR evangelistic work among Pennsylvania young people has been systematically undertaken. The State superintendent reports that more than a dozen county superintendents, whose work is to stimulate societies to soul-winning efforts, in co-operation with the pastors.

It seems as if one cannot go anywhere in all the world these days without meeting Endeavourers. While Dr. Clark was crossing the Red Sea he found no less than ten Endeavourers aboard the ship, and on the Sunday evening of the voyage a delightful Endeavour prayer-meeting was held.

The National Council of the Society of Christian Endeavour has been in session in Ipswich, when the arrangements for the great Convention at Whitsuntide, in Liverpool, were under consideration. It was reported that during the past year no less than 1019 new societies were registered in this country, of which 216 were junior.

The C.E. Society in the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church of Cleveland reports more than 500 dols. given for missions last year, more than 5000 books and periodicals distributed, 700 visits made, seventeen cottage prayer meetings held, an ice-water fountain maintained on a city street, and two members sent abroad as foreign missionaries. "Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God" is the Society's motto.

Gathered Gold.

ROME asks for uniformity: Christ asked for unity. Nature and grace promise unity, never uniformity.—Canon Taylor Smith.

DIVINE LEADING.

"When thou passest through the waters." It is ever a passing through; God does not leave his children in the waters of affliction. He is steadily leading them through, and in his own time will bring them out on the other side.—B. W.

FELLOWSHIP WITH CHRIST.

Nothing so deepens communion of souls with those we love as fellowship in suffering. Hence Paul's wonderful desire to know Christ "in the fellowship of his sufferings." Mark the s, for Christ's "sufferings" were many and varied; so will ours be too, if we desire to have fellowship with Him.—B. W.

LIFE'S DISCIPLINE.

It has been remarked that the whole world is God's threshing floor, but may we not also think of it as our great Zarephath (place for smelting metals) where the gold of the Sanctuary is tried by many a flame of varied discipline; and through whose scorching furnace, each "chosen vessel" must pass, ere it is brought forth in the chaste beauty of the Master's likeness, to be used for his glory?—B. W.

Dock Labourers' Mission.

THE thirty-fourth annual report of this Mission tells of continued work amongst the dock labourers and their families. During the past year there has been much sickness amongst the poor, produced through want and exposure. As far as funds permitted help was given. Many of the poorest children have had a fortnight's change at the small country home. About 40,000 free meals have been given this year in the neighbourhood of the Docks, in addition to which much house-to-house visitation has been carried on, which has brought the workers into touch with the poor in their suffering. The Mission services have been blessed to many—amongst these a gatekeeper who has come out boldly for Christ. There seems to be growing need for the work among the casuals and other poor labourers. The secretary is Mr. C. H. Coleman, 150, Boleyn-road, West Ham

The Y.M.C.A.

The Winnipeg Association (Manitoba) reports growing work, increasing numbers, and many indications of blessing.

The Bishop of London has accepted office as vice-president of the English National Union of Young Men's Christian Associations.

A Y.M.C.A. has been formed in Bagdad by Rev. J. T. Parfit, of the Church Missionary Society. The report is to hand of a small but successful Association carried on at the C.M.S. station in Julfa, Ispahan, Persia.

The secretary at Oxford understands the use of printer's ink. He has issued an attractively got-up booklet entitled "Oxford and Her Young Men," and giving a readable narrative of the work now going on in the University city on the Isis.

A well-attended meeting of the Lincoln Y.M.C.A. was held on the 9th inst. to welcome Mr. W. T. Fall, the newly appointed secretary. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. J. Watney and F. A. Jackson, and a display by members of the Gymnasium followed.

The report of the Sydney Association shows a wide range of activity in the way of evangelistic effort, Bible classes, work among sailors, in the hospitals, and personal effort for young men and lads. The spiritual, physical, and educational operations are well sustained and productive of good.

On March 9 Rev. E. J. Kennedy, vicar of St. James's, Hatcham, delivered an address to a large mass meeting of men, arranged by the Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A., on the subject of "Gambling." He was followed by Rev. F. B. Meyer with an address on "Impurity," and Rev. F. S. Webster on "Intemperance."

The Scottish National Council has issued a very comprehensive and admirably arranged year-book of the Y.M.C.A.'s. (130, George-street, Edinburgh. 6d.) Besides complete statistics and general Association information, the volume contains special papers and capital portraits of Y.M.C.A. leaders, as well as the report of the Scottish National Council of Y.M.C.A. and Fellowship Unions.

Forty-six years of growth and progress have been completed by the Boston Association (U.S.A.), and in celebration enthusiastic meetings have been held. During the past year the building of the Y.M.C.A., on the corner of Boylston and Berkeley, has been especially improved, the most important changes being the reorganisation of the educational work, larger efforts to extend the work in the six college branches of the city and vicinity.

During the past twelve months, says the Cape Town "Young Men's Journal," Y.M.C.A. work in this country has developed in a most encouraging manner, and we doubt whether any other country can show such increased returns as it is our privilege to chronicle—that is, of course, regarding the work from a comparative standpoint. The total membership for South Africa twelve months ago was 1491, and to-day it stands at 2160, showing a nett increase of 669.

Since the Huddersfield Association celebrated its majority last November, a very hopeful view of its work and possibilities has been taken. On Thursday evening the new hon. secretary, Mr. J. G. Haley, held an "at home," at which there were about 200 present. Its immediate object was to interest the members and friends in the work of the association and to promote a membership campaign. Councillor F. Crossland, who is now in his sixth year of the presidency, gave an address, and Mr. W. H. Dawson dealt with the membership question.

The Coventry Association continues its "Forward Movement" in a vigorous fashion. The third "At Home" of the season was held on Thursday last, when the suite of rooms were again crowded out. Since the last "At Home" (three weeks), the membership had increased at the rate of one every day, while the annual subscribers' list had risen to £66. The Sunday-evening mission service for young men is an assured success. Nearly 200 young men are gathered in from the streets every Sunday night. The general secretary gives a short practical talk, and occasionally lantern-slides are introduced.

Mons. Em. Sautter, secretary of the French National Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations, writes:—"We are greatly encouraged just now with the work in France. Lately three young men wrote to tell me they were disposed to enter the work as general secretaries, and they are young men of the best kind. Another, a member of the Association at Bordeaux, is ready to enter the work as general secretary of the Bordeaux Association. I shall probably go there in May to make a campaign with the view of putting the work on a larger scale, with the help of God. We are also organising students' conferences during the Easter holidays."

Sir George Williams has promised £1000 towards the £25,000 being raised for the erection of a Memorial Band of Hope Union Hall.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Leamington Home has now completed its twenty-second year. The report states that during the last twelve months 109 inmates have been received.

The report of the Cambridge branch shows 190 members, spirited Bible-classes, and encouraging work in every direction. The Home has proved of great value for business girls.

Under the auspices of the Rothesay Y.W.C.A., an address on "The Second Coming of Christ" was given in the West-End Hall, on the 23rd ult., by Rev. Sholto Douglas, of Glasgow.

The annual meeting of the Leytonstone branch was held on the 3rd inst. in the Aylmer-road Hall. Mr. C. Boardman presided. Addresses were given by Rev. W. Kidd and Miss Coles. Miss Binks read a satisfactory report.

The annual meeting of the Birkenhead branch was held on the 4th inst., Rev. W. Watson presiding. The annual report showed that there had been thirty-one boarders during the year. A new boarding-house will shortly be finished. The Bible-class held every Thursday had been largely attended. Rev. W. Watson, Mr. Ziegler, and others addressed the meeting.

The third "Coin Collection" social was held at the new headquarters, 26, George-street, on Friday last. A large number attended at the invitation of Mrs. Peter Mackinnon—Watford, Hanworth, Feltham, and George Yard being among the branches represented. A number of members connected with the Employment Agency Scattered Branch were also present, Miss Wingate and Mr. H. Kidner gave addresses.

On the 25th ult. the memorial stones were laid of the new Home of the Lowestoft Y.W.C.A., in Regent-road, in the presence of a large company, the existing premises in Alexandra-road being quite inadequate for the increased requirements. The number of girls connected with the Association is 300. There will now be room to accommodate young women coming from London and other places requiring lodgings, which hitherto it was impossible to do.

Miss Hull, of Eastbourne, commenced a series of meetings at the Y.W.C.A., Gordon Lodge, Wimbledon, on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 28, when the charming little hall at the back of the Institute was closely packed, about 163 being present. Since the weather improved the hall has been full each night, and those present will not easily forget the spiritual and practical lessons drawn from God's holy Word. The mission closed on Friday night with a praise meeting.

The sixth anniversary meeting of the Hume-street (Dublin) Employment Agency, Home, and Registry was held on the 25th ult., under the presidency of Rev. J. Mahaffy; 321 boarders had been received during the year, and the applications through the registry numbered 830. The number applying for governesses and servants amounted to 1132. The report of the Continental Department was also read, showing how the Association extends its friendly help to foreigners seeking employment.

The fourth anniversary of the Madras Association was held on the 10th ult., Lady Havelock presiding. There was a large attendance. Miss Hill read the report for the half year. The total number of members reached 346 at the close of 1896. Miss Guinness delivered an interesting lecture, followed by Rev. Dr. White, of Chicago, who spoke on the study of the Bible. Lady Havelock spoke a few encouraging words to the members and friends present. On the whole, the institution is satisfactorily progressing, though slowly.

Christian Enthusiasm.—The need is for more religious enthusiasts of the brainy and balanced type. The world can never be impressed by a lethargic, easy-going Christianity, that takes everything with cool deliberation and heartless unconcern. Fire and fervour are the most efficacious evidences of Christianity when the fervency is Pentecostal fire. To Paul's word "study" there seems to appertain the notion of haste, as though the apostle said, "Hurry to show thyself approved unto God!" Thus his exhortation sounds like a New Testament echo of the Old Testament sentiment that "the king's business requireth haste."—N.Y. Observer.

Requests for Prayer.—For great blessing on a mission to be conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Stephen J. Alexander, March 20 to 31, at the Bible Christian Chapel, South Tottenham.—For a mission to be held by Mrs. Baeyertz in Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, March 21-April 5.—For special services to be held by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, in the Holyrood Street Chapel, Chard, Somersetshire, March 18 to 23.—For a mission by Rev. A. C. Thistelton, vicar of Berwick, assisted by Miss E. G. Thistelton, at Woking, Surrey, from March 20 to 29.—For a mission at Elgin from March 21 to April 4, by the Rev. J. C. Smith, late of Dufftown.—For blessing on the Young People's Guild and meetings in Doune, Perthshire.

Temperance Notes.

The Temperance party in the House of Commons it is noted have gained four seats since the General Election.

Dr. Whitford, at the annual meeting of the Ladies Temperance Association, Liverpool, gave reasons for saying that the state of things in the slums of that city is becoming worse and worse.

There is (according to the statement of a clergyman before the Royal Commission) one public-house to every 160 inhabitants in Portsmouth. The passenger and excursion steamers on the Solent are described as "Floating Taverns."

At the annual meeting of the Liverpool centre of the National British Women's Temperance Association, held last week, the report showed that the sum of £300 had been collected during the past year for the building of a cottage at the Duxhurst Industrial Farm Colony for Inebriate Women.

Mr. R. B. Batty, solicitor, of Manchester, who gave evidence last week before the Royal Commission, spoke strongly respecting grocers' licences, and the facilities they afford for respectable women getting drink; "the Temperance associations largely dealing with those who have fallen through drink, particularly object to the promiscuous granting of these licences. They have had many instances of wives being ruined by their encouragement of secret drinking."

Captain Nicolls, the Chief Constable of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, has issued his annual report showing the amount of crime dealt with during the year 1896. The report shows an increase of drunkenness, particularly among women, accounted for in the opinion of the police by the improved condition of trade. The increase of 15 per cent. in the case of drunkenness among women accounts for the large number of children brought before the magistrates on account of their being neglected or ill-treated by their parents.—Lancet.

A shameful case of "wife selling" occurred last week at Irthlingboro', a shoe manufacturing village in Northamptonshire. A party of shoemakers having spent all their money at a public-house, and having nothing handy to dispose of to get more, one offered to sell his wife for 2s. A customer in the bar accepted the offer, and, to make the bargain complete, one of the men was induced to go through the streets publicly announcing, on behalf of the husband, that he had "sold and bequeathed" his wife to the purchaser, and giving the names of two companions as witnesses to the transaction.

The annual meeting of the London Temperance Hospital was held on Monday week, the Duke of Westminster presiding. The report stated that during the year 1896 1157 in-patients had been received, being an increase of ninety-one over that of the previous year. Of these 802 were cured, 202 relieved, and eighty-eight had died—a death rate of 7·6 per cent. The out-patients during the same period numbered 6111, being an increase of 269 over that for the year 1895. Addresses were delivered by the chairman, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Drs. Ridge and Collins, and Miss Orme.

It is stated that the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws have decided to issue an interim report containing the evidence taken at the 22 sittings held between May and November of last year. Having regard to the length of time which the inquiry may be expected to occupy, it has been further resolved that additional evidence shall be reported from time to time as exigency may dictate. It may be remembered that the reference to the Commission made especial mention of the fact that proposals might be submitted for amending the licensing laws in the public interest, "due regard being had to the rights of individuals." No evidence has yet been taken under this head, and, therefore, a considerable period must elapse before the final report containing the conclusions and recommendations of the Commission is presented.

The National Prohibition Convention to be held in Newcastle-on-Tyne, April 3 to 9, is to be a most comprehensive affair. There has been no similar exposition of prohibition principles in England since 1862, and the present moment is regarded as very opportune for once again gathering up the facts and figures of past legislation on the subject all over the world. In this way it is hoped to awaken the public mind to the continuous evils of the liquor traffic, and to the progress which has been made in connection with prohibitive legislation. Six great meetings are to be held in Olympia, the largest hall in the North of England. Besides, a large number of meetings have been arranged throughout the district during the previous week by the agents of the United Kingdom Alliance and of the North of England Temperance League. Three hundred temperance sermons have also been arranged to be preached in Newcastle, Gateshead, and Tyneside on "Prohibition Sunday," April 4.

THE BOOK WORLD.

HISTORY OF THE PAPACY.

A History of the Papacy: from the Great Schism to the Sack of Rome (1378-1527). By M. Creighton, D.D., Oxon and Camb., Lord Bishop of London. New edition in six volumes. Vol. I. (6s. Longman & Co.) Many will welcome this handy reissue of a great work. The author's aim, as stated in the preface, is "to bring together materials for a judgment of the change which came over Europe in the sixteenth century, to which the name of 'The Reformation' is loosely given." The history of the Papacy is taken as the central point of the investigation, because it gives the largest opportunity for a survey of European affairs as a whole. Dr. Creighton's work has a reputation which needs no emphasis at the present time. It is full and lucid, and in this manual form will be very acceptable to students of history, whether religious or political. The successive volumes are to appear monthly.

HOMILETICAL COMMENTARY.

We recently called attention to the Preacher's Homiletical Commentary on the New Testament, and gave some particulars of the first four volumes, dealing with the Gospels. Four other volumes are before us:—The Acts of the Apostles, by Rev. Thomas Whitelaw, M.A., D.D.; the Epistle to the Romans, by Rev. W. Burrows, M.A.; The Epistles to the Corinthians, by Rev. Henry J. Foster; and Galatians to Thessalonians (inclusive), by Rev. George Barlow. Two other volumes will complete the series, and a comprehensive index to the whole is promised as a supplement. Generally speaking, the undertaking is on a uniform plan; it is the work of practical men, and so compiled as to afford the greatest possible service to preachers and teachers. This is essentially a commentary for those who, from lack of erudite scholarship, or from want of time for personal research, are unable to use critical works; and it is so arranged that every page is pertinent to the needs of such as have to expound the Sacred Word, and apply its teachings to the spiritual needs and daily life of men. The volumes by Dr. Whitelaw and Mr. Foster strike us as specially well done; though all have engaged conscientious thought and much care on the part of their authors. Here are notes, exegetical and illustrative, also sermons and outlines covering the entire New Testament; and those who consult the pages will find them to be rich in suggestion and thought. This Commentary would be welcomed as a present by most preachers or evangelists. (Special terms to ministers. Funk & Wagnalls Co., 44, Fleet-street, E.C.)

The latest issue of Mr. Stead's Penny Poets (Review of Reviews Office) is Longfellow's celebrated "Song of Hiawatha."

Albert the Good. By W. J. Wintle. (1s.' Sunday School Union.) A sketch on popular lines of the life and work of the late Prince Consort, bringing out his high character and sterling worth.

An Ancient People: A Short Sketch of Armenian History. By Elizabeth S. Lidgett. (1s. Nisbet.) An outline only, but it is a statement of leading facts in just such a succinct form as many will welcome in these days of hurry.

Ann Jane Carlyle. By F. Sherlock. (Sherlock, 30, New Bridge-street.) The story of one of the earliest temperance pioneers, and one of the founders of Bands of Hope. Doubtless in this Jubilee year it will be read with interest.

Christian Men of Science. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) As pieces of evidential material, any one of these twelve admirable, popular biographies of men eminent in research, as well as firm in their Christian faith, would be well worth the price of the whole. An excellent book for uninstructed doubters.

Talks with my Bible Class. By G. E. F. M. (6d. Davies Brothers, Weston-super-Mare.) The second edition of a book in which the author aims at showing the intense interest attaching to the Bible, even as a history of the earliest times. The book ought to be pondered by all who seek to open out the Word to young men or women.

Ministerial Table-Talk. By Rev. John J. Pool, B.D. (4s. R. D. Dickinson) A volume of gatherings, amusing and instructive. From a wide range of reading the author has skimmed anecdotal cream regarding sermon preparation, pulpit effort, and pastoral work. These pages are rich in points and illustrations for addresses on ministerial duty and church life.

Rambles in Central China. By W. Arthur Cornaby. (C. H. Kelly, 1s.) This book gives a large amount of information about the Chinese, and Christian work among them. It would prove of great service to anyone desiring to give a lantern lecture on the subject, and at the close there is a list of slides for use with the book on loan at the Wesleyan Mission House.

Secrets of Sanctity: A Series of Addresses on Some of the Conditions of a Holy Life. By Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, M.A. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) Ten in number, these chapters will prove of great service to many. Mr. Barnes-Lawrence is a reliable teacher; and his very readable chapters are enriched by useful thoughts from various sources, as well as poetical selections of great beauty.

Lined with Love, by Rev. George Everard, M.A., is to follow the sub-title, a series of "Friendly Talks with Young Girls about the Yoke of Jesus." The chapters relate to the Master's love and the disciple's duty. They are simple and practical, and the sympathetic style should enhance their influence for good. This is a capital little book to put into the hands of a thoughtful young woman. (1s. Nisbet.)

Loose Leaves from a Minister's Manuscripts. By S. Wainwright, D.D. (3s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) These short chapters are singularly fresh and full of suggestion. Dr. Wainwright's style is clear cut and his knowledge is encyclopædic, as becomes an experienced controversialist. This book is not a polemic, however, but a series of highly stimulating meditations on topics, mundane and otherwise.

The Writings of St. Patrick. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) As one of the Society's "Christian Classic" series, we have here "a revised translation, with critical and historical notes," by Dr. C. H. Wright, of Dublin, of the writings of the famous apostle of Ireland. There is a brief sketch of Patrick's life, and the little work is altogether of much present interest to the student of church history, especially of Irish history.

Records of the South American Missionary Society. By Allen Gardiner (S.A.M., 1, Clifford's Inn, E.C.) The fourth edition of a book which has already gained wide acceptance, telling, as it does, how the death of Captain Allen Gardiner laid South America on many hearts, and became the means of calling forth numerous and heroic labourers for the neglected continent. The story of the past fifty years' work is full of interest.

The Gospel of Prayer. By W. E. Winks. (2s. Champness, Rochdale, and 152, Fleet-street, London.) Luke speaks of the prayers of Christ more frequently than any of the other Gospel writers. Hence the author takes his prayer studies from that Gospel. He believes that many have lost the holy art of prayer, and he seeks to set forth the reasonableness and potency of real prayer, in a stimulative way, by dwelling on the example and teaching of our Lord with regard to prayer.

Trusting and Toiling, the monthly organ of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, has now been with us two years. It is edited by Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, and one of its features from the first has been the autobiography of the founder of the Mission, Rev. John Wilkinson. The eventful life will require many more chapters if it is to be so much as outlined. The monthly parts are rich in information regarding Israel, and in reports of work "the things of others" are not altogether overlooked. The annual volume affords a large amount of reading on God's Word and people. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.)

British India, by R. W. Frazer, LL.B., is a handbook of the useful "Story of the Nations" series. (5s. T. Fisher Unwin.) It is from the pen of a retired officer of the Indian Civil Service, and is obviously the result of considerable research. Beginning with a chapter on early Indian commerce, the author proceeds to sketch the rise of the East India Company, and from that point outlines the history down to date. Coming out at a time when India is much before the public, the book is likely to find many readers. It is a fitting sequel to "Vedic India," published a short time ago in the same series.

Our Christian Year. Lessons for Elder Scholars in Church Sunday-schools and Bible classes. By a Teacher. Preface by Rev. E. P. Gregg. (4s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) Under this unassuming title we have a book of unusual worth. Though intended for Churchmen, any Christian teacher who wants consecutive or occasional lessons from Old or New Testament will find this volume a treasury full of sound, interesting, and spiritual instruction. The questions and answers interwoven with the lessons are very helpful. Without fettering individual treatment of subjects, they show no little experience in eliciting knowledge from scholars. Suitable hymns are quoted or suggested in each lesson.

Letters from Armenia. By J. Rendel Harris and Helen B. Harris. (6s. Nisbet.) We have already called attention to this book, which contains letters written by Professor and Mrs. Rendel Harris, from the scenes of the recent massacres in Asiatic Turkey. Filled with information and charged with sad facts, the pages should have many readers at the present time. Reading the letters, one is led to exclaim with the prophet, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of t daughter of my people!" But if tears wou remedy the evil, surely Armenia had been deliver from the Turk long ago. Those who are acquaint with Oriental antiquities will find attractive fac in the course of these pages; and a peculiar in rest attaches to the illustrations, from sketches Mrs. Rendel Harris.

THE INDEXED BIBLE ATLAS, consisting of twelve colour maps, with an index of Biblical names, is a useful lit publication, artistically produced. (4d. C. Courtier & So 11, Paternoster-row.)

ERRORS OF ROME (No. 2. Purgatory). By H. B. T booklet belongs to a series, and is as good as its pred cessors. Brief and pointed exposures of Romish error a specially to be commended. (3d. Hastings: Apel's Libra Robertson-street.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—TWENTY-SIX YEARS MISSIONARY WORK IN CHINA. By Grace Stott, of the Chi Inland Mission.

From "Home Words" Office.—THE MARTYR CROWN; o The Seed of the Church. By Rev. Randolphe Henry Pigot (2s.) A MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT; And how we made match of it. By T. S. Millington, M.A. (1s.)

International S.S. Lessons

March 28.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

THE period covered by this series is only abo ten years, yet the events with which t lessons have dealt are of greatest interest and impo tance, These may be best recalled and enforced connection with the one theme:—The commenc ment and the early growth of the Christian Church.

Few notes are needed. If the events of the vario lessons have been well taught, the following que tions may elicit them, and may give the opportuni of enforcing their teaching.

1. What were the foundation facts on which t Christian Church was built? Lesson I. speaks of Saviour who was dead, but who rose from the dea and ascended to the right hand of God. Upon the facts, or, more correctly speaking, upon the Livi Saviour of whom these facts are true, the Church built.

2. By what power was the Church gathered Lessons II. and III. answer the question. Point o the fact that it was not human eloquence, not the i fluence of social position, not wealth, not even miracl that drew men to the Living Saviour. Recall t condition on which the Spirit was given, the mann of his bestowment, and the effect of the first Ho Ghost sermon.

3. What were the most prominent features of t Church thus gathered? They were held together b a bond of love; their love expressed itself in genero giving; they had power to perpetuate the wor (Lesson IV.) and to manifest the Spirit (Lesson V of Jesus Christ.

4. Were there no difficulties to be met? Recall t effect of the miracle at the temple gate. Psalm 2, 3 were fulfilled. Their enemies seemed mo than a match for them. More serious trouble aro in the Church itself. Such conduct as that Ananias and Sapphira; such pretenders as Simo Magus; such dissension as arose between the tw parties in the Church—these were more calculate to injure the young Church than all the attacks enemies. Enforce the lesson of this.

5. How did these difficulties prove to be for t welfare of the Church? Recall two of the deaco who were appointed in consequence of the strif One became the first martyr; but his dying testimo probably impressed the heart of Saul, and prepar the way for his conversion. The other deacon b came also an evangelist, whose work began Samaria. How would he have got there but for t persecution? So entirely did the Church triump over these obstacles, that disciples formed themselv into Churches in the whole district (ix. 31).

Victoria Institute.—A large meeting of t members took place on Monday, to hear a paper the present aspect of the question of evolution a creation, by Dr. Kidd. He pointed out that for t present at least the investigation must still be co tent to collect evidence.

Missionary Arrowroot.—An unusually lar supply of missionary arrowroot has arrived from t New Hebrides, and may be obtained in any quanti from three pounds from the following: Messr Dymock, Howden, and Co., 135, George-stre Edinburgh, or Messrs. Lumsden and Gibso Union-street, Aberdeen. The price has been r duced to one shilling per pound. All orders must accompanied by a remittance for the value of t arrowroot with cost of postage or carriage.

Obituary.

MRS. DALE.

The widow of the late Dr. Dale, the famous minister of Carr's-lane, Birmingham, has met with a sad death, having set herself alight while reading in bed in a private hotel in Bath, and died on Wednesday, 10th inst., from her injuries. Mrs. Dale took a prominent part in all social, philanthropic, and Christian movements in Birmingham, and was an able platform speaker. Although since her husband's death she has appeared little in public, her sympathies have remained with the forward movements in which she once took an active interest.

MR. PERCY HOLMES.

Mr. Percy Holmes, who, after a few months' severe illness, fell asleep in Jesus on March 11, at the age of thirty-seven years, was for some time the respected superintendent of the Sunday-school at Kilburn Hall, and subsequently of the Sunday-school at Willesden Hall, the north-western branches of the Evangelistic Mission. Mr. Holmes was the youngest son of Mr. William Holmes, of Paternoster-row and St. John's Wood, who still survives him, though in advanced life. He was zealously devoted to the work amongst the poor, especially the young, in Kilburn and Brondesbury, and led the local branch of the Young People's Christian Endeavour at Willesden Hall. He leaves a widow and two sons. During his illness he bore many beautiful testimonies to the preciousness of Christ.

REV. WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE, KIRRIEMUIR.

The senior pastor of the South Free Church, Kirriemuir, died at Edinburgh on Monday, 8th inst. Only a few days before he had lost his wife. Mr. Livingstone was born in Dundee, and in his early life commenced the engineering profession; but while so engaged he came under deep convictions, and finally resolved to study for the ministry. The Disruption of 1843 made a lasting impression on his mind, and he cast in his lot with the Free Church. After finishing his course and obtaining his licence, he was appointed for a period as probationer at Newtyle, where his labours were eminently successful. The South Free Church, Edinburgh, being vacant, Mr. Livingstone was called to the pastorate, which he faithfully held for the long period of forty-six years. He was a Free Churchman to the last, while his theology was that of the old school. His sermons were well prepared, and faithfully preached, and highly esteemed by his congregation. He was succeeded in the charge by Rev. William Kirkpatrick, about three years ago.

REV. W. J. NEETHLING.

On February 18, at the mission station of the Dutch Reformed Church at Mochuli, near Mafeking, in British Bechuanaland, a sad accident occurred to the missionary there, Rev. William J. Neethling, which has cost him his life. From telegrams received by his family, it seems that after a violent wind-storm, which had damaged the mission church, he went to see what harm had been done to it, when a gable fell and struck him, seriously injuring his back and thigh. He fell asleep in Jesus about three hours after.

This young missionary has had a very short term of service. He went through the theological course at the Theological Seminary of Stellenbosch, Cape Colony, and nine months' medical preparation at the Livingstone College in London. A few days after the tidings of his death were received, was the first anniversary of his ordination in his native town at Stellenbosch. Much sympathy is felt for the sister who accompanied him, and their fellow workers, Miss Retief and Mr. Joubert. Prayer is being offered that his vacant place may speedily and efficiently be filled by a missionary of his Master's own choosing.

PROFESSOR CANDLISH, GLASGOW.

This well-known Professor in the Free Church College, Glasgow, died on the 7th inst, at Tarbolton, N.B. He was a son of the celebrated Dr. Candlish, for many years the leader of the Free Church. He was born in 1835, studied divinity at the New College, Edinburgh, and was ordained to the ministry of the Free Church in 1863, being appointed to the charge of Logie-Almond. Five years later—in 1868—he was appointed to the Free East Church, Aberdeen, but he only ministered there four years. His sermons gave evidence of a highly-cultured and reflective nature, and of the possession of qualities that eminently fitted him for a professorship. Two of the chairs in the Glasgow Free Church College being vacant in 1872, Dr. Candlish was appointed to the Chair of Systematic Theology, vacant by the death of Dr. Islay Burns. He proved himself an able teacher of Divinity, and was the author of one or two important theological works, including, in particular, "The Kingdom of God Biblically and Historically Considered"—originally delivered as the Cunningham Lectures in 1884. For some time, too, he edited the British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

REV. DR. MURDOCK.

The Baptist cause in America and beyond has suffered a sad loss by the departure of Rev. John N. Murdock, D.D., LL.D., honorary secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union. Born at Oswego, N.Y., in 1820, Dr. Murdock received his early education among the Methodists. Having studied law, he was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of his profession. But he became convinced it was his duty to serve the Master as a minister of the Gospel; and having identified himself with the Baptists he began ministerial work in 1842. He held pastorates at Waterville and Albion in the state of New York, and at Boston, Mass. In 1863 he was appointed corresponding secretary of the Missionary Union, from the arduous duties of which office he retired in 1892, when he was chosen hon. sec. for life. Dr. Murdock attended the great Missionary Conference in London in 1888, and in our issue of Nov. 22, 1889, we gave his portrait and a sketch of his career. He died on Feb. 15 at the Clifton Springs Sanitarium, N.Y.

REV. W. H. G. MANN, BRIGHTON.

The beloved minister of Christ Church, Brighton, has been suddenly called home. He left Brighton on Thursday week, to preach for Rev. S. A. Selwyn at Boscombe, and stayed at the vicarage. He preached on Friday morning from the text, "He saw them toiling in rowing." He afterwards lunched with his old friends, Sir Matthew and Lady Dodsworth. It was then raining hard, and Mr. Mann hurried up a slight hill back to the vicarage. On arrival he appeared perfectly well, stood with his back to the fireplace in the study, and in a minute fell down. Mr. Selwyn tried to raise him, but he fell back, then put out his arm and said, "Selwyn, what's this?" Mr Selwyn said, "Only a fit, you will soon be better." Mrs. Selwyn was called in, and they chafed his hands and gave him brandy. Doctors were sent for, and three arrived within ten minutes, but found life extinct. At the inquest on Monday, Dr. Scott Tebb said he believed death was due to natural causes. The symptoms pointed to disease and rupture of one of the great vessels of the heart—sudden heart failure. Mr. Mann was much beloved in Brighton, although he had been incumbent of Christ Church but a short time. He succeeded Rev. R. M. Hawkins, who resigned the incumbency early in last year. Prior to that he was vicar of Sheerness, where he succeeded Rev. S. A. Selwyn.

REV. J. ERNEST CLAPHAM.

One of the most influential ministers in metropolitan Methodism, and head of the Home Mission department, passed away on Friday at his residence in Beckenham. This eminent minister was a son of the late Rev. James Clapham, who in his day was an able preacher and chairman of several Wesleyan districts. His early life was spent in Hull, but he was educated at University College, London, and made preparation for a legal career by reading for the Bar at the Temple. Received as a candidate for the ministry, he spent two years at Didsbury College, Manchester, working thereafter in Bradford, Halifax, York, and Hull. On his removal to Birmingham in 1876, full scope was afforded him for the display of that administrative ability which for the past twenty years kept him in the forefront of all great Methodist movements. The financial schemes of which he was the promoter were most successful. He took a leading share in the formation of the London Wesleyan Mission, and for some years was one of the secretaries. On the retirement of the late Rev. Alexander M'Aulay in 1885 from the general secretaryship of the Home Mission Department, the Wesleyan Conference appointed Mr. Clapham to that post. His marked success in this work is seen in the formation of the Devon and Dorset Mission, the revival of Methodism in East Anglia, and his recent work on behalf of decayed town and rural chapels.

PROFESSOR HENRY DRUMMOND.

Universal sorrow will be felt at the death of Professor Drummond, which took place at Tunbridge Wells on Thursday morning last, March 11. He had been for the past eighteen months or so completely prostrated by a mysterious complaint which affected his whole muscular system, and left him almost as helpless, physically, as a little child. His sufferings were intense, but they were borne with most exemplary patience and fortitude.

Cut off at the comparatively early age of forty-six, the late Professor had yet accomplished as large a life work as many who live double his years. The services he rendered in connection with Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first campaign in this country can never be forgotten or over-estimated; nor can the work he was privileged to do among students in later years. His larger published works, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" and "The Ascent of Man," were very severely criticized in many quarters for their unsettling tendencies. Especially in the case of the latter book, there can be no doubt that Professor Drummond advanced views that were highly speculative and obviously incapable of demonstration. Though he did not answer public criticisms, he was wont strenuously to maintain to private friends that on such fundamental doctrines as that of our Lord's Atonement he held firmly by the fact, while not espousing any systematized theory of it. His devotion to the person of Christ, and his efforts to bring his fellow young men under the same all-powerful spell, were undoubted.

The remains of the Professor were removed last week from Tunbridge Wells to his native town of Stirling, where they were interred on Monday last. Heartfelt sympathy will be extended to his sorrowing mother and other surviving relatives.

PREBENDARY F. E. WIGRAM.

This honoured servant of Christ, for so many years honorary secretary of the Church Missionary Society, was called to his rest on 10th inst., at his residence, Oak Hill House, Hampstead. Three years ago we gave in these pages a portrait and sketch of his career. After twenty-three years successful parish work he was called to the responsible post at the C.M.S.—to which he himself was a large and liberal giver. In 1886-7 he made a tour of the world, visiting the C.M.S. stations. Says The Record:—"A life of very remarkable and very touching devotion has closed. For nearly fifteen years Prebendary Wigram acted as hon. secretary to the C.M.S. They were years of many difficulties and of wonderful developments. They included some periods of sharp controversy here at home, and some epochs in the history of the Society's expansion abroad. But whether in moments of grave perplexity, of sorrow at the sudden loss of some missionary leaders, or of joy at the progress of the Society's work, the devotion of Mr. Wigram was equally apparent. In a sense he lived only for the Society. He gave his children, his health, his wealth, all without stint and without ostentation to the cause. In its service he was content to spend and be spent with a whole-hearted consecration that was at once a rebuke and a stimulus to all who saw it. The memory of his kindly presence, his affectionate disposition, his unbounded generosity, his unmeasured zeal, his simple piety, will not soon be forgotten. There is hardly a missionary diocese in the world in which men and women will not feel that they are the poorer by the loss of a friend. The Society has owned a truly apostolic succession of honorary leaders, and that succession does not fail."

Personalia.

Miss Eva Booth, Commander of the Salvation Army in Canada, is lying dangerously ill at Toronto.

Mrs. J. K. Barney leaves America early in April for a round-the-world trip on behalf of the World's W.C.T.U.

Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers has been compelled to seek two or three weeks' rest in a quiet English retreat to avert a serious breakdown.

Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, of New York, who has been ill, is well on the road to recovery, though unable as yet to resume pulpit duty.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, of the Deep Sea Mission, has lately been spending a week at Boston, U.S. He spoke at different places with great acceptance.

Miss T. Tolstoi, daughter of the famous Russian author, has expressed a desire to attend the annual meetings of the B.W.T.A. in London next June.

Hon. Neal Dow.—A banquet is to be held in Boston to-day (March 18) in commemoration of the Maine temperance reformer attaining his ninety-third birthday.

Miss Agnes Slack, hon. sec. of the National B.W.T.A., had a hearty public reception from the Liverpool friends of the Association on March 10, on her return from America.

Rev. D. M. Kay, assistant to the Professor of Hebrew in Edinburgh University, has been appointed to succeed Rev. D. B. Spence as superintendent of the Jewish Mission of the Church of Scotland in Constantinople.

Rev. Dr. Gregg, successor to Dr. Cuyler, at Lafayette Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, has got six months' leave of absence on account of his health. He hopes to visit Italy, Egypt, and the Holy Land, returning by way of Europe.

Mr. Mortimer Thwaites, son of Rev. Edgar Thwaites, Rector of Fisherton, Salisbury, has for nearly a year been working in connection with Mr. Charrington's great work at Mile End, and has done excellent work. He has now left for British Columbia.

Dr. Pierson, on account of severe physical prostration, has felt it necessary to take a season of rest, and his lectures to the students of the New York Missionary Training Institute have been closed. He has spent ten weeks giving two or three lectures a week to the classes; his messages have been helpful and instructive.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Canon Teignmouth Shore has gone abroad for the benefit of his health.

The Bishop of Worcester has been indisposed since his return from the Riviera.

A present of stock valued at £30,000 has been received by the Church Missionary Society.

Rev. George Victor Macdona, rector of Burmarsh, has accepted the rectory of Holton St. Peter.

Rev. T. H. Greenhalgh, curate at Huddersfield, has accepted the charge of All Saints', Paddock.

Rev. Frederick A. J. Hervey, rector of Sandringham, has been appointed to the canonry at Norwich.

Derby is shortly to have a missionary mission, and amongst the missioners will be Rev. E. A. Stuart.

Rev. R. H. Faulconer, rector of Swilland, Suffolk, has been appointed to the rectory of Trimley St. Mary.

Rev. H. G. D. Latham, curate of Christ Church, Camberwell, has been appointed Warden of the new "Inns of Court Mission" in Central London.

The mid-day Lenten addresses at St. Paul's Cathedral last week were given by Rev. W. H. Stone, vicar of St. Mary's, Kilburn, the general subject being "Warnings against Unreality in our Profession of Religion."

Rev. H. C. Strickland, a hard-working and earnest curate of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, has been appointed to the vicarage of St. Jude's, Bethnal Green. Special interest attaches to this appointment, inasmuch as it is the first preferment by the new Bishop of London.

The Daily News says: What Mr. Kensit feared when he objected to the confirmation of the Bishop's election has come to pass, for at a confirmation this week at Augustine's, Kilburn, he wore a white cope and mitre, the first time a Bishop of London has done so for 400 years.

At the spring conference of the Church Association in Manchester, a resolution was carried declaring that the attempt to tamper with the plain teaching of the Thirty-Nine Articles, and explain away their protest against the doctrines of Rome, was calculated to destroy the National Church.

The "Official Year Book of the Church of England," published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and issued under the sanction of the Archbishops and Bishops, contains more than 650 pages. It is divided into three parts—"Historical Records," "Statistical Records," and "Officers and Societies of the Church." The chapters treat of training for Holy Orders, home and foreign mission work, education, councils, the home and foreign episcopate, clergy pensions, endowments, charities, and other institutions and Church defence, and Church and social questions. In the preface there are six pages of tabular statistics devoted to Church work in thirty-four dioceses of England, giving the population, the number of baptisms, communicants, lay helpers, church accommodation, Sunday-schools, Bible-classes, guilds, church societies, lay helpers, the incomes of the clergy, and voluntary contributions.

Congregational.

The new chapel at Harpenden has been opened.

Moseley-road, Birmingham, reports 325 members.

Mr. R. Newell has been ordained at Brightlingsea.

Rev. Robert Berry has commenced his ministry at Hallfold, Whitworth, near Rochdale.

The chapel at Nether Stowey, Somerset, has been much damaged by the gale on the 3rd inst.

Canning Town Chapel reports thirty-three new members, making a total of 233. The Sunday-schools have 540 scholars.

Streatham Hill Church (Rev. J. P. Gledstone), has sent over £70 to the London Missionary Society for its Indian Famine Relief Fund.

Rev. W. Robinson, one of the senior missionaries in the Tamil district of India, has arrived home, after twenty years' labour in South India.

In addition to the P.S.A. meeting at Hexham Chapel, an evening service for working men and women on similar lines is to be held once a month.

Milton Chapel, Huddersfield, reports 347 members, of whom twenty-five were admitted during 1896. In the Sunday-school are 731 scholars with fifty teachers.

At the recent anniversary of the Latimer Chapel Sunday-schools, East London (Rev. J. W. Atkinson, pastor), the collections were devoted to the Indian Famine Fund.

The closing services at Park Chapel, Ramsbottom, which was opened in 1798, were held on Sunday, the building being now to be superseded by a more modern structure.

The year book of Finsbury Park Chapel shows a membership of 689. In the Sunday-school are 818 scholars, with fifty-four teachers. The various auxiliary and missionary agencies are reported in full activity.

The annual meetings of the Lancashire Union were held last week in Ashton-under-Lyne. The chairman, Rev. T. Lanlop, in his inaugural address, dwelt on "The secret of strength"; Dr. Goodrich followed, on "Aggressive work."

The second anniversary of the Maynard-road Young People's Christian Band was held on Thursday, March 4. The annual report shows an increase of forty members. Several gentlemen gave addresses, and all expressed pleasure at the energy displayed by the young people.

Calls.—Rev. J. Hutchison, of Bowden, to St. Ives; Rev. S. R. Laver, to Sudbury, Suffolk; Rev. W. J. P. Wright, of Middlesbrough, to Chorley; Rev. James Hewett, of Kingsbridge, to Chalford, Glos.; Rev. J. H. Fry, to Wattisfield and Walsham, Suffolk.

Resignations.—Rev. W. H. Skinner, the superintendent of the aggressive movement in Middlesbrough; Rev. R. B. Williams, of Guelph, Ontario.

Baptist.

Mr. T. Moreman has conducted a mission at Keynsham.

Raleigh Park, Brixton Hill, reports an increase of sixty.

Grafton-street, Northampton, reports ninety-five members.

The bicentenary of College-street, Northampton, is about to be celebrated.

A Strict Baptist Association is being formed for the counties of Surrey and Sussex.

The new congregation worshipping in the Central Hall, Wellingborough, continues to grow rapidly.

Professor Rhys Davids, the eminent Pali and Buddhist scholar, and his wife have been on a visit to the Midland College, Nottingham.

On Wednesday, March 10, anniversary services were held at the East-hill Church, Wandsworth. In the afternoon, Rev. W. Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, preached, and a meeting was held in the evening.

Rev. W. H. Foster, of St. Louis, U.S.A., has undertaken the charge of the West London Tabernacle, on the duties of which he will enter in April.

The annual meeting of the church at Rochester was held on Wednesday week. The reports were cheering. Fourteen members were added during the past year. All the agencies of the church are in a prosperous condition.

The Urdu (Hindustani) translation of one of the sermons of the late C. H. Spurgeon has been issued. Other sermons are to follow, and the whole will be gathered into a volume. The Punjaub Bible and Religious Book Society has undertaken the translation.

Dr. Tupper, pastor of the first Baptist Church of Philadelphia, has, through special cards, says the Chicago Standard, "secured the pledge of 619 to attend prayer-meeting, 607 to read Scriptures at prayer-meeting, 362 to speak from time to time at this service, and 159 to pray voluntarily or when called upon."

The year-book of Woodberry Down Church shows a net increase of forty-four members, with a total membership of 597. All of the societies in connection with the church, twenty-five in number, show active work. A special effort has been made to reduce the debt on the church, and £700 has been paid off, leaving £1700 still owing. The total receipts of the year amounted to £2181.

The anniversary of the Pioneer Mission was lately held at Leyton Baptist Chapel. Rev. E. A. Carter stated that the object was twofold. Firstly, to start mission work, and in time form Baptist churches in needy districts. This had been in not a few cases most successful. A second object was the resuscitating of weak and struggling churches. Several churches which had been almost closed were now supporting pastors and doing effective work.

Pastor T. J. Hazzard's eighth anniversary has been celebrated at The Lighthouse, Bow Common, E. Great blessing was reported by the various workers in connection with some twenty departments of the work. Thirty-five had been added to the church. Over 800 children and sixty teachers were in the Sunday-school. About sixty members and associates belonged to the Y.W.C.A. branch. The church is just entering upon the completion of its building scheme, which includes the erection of vestries, and providing class-rooms and accommodation for 1000 scholars. Mr. Alderman Smith, of Stratford, presided, and addressed the workers.

The anniversary of the Grays Baptist Tabernacle was held on Sunday week. Rev. T. Heywood preached morning and evening to large congregations. On Monday a public tea and meeting was held. Mr. H. J. Carter presided, and congratulated the pastor and deacons upon the great blessing which had rested upon their labours. Mr. G. J. Moore presented the report, which showed the past year to have been one of great activity and usefulness. Conversions had taken place, congregations had been large, and the membership had increased, the present number of members being 140. The auxiliaries of the church were in a healthy condition. The Sunday-school numbered 407 scholars, with a staff of thirty teachers.

Calls.—Rev. M. Cumming to Honor Oak; Rev. W. J. Young, of Sulgrave, to Ravensthorpe; Rev. C. E. Shipley, of Swansea, to Shipley, Yorks; Rev. J. C. Taylor, of Burslem, to Bramley.

Resignations.—Rev. R. Foster Jeffrey, of Folkestone; Rev. W. Rumsey, of Brockley, Bury St. Edmunds; Rev. J. E. Evans, of Old Neddfa.

Methodist.

It is proposed to build three new chapels in Northampton.

Rev. Thomas Cook has held a fruitful mission at Lozells, Birmingham.

One of the new mission cars has been to Bridgewater to work in Devon and Dorset.

At the Leeds mission anniversary, Rev. S. Chadwick reported conversions at every service.

The Students' Missionary anniversary at Headingley has realised £258, a large advance on last year.

The Wesley Guild movement will be represented by Rev. Simpson Johnson, of Manchester, at the International Convention of the Epworth League, to be held in the city of Toronto in the third week of July.

The Primitive Methodists have resolved that the new hall and schools to be erected in connection with the South-east London Mission, at a cost of £4000, shall be opened free from debt. They have already raised £3317 of the amount.

At the annual Wesleyan Conference of Victoria and Tasmania, held in Melbourne, a motion was submitted on Friday in favour of the union of all Methodist Churches. On a division being taken, 158 votes were given for the motion and 98 against it.

At a meeting held on Tuesday week in connection with the anniversary of the Oxford-place Mission, Leeds, Rev. S. Chadwick, who has charge of the mission, announced that the chapel, for the first time since it was built in 1835, was out of debt. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Mark Guy Pearse, S. F. Collier, and Thomas Champness.

Wesleyan Methodism, which during the past twelve months has received some exceedingly valuable bequests, has again benefited largely by generous bequests, recently paid, from the estate of the late Mrs. Ursula Waller, of Withington. These gifts are as follows:—Wesleyan Foreign Missions, £5000; Wesleyan Home Missions, £5000; Wesleyan College, Didsbury, £1000; Fund for Aged Ministers and Ministers' Widows, £3000; London Wesleyan Mission (East End branch), £2000; Manchester and Salford Mission (Central Hall), £2000; Lower Chatham-street Wesleyan Mission, Manchester, £500. Among other bequests outside Methodism are the following:—British and Foreign Bible Society, £2000; Boys' and Girls' Refuges, Strangeways, Manchester, £200; Nurses' Training Home, Ardwick Green, £100; Manchester Royal Infirmary, £200; Northern Counties Hospital for Incurables, Mauldeth, £200. The total amount bequeathed is £23,150.

Presbyterian.

The Wood-green congregation reports a membership of 505, an increase during the year of sixty-two.

Dr. John Watson preaches at Crouch Hill on the 21st inst., in connection with the twenty-first anniversary.

It was announced at the meeting of the London Presbytery, North, that the venerable clerk, Rev. William Ballantyne, is very seriously ill.

Building operations for the new college at Cambridge are being pushed on with, in readiness for the stone-laying by Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Lewis in May.

Rev. J. Reid Howatt, of Camberwell, starts this week for the continent for a much needed rest. At the annual meeting of his church the reports gave great encouragement.

Rev. Samuel M'Comb, late of Reading and Belfast, who is now pursuing his studies in Germany, has accepted the call from one of the most influential congregations in New York, who offer a stipend of £1600 a year. He will enter upon the charge in September.

The annual meeting of the church in West Halkin-street, Belgrave-square, was held recently (Rev. Robert Duff, pastor). The meeting was large and hearty. An increase of fourteen in the membership was reported. All the organisations in connection with the congregation were said to be in a flourishing condition.

Calls.—Rev. W. B. Cooper, of Durham, to Bristol; Rev. J. C. Chalmers, of Cumbernauld, to Kilmuurs; Rev. T. J. Edwards, to Pontmorlais, Merthyr Tydfil; Mr. Ernest Jones, to Barmouth; Rev. J. R. Macgregor, to Milton; Rev. James Kennedy, of Paisley, to Lamlash.

Resignation.—Rev. W. V. Graham, of Maxwelltown.

Society of Friends.

The relief of suffering both in Armenia and India is securing the support of Friends heartily and widely.

At the recent National Free Church Council meetings quite a sprinkling of Friends could be seen, and several courteous and appreciative references to the Society were made by different speakers.

Friends in America are devoting time and strength to the promotion of the great Arbitration Treaty, while English Friends are making their voices heard in protest against the sectarian Education Bill now before Parliament.

It is much hoped that the labours of Henry Stanley Newman (now on his way home from Bemba) and Theodore Burtt on behalf of freeing the slaves of Zanzibar and Bemba have helped the Government to wipe the stain of slavery from the British flag. There seems the strong probability that freedom is at hand.

Three offers of service were made to the Foreign Mission Association meeting on the 4th inst., and all were accepted—C. Ker and Marian Baker for India, and Adam W. Davidson for China. In addition to the Home for Young Men already provided when training for foreign missionary work, another is now to be opened for young women.

Several venerable Friends have recently been removed by death, to the loss of the Church on earth, and the sorrow of Friends left behind. Among them, Anna R. Whiting, of Leeds; Wm. Taylor, of Middlesbrough; and Dr. Henry Hartshorne, of Philadelphia. Each filled a place of great usefulness, and each will be much missed. All were ministers of Christ.

Fallen Asleep.

At Blakeney, Norfolk, Capt. W. Grout, a warm supporter of Christian and Methodist work.—At Pudsey, on 4th inst., Mr. David Moseley, a preacher of the Gospel for thirty-five years.—At Lancaster, Mrs. Bentley, widow of a devoted United Methodist Minister. At Bramley, Leeds, Mrs. Prater, wife of Rev. Samuel Prater.—At Trethosa, St. Columb, Capt. Caleb Bullen, who passed away a few hours after injuries received at the Bloomsdale Clayworks. He was a great temperance advocate, a local preacher, and Social leader.——At Milton Dumbarton, Mrs. M. Sanders, aged eighty-one, a devoted Christian.—At Madison, New Jersey, Rev. G. Richard Crooks, LL.D., Professor of Church History at Drew Theological Seminary, aged seventy-four, one of the distinguished scholars of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was largely influential in securing representation of the laity in the Church Conferences, after a prolonged struggle. As editor, preacher, and teacher, he lived a laborious life, and many publications proceeded from his pen.—At Tattenhall, Rev. Joseph Oddy, a faithful minister of Christ thirty-eight years.—At Great Missenden, Mr. G. Coles, an active worker for forty years.—At Frodsham, Mr. Thomas Rigby, an acceptable preacher for many years.—At Rochdale, Alderman Thomas Schofield, J.P., aged eighty, a leader in local affairs, an earnest believer, and the writer of some hymns in the United Methodist Hymnal.—At Enniskillen, Mr. Thos. Gordon, a faithful worker in connection with the Methodist Church, aged sixty-nine years.—At Maryborough, Miss Frances Sythes, aged ninety-four years.—At Los Angeles, California, Mr. F. P. Lefroy, barrister-at-law, son of Rev. J. Lefroy, and grandson of Chief Justice Lefroy, Dublin, an earnest Christian worker.—At St. Jude's, South Kensington, on 7th inst., Mrs. Eardley-Wilmot, wife of the vicar.—Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, March 15, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

	£	s.	d.
Famine in India—M. M., Belfast, 2s. 6d.; B. T. L., 2s.; T. B., 2s. 6d.; J. S. L., £1; J. B. S., £2 10s.; Friends, Everton Mission Hall, 13s. 6d.; Lady Ashburton's Mission S.S., Custom House, £1 4s.; J. G., 5s.; C. W., 5s., 2431, 2s.; B. T. L., 3s.; School Collection, Eastbourne, 14s.; A. O., 10s.; E. F., £3; E. N., 2s. 6d.; Y.M.C.A., Aberdeen, £5; Norma, £5 2s. 1d.; W.A., 10s.; W. J. F., £2; Lady Ashburton's S.S., 1s; Collected, Lancing Gospel Hall, £1 15s. 6d.; J. McM., 10s.; R. A. W., 2s. 6d.; E. U., 2s. 6d.; R. B., N. Finchley, 2s. 6d.; G. D. D., £3; H. F., 5s.; Sympathiser, 5s.; W. M. W., 5s.; A. Y. L., 2s. 6d.; F. J. M. C., 2s.; A. G. W., 1s. 6d.; S. G., 15s.; A. L. C., 2s.	51	2	1
Christian Succour to India (Lord Radstock)—J. B. S., £2 10s.; H. F., 5s.; A Thank-offering, £1; Thankful, 10s.; An Old Soldier, 5s.; E. C., £2; J. O., 5s.; Edith, 1s.; W. E. M., 5s.; Psa. cxvi. 12, 3s. 6d.; Dowager Lady S., £10; B. H. T., 2s. 6d.; Mrs. S., £1; Of Thine Own, 10s.	18	17	0
Famine in the Transvaal—A. W., 3s; A Thank-offering, £1	1	3	0
Rev. P. T. Wilson's Famine Relief Work, Sitapur, India—Ruth	0	5	0
Indian Famine (Beggars Church, Agra)—J. and J. H. V., £10; E. G., £1; Isa. lviii. 7-10, 10s.	11	10	0
Indian Famine, Children, Poona (Mrs. Bruce)—See page 19	41	16	9
Indian Famine—See page 19	4	14	0
Baptist Missionary Society—(Zenana Famine Relief Fund) W. E. M., 2s. 6d.; (Indian Famine) A Servant, 5s.; Ruth, 15s.; A. M. D., £2 4s. 6d.	3	7	0

(Continued on page 23.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Fouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, FOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols.	„ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE present week will be an anxious one in Crete. The Powers are once more on their trial, and their secret sympathies with the Turk are being shown in a way that must distress all lovers of liberty and fair play. An Austrian vessel has been permitted to sink a Greek transport without protest, and no provisions are allowed to find their way to the famishing people in the interior of the island. Mr. Gladstone's eloquent pamphlet denouncing the "Concert," and calling on the English Government to withdraw from it as from a compact of iniquity, is helping to rouse the conscience of the nation. Meanwhile, Greece continues to maintain her claims, and declines to leave Crete till some effective guarantee of real autonomy is furnished. At present no one knows "what a day may bring forth," and the chances of a conflagration are oscillating dangerously from side to side. The one thing certain is that those who hold the helm of affairs are guided more by fear of consequences, than for the laws of right among the nations.

Those who boast of the humanising effect of mere education and culture would do well to consider the way in which New York and the West End received the news of the disgusting prize-fight in Nevada last week. We are told that no event since the Presidential election has created so much "interest" as this exhibition of brutality, and that a crowd of 8000 to 10,000 spectators awaited the bulletins in New York. In the West End of London the eagerness to possess the late editions of the evening newspapers was such that the newsboys, when the supply became scarce, sold a "penny a peep" to the élite among the music-hall and theatrical audiences. Truly, the ape and the tiger die slowly in the human heart for all our civilisation. Behind the veneer of good manners and courtesy the elemental passions still sleep in the unregenerate heart. Nothing will kill the "old man" but the "new man" which is "created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

The sporting papers reveal a state of consternation among professional betting men at the result of the recent decision as to the legality of betting within the enclosures on a racecourse. The Anti-Gambling League has achieved a striking victory for the time. Whether any permanent good will come of it will depend largely on the loyalty of the magistrates in convicting offenders against the law as now finally interpreted. A philosopher once said that the best way to honour a bad law is to break it. Experience proves that even the bench sometimes show their honour of good but unpopular laws by ignoring them, i.e., by inflicting purely nominal penalties on those who break them. This is the peril in the present instance. Having established the illegality of this kind of betting, the next thing will be for the enlightened conscience of the public to see that the law is justly administered.

When the announcement was made that the Queen had decided that the procession in honour of her long reign should go through South London, everyone commended the thoughtfulness which was giving the poor a share in the festivities. But now we hear of notices served on weekly and monthly tenants in the Borough to quit before the procession day. Of course, if rich tradesmen and wealthy corporations are at liberty to make a harvest out of letting houses and windows at enormous prices, the owners of property in poorer quarters have an equal right. But it will cause immense dissatisfaction if the poor are to be driven from their homes simply that proprietors may fill their coffers out of the popular craving after a great national spectacle.

The forward movement in Methodism has suffered heavy loss in the death of Rev. J. Ernest Clapham, to whose fine spirit and evangelistic fervour the movement owed so much of its success. He was largely the victim of overwork, and of "unbridled zeal" for doing good. A more genial, earnest, intense personality has seldom been seen in the ranks of Christian workers. Like many leaders of men he had had his period of spiritual stress, and this had become a means of great helpfulness to others since his emancipation. In a recent conversation with a friend he said :

I don't now suffer from doubts ; I am perpetually filled with a sense of the goodness of God ; I have no misgivings, no fears.

It is men who have thus mastered and carry within them "the secret of the Lord" who are the centres of the most powerful Christian influences on others.

The Odessa correspondent of The Daily News gives, in its issue of Monday, a deplorable account of the condition of the Armenian refugees in the Caucasus. Destitution, nakedness, and disease are decimating them.

The number of refugees in Kars is 4,500, all of whom are destitute, shelterless, and nearly naked. The majority of these helpless people are widows and orphans, and the sight of the latter—in the last stages of famished emaciation, and nearly wholly naked—is terrible to behold. Unless speedy succour come to them, they must perish wholesale of hunger and exposure, or succumb to the dreadful ravages of typhus and other concomitant epidemics induced by their grievously wretched condition.

There seems a great danger that in the present excitement about the Cretan crisis, the pressing needs of other victims of Turkish tyranny and misrule may be forgotten.

However defective the teachings of the late Prof. Drummond were, he was a great force for good among educated young men, and his biography, which, it is said, will be entrusted to the hands of his friend Dr. Stalker, will be eagerly expected. His knowledge of human nature was gained as one of Mr. Moody's lieutenants in the inquiry-room during his first great campaign in this country. Whenever he touched on the subject of the "new life" he was a singularly powerful speaker, but the theology of the Cross, as it relates to human sin and guilt, was vague and ineffective in his hands. His special mission evidently was to break down initial objections against Christian faith held by cultured people, and to prepare them for the reception of stronger meat from others.

Personal influence is an immeasurable thing; no man should think meanly of what he can do. The modesty which shrinks from the front place, and is afraid of the heavy responsibility, is only to be commended, but it may not overrule the sense of duty or silence the call to service. Moses was not excused from the leadership of Israel, nor Jeremiah from the duties of a prophet, on the ground of a sincere sense of unfitness. No man who has had long experience of divine service, and has been fairly faithful in it, could, at the beginning, have believed that he could have been used to do so much. But even he does not know how much. All around him are results which other eyes can see better than his. Among some wretched courts in Liverpool, a doctor found one which had an appearance of comfort and contentment; one Christian woman, who had lived there all her life, had been the means of making it so. One Christian can give a character to any place.

The most precious thing that a man or woman can possess is a good character. It cuts at the root of human well-being when mistresses, out of whim, or malice, or carelessness, refuse or neglect to give a "character" to the servants that leave their employment. That this is not an unfrequent offence is affirmed by Mr. Barnes, secretary of the Domestic Servants' Union. In an interview with a representative of The Echo he has made an exposé of the ways of many well-to-do mistresses, who think nothing of dismissing their servants at the end of the "season," declining to give them characters for no ostensible reason. In this way many friendless girls are thrown upon the streets, and pass gradually into the ranks of outcasts. An endeavour is being made to create machinery for ensuring compulsory characters, so that innocent and well-meaning girls should not be at the mercy of thoughtless and heartless employers.

Our thoughts about India differ according to our standpoint. England's present gifts to India's need which are not to be measured by the Lord Mayor's Fund alone, inspire gratitude and hope; but when they are compared with the immense wealth London alone possesses, what are they? Our missionary labours, and the kind of labourers sent forth, and the results achieved, are cause for joy; but when we think also of the deadly work which Western civilisation has done, and of the worldly motives which carry so many Englishmen to India's shores, our joy is chastened. A Hindoo asks :—

Are you aware of what mischief you are unwittingly doing us? Your scientific education has made our children irreligious, atheistic, agnostic. They are beginning to look upon religion as what one of your clever writers called it the other day, "a dream of hysterical women and half-starved men."

Owing to the presence of evil-living Englishmen along with good Englishmen there is a widely prevalent idea that we have two religions; the natives cannot see that the evil is for the lack of religion. For all this the remedy lies in perceiving that Christians are as responsible for India as for England.

Until we can put away from the minds of men the common error that the current Christianity of the Church is true Christianity, we can make but little progress in converting the world.

So said President Finney, and what so natural as for men to judge by that standard which is open, palpable, and ever before them? They thus judged at the beginning, but happily with the best results. "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." The Master lived on in his disciples; to see them was to be reminded of Him. When changed men are to be seen, there is no evidence to equal it. Men will judge the Gospel by those who profess it. The only possible thing is to raise the tone and life of the Church itself.

The Broken Vase.

THE odour of a good deed lives for ever; and Mary, who so loyally loved her Master, has shed abroad the fragrance of her gentle piety and tender devotion, so that, to-day, the winds of memory come to us laden with the perfume of a name which is as ointment poured forth.

A brief friendship had been cemented by life and death, and those who were one in joy were still more nearly united in sorrow. Lazarus was raised from his sleep, but Simon was not. Clouds were over the desolated dwelling when Jesus entered. Sabbath peace brooded over that little company; even Martha, no longer careful and troubled, served with quietness. It was hardly a time for many words.

Jesus was the honoured one at that table and He was sad. Lovingly He spoke to them, and Mary's heart must show its gratitude. She rose, and quietly fetched a vase of costly ointment, and, breaking it, poured without stint upon the head and feet of her Lord; but fearing lest her hand had been too lavish for his comfort, she unbound her glory and wiped his dripping feet with her tresses. Not waste but worship. Ten pounds gone in the extravagance of a moment! No, no; she hath wrought a good work! We misvalue deeds because we cannot see their motive and do not know their purpose; those who criticised were too late to anoint his body for the burial.

Mary's Gospel has come to us not in word but in deed. She has taught us that no gift can be an adequate expression of true love; that sincere devotion keeps back nothing for her own use; and that the truest worship is the humblest—that of the contrite heart. "Sit at the feet of the Master," she would say to us, "learn of Him; pour out your soul in love, devotion, and worship; break the vase, lest you be tempted to keep a selfish thought, and pour sincere ointment—body, soul, and spirit—on his feet."

Master, our lives are thine,
We cannot bring Thee less,
Our water turns to wine,
If Thou wilt stoop to bless.

Master, thy hand can save,
The dead have heard thy voice,
Speak peace to sorrow's wave,
And bid the calm rejoice.

Wandsworth, S.W. Howard T. N. Usher.

1244.

Public Morals.

WHEN the opponents of State regulation of vice were struggling for the repeal of the C.D. Acts they had to complain of "a conspiracy of silence" on the part of the Press; their meetings were not reported, and their letters not published. Such things as they had to say were "not fit for publication." Now, however, when the army authorities are moving every power at their command to secure a re-enactment of the Acts, at least in India, the Press is open to receive and publish anything that is sent. Following on the report of a departmental committee, published at the end of last week, the columns of leading journals have State papers, letters from correspondents, and articles of their own, bearing on the question. Some journals are also entering the lists against the reimposition of the Acts. Thus, the "conspiracy of silence" is broken, with what sincerity on the part of such papers as The Times and Daily Telegraph the public can judge. But it is all to the good that the battle is to be an open one. A good many things besides the Acts will come into the light, which it is well the nation should know.

One of the first things is to get a right measure of the evil in India; let it be neither minimised nor exaggerated. "Half the Indian army" is not incapacitated. The average number of men constantly in hospital in 1895 was 45 per 1000, although there was a ratio of admission of 522 per 1000, which means that the same man may enter many times. The Daily News says:—

For, observe carefully these facts:—(1) The proportionate increase has been continual for many years, and the ratio has not increased since regulation was abolished; (2) in the Home Army, disease has very largely decreased since regulation was abolished; (3) at some foreign stations there has been increase, at others there has been decrease, since abolition; and (4) the same variation may be observed in Indian stations themselves. Thus, in 1895, the ratio of admissions at Lucknow showed a marked decrease; but at the neighbouring station of Cawnpore, a marked increase.

The Army Sanitary Commission, even in their last report, which compared with former reports seems to us to bear evidence of having been written under pressure from without, can only claim that the Acts in India prevented the increase of disease, never diminished it. The fact is, the way of escape lies through moral means only. A good officer at the head of each regiment would do something effective in the way of saving the men and stamping out the disease. For evidence, see the letter of "Justice" which we published a fortnight ago.

In view of the London Vestry elections in May, an influential appeal has been issued for the improvement of the morality of our city streets. The appeal gives a statement of the powers of the vestries for dealing with disorderly houses. It shows how the vestry of St. Anne's, Soho, deputed two of its members to call upon the landlord, serve him with the legal notice signed by the vestry clerk, and require him to eject his disorderly tenants. During the last eighteen months a large number of such processes have been successfully served. The ground landlord is equally responsible to the law, and can cancel the lease. The signatories to this appeal believe that if Christian men and women would recognise their duty to stand for this cause in May, the problem of the London streets might be largely solved within the next twelve months. They do not depend upon the law alone, but associate voluntary help with it. The first thing is the choice of suitable candidates. Information may be had from Rev. J. H. Cardwell, 23, Soho-square, W.C.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

THESE brethren have recently conducted Gospel missions at Dumfries and Airdrie, and they are now busy in Aberdeen. The work at Dumfries, in which four Free Churches united, was very gratifying in its results; the Airdrie mission, arranged by the United Evangelistic Association, was also a time of manifest blessing to many.

The evangelists have visited Aberdeen before, and are highly appreciated by the earnest Christians there. A warm welcome awaited them on Sabbath last, when they began work under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. There was a morning meeting of workers in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, and one for men only in the afternoon.

The great Music Hall could not contain the crowd that pressed in at the evening hour for the first general meeting of the mission. Major Whittle preached impressively from Acts iii. 26 and Mr. Stebbins sang the Gospel. An after-meeting was held. The meetings are being continued this week in the Y.M.C.A. Hall with Bible readings in the afternoons.

After a short visit by Major Whittle to Thurso, the evangelists hope to begin a fortnight's mission at Woolwich Tabernacle on April 18.

Among French Priests.

THE work of Professor Bertrand among priests who have left the Church of Rome in France has often been brought under the notice of our readers. The mission has an interest all its own; and, apparently, in order to reassure the incredulous, M. Bertrand shows, in his report for 1896, that in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries there were remarkable cases of priests and dignitaries leaving the Church of Rome for Protestantism.

Speaking of his work, M. Bertrand says: "I have bundles of heart-breaking letters from priests who have done their utmost to believe what they cannot, and who preach what they do not believe; they shrink with horror from the thought of becoming unfrocked vagabonds, compelled, after a fruitless trial, to return to their vomit. Human prudence tells such not to leave the fold; the Church threatens them with excommunication; parents, friends, and colleagues are ready to curse them; they have hideous glimpses of the social shallows where the ruined and lost swarm. Some prefer to make light of present interests and affections rather than disregard the calls of conscience; they throw themselves into the abyss of the unknown, and thence they beg of us to throw them a rescuing line.

"In the course of ten years we have thrown this line to more than sixty priests, monks, and seminarists. Several have become Protestant pastors, evangelists, missionaries and teachers; others have accepted positions in houses of business, or entered upon commercial life. A much larger number we have had to refuse such help, but we have given them good advice and copies of the New Testament."

M. Bertrand (36, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, France) will be glad to send copies of the report to applicants. Those who read will wish to help the work.

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—Mr. William Forbes held a meeting for theatrical women and girls, on Thursday last, at Waterloo-road Chapel. After tea a short service was held. A lady sent copies of the New Testament for the guests, and the Bible Flower Mission sent lavender bags with texts attached. Help is needed for the continuance of this effort.

A London Soldiers' Home.—The seventh anniversary meeting in connection with the Soldiers' Home, 155, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W., was held last week at the premises. Sir George Hayter Chubb, who presided, said the year's working showed an adverse balance, but they were not dismayed by that, for they expected large assistance from the Diamond Jubilee Fund on behalf of sailors' and soldiers' homes, to be raised by the Wesleyan body. Rev. R. W. Allen, senior chaplain, said the Home was regarded with growing favour by members of the London garrison, soldiers passing through the metropolis on furlough and discharge, together with an increasing number of seamen and others belonging to the Royal Navy. Lord Methuen expressed his great pleasure at being present, and hoped the Wesleyans would have no difficulty in completing their fund for Homes of this sort. He thought the liberality of civilians was not sufficiently invited on behalf of social work for our soldiers and sailors.

A Missionary "Waterloo."

BY THE MISSES LEITCH.

(Concluded.)

THE question as to how the large proportion of church members who do not contribute anything to foreign missions are to be interested, is one worthy of serious consideration. It may seem like a simple solution, the cutting down of the work from thirty to forty per cent. this year, and perhaps a further reduction next year, and a still further one the year following; but there is nothing so disastrous as disaster, just as there is nothing so successful as success.

The fear of the Home Committee seems to be that, if the missionaries were to be encouraged to write home to their friends about the present state of affairs, they might make only selfish pleas, diverting from the general fund, and doing more harm than good. But instead of trying to hold back this great Niagara of power, which would be a mighty force if wisely used, would it not be better to direct it into right channels, and utilise it to the fullest possible extent? If this power is not utilised and given a proper outlet, it will find an outlet for itself, and perhaps not the wisest one.

It has been said that some missionaries make too many appeals to home friends, and secure, as a result, large help for their own work, while the work of others is left to suffer; and it is frequently urged that these missionaries should be repressed. Rather than this, would it not be better to utilise the talent which they possess, by opening up for them a broader field for action, and inviting them to advocate the work and needs of the whole mission with which they are connected.

One or more Boards have made a new departure. They intend to incur no debt; but to throw the responsibility for the future carrying on of the work directly upon the churches. The making of one new departure of such magnitude in a work, must necessarily bring about several changes of policy. These boards are throwing a weight on the churches which they have hitherto carried themselves. Formerly these boards met a crisis by borrowing money, and gave the churches time to learn about the situation, and to render the necessary help. The missionaries also have contented themselves with keeping in close touch with the boards, and have looked directly to the boards for support. But now the missionaries must get into close touch with the churches, and keep in close touch with the churches, and look to the churches for their support.

If accepted candidates, before going to the field, have had the experience of securing their own support, they would understand how very difficult it is to arouse interest and secure funds; and they would be much more willing, after reaching the field, to write occasional letters to supporters in order to sustain that interest. And, moreover, having met these supporters face to face, they would not have the feeling that they were writing to strangers, but rather to friends.

We realise the importance of sustaining the general fund and the desirability that the annual church collection should be devoted to this fund. But should the church rest satisfied with this? If in addition to the annual collection, some of the ladies of the church who have leisure and missionary zeal would go to the pastor and officers, and, after securing their permission, make a personal canvas of the church members with a view to securing pledges toward the support of a missionary of their own Board, who would thus become their own personal representative in the foreign field, it is likely that success would attend their efforts, and that many churches, over and above what they are already doing, might each enjoy the blessed privilege of supporting, through the channels of their own denominational Board, their own foreign missionary. Their daily prayers would bring down a blessing not only upon their worker in the foreign field, but upon the home church as well.

Lawlessness.

TO accustom the peoples of the earth to submit to rule without law, there must first be an educational process fitted to produce a state of mind and of public opinion which would consent to lawless rule; and this would best be brought about, and most speedily, by some great object-lessons. At first these lessons would be received with aversion, then with some reluctance, next with cynical indifference, and lastly accepted with selfish acquiescence if they did not touch personal interests. Such lessons are presented to the minds of many peoples to-day; and all over Europe, wherever current events are made public, the nations are receiving this branch of education from many quarters.

Confining ourselves to our own land, mention may be made of the lesson that is taught the British nation to-day by the events in the East—that misrule, rapine, and murder may go on in Turkey unchecked and unpunished by the European Powers; by the lesson of South Africa, where land-grabbing and the mowing down of native tribes by machine guns, or smoking them to death in caves, meet with little rebuke and with no penalty; by the lesson of our Indian Government persisting in the crime of poisoning the Chinese people with opium, a packed Royal Commission having openly incurred the woe which is upon them "who call evil good and good evil." I need not multiply examples.

It must strike the mind of the murderer and the burglar as exceedingly unfair that individual criminals when caught should meet with condign punishment, whilst those who murder, plunder, or poison on a large scale go scot-free; and probably as we get more accustomed to the immunity with which great public criminals pursue their aims, there may spring up a greater tolerance for private and individual transgressors, and ultimately a disposition to abolish our criminal code, with the acknowledgment that there is no such thing as crime which deserves punishment.

The present moment of the world's history is deeply interesting to the student of unfulfilled prophecy. Events seem to be rapidly developing towards the condition of public affairs which will characterize the end of the Christian age. St. Paul told the Thessalonian believers (2 Thess. ii. 7-12),

> The mystery of lawlessness doth already work: only there is one that restraineth now, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall be revealed THE LAWLESS ONE, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to nought by the manifestation of his coming; even he, whose coming is according to the working of Satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceit of unrighteousness for them that are perishing: because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

When, moreover, we read in the Apocalypse that there shall arise ten kings, and that "these have one mind, and give their power and authority unto the beast" (Rev. xvii. 13); when we hear of this "mandate of the Great Powers" endeavouring to give the word of command to the civilised world, we seem to be within measurable distance of the uprising of the great Anti-Christ and the beginning of his awful reign.

Has it ever occurred to your readers that already there may have been born into this world this wonderful being? For aught we know a mother is to-day bending over a lovely boy; or perchance this boy has grown into a clever lad, who takes all the prizes from his competitors; or the lad has become a youth, and in stature and accomplishments, in mental and bodily power, is head and shoulders above all his compeers; and, all unconscious to himself, is preparing for a destiny of greatness, of unchallenged authority, and of capacity to govern mankind, which will eclipse all former world-rulers and leaders of men; to whom the kings of the earth, baffled in their isolated attempts to govern the peoples in that closing age of misrule, will gladly transfer their prerogatives; and who, at a particular stage of his career of unbroken success, in blasphemous travesty of the incarnation of our blessed Lord and Saviour, will be fully possessed by Satan, and display miraculous evidence of the indwelling of the great enemy of God and man.

The climax of human delusion will be his acceptance by the chosen people of God; for as our Saviour told the Jews, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive" (John v. 43). I need not dwell upon the outstanding features of his malignant reign, including his merciless persecution, and endeavours to destroy the Jews when they discover his true character and aims, and refuse to worship the image he will set up.

I close with the affirmation of my conviction that the policy of the world-rulers of to-day in permitting public crime to go unpunished, and the rapid deterioration of society in tolerating licence of every description, are hurrying forward the great catastrophe of this evil age; and these things should warn the Church of God to be on the watch, for "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

J. E. MATHIESON.

Day and Night.

MORN by morn my heart awakes
To the world's discordant din;
But a silent music makes
The Eternal Voice within!

Day by day a path I tread,
Winding through an unknown land;
Shall I falter, being led
By an all-sustaining Hand?

Night by night I sink to sleep
In the everlasting Arms,
Confident their care will keep Me from evil and alarms.

E. G.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson is raising a strong protest against the determination of the Government to force through the bill to relieve the Houses of Parliament from the obligations of the licensing laws. For weeks, he says, the six liquor-bars within the precincts of the House of Commons have been continued, although the illegality of such a course was acknowledged.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—The new report tells of continued ministration to the spiritual requirements of the adult deaf and dumb, and timely temporal relief afforded to many deserving cases whilst temporarily out of employment. After the deaf and dumb leave school the association provides for their religious instruction by means of services in the finger and sign alphabet. They are also helped in obtaining employment. The secretary is Mr. M. F. G. Henson, Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

I ONCE said to a Christian lady, "Is the Bible really true?" Without a moment's hesitation she answered, "Of course it is true." But when I asked her how she would proceed to prove it to be true, she could not answer me. Could you?

If I were to ask where the Bible came from, who wrote it, and when and where, you might not be able to tell me readily. And yet these questions can be answered by those who take time to study the subjects which they raise.

There are thousands of people all over the world who love the Bible as the best of all books. It is their daily companion and friend. They accept it as the inspired Word of God. They come to it for comfort when they are sad, for guidance when perplexed, and for instruction in those matters of the soul and God which they cannot obtain elsewhere. It has quickened them into new life, and been to them one of God's agents in kindling on the altar of their hearts those flames of immortal glory which reach beyond the bounds of time. It inspires many of them to deeds of love and sacrifice, which make the world richer and better. The poor among them read it, and learn to sing songs of joy and gladness in their poverty. The rich among them read it, and many of them discover that they are stewards for God and that the gold and silver which they hold belong to Him. The tempted and the tried among them find it a source of new strength and hope.

And yet many of them could not answer my questions. It is to help such as these that I write these pages. I want them to know that the Bible which we have is the same which our Lord and his Apostles and the Christians in the first century had.

There is one thing of which we are all sure—the Bible is here. Wherever it came from, whoever made it, we possess it. True or false, good or bad, of men or of God, inspired or uninspired, it is among us.

Our fathers had it before us. Their copies of the Scriptures are in our possession, not a few of them marked and made precious with the tears they shed upon the pages, darkened with the breath of their prayers. Their fathers had it too. In order to discover its truth, we will TRACE IT BACK TO ITS SOURCE.

The River Thames flows through London. It bears on its bosom the ships of all nations, which carry the merchandise of the world. Below London it flows into the ocean, and puts us in touch with all parts of the globe. It is interesting to follow it backward, and see it as it flows through quiet valleys, past ancient cities and many a mile of peaceful scenery. Londoners do not like their old river any the less when they discover that it has its rise as a small stream among the distant hills, and grows to be the noble river it is as it passes London after many other rivers and streams have flowed into it. In like manner, we shall love our Bible no less, but more, when we know how it came into the world and grew to be the noble book it is.

I shall have to take you on journeys to different cities and distant lands. We shall have to visit many libraries, examine old books and parchments, consult ancient records, and peep into some churches venerable with age. We shall have to visit ancient monasteries, and sit beside some of the old monks who are now safe in the better land.

We want to know, as far as we can learn, how to answer the following questions:—

I.—Is my Bible really true?

II.—Where did our Bible come from?

III.—Is our Bible the same which the ancient Christians daily read?

IV.—Is the Old Testament which we peruse the same which our Lord had?

V.—Is the New Testament which is in our hands the same which was in the hands of the Apostles and their friends and followers before the first century had closed?

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Bible which our Lord possessed was the book we know and love as the Old Testament. Before his crucifixion there was not a single book of the New Testament in existence. The Bible which Jesus was taught to read as a child by that marvellous mother of his, who was steeped in the religious writings of her people, was the same old book which pious English mothers teach their children to read in these days. The stories of Joseph and his coat of many colours, his slave and prison life in Egypt, and his exaltation to the place of command; of Samuel in the Tabernacle at Shiloh called up in the night by the voice of God; of David and his sling and stone with which he brought down the giant Goliath of Gath—these stories filled the young mind and heart of the boy of Nazareth just as they do our boys to-day in England and all over the world where our Bible is known.

If the Old Testament could be traced no further back than the hands of Jesus Christ, his possession of it would furnish all the proof many would need. I shall, however, ask you to go with me much beyond the first of the Christian centuries; but we must take one step at a time, and make as sure as we can of our footing at each stride we take.

Anyone who will take up a reference Bible will very soon find out that our Lord, also John, Luke, Mark, Paul, and the other New Testament writers, had the same book which we prize. They are constantly referring to it and quoting it. Let us see what use they made of it.

All the writers of the New Testament refer to the Old Testament, and they quote from most of its books. There are in the New Testament 190 references to the five books of Moses, 101 references to the book of Psalms, 104 references to the book of Isaiah, and thirty references to minor prophets. There are in the New Testament some 639 references to the Old. These 639 references are spread over the entire New Testament, for there is no Gospel and scarcely an Epistle which omits quoting or referring in some shape. In the four Gospels there are 191 references; fifty-two in the Acts; sixty-seven in Romans; and so on all through the rest of the books.*

It will at once be obvious that when we take up our Bible, and turn to read in the earlier portion of it, our eyes fall upon the same histories, prophecies, and poems that Christ's eyes rested upon.

WHEN WE SIT IN CHURCH, and hear the lessons of the day from Genesis, Isaiah, or the Psalms, we listen to the same truths which the Apostles and their Divine Master read in the ancient Jewish synagogues and expounded to the people. We may with safety conclude that the Old Testament we have is the same which the Lord Himself used.

In next article we will take a step further back still.

A Needy Village.—An adjoining parish to Elstow of cherished memory is Harrowden, a hamlet containing a population of 300 people. The nearest church or meeting house is two miles distant, and the same for day-schools. For over 100 years cottage services have been held under the same roof and the same family. A long-felt want has been a mission hall to carry on the Gospel services, Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and other agencies for the well-being of the people. Mr. S. Whitbread has promised a piece of land on which to erect a village hall. The people all around are of the labouring class, and can render no financial assistance. Any help will be gladly received by W. H. Smith, evangelist, Cotton End, Bedford.

* For details see Angus's Bible Handbook (page 333) (Religious Tract Society).

With "the Midnight Sun."

THE NEW POMPEII.

ALL who go to old Pompeii do not see the New Pompeii, Valle di Pompei, a village fast growing into a town, around the new and sumptuous "Sanctuary of Our Lady of the Rosary," a church of miracles and marvels after the manner of Lourdes, of whose conception and origin I tell the tale as 'twas told to me.

After some not very creditable experiences, an Italian avocat, Bartolo Longo, married a wealthy countess. An ecclesiastic said to Mr. Bartolo Longo, "Why do you not get up a Lourdes?" The avocat replied that he knew nothing about such things. The priest told him that he could do the business part, and leave the rest to him. The first thing was to get a picture. The avocat sought out his confessor, and told him what had been proposed, and asked him where he could get a picture, for which he expected to pay about 400 lire. His confessor said he could get one that would do well for three lire (half-a-crown). I need not tell the grotesque story of the old picture which lay among the lumber in a convent, and which was brought to Valle di Pompei in a cart, to form the foundation of the Italian Lourdes.

"It was on the evening of Monday, November 13, 1875, that four persons in a poor and dilapidated church, which bore the name of the parish de Vallé, awaited the arrival of a picture. A cart, heavily laden, stopped before the door, and the conductor let down from the top of a load of manure, enveloped in rags, the expected object. But when it was uncovered the assistants could not repress a smile of disappointment, the features of the Virgin and those of the two saints on their knees at her sides, being so rude and shapeless.

"Among those present was an obscure layman. It was he who had procured the picture, with the intention of gathering round the mother of the poor and afflicted, the scattered inhabitants of the district, and to induce them to recite the rosary at her feet. But the canvas was found too miserable to serve this end; it was then confided to two painters, who undertook to restore it."

"Seventeen years after, this image, which had been bought for three and a-half francs from a dealer in antiquities, now retouched by practised hands, took its place on a throne of bronze, of marble, and of gold, which the joint action and piety of sixty thousand believers in all parts of the world had erected for it, and received the homage of millions of hearts, who, from all sides, addressed to it their prayers and their sighs. Upon this canvas glittered stones and diamonds of great value, like so many eloquent voices attesting that even now, in the nineteenth-century, God is willing to succour humanity through the intercession of the mother of his Divine Son."

Such is the account given by "the worthy lawyer" himself, who has been the chief agent in foisting this gigantic imposture on the world. Whether the canvas was brought out of the lumber-room of a convent, or bought for something less than three shillings from an old curiosity shop, matters little. In Acts xix. we read how Demetrius the silversmith called together his fellow-craftsmen who made silver shrines for Diana, and said, "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. Moreover, ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they are no gods which are made with hands: so that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth."

There are many points of resemblance, but where the resemblance fails it is not in favour of the nineteenth century. The image of Diana of the Ephesians was declared by the town clerk to have fallen down from Jupiter; the tableau of Our Lady of the Rosary at Pompei had a very much less honourable origin. The magnificence of the image set up by the "obscure laïque," which all New Pompeii and the world worships, is probably far inferior to that of the Ephesian Diana, but it is a painfully instructive object-lesson that in the nineteenth century an idolatry should be practised so similar to that of the dark centuries before Christ came as the Light and Life of men.

AT OLYMPIA.

On a long trip such as this, it occasions some little thought to many how to beguile away the hours that intervene between one port and another—sometimes two or three days at a time. The leisure for reading is of course invaluable, nor is the intercourse of passengers hitherto strangers to each other the least agreeable and instructive feature of the voyage. Various games are also in vogue by day, though such as are practicable on shipboard are naturally limited in scope and number. Deck-cricket, with appropriate modifications of the accepted rules, is as exciting as any, and affords diversion to spectators and players alike, the performances of the ladies being highly creditable—and they are not all juveniles either. In the evenings, concerts, organised or impromptu, and lectures upon scenes to be visited, are pleasant and profitable recreations.

EXCAVATIONS AT OLYMPIA.

Of the latter the first was given by Rev. Dr. Moule, of Cambridge, in view of our approaching arrival at Katakolo, on the western coast of Greece, distant a few miles from Olympia, famous as the scene of the celebrated Games. His historical survey of those wondrous rites—for rites they were, being essentially of religious as well as political significance, and characterised by many sacrifices—was interesting in the extreme, but to reproduce it at any length would, unfortunately, outrun the limits of these notes. Suffice it to say that these remarkable festivals held in honour of the god Zeus, or Jupiter, were first organised in the year 776 B.C., recurring every fourth year under varying conditions until the end of the fourth century A.D. The month in which the celebration took place was made the occasion of universal peace throughout the empire, and to whatever Grecian State a visitor came his person was held inviolable. The admixture of religious ceremony and athletic sport was not the least curious feature; so much so that some of Pindar's passages in praise of the games have been humorously described as "a judicious blending of Bell's Life and The Christian Year"! Yet, like many other facts in history, it tends to show the extent to which the religion of the ancients—mistaken though it was—influenced their daily life. Their gods and goddesses were real enough to them, and dominated their thoughts and actions in a degree which may often put many professing Christians to shame.

On the other hand, when the spirit of professionalism gradually gained the ascendency, the Games (in which in the earlier days only competitors of unblemished character were allowed to take part) began to degenerate. Hence, in one of the dramas of Euripides we find such a passage as this (translated freely by Dr. Moule):—

> Of all the thousand ills that Greece is heir to,
> No ill, methinks, out-ills the tribe athletic;
> Athletes—they neither care to learn right living,
> Nor could learn if they would; for tell me, prythee,
> Slaves to their teeth, and captives of the belly,
> How could they win a goal beyond their fathers?
> They knew not how to endure life's real ills;
> They but store up at last a cheerless age.
> Why toil to hold for them high festival?
> Rather prepare ye olive coronets
> For loyal sons, for citizens who serve
> Their country, and for children of the Muse.

This led the way for some practical remarks, in which the lecturer showed the danger of an exaggerated enthusiasm for physical exercises as not developing the best or most important side of character. Ever must be borne in mind the highest function of the body, that of a temple of the Spirit. He then enumerated the more important of St. Paul's references to the Games, as indicating his frequent use of them as illustrations of spiritual things. Here are a few:—

"Crown of rejoicing" (1 Thess. ii. 19). "Crown of righteousness" (2 Tim. iv. 8), referring to the laurel-wreath with which the victors were crowned.

"That the Word of God may have free course and be glorified" (2 Thess. iii. 1).

"Ye did run well" (Gal. v. 7). See also Gal. ii. 2. "Striving together" (Phil. i. 27), "conflict" (30); "not run in vain neither laboured" (ii. 16), "I have not yet taken the prize, but am following on, if I may apprehend," etc. (iii. 12-14). So also such passages as Col. i. 29; ii. 1, 18; iii. 15; 1 Tim. iv. 10; vi. 11, 12; 2 Tim. ii. 5; iv. 7, 8; Heb. xii. 1, and others.

With thoughts directed into such a channel, we paid a visit next day to Olympia, and surveyed the ruins of the once famous edifices. For centuries they have lain buried, and only in the last twenty years, under the auspices of German enterprise, has any part of them been laid bare. The calamities which Nature thrust upon the district were remarkable. Earthquakes, landslips from Mount Kronos, inundations of the rivers Kladeos and Alpheios, each in turn contributed its forces to the general destruction, while successive floods buried the ruins deeper and deeper beneath layers of sand and soil. From time to time Christian populations settled there, using such of the materials at hand as could be utilised for houses, fortifications, churches, etc.; but one by one all have had to yield to the demands of age and time. Now the spectacle reminds one of Byron's lines:—

> Two or three columns and many a stone,
> Two or three columns with grass overgrown.
> Out upon Time it will leave no more
> Of the things to come than the things before.
> Out upon Time that for ever will leave
> Enough of the past for comfort to grieve.

ATHENS.

Here it was a relief to exchange our floating home for a stay of two days on shore. For this we were prepared by another of Dr. Moule's instructive lectures.

The first evening we looked up our friend Dr. Kalopothakes, well known as a representative of Greece upon the Evangelical Alliance. He has an excellent Evangelical work in progress, not only in the city but with out-stations at Piræus, Salonica (in Macedonia), Janina (Epirus), and Volo (Thessaly), where mission churches are carried on after the Presbyterian order. There is also an interesting work among children; and a large organisation for printing and distributing tracts, 2000 each of twenty or thirty new kinds being circulated yearly. There are also six or eight colporteurs engaged in Bible work in the above-named districts and the island of Crete.

Early in the morning our party, divided into groups, set out with guides to see the chief sights of this now beautiful, if modern, city. Of course perfection is found in no man, and in even a guide linguistic capacity must have its limits. Hence it often required pretty close listening to make out his "interpretation." It does not do to follow first impressions too closely, as for example when told that a certain place was "taken by the Turkeys," or that a temple was erected in honour of "Jew and other goats" (for which please understand "Zeus and other gods!") It was also interesting to be assured that "Everything Christian belong to time after Christ!" But preferring to see a few points of interest thoroughly than many in a cursory manner, we wended our way to the Acropolis independently. Here we found a little man who, if diminutive in body, was well developed in intelligence, and entrusted ourselves to him for guidance. He had his own methods, holding conversations between himself and imaginary tourists in question and answer form, which were as instructive as they were entertaining.

How readily might one's pen run on to describe the Acropolis ("a rocky plateau of crystalline limestone rising precipitously to a height of about 200 feet"), its ancient temples, marble halls, and imposing columns, Eleusis, and a score of other wondrous spots which played a stirring part in old-world history. But by many hands and in many volumes this has been well and thoroughly done. What a marvellous blending the city presents of the ancient and the modern, the religious and the profane, the trivial and the sublime, the majesty of the past and the vigorous life of the present. With what wondrous skill, unknown to this generation with all its machinery, were those gigantic stones moved, prepared, and placed in position, the Parthenon alone including sixty-two large and thirty-six small columns, and what they counted "small" may well be deemed immense by us. Our guide naïvely assured us that "plenty slaves" were employed for the work, "but only the architects received the money." Evidently the labour problem was less acute in those days than in ours! Full of interest too, is the extensive museum, containing innumerable relics of the past in noble statuary, exquisite pottery, elaborate sarcophagi, and even cases of the children's toys of olden time.

Of course, a question of primary interest to us was, "Where did St. Paul stand to deliver his ever famous speech recorded in Acts xvii.?" With a mysterious whisper, "Com wis me, I show you," our Zaccheus led us to a rocky height below the Acropolis which bears the name of Hill of Mars, or the Areopagus. Whether it was upon this eminence or, as others have thought, in the old market-place below, of which a portion is pointed out, that the Apostle stood, he would be equally in view of the mighty temples which formed the text of his discourse; and there seems no valid reason for doubting the former site as the true one.

The part the city is now playing in the history of the day is better known perhaps by friends at home, with newspapers freely at their disposal, than to birds of passage like ourselves; and this has been dealt with in a preceding paper. By the curious convergence of circumstances, our next port of call was Constantinople—equally concerned in the present political troubles—which will form the subject of the next letter.

G. E. Morgan.

[2171]

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, March 28.

"How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land."—Psa. cxxxvii. 4.

THE Hebrew singers were famous far beyond the limits of Israel. It is not surprising, therefore, that their captors asked of them the songs of Zion, little weening that there was an insuperable incongruity between those holy songs which were associated with the Temple service, and the strange surroundings of idolatrous Babylon. The Lord's song does not befit the strange land. How true this is of the minstrelsy of the heart. Chide it though you may, for its silence, it must remain dumb so long as you are carried captive by the powers of evil.

You have ceased singing lately. The joy of your religious life has vanished. You pass through the old routine, but without the exhilaration of former days. Can you not tell the reason? It is not because your circumstances are depressed, though they may be, for Paul and Silas sang praises to God in their prison. Is not disobedience at the root of your songlessness? In some respect you are out of touch with God. You have allowed some little rift to come within the lute of your life, which has been slowly widening, and now threatens to silence all. And you never will be able to resume that song until you have put away the evil of your doing, and have returned from the land of the enemy.

The return from Babylon has its duplicate in many a life. In answer to prayer our captivity is turned again as the stream from the south. Delivered out of the land of strangers we again take up the harp of praise.

MONDAY, March 29.

"The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me."—Psa. cxxxviii. 8.

What a comfortable assurance! We often despair of ourselves. We awake to see that much on which we have prided ourselves, instead of being gold, silver, and precious stones, was mere wood, hay, and stubble. We discover, as Saul of Tarsus did, that the structure of righteousness which we have been raising is but as dross in the holy eye of God. We find ourselves falling through a bottomless pit of self-despair. Finally, we turn to the Lord Jesus, and say, What we cannot do for ourselves, and what no one can do for us, Thou must undertake. And there steals upon us the comfortable assurance that we have only to be faithful and true to his least prompting, and He will perfect.

What an argument!—First, we plead the mercy of God, the patience that endures for ever, never surprised, never surrendering its cherished purpose, never renouncing heart and hope, but always enduring amid rebuffs of neglect and the proud rebellion of self-will. Because Thy love is without measure or end, we believe that Thou wilt yet be conqueror, O Christ! Thou wilt have thy way. We despair of ourselves. We hope infinitely in thy mercy. Secondly, we may plead that we are the works of his own hands, Has he done so much and will He not finish? Has He implanted an hunger that He will not satisfy. Has He led to the point of Pisgah vision and will He not give the land? A mother might forsake her child, but God cannot forsake those whom He has made the subjects of his thought and care.

TUESDAY, March 30.

"See if there be any way of grief in me."—Psa. cxxxix. 24 (R.V., marg.).

The A.V. says "wicked way"; but the R.V. marg. gives "way of grief." We may be in a way that causes God grief, even though it is not what men might term a way of wickedness. We may be grieving our blessed Lord more than we know, substituting an ideal religious standard, or absorption in his work, or the conception which our friends persist in holding concerning us, for that direct personal fellowship with Himself, which alone is religion. Ah! how much we may have grieved the Spirit of Christ! Not always consciously. Often in pleading for us, the Lord must needs say, "Forgive, they know not what they do." But we are unwilling that that dear Heart should suffer, or that Face be overcast with grief, because of our waywardness; therefore we say, "Search us and know us; try us and show us the ways of grief." Be prepared for his revelations, searching and startling. Be prepared to have the fabric on which you have prided yourself burnt up, that He may build from the bottom.

Lord! That is what we want. We have been going in ways of grief. We desire to go in the way everlasting—the way of eternal life, the way which we shall never need to retrace, the way that touches the deepest life possible to the creature. But we cannot find it for ourselves, nor even see the next step, therefore we stretch out poor, groping hands, and cry, "Lead us, as a woman may lead her blind child. We do not ask to see the distant way. Show us the next thing, and the next, and the next, till thy grief is turned to gladness.

WEDNESDAY, March 31.

"O God, the Lord, the strength of my salvation, Thou hast covered mine head in the day of battle.—Psa. cxl. 7.

All day long the fight has waxed fierce against the hardly-pressed soldier. The very sky has seemed darkened with flights of arrows, and the enemy has raged like a tornado amid the reeds on the river's brink. The fiery darts of venomous darts and sarcasm, have been like a storm of hail, and yet the lonely warrior has not succumbed. To himself, and to all others, his escape has been marvellous. How could it be accounted for, except that an unseen shield had been around him, covering his head in the day of battle.

Ah, beloved soul, God is not only the strength of thy salvation, but He is also the covert, the panoply, the shield on which the malice of the foe expends itself in vain. Be quiet. Let not thy heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. There is but one matter for which thou needest to care. Always be ranged on God's side. There is no promise of security to those that go to the warfare on their own charges.

As David anticipated the mischief of violent men who gathered themselves together for war, and sharpened their tongues like a serpent, it was a consolation to look back upon past deliverances. What God had done He would do again, so that the righteous might give thanks, and the upright dwell in his presence. God's covering in the day of battle makes a temple amid its tumult, in which the soul dwells as in the Divine Presence Chamber.

THURSDAY, April 1.

"Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be as oil upon the head."—Psa. cxli. 5.

David confessed his indebtedness to those who had reproved him. He realised how much he owed them. We ought to consider one another and have a care for each other's growth in grace. It is the duty of every true-hearted child of God to arrest another in some way which is inconsistent with the honour of the family. We have to wash one another's feet, and may perform an inestimable benefit in graciously indicating some fly in the ointment of our religious profession.

But perhaps there is nothing which needs greater grace. We are so apt to be censorious, to lord it over the one whom we rebuke, to pride ourselves on our superiority, to be so taken up with another's life as to miss God's best for ourselves. It is said that some persons wash the saints' feet in scalding water. David says, Let the righteous smite me. You cannot lift a man higher than you are. You must take the beam out of your eye, before you can take the mote out of your brother's.

It needs some amount of grace also to accept reproof. The head is rather inclined to refuse it, and to take itself out of the way of the well-meaning adjusting hand. We resent interference. We do not care to be found out. But if, by God's grace, we can and do accept the smiting and reproof, we shall find that they become as fragrant oil. The fresh anointing which you seek in the morning, may come not in rapt emotional experiences, but in the straight dealing of some fellow-disciple.

FRIDAY, April 2.

"When my spirit was overwhelmed within me, Thou knowest my path."—Psa. cxlii. 3.

Of course, God knows our path. We were created unto good works which God before prepared that we should walk in them. There is no step in your path which has not been anticipated and ordained by your Heavenly Father. See that path lying across the plain of life, now traversing deserts of sand, or climbing steeps of difficulty, or reaching across lonely steppes. Your heart faints (see marg.); you say, I cannot take this track, I cannot go through that experience, I cannot bear that strain. Heart and flesh fail. Then it is an infinite solace to look up into the face of the Father, and say, Before I was born, or took the first steps on this path, or essayed to meet its manifold vicissitudes, Thou knewest it, and Thou must have known that it was not too much, that there were resources of strength in Thyself sufficient for my day, which the emergency would bring out in a clearer manifestation.

Jesus knows, knows the difficulties which you cannot explain to the dearest, the grave perplexities which you cannot share with your wisest confidant. He can allow for a hesitance, a trepidation, a shrinking back, which to others are unaccountable. He can give credit for the resolution that is sorely tested, and the faith which nearly gives out. He can take into account matters which evade the scrutiny of those who have the best opportunity of judging. What a relief to turn from them to Him, and say, I cannot tell them, but Thou knowest.

SATURDAY, April 3.

"In thy sight shall no man living be justified."—Psa. cxliii. 2.

This is an admission which each must make for himself. Man by nature is very willing to justify himself. The essence of the Pharisees' sin consisted in justifying themselves in the sight of men. But God knows our hearts, and that which is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God. We need to have a deeper sense of God's holiness, and of his requirements as set forth in his holy law. We need more particular preaching and teaching. I was interested recently to hear of one who said she did not want to know of God because she did not want to know her own sinfulness. If men did know God, they would be compelled to admit their inability to be just with Him. It is our duty to force the knowledge of God on the unwilling conscience of men.

But probably what we all need as preachers and teachers is to get a glimpse of God's nature, to know what holiness is, and purity, and righteousness, as they exist in the Divine nature. We do not know the sinfulness of sin, and cannot enforce it, because we have not come in contact with the burning bliss of the Great White Throne.

We are justified by faith. Directly we are joined to Christ, we stand before the law of God clothed in his righteousness, and accepted not only as forgiven sinners, but as righteous. We know that God will never enter into judgment with us, since we were judged in our Substitute. There will be a judgment of our works, but there can be no condemnation of our persons. It is God that justifies. Who shall condemn? F. B. M.

A Mission in Belfast.

THE City of Belfast has, in common with other cities, many black spots; perhaps one of the darkest is that known as the Shankill Road District; it is flooded with the drink and all other attendant curses. The Gospel is preached in many parts almost every evening. Churches and institutions are doing good work for its reclamation, but a greater effort is still needed. Rev. Henry Montgomery has responded to the call, and formulated a scheme for mission work, perhaps more extensive in its scope than any in the city.

This scheme was commenced last spring, and an ample plot of ground secured, on which it is proposed to erect extensive mission buildings. The central feature of the buildings will be a large hall, capable of seating about 2000, with all conveniences for Gospel and evangelistic work. Accommodation will also be given for the following departments of Christian service, besides the large hall:—Boys and girls' clubs; a medical dispensary for the poor, where free advice and medicine will be dispensed, and a simple Gospel message given to the patients; a Residential Settlement for Christian workers, where ladies and gentlemen residing can receive instruction in Bible truth and cognate subjects, in order to fit them for missionaries either at home or abroad. The scheme also includes a Night Shelter and Lodging-house, where clean comfortable beds may be had. There will be a Store and Soup Kitchen, where good nourishing food may be obtained; and also a Labour Bureau, to enable those making a fresh start in life to find work.

Last summer a tent was erected on the ground, in which for over seven weeks, Sabbath and week-day alike, crowded audiences met every night to hear the Gospel message.

A slight cessation was made in these services in the autumn, but since then in one form and another they have continued regularly. Those who have formed the bulk of this congregation have been the very class the mission was designed to reach—men and women who have no church connexion and who have been truly living "without God and without hope in the world."

THE DRUNKEN AND THE DESTITUTE

have been present both nights; in a large proportion of cases the women come bonnetless, with only a shawl for their headgear; and the men have given many tokens that they came from the lowest class. Many of the children, lads, and lasses who come nightly are innocent of boots. Crowding round the gas-stoves with their bare feet they form a striking picture of what sin in the father and mother will bring the children to.

Every night the tent has been open there have been many anxious inquirers. Men and women under the influence of drink have been sobered and led to cry for deliverance from their enemy. Many sad stories have been told by these victims. Although the work has only been inaugurated a few months, some of the most active helpers are those who were rescued from the thraldom of drink through its agency. During the past months hundreds have been personally dealt with, and in a large number of cases the change of life is a known fact in the neighbourhood. An effort has been made as far as possible to follow up those spoken to, and several thousand letters have been personally delivered by workers of the mission.

The Gospel services conducted every week-night are of a very simple character, and calculated to reach the poorer class, many of whom have come to look on the tent as their nightly club, in the place of the public-house where they used to revel in their drunken days. On Saturday evenings the meeting takes the form of "Testimony" from those who have found salvation in the tent, and these services have revealed both the tremendous depths to which a man can sink when under the influence of drink and also the wondrous change which the Holy Spirit of God entering into a man's life can make. Those who had fallen literally from high positions to the gutters under its influence are now clothed and in their right mind, earnestly proclaiming the Gospel message to others still in sin. The Sabbath services are held at hours that do not interfere with the ordinary church services, in the afternoon at 2.45 and in the evening at 8.15. Large and attentive gatherings listen to the Gospel message, and a characteristic feature of these services is the presence of a large number of anxious inquirers who come to the tent expecting to find salvation.

Although the Mission has for its main aim "soul-winning," there have been many cases of the sick and dying in the neighbourhood who have sent for someone to visit them; those who have heard the Word of God and received a Gospel message in their own home. The winter months have revealed a large amount of sickness. About a dozen of those who have been reached through the work of the Mission have gone into the presence of the Saviour they learned to love; the bright joy in the presence of death of those quite recently brought to Christ has been a glad testimony to the work of the Holy Spirit. In the district visiting whole families have been found living, practically destitute, in a single room; these have been relieved as far as possible.

At Christmas time about 500 or 600 parcels of provisions were distributed to needy families in the neighbourhood, and since then several Free Suppers have been given. These have been a sad revelation of the terrible of myriads in the city. These sweltering masses of helpless, hopeless, sin-ruined men and women, numbering 700 or 800 on each occasion, are almost cut off from ordinary church influences.

POVERTY AND SQUALOR AND MORAL RUIN

On a recent Saturday night a new movement was inaugurated. A special effort was made to reach the drunken and half-drunken men and youths in their semi or wholly intoxicated condition, and to speak to them kindly, pointing out their sin, and telling them of the great Deliverer. A little before 10 o'clock the workers gathered in the tent at the close of the early testimony meeting, and after a time of earnest prayer sallied forth in couples up and down the road. In a few minutes they returned with one, two, three, and sometimes more drunken men. No formal service was possible, and the fifty or sixty who were thus brought in were dealt with individually. Some were noisy, others argumentative; not a few were broken down and sobered, and, it is believed, brought under the conviction of sin. There were present the hoary sinner, ashamed to give the fag end of a lost life to the Saviour; the middle-aged, long pursuing the course of habitual drunkenness; the young artisan, the pride of the bar-room, good at singing and at public-house repartee; and the mere lad, muddled and stupefied through imitating his seniors. All these gathered into the tent between 10.30 and 12.15.

The principle on which these men were led astray was that on which we got them to the meeting, viz., that men are often easily led. Some were there who were backsliders, and remembrance of former days and godly upbringing pierced them with remorse. Some were filled with despair—"No, it is no use: I have tried often before, let me alone." But the Gospel message is equal to the worst of sinners, and it was the only cure offered. Various trophies of the campaign remained at the close in the shape of broken whisky bottles, discarded pipes, etc. Several of those dealt with were visited in their own homes the following Sabbath morning; quite a number found their way to the evening service, and professed to come out clearly for the Lord.

One tall fellow stood up, and asked the meeting to pray that God would strengthen him and give him grace to overcome. He said he had, almost for the first time in his life, opened a Bible and read it all day. The band of workers parted in the early hour of that bright calm Sabbath morning filled with gratitude to God, that He had given an additional opportunity of bringing the Gospel to bear on those "who are out of the way"; and with a deeper hatred in their hearts towards the damning drink, which had wrought such moral and material havoc upon those with whom they had spent so strange, so sad, and yet so hopeful a night.

This effort, to which Mr. Montgomery has been called of God, is a truly noble one; the results already experienced prove not only the need of such a mission, but the certainty that when the work is carried on in the power of the Holy Spirit, the sinning and lost can be reached and raised to the position of honourable and Christ-like citizens.

Belfast. W. J. W. Roome.

Liverpool Strangers' Rest.

THE twentieth anniversary of this well-known effort for the well-being of sailors—with which the late beloved Reginald Radcliffe was so closely associated, and in which his widow still renders invaluable service—was held on Friday afternoon in the hall, 24, Park-lane, just opposite the great Sailors' Home. Mr. J. F. W. Agnew presided, and spoke briefly on the importance of such endeavours to save seamen from the innumerable temptations to which they are exposed in port. God, he was thankful to know, had greatly used this work in the salvation of sinners and in the reclamation of backsliders.

The report presented by Mr. T. A. Leigh stated that:—The Spirit of God has been manifestly at work, especially amongst the emigrants. The meetings were so large that, during the hot weather, services were held in the courtyards of the boarding houses, and also in the houses themselves, our rooms at the Rest not being large enough to accommodate the numbers who gathered to hear the old, old story in their native tongue. Two young women who found the Lord at one of these gatherings wrote afterwards, telling us that when they went on board they had daily meetings with other Christians, and many were brought to know Jesus. Interesting details follow of work among the Scandinavians, Spanish (largely from South America with cattle ships), Germans, Jews, and other nationalities. During the year 362 meetings were held in the English language. Large numbers of tracts have been distributed, stamped with the Strangers' Rest stamp, amongst the flatmen, labourers at the docks, cabmen, etc. Several interesting cases of blessing are also recorded.

An ex-monk, from the south of England, was passing the Rest one day, when he was given two tracts, which he accepted and read. He was so impressed that he returned, and for four consecutive days he came to hear the Gospel. On the fourth day he was brought to the knowledge of his Saviour. He has since frequently visited the Rest, and is now rejoicing in the truth. A young Scotchman, who had lost both father and mother, and was left for the first time without a home, came to the Rest, and at one of Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe's meetings found he had a Saviour to care for him, and an eternal home. He said he had been "tossed about," and had come to Liverpool seeking work. He has since gone back to Glasgow, where he has found employment, and writes—"that the peace of God he found at the Strangers' Rest fills his soul." These are but gleanings from an interesting and suggestive report.

Rev. John McNeill followed with a ringing address on Helpers in the War, showing how all believers are expected to bear a hand in making known the Gospel, and calling especially for helpers in this great work amongst men who have to face constant peril, and who, when on shore, are confronted with many and insidious [illegible]

Rev. J. McNeill in Liverpool.

By a Special Correspondent.

A STREET incident is often rich in suggestion to him who has eyes to see. So I found it one day last week on reaching Liverpool. Walking up Ranelagh-street I noticed a hansom rattling down. The horse lost its footing on the steep incline, slipped, and fell, when who should jump out from the hansom but Mr. McNeill himself, and in a trice he was holding down the horse's head. Infra dig. it might have seemed to some, but he did it as to the manner born. Knowing his habit of using passing incidents to point his theme, one was not the least surprised to hear the street episode referred to an hour later, in his talk to City men, though the preacher did not tell his hearers that he himself was the first to grip the nervous animal's head.

This midday business-men's gathering has unmistakably taken hold in Liverpool. The City Hall, Eberle-street, in which it has been held for two weeks, is right in the heart of the commercial life of the city. The audience is of the right stamp—keen, pushing men of business, and their smart young clerks, or, as one of the Liverpool papers put it last week, "big bugs and minor magnates of stocks and futures." Time in the middle of the day is very precious in this bustling place, hence the service is sharp and business-like. After a hymn and prayer by some member of the committee, Mr. McNeill plunges into his theme without preface or preliminary. Day after day he has made Old Testament incidents live anew as up-to-date, present lessons for daily life.

David and those who gathered around him in his rejection formed the basis of these racy talks for the most part of the week. Nor did the preacher mince matters. "One would think some of them were nothing but money-bags, and the evidence was that they were not much more. Mere stocks and shares! And that some of the young fellows he was addressing thought of nothing but pleasure and worldliness, and worse things. Some of them even tried to lisp infidelity and talk the current atheism of the day. But anyone with a sharp eye could notice they did it badly—their mouth was not built that way. He was striking hard, but it was above the belt. There were two kinds of hypocrites in Liverpool. There was the man who pretended to be a Christian when he was not, and there was the other man who pretended to the world that he was nothing but an utter worldling when he was not. Deep down in their heart, covered it might be with tons of rubbish and sin, they believed in Christianity, that Jesus Christ was the Son of God and the only Saviour, and he should not wonder that behind all their bluff they had a sneaking belief they would come to Him yet. All they wanted was to have the courage of their deepest, inborn, inbred convictions, and they would be bright Christians in twenty-four hours. If all professing Christians had the courage of their convictions, it would bring about the biggest revival they had ever known in their time."

The address on Friday, a ringing call to the feeble and fainting, was based on the incident at Dothan, when Elisha's servant beheld, with terrified amaze, the Syrian hosts surrounding the city, in order to capture his master. The cure in this case was opened eyes to see the hosts of God. So when all seems lost, and the enemy presses in like a flood, we need but the opened eyes to see that God is our refuge and strength, and that the angel of the Lord encampeth about them that fear Him.

WHEN FAITH IS FLICKERING,

There is every evidence that these midday talks, plain, straightforward, and full of Gospel power, have reached many hearts, and compelled not a few to surrender to Christ.

In the evening I found my way to Hengler's Circus, in West Derby-road, guided thereto by the streams hurrying thitherward. I arrived half an hour before the time of service, but already the great area and balcony were filled, while the capacious gallery was filling fast. Quarter of an hour later not a vacant seat was visible in the vast building, while the promenades were lined. Round the evangelist's platform sat a host of leaders in Christian work, men and women who have been praying and labouring for this Gospel campaign. The strong and effective choir which has rendered good service during the mission, speaks volumes for the unsectarian character of the movement, numbering as it does representatives of all the denominations. Yet more obviously was this general consent of the Christians of Liverpool in this united mission evidenced by the presence and sympathy of the leading clergymen and ministers of the city. Archdeacon Madden led in the opening prayer, followed later on by a Methodist minister whose name did not transpire.

Mr. McNeill, fresh from the Strangers' Rest, where he had given a stirring address, said that at the end of an arduous week he had chosen a text which would preach itself—God's closing appeal to the unsaved (Rev. xxii. 17). Come, Come! Come!! His whole plea from first to last was expressed in this invitation, urged, emphasised, and reiterated by telling exhortation and illustration. When, at the finish, he called for some indication of a willingness to accept the proffered grace, hosts of hands were raised in all parts of the building. Many who responded were grey-haired and full of years, but many also were in the vigour and promise of youth. Thus closed, with many tokens of rich blessing, the second week of this mission in the city on the Mersey.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS.

Two great gatherings marked the Lord's Day. In the afternoon the immense building was packed from arena to the topmost promenade, save that the favoured seats right round the preacher's daïs showed a slackening, indicating that those who had filled them night by night were engaged in Christian service, which faithfulness prevented their abandoning to join these stirring meetings. Not that they were missed much, for as Mr. McNeill told his audience plainly, if every Christian, or even professing Christian, were to keep away, there were plenty who needed the Saviour ready to fill the empty seats. The preacher's subject was the woman in Mark xv.—twelve years' weary sickness, no help in man, finding hope, help, and healing in touching the hem of his garment. All this was set forth in the plainest and most direct fashion. Christ can save the most hopeless. He is waiting to save. He is passing by. Who will touch Him now? And when He has been touched by faith, and virtue has gone out of Him, He expects to be confessed. It needs courage, but its reward is great, "Thy faith hath saved thee: Go in peace."

Warned by the afternoon's experience, I was in my place in the evening an hour before the time of service, and even then I found crowds at the doors despairing of gaining admittance. Inside, the place was already well-nigh full, and ere long every corner was packed. The service was started at 6.30, it being hopeless to attempt to get in any more of the disappointed thousands who thronged the street outside. As Mr. McNeill put it, "There are more shut out than there are inside."

The theme of the evening was the Passover. Having read and expounded the story as it is given in Exod. xii., Mr. McNeill said that his business was to show what it is, how it is, where it is, and why it is that the death on the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ does for my soul, endangered by sin and guilt before a holy God, what the blood of the lamb did for the first-born of Israel. Of course, he knew it was not a popular subject, but he was not his own master; it was the preaching God had bidden him preach, and there was the end of it. Salvation from temporal death that night in Egypt and salvation this night in Liverpool can both be described as salvation from impending doom. Further, the salvation effected that awful night and the salvation to be wrought this night can also be described as a deliverance. There is liberation in Christ for the slave of vice, sin, and pride. And moreover then, as now, the impelling force was fear as well as love. Then followed a vigorous and straightforward declaration of the good old-fashioned doctrine of substitution—the innocent taking the place of the guilty. There must we all come; for only thus is there salvation and safety for the lost. The hyssop so essential to the sprinkling of the blood was used by the preacher as a type of faith. "Reject Christ crucified, and you reject your only hope of salvation." The death of Jesus is unique; it is the core of the Gospel. Take that away and there is no Gospel left. With one of his graphic Scotch incidents the preacher riveted these great truths on the hearts of his hearers.

The speaker closed with prayer, adding, "Good-night. Remember you will have to answer for what you have heard this night—if you reject, it is at your peril." The response was an audible sob—for many in the vast assembly seemed moved to the heart.

For the present, the last week, Mr. McNeill has three daily services: City men at 12.30; ladies at 3 p.m. in the Hope Hall; and the Hengler's Circus at 7 p.m.; with besides a daily prayer-meeting in the Common Hall in Hackins Hey.

Famine in India.

SINCE September, 1896, we have received more than 150 children. We have received in all nearly 200. Finding it was impossible to keep all who came to us, we decided to establish in our compound a depôt for the distribution of famine children. We have sent ten girls to a Presbyterian mission, seventeen to our orphanage at Bareilly, and twenty to our school at Cawnpore; and in a few days more we shall send twenty to Ajmere. Our workers in the famine-stricken villages are busy collecting orphan children. Yesterday one native worker brought in thirty-three children, and has returned to his village for more. A few days ago more than fifty girls passed through our station from Jabalpore to our school at Aligarh, and on Tuesday thirty-eight girls were sent on to our orphanage at Bareilly in addition to the above-named. If we had the accommodation we could take hundreds of children. The famine gives a grand opportunity for filling our schools with boys and girls who have not yet been contaminated by heathenism. These children will grow up in the Christian faith, and when trained for work will go back to their villages to bring their relatives to Christ.

This work among famine children is a work of love. Only the love of Christ can help one to do the disagreeable things which must be done. They are brought to us in a terribly filthy condition, and so emaciated that many of them can hardly walk. A physician supplies us with large quantities of fever and other mixtures, and all day long our compound is like a small dispensary. Only six children have died. It is piteous to hear them crying and begging for food, not understanding our kindness in keeping it from them to save their lives. It will be several months before they will be able to take food like healthy children.

When the famine began we had no money for the support of famine children, nor did we know where it was to come from; but week after week, as the children have come to us, God has sent us money through his people in America, England, and the Colonies, and we believe that He will continue to care for his children. The cost of a child's support has gone up from £3 to £4 a year. Those wishing to help us may send money to me direct by foreign post-office money order.

The number of people on Government relief works at present is 2,000,000. The Government is doing a great work in saving life. Thus far we have had no help from any famine funds given to the Government, nor have we asked for any. In addition to supporting children, we are feeding a large number of hungry people in the villages.

Rockwell Clancy.

Allahabad, Feb. 11.

Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross.

WESTBOURNE-GROVE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

WELCOME the coming, speed the parting guest, might have been the motto of London Presbyterians this past fortnight. Last week we recorded the good-bye of our American brother, Dr. Pentecost; this week we have to tell of greetings accorded to a new West-end arrival, a Scotch brother, Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross. From the United Presbyterian Church at Bridge of Allan he has been transplanted to the English Presbyterian Church at Westbourne-grove, which has been vacant for about a year by the retirement of Dr. Walter Morison. Mr. Ross has youth and vigour on his side, and there is every prospect that, under his pastorate, the congregation will secure a fresh lease of activity and prosperity.

The building is somewhat buried from public view, at the end of a cul de sac, leading out of Westbourne-grove. The neighbourhood is a populous one, however, and if this young minister can lay hold on the large numbers of young men and women employed at Whiteley's and other places of business close by, he will render a great public service to the West-end community.

Presbyterian inductions have a good deal of the formal element about them. Of course there is the inevitable sermon; no function of that church would be deemed complete without a set discourse. At Mr. Ross's induction last Friday evening, there was a large attendance of members of Presbytery and of the general public. Among those present it was interesting to see two young fellow-countrymen of the new pastor's, in the persons of Rev. A. Connell, of Regent-square, and Rev. George Macgregor, of Notting-hill—both, if we mistake not, fast friends of Mr. Ross. If the Marylebone congregation will only choose a young Scotchman from the north, we should have the curious and interesting spectacle of four Highlanders, in the heyday of their powers, holding the fort on behalf of the Christian faith, at a cordon of posts, stretching from King's Cross to Kensington.

The sermon by Rev. Henry Norwell, of Islington, was fairly fresh, interesting, and commendably brief. More expectation was aroused by Dr. Oswald Dykes's subsequent Charge to the new pastor. Dr. Dykes never disappoints the hearer; one always gets from him weighty matter and inspiring thoughts, couched in literary dress at once choice, chaste, and cultured. The pith of the Charge lay in the earnest exhortations addressed to Mr. Ross, in terms very brotherly and yet unflinchingly faithful, to uphold the evangelic doctrines of the Gospel, to maintain the spirituality of his individual life, and to show much sympathy with all tried and troubled souls. If Mr. Ross is able to live up to the injunctions laid upon him by his more experienced fellow-Presbyter, there can be no manner of doubt as to his real and lasting success as a spiritual force in the West of London.

On Sunday morning the pulpit was occupied by Dr. George Robson, late of Inverness, and now of Perth. At the close of an excellent sermon on 1 John i. 3, which he described as the motto of the Christian ministry, Dr. Robson "introduced" the new pastor to his flock. He said:—

I need hardly say that in selecting my theme this morning I have desired to aid your thanksgiving for the inauguration this day of a new ministry in the midst of you. It has been the privilege of this congregation to have enjoyed from the beginning of its history a faithful preaching of the Word of Life by ministers whose names have been held in highest honour throughout the church. Among the inherited treasures of my youth was a share in the friendship which subsisted between my sainted father and your first minister, Rev. Dr. King; a man of rare mental gifts, who, by his spiritual enterprise and fervent eloquence, gave permanent impulse and shaping of the highest kind, and in more than one direction, to the life-course of our Scottish Church, before he devoted a portion of his later years to the founding of this congregation. Since my student days I have been favoured with the friendship of him who is now your senior minister, Dr. Walter Morison; looking up to him from the first with an appreciation and esteem which ripened with the years into warm admiration for his intellectual nobility and moral purity. A ministry like his, conveying its message in unwearied toil and joy of strong clear thought, touched with poetic grace and with the fervour of sincere devotion, could not but command the attachment of a flock that felt its worth, and now desires for the faithful labourer, who has withdrawn from the active ministry, a long evening of mellow rest and peace.

And now it is to me an unfeigned pleasure, as well as a high honour, to be associated with the beginning amongst you of the ministry of one who is well worthy to enter into the labours of those honoured men, and who will build on their foundation, while strength is given him, with the skill and power of a true workman of God. I say so with all confidence, for I have known him from his childhood. His father was, in the beginning of my ministry at Inverness, my nearest ministerial brother, whose too early death devolved on me a special care for unwonted promise that showed in his son, even while a child of tender years, and which has been amply fulfilled. Through his school days, at the University, in the Theological Hall he bore a name on which there never once fell a breath of blame. The generous charm of his personality drew to him a growing troop of friends; and ever faithful to his early choice of the ministry as his life-work, he advanced in his education with a rapidity and a power which once and again constrained a halt, until physical strength and the years of his age should come more nearly in line with his intellectual advancement. Of the quality of his ministry I need not speak; he has given proof of it elsewhere; amongst you it will rapidly be made manifest. I am sure that it will be a ministry of life, a ministry of truth, a ministry of love, leading you into fellowship with the Father and the Son, through the declaring unto you of that which he himself hath seen and heard.

(From photograph by Mr. Ramsay, Bridge of Allan, N.B.)

I will venture to add that its distinctive qualities of vivid presentation, of winning persuasiveness, of reverent tenderness, and of self-offering devotion to his theme and to his hearers, while fitted to commend it anywhere, give it a peculiar adaptation to such a sphere as I take this to be; and constrain me to anticipate for it a conspicuous success in gathering men and women into the faith and service of Jesus Christ. For other success than this he will care nothing; this will realise his heart's desire. Let it be your desire also, and let this day register your vow to strive together with him for the winning of it.

Mr. Ross himself preached in the evening to a large and expectant congregation. The sermon afforded ample indication of the qualities referred to by Dr. Robson; and an auspicious commencement was made of a ministry that seems full of the highest promise.

Bells and Their Call.

BELLS are used for many purposes in almost every sphere of earthly life and service. They call us to school; invite us to dinner; remind us of work; ask us to church; warn us of danger; and tell us of death. Bells in their different services illustrate the action and power of the Word of God in its various calls, directions, and warnings. The Bible is full of calls, appeals, and warnings to men in every stage and station of life. Its precious truths sound like the bells of heaven upon earth, calling men to God, home, and rest. Let us see if we can catch the sound of these bells:—

1. The Fire Bell of Warning. "Escape for thy life" (Gen. xix. 17). Danger and Death.

2. The Church Bell of Love. "God so loved the world" (John iii. 16). Love and Life.

3. The Dinner Bell of Grace. "Come, for all things are now ready" (Luke xiv. 14). Grace and Glory.

4. The School Bell of Light. "Learn of Me, etc." (Matt. xi. 29). Light and Learning.

5. The Work Bell of Life. "Son, go work to-day" (Matt. xxi. 28). Sonship and Service.

6. The Golden Bell of Testimony. "A golden bell and pomegranate" (Ex. xxviii. 34). Faithfulness and Fruit.

7. The Passing Bell of Death. "It is appointed unto men once to die" (Heb. ix. 27). Death and Judgment.

Amongst the many wonderful things to be seen at the World's Fair, in Chicago, there was a remarkable bell called Liberty Bell. It was made in the City of Troy, State of New York, and is composed, it is said, of "200,000 historic relics melted down and molten into one." In this extraordinary bell, we are told, there are "filings from chains worn by prisoners in the mines of Kara; the flint-lock from the gun of Jefferson; bits of cannon from the field of Waterloo; twenty things dear to the memory of George Washington; particles from the Vendôme Column; metal mementoes in memory of Lincoln; a cowbell from the home of William Tell; and medals worn by heroes who served under Garibaldi. All these together tell of tyranny, cruelty, and suffering in the generations past, and remind us of the happy change that has come over the spirit of the present age, through the influence of the Gospel of Christ.

There are ten wonderful bells in the belfry of St. Michael's Church, Coventry. In addition to being noted for their purity of tone, these bells are remarkable for their quaint mottoes. The treble bell bears the motto—"Although I am both light and small, I will be heard above you all." The second declares—"If you have a judicious ear, You'll own my voice to be sweet and clear." The third—"Such wondrous power to music given, It elevates the soul to heaven." The fourth—"Whilst thus we join in cheerful sound, May love and loyalty abound." The fifth—"In honour both to God and King, Our voices shall in concert sing." The sixth—"Music is medicine to the mind." The seventh—"Ye ringers all who prize your health and happiness, Be sober, merry, wise, and you'll the same possess." The eighth—"Ye people all that hear me ring, Be faithful to your God and King." The ninth—"In wedlock's bonds all ye who join, With hands and hearts unite; So shall our tuneful tongues combine, To laud the nuptial rite." The Tenor—"I have been called the common bell, To ring when fire breaks out to tell."

These different mottoes describe a combination of qualities and service, and suggest the many excellent features of the Gospel bell of Grace, with its clear sound of truth, its sweet tone of love, its great power of blessing, its cheering notes of grace, its harmonious voice of praise, its heavenly music of joy, its happy ring of life, its glad song of peace, its loud call to glory, and its solemn warning of danger.

Winchester. C. Edwards.

AFRICAN AFFAIRS.

WEST AFRICA.

In a recent letter, Rev. Jas. Johnson, of Lagos, writes :—

At Lagos the Gospel has been extensively preached. A number of converts from the churches take part in witnessing for Christ amongst the people, and urging the claims of the Gospel upon them. Our volunteer evangelists are especially Ibo men, but our efforts have not yielded the results desired and expected. Converts come to us now only by ones and twos. The heathen convicted of the folly and sin of heathenism too often elect to become Mohammedans instead of Christians, because of the less strict demand for self-denial made by Mohammedanism on its professors.

Our greatest difficulty here is Mohammedanism, and I have felt for long that we need to deal more specially with it and employ a special mission agency for it. I have long wished to employ a special evangelist for the Mohammedans. It has not been possible yet to find an earnest evangelist who has some knowledge of Arabic. The prospect has been long on my mind, and I feel that until we adopt something like it, we are playing at the work where Mohammedans are concerned.

I superintend a portion of the Tjeba country, where good work is being done. Converts and enquirers are seeking by themselves to win others. In that territory classes for reading are growing and spreading fast. The northern part of Lagos is altogether untouched. There is no hindrance from the people, and it is now desirable that aggressive work should be begun.

I am out once a year on an evangelistic tour in the interior, visiting the stations which I superintend and preaching the Gospel, and expect to go out this year before Easter.

MADAGASCAR EXPERIENCES.

In a letter, written in January last, a missionary in Madagascar says :—

We need all the cheer we can get now that everything is so changed about us. The irreligion of the new-comers is having its natural effect on the native mind, which reasons that since these highly-civilised Europeans do not worship God, why should he? There are some ten or a dozen military posts in command of Europeans scattered up and down in this district. The missionary is supposed to present himself to the official in command of the post on every occasion when he goes to the village on missionary duty, whether Sunday or week-day, and state the object of his visit. After so many years of complete liberty in evangelizing and teaching, these bonds are naturally more or less galling.

Hitherto we have had most excellent relations with all the military officials that have come to the district; but now there is a military lieutenant who seems to have received special secret orders not to have anything to do with us. Instead of the former politeness, it seems we are to expect only studied oblivion and neglect.

While writing this I was interrupted by a young native with newspapers for sale. I should have bought had it not been Sunday. The young man informed me that it was "the whites" who had employed him to sell the papers. It must be very puzzling to the poor Malagasy to see the total non-observance of Sunday in vogue among these new and all-powerful whites. With Sunday trading in the markets, Sunday labour at the public works, Sunday payment of weekly wages, church-going must find a place how and where it may. Sunday is in no wise different from any other day in the eyes of the Government.

The Paris correspondent of The Daily News says:—"General Gallieni has sent the residents, native chiefs, and missionaries of all Christian denominations in Madagascar a circular on the subject of 'religious neutrality.' He reminds all the authorities of the island, French, military and civil, and native, that they must keep aloof from religious quarrels. 'I wish it for the last time to be understood that anybody is free to follow any religion he pleases, and that the French or native authorities must never attempt to coerce consciences.' This circular is to be posted up in the villages, with a translation in the vernacular."

MEDICAL MISSION WORK.

Dear Sir,—I wish to draw attention to the great facilities there are in this country for self-supporting medical mission work. Attached to the Cape Colony is a very large tract of country known as the Native Territories, stretching along the south-eastern coast for 150 miles from the Kei River to the Natal border, and having an average width of about sixty miles. This country is divided into nearly thirty magistracies, having each a very large native population, in some instances as much as 40,000, and a European population of officials, troops, traders, and others, varying from 100 upwards.

For each of these districts the Government allows a district surgeon. He draws a salary of £200 per annum for his official duties, which are very light, and is allowed the right of private practice; indeed, beyond the official duties he is not a Government servant at all, but a private individual. In those districts where the European population is very small, there is a constant difficulty in filling these appointments. There is very little to be made beyond the Government allowance, and naturally most doctors do not think the places worth taking, or if they do accept them, it is only as a stop-gap till something better turns up. At the present time I know of three vacant districts for which the Government would be only too glad to get properly qualified men.

I needly hardly point out what magnificent opportunities these appointments offer to qualified medical men who are willing to sacrifice money-making for the sake of missionary work. Here, as everywhere else, practical Christianity tells. The heathen can appreciate a religion that shows such fruits as the cure of disease. In a country, too, where the greatest opponent of the ordinary missionary is the witch-doctor, his most powerful ally is the medical missionary. Such a man not only does a vast amount of good himself, but also greatly increases the power for good of all the other missionaries in his neighbourhood.

I enclose my name and address, and should any young doctor feel inclined to take this opportunity of doing good work for the Master I shall be glad to give him any help in my power, but there is no need for him to waste time in applying to me first. On his arrival in Cape Town he has only to apply at once at the Native Affairs Office, and he will learn at once what district surgeoncies are vacant.

—Yours truly, A Colonist.

Cape Colony.

CHRISTIAN HOTTENTOTS.

The Moravian Mission Station "Goedverwacht," in the Piquetberg Mountains, Cape Colony, is a marvel of God's overruling providence. If "baas" Burger, in days of yore, could have seen what a fine mission station would become out of his "cattle-station," he might, perhaps, not have bequeathed that fruitful mountain valley to his six slaves, on condition that, when the day of their freedom should come in 1838, they would not leave him helpless, but nurse him in his old age.

The contract stipulated that after the death of the last of the six Hottentot heirs (three men and three women) the place should be sold and the proceeds divided among their children, a circumstance that proved a great obstacle to the development of the mission-work afterwards. Eccentric, and even shameful, as this plan appeared in the eyes of the Boers, God's plan had been better prepared than human eyes could see. Contrary to the wish and intent of the "baas," his poor slaves had already become acquainted with the glad tidings of salvation.

Later, when they were secluded from Christian company, and were put into the mountains to protect their master's plantations from the baboons, they found a Hottentot friend who had had the great privilege to attend the church at Piquetberg, who was instrumental in enlightening them still further, being called by them their "predikant." Mr. Burger's death occurred in 1842, and a year later there were already 100 Hottentots living at "Burgerskloof." The extraordinary report of the existence of a farmer's place now in possession of free slaves through legal inheritance soon spread in the colony, and also reached the Moravian missionaries at Mamre (about sixty miles south) and Genadendal, their parent station. The latter was the first mission station in Cape Colony, having been founded as far back as 1792, when three Brethren were sent out from Herrnhut to seek the traces of the work of their first Hottentot apostle, George Schmidt, who had been here as early as 1737, but was obliged to leave, and not allowed by the East India Company to return.

It was a joyful day to the poor people at Burgerskloof when, on Sept. 16, 1845, the first missionary visited their secluded place, and preached to them the "faithful saying" (1 Tim. i. 15). Their gladness of this event is manifest in the fact that, only half a year later, they had of their own accord built a house for school and church. A native teacher from the Genadendal Training School was installed in the following year to teach parents and children. Soon the Gospel day dawned now over this remote ravine in the mountains, and a feeling of solemn joy filled the region when, on Sept. 20, 1850, the first six Hottentots were admitted to the fold of the Christian church by holy baptism.

The new mission, evidently owned and blessed by God, developed quickly. In 1857 the inhabitants already numbered above 500, and by this time the place had received the name of "Goedverwacht" ("good expectation," or literally, "well waited for."—Lam. iii. 25). An adjoining farm was bought by the society, and whilst before a missionary of Mamre had only visited twice a year, there was now one resident on the spot. Old Christiana, the last of the six heirs, a true mother to her people, lived till 1889. Her precepts and wishes were honoured and obeyed by the children, and this became manifest in the fact that immediately after her death all the heirs signed a document expressing their desire that the missionaries should become the owners of the place. The sale took place in 1890, and Goedverwacht was secured by the Mission to remain a place of refuge to the poor coloured race.

The ground was divided into allotments to be let to the inhabitants at a cheap rate. A mission-house was built, and a substantial watermill provided. A new church was an urgent necessity, and encouraged by the astonishing enthusiasm and energetic activity of the people, the missionary began the great work early in 1895, and it was successfully completed in 1896. The inauguration took place on October 1.

The heirs, above all the others desirable for such a monument of their gratitude to the Saviour, laid the foundation for the funds from their inherited substance. When building commenced, a zeal set in among the members of the congregation to provide funds and to lay hands to the work as far as they could, that gladdened the hearts of the missionaries. In various ways they provided a sum of £304. Beside this, every male member gave twenty days' work without remuneration, so that the small congregation of 650 souls raised no less than £550 in about three years.

Friends of the Mission in England also have already contributed £224; from Germany came £184, and from America £85. However, the building, plain but solid as it is, cost £2500, since every article had to be conveyed from Capetown, half the way by bullock waggons over bad roads, to the remote place in the mountains. And notwithstanding all these liberal gifts of Christian love from abroad, and also from sister congregations in the Colony, there still remains a debt of £1300. It must be added that, humanly speaking, the resources of the small number of poor people are exhausted, and their ability spent in the extraordinary exertion put forth, in spite of drought and locusts, horse disease and rinderpest. It is desired to find sympathising hearts and hands to help these poor Hottentots, who have helped themselves so admirably.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Ted, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Missionary Week.

Text for Sunday: "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?"—Rom. x. 14.

Hymn: Songs and Solos, No. 228.

LAST month we had a letter from China, and I tried to get some idea of the boys and girls there—I hope you won't forget the example set by that Chinese boy—so this time I have something for you from India.

It is not sufficient for us to send them bread for the body, even though they are starving; it is our glorious privilege to be able to send them also news of the Bread of Life. You know Who that means!

But though the people of India are dying without having heard of the Way, the Truth, and the Life—and how can they hear except we go to them?—we must not imagine that they know the reason their lives are not more full of love and hope, or that they are anxious to hear what we have to tell. A great many people think that all a missionary has to do is to preach to people longing to hear and obey, but, instead of this, one of the hardest tasks the missionaries have is to make the people hear.

I was sitting one day on the banks of the Ganges, that great Indian river which is one of those worshipped as gods by the people of that hot and thirsty land, when a missionary lady told me something of her daily life among the villages around us, and it was so interesting that I asked her to write part of it. To-day I give what she wrote to you.

Village Work in India.

One day, crossing the river just below the Mission bungalow at Patna, we visited the clumps of mud huts which we had often looked at across the water and sands. We took with us a little harmonium, hoping thereby to attract the people.

On approaching some of the natives the women ran away, but some of the men came towards us, and said they supposed we were men who had come to kill the wild pigs, which had been making great havoc amongst their crops. We had difficulty in making them believe that we had no guns, that we were ladies who had come to visit the women. As we neared the little group of huts the women flew inside in great consternation, so we sat down on some dried rushes and began to sing "bhajans" (native airs), accompanied by "bhajah" (music). The women, however, only peered at us round the corners, and ran away directly we attempted to speak to them, but we gave them a Gospel message, as we knew they were listening at a distance. We then proceeded to a larger group of huts, and here we found the people more civilised. We were showed a kind of shed, where we sat down and sang till a number of women gathered round, while the men listened outside.

Another day we crossed the river in a different place to go to a large village, taking with us our magic lantern. One of the boatmen asked another who we were, and was informed that we went about making amusement for the people, much the same as their dancing girls, but another better-informed man corrected this statement and said that we went about with books teaching the people. We made for a house, visited about two years previously by one of us. The women were delighted to see us, and remembered the exact date of the previous visit. They invited some of their neighbours, and whilst one of us was busied in arranging the slides, another explained the pictures, hoping by this means to impress on their minds some of the chief facts connected with our Lord Jesus Christ. We were amused at some of the remarks passed upon us.

"You see that one has learnt it all off by heart," one would say.

"No, no, she composes it as she goes along."

"You see I told you they were men, and I am right," says another. "Look at the way he lifts those things; that is not like a woman."

"No," is the reply, "they are women, if not they would not be allowed in the zenána" (women's rooms.)

"Oh, he thinks they are women, but I am certain they are men."

Although we occasionally come across amusing incidents like this, one is more often overwhelmed with the sadness of it all. And we—what are we?—as a grain of sand upon the beach. Yet, "Why are thou cast down, O my soul?" God hath chosen the weak of this world—these his instruments, and the power his; so let none of us plead our unworthiness as an excuse for hiding away our one talent (if it be but one); at least let our lives be wholly at his disposal!

A. Hill.

Patna.

Facts about India.

The vast Indian Empire over which our Queen rules is composed of a dozen great and many smaller countries, in which live 280 millions of people. These have many languages, many customs, many religions; more of either than are to be found in all Europe. But only about half a million have yet accepted Christ, and very many millions do not know about Him yet. Most of them worship idols of wood and stone in their ignorance, and are collectively called Hindus. The others are chiefly followers of Mohammed, the Arabian teacher, who tried to unite the teachings of Jews and Christians; Sikhs, the followers of Nanak, who tried to unite the teachings of Hindus and Mohammedans; and Jains, who are akin to the Buddhists, an offshoot of the Hindus. Among all these there are only some 1700 foreign misssonaries, but already there are 4300 native pastors and teachers.

Patna, whence our story has come this week, is a great city on the Ganges river in Behar, about 300 miles from Calcutta. It is the centre of one of those great rice-growing districts, where the famine is raging so sorely. But it has another crop, whose cultivation lays a curse upon the people, that of opium, of which there is a great storehouse there. Several missions are at work in Patna and its district, where there are a number of converts. A most important work is done in the villages.

The "Rosebud" Mission.

Some years ago, when travelling in Mexico I halted at the town of Monterey, where I was speedily summoned from my hotel to be the guest of Rev. G. B. Marsh, at a fine new mission-school, called the Instituto Laurens. It had cost £2000 to build, and in it hundreds of boys and girls are being trained in the knowledge of Christ, as would not otherwise be possible. But greatly as I admired the building and work carried on there, you may imagine how much more interested I was to learn how this school, and another in San Luis Potosí, were built and maintained.

"What society supports it all?" I asked.

"The 'Rosebuds,'" answered Mr. Marsh. "The work is maintained entirely by children."

"Can it be possible?" said I. "How do they manage to do it?"

"They are the readers of the children's column in a Christian newspaper,"* he said, "who have been organised by their 'Uncle Larry' into 'The Rosebud Missionary Society.' Their first month brought in 30s., and the first year £20. Since that the increase has been steady, till last year they contributed £1200."

In "Uncle Larry's" report I read, "Our little ones are but gleaners, bringing their few grains to the bin to increase the out-go of the Bread of Life." And surely they themselves have been blessed in their bringing. What they have done we might do. What do my nephews and nieces think?

Personal.

I wonder whether any of you have remembered that I said I hoped to find room on the thirteenth week of the quarter—that will be next week—for any letters from my nephews and nieces that might be helpful to others. If any of you care to send me quite short letters (not one full page), posted not later than Friday night (March 26), telling of some good work that you have seen done for our Master, or some good example set by someone you know, I will publish the most helpful next week. I should specially like to know what you are doing to help foreign missions. In all cases give your age.

C. and E. Ardley.—You are unfortunately wrong; see if you can give a little more care and then you will no doubt succeed. Gertie Wood.—As it was no fault of yours I have examined your answers and will enter your name in the book as being correct. E. Studd.—A star is given when the questions are extra well answered, and great care taken in writing and spelling.

Uncle Ted.

Donation List.

Indian Famine Children (Mrs. Bruere).—Park Holme Bible-class, £1 10s.; Winifred H., 2s. 6d.; A Servant who Loves Little Children, £3 6s. 8d.; R. J. P. D., 4s.; V. de W. S., 4s.; Collected, Miss F. H., £1 3s.; M. C. B., 5s. Total, £6 15s. 2d. Total to March 22, £313 2s. 10d.

Indian Famine—First Girls' Class, S.S., Havering, 4s. 1d.; Three Little Children, Malta, 5s.; Children, and collected per H. L. B., 10s. 6d.; B., M. G., M., and W. C., 3s.; A Little Family, 3s. 6d.; R. and D. D., 3s.; M. M. and N. M., 1s. 6d.; Nellie, 2s. 6d.; Willie, 1d.; Family and Servants, per H. S. B., 12s.; W. and A. G., 3s.; E. T. and Children, 12s.; D. and W. E. M., 4s.; H. O. and M. T., 6s. Total, £3 10s. 2d. Total to March 22, £13 17s. 2d.

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—D. H. J. K., T. K., 10s.; Madge W., 6d.; Children, per H. L. B., 2s. 2d.; Nellie, 6d.; M. T. C., 2s. 6d. Total, 15s. 8d. To March 22, £1 16s. 2d.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S.	Mark	ix. 14-32.	Th.	Mark	x. 41-52.
M.	„	ix. 33-50.	F.	„	xi. 1-17.
Tu.	„	x. 13-37.	Sat.	„	xi. 18-33.
W.	„	x. 28-40.

* The "Christian Advocate," of Richmond, U.S.A.

Bible Searcher (No. 64).

☞ Rules, published Jan. 7, sent on receipt of penny stamp.

All answers to be in the fewest words possible, quoted from Mark i.-x. (Scripture Union Portion during the month).

Children under ten do 1, 2, and 4; under thirteen the first seven.

1. What did Christ do very early in the morning? (ch. i.)
2. What was the prayer of the leper to Christ, and what did Christ answer? (ch. i)
3. What did Christ say He came to do? (ch. ii.)
4. Who did Christ say were the members of his family? (ch. iii.)
5. What did Christ explain the thorns in the parable of the sower to mean? (ch. iv.)
6. What did Christ tell the man out of whom the many devils had been cast to do? (ch. v.)
7. What was the effect on Christ of seeing the crowd that had followed Him? (ch. vi.)
8. What does Christ say those must do who would come after Him? (ch. viii.)
9. What was the prayer of the dumb boy's father? (ch. ix.)
10. What answers did Christ give to Bartimæus? (ch. x.)
11. Quote the testimonies to Christ of the Holy Spirit, and of three men with unclean spirits.

Next week will be the Quarterly Prize Competition, in which only those may compete whose names are then published as having been right nine times out of the twelve. Please post your answers this week by the first post on Monday, that this list may be as complete as possible. Those who are too far away for their answers to be received in time for it will have postcards sent to them, but their addresses must be given.

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (No. 63).

1.—John iii. 1	4.—John vii. 50, 51	8.—1 Jno. ii. 29, iii. 9, iv. 7, v. 1, v. 4, v. 18
2.—John iii. 3	5.—John x. 3, 4
3.—John vii. 50 and xix. 39	6.—John x. 11
	7.—John x. 27, 28

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 55. Alice Henderson.* No. 56. Alice Henderson*, Charlotte Cane. No. 57. Charlotte Cane, Alice Henderson, Llewellyn* and Queenie* Dale, D. H. Marshall. No. 58. Llewellyn *and Queenie Dale. Nos. 59 and 60. Dorothy Grove, Frank and Vera Sjostrom.

No. 62.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A. and D. and E. and H. Allen, M. Adams, D. Arbuthnot, F. and N. Ames, L. Athole, E. Beauchamp, R. M. Bentley, A. Bazett, H. Bone, M. Ballingal, A. C. Billington, G. Brand*, G. Barnes, M. and W. Bentley, L. Barnes, C. Barber, D. Ella, and E. Brayfield, A. S. Barker, F. L. Bennett, J. Benny, M. Barton, L.* and H.* Berry, A. Bearsby, E. and D. Barrett, M. G. Bungey, D. B. Benson, R. Bourne, N. and G. and B. Brookfield, M. Birney, M. and C. and A. Baker, K. Blackie, L. and S. Boxer, J. Baring, E. R. Ballard, E. Bergen*, B. Brotchie, G. L. Cockle*, M. E. Clarke*, H. J. Cheney, M. Collins, M. T. Colville*, W. F. Christie, C. M. and M. M. Craven, V. Chamberlin, D. Colebrook, M.,* Mary* and Willie Charles, G. and L. Calvert, D. Cooper, N. E. Coote, A. M. Cole, J. and W. and M. and A. Carter, S. Crowley, D'Arcy and C. Chapman, E. and D. Corrie, E. Church, C. and G. Campbell, A. A., N.,* H. and Annie Couch, L. Coles, B. Cashford, E. Corrick, A. and C. Dodd, E. and E. Dunn, J. Dunlop, G. Duncan, K. Dunbar, F. Dean, E. Daisley, M. and D. Dyke, H. Daniels, G. Edwards, E. L. Edmundson, C. and L. Fidler, A. E. and F. Figgis, A. Foston, A. Fleming, E. J. and H. A. Fowler, Wm. and F. Field, V. and E. and R. Foley, K. M. Fowraker, J. Forman, F. Falconer, W. A.* and R. and E. Findlay, Wm. Furmage, J. and M. Freegard, E. D. Garrod*, M. and E. C. Graham, G. E. and I. V. Gill, E. Gray, C. L. and M. S. Goufrey, M. Giddings, Edith* and E.* Gooderham*, T. Guinness, P. W. and M. W. Green, C. and A. D. Goodwin, A. H. and M. Greenacre, J. and D. Hughes-Games, A. E. Hazledine, P. Hoyte, V. Henry, J. and M. D. Hogg, F. and J. Haines, E. L. and M. and Chas. Hunter, May, T. and H. M. and Harcourt Hunter, F. and S. and F. and W. M. Hoyte, M. and C. H. and J. Handasyde, V. Holford* E. S.* and Eva Hutchings, E. C. S. and M. Hogge, R. Hamilton, Lizzie Hill, L. M. and E. P. and C. M. Herival, L. B. and D. Hardie, F. Hunton, D. E. and F. Harris, C. Hall, N. Horsford, Theo. Hill, Emily and Edith Hearn, C. Harrington, M. Hasse, J. B. and M. and H. Horlock, W. Harvey, J. and R. Harrison, E. and A. F. Hersey, M. Ince, A. and T. Jacob, S. and M. Jackson, G. E. and D. and Dora Joyce, D. C. Judd, M. Kirkbride, D. T. and K. G. and H. and J. and T. and E. Kirkpatrick, G. Klingerlee, F. and D. Keable, M. and E. Maitland-Kirwan, S. and Wm*. Keen, H. and R. Keable, A. C.* and Rebe* King, A. and Agnes and W. and T. and I. Kay, G. L. and E. Leigh, A. Llewellyn, A. M. Loveridge, D. Lewis, M. E. Leigh, H. Lovell, E. Larwill, Nan Millar, M. J. Macphee, D. and T. Mackenzie, C. W. Devenish Meares, S. Mariner, K. McClure, H. Malaher, R. Meason, E. and F. Mackenzie, C. and B. H. Millar, T. J. and M. Matthews, B. Maconchy, J. Maunsell, D. and M. A. Morris, H. M. Modill, A. and May Morris, Frank Morris, M.* and J.* Menzies, S. Mackintosh, L. and H. Morris, L. and Q. Matthews, Wm. Mitchell, J. D. Macgregor, L. B. Macaulay, N. and B. and A. and T. Mack, E. C. Monti, Maria Morris, A. and E. Lowndes-Moir, F. Medcalf, G.* and E.* and B.* Morgan, A. Macnair, W. and C. McKenzie, N. Meade, D. Nathan, E. Newth, M. N. and E. L. Oakes, G. O'Beirne, F. Osmond, H. and L. Orr, Mary Palmer, F. S. Phillips, D. Payne, L. and N. Peachey, W. Page*, Eddie and Emma Proctor, D. Patten, D. Piper*, G. M.* and J. W.* Phipps, G. Partridge, D. and V. and N. Petrides, A. and M. and W. and J.* Palmer, E. Quick, G. Grace, and E. Reeve, Mildred Robinson, A. and C. Rouse, L. G. and W. Devenish Roe, L. Roberts, F. Rawle, C. Riley, P. Moutray Read, N. Read, E. Rumbolds, M. L. Rickards, E. and T. Roberts, P. R.* and M. A.* Robinson, Bob Salt, W. Stangoe, F. E. Short, H. Stickland, E. Stuart, R. Sherwin, Dora Smith, H. and F. B. and D. Stalker, J. and T. and D. D. Stainer, V. Standley, D. Sharp, M. Smith*, W. Sinclair, B. Symes, M. Seddall, T. Simms, M. and D. M. Shaw, Sidney Smith, B. Scantlebury, Winnie Shaw, Evelyn Shaw, E. Seymour, H. Tufnell, M. Tryer, O. Tritton*, E. Taylor, L. and P. H. and H. and A. Turnbull, G. Tingey, M. and F., G. and Fred Trotter, Janet and J. W. Thomson, H. and F. Tomkins, E. L. Tebb, R. Theobald, L. Tibbits*, T. Toop, F. and S. Thomas, Frank Thompson, E. Vigars, J. E. Watson, E. White*, G. Weir*, M. Walton, F. R. Wilson*, I. and E. and G. Wright, H. Wodson*, W.* and L. Whenday, A. and H. G. and C. Wright, E. H. Wood, N. Walker, J. White, Maggie and J. Wight, E. Winpenny, J. and H. Williamson, F. and A. Waring, E. Wheadon, M. and R. Watson, G. Webb, M. H. and C. H. Washington, Wm. and B. Ward, D. Warner, G. and J. Welbank, J. West, C. and E. Yerbury.

No. 63.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A. J. Akers, Wm., D. and E. Aldwinckle, Wm. Aston*, V. Ashworth*, Elsie Bartlett, E. B.* and J. C.* Black, H. C. Barefield, H. Braddon*, J. and E. Benger, E. Bridgewater, M. Birney, F. Boyd*, Jack and Rosa Clarke, Wm. E. Clarke, Eric and E.* Chance, J. A. Chamberlan, H*. and Wm.* Cheesman, E. M., Mabel and A. M. Cole, D. Colebrook, H. and F. Compton, G. B. Code, S. Cumbers, M. Dalzell, V. Dickinson, N. and W. Dowsett, K.* and V. Donaldson-Selby, G. and K.* Dodington, L. Ellacott*, Wm. and E. Edmonds, M. Fooks*, V. Fulcher, C. Gabbett*, Lee Gardner, D. Groves, Thea Guinness, Jack Harris*, R. Hatchett*, D.* and E.* Hewer, Theo. Hill, J. and D. Hughes-Games, G. Isaac*, N. Q. Johns*, M. and S. Law, Alice Loveridge, H. Matheson, G.* and M. Marston, D. Marples*, Edie Nash, A. Onslow*, D. Payne, H. Haden Palmer, K. Pell, Myrtle Perry, Mary Penny, J.* and G.* Phipps, D. Phillips, Geo. Powell*, L. and M. Pook, H. Puttock, Robt.* and M.* Richards, F. E. Roden, S. Robertson, H. Russell-Smith*, M. Smart*, R. Sherwin, H. Stevenson, F. Simmons*, F. Smith*, L. and K. Soltau, B. Stocks*, J. Snowball, R. Studd, A. Tawse, Muriel Taylor, O. Tritton, H. M. Toller, W. Wheeler, P., N., and Cecile* Wright, H. J. and Q. Williams, E. Williamson, A. and J. Woodman.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham and neighbourhood, to March 31. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Stowmarket, to April 5. Mr. George Goodman, Leyton, to March 28; Plashet Park, April 3-11. Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 24 to May 2. Mr. R. Callender, St. Michael's, Blackheath, March 27; Isleworth, April 5; Bickley, April 7; Underriner, Sevenoaks, April 9; Bedford, April 10-11. Mr. Hankinson, Maindee, Newport, April 24—May 3. Mr. W. L. Seyler, All Saints' Hall, Caledonian-road, April 9. Mr. Arrowsmith, Dublin, March 25; Chester, March 27-28; Harrogate, March 29 to April 1. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Presbyterian Church, Highgate, April 9.

Wimbledon Convention.

THE early spring brings with it this annual gathering of Christians desirous of learning more deeply and practically the possibilities of attainment in the spiritual life. The Convention retains its interest and power. This year the friends attending it had a double disappointment in the inability of Revs. C. A. Fox and Charles Inwood to act as speakers, through indisposition. But the Conference was well served nevertheless.

Some notes of Thursday's proceedings will serve as representative of the whole. The two speakers at the forenoon assembly were Dr. White, of Winchester, and Rev. G. C. Macgregor, of Notting Hill.

SINCERITY.

Dr. White put the important question, "What is to be the practical result in life of all the teaching given?" He took the word "sincerity," and traced it through various Bible passages. The word, he said, simply means wholeheartedness. Are there not many professed Christians who have no thought of this? They want as much of this world as possible, and as much of the world to come as they can. God cannot deal with those who are double-minded in their relations to Him. He will not accept service one or two days in the week, while all the rest are given up to the world. This singleness of heart must apply to our life down to the most minute particulars. There must be the "unleavened bread of sincerity" if our lives are to be a constant festival to our God. In the Greek the word sincerity means "a thing that bears the sunlight." Can we bear the searching and revealing light of the Spirit on our daily conduct? Deeper even than conduct is motive. Do we give to God's cause in order to have the applause of others, or solely because He has given us the privilege? Do we go to church to save our respectability, or with the one purpose of worshipning God and hearing his voice? This principle applies to every department of life and service. The opposite attitude to sincerity is "worldly wisdom." The speaker applied this to the treatment of servants. There are "Christian" households, he declared, in which the servants are worse off than if they were under Pharaoh's taskmasters. What a lack of sincerity, too, we often find in dealings with our neighbours; we are gracious to them in the street on the way to meeting, but when their back is turned we describe them as "an awful bore." A very searching word was also spoken as to "dealing deceitfully" with the Word of God, on the part of public teachers; prophesying smooth things rather than declaring the whole counsel of God as in his sight. "Grace be with them that love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity," is the apostolic benediction—meaning uncorruptness, or love out of a heart purified by the indwelling of God the Holy Ghost.

THE GIFT OF GOD.

The second address, by Mr. Macgregor, was on "The Living Water" (John iv. 10), which is the gift of God to all who will receive it. Between the life of the woman of Samaria and that of the Christian of to-day there is a closer parallel than we are apt to acknowledge. Her life was one of unrest and dissatisfaction. Her daily toil to satisfy a physical thirst is but a symbol of the unsatisfied longings of many of God's believing children, and the pains they take to assuage their soul-cravings. Look at the round of the observances of the Ritualist, and the rush even of the Evangelical after every speaker from whom they think they can get help. "If thou knewest," said Christ to the woman. Ignorance is the explanation of much of the low state of the Church of Christ. We do not really know our Lord, or our lives would be very different. Have we appreciated the true divinity of the Saviour? It means infinite ability to meet the needs of every soul, and infinite love towards all. We have failed to realise that our Saviour is the Eternal God, and so we have been troubled. We are ignorant, too, of what this "gift of God" is—the Holy Spirit. Nothing is more appalling in the Church than the ignoring of God the Holy Ghost. Our spiritual weakness in character and feebleness in work are caused by our lack of receiving and using the gift of God. Do we not constantly limit the Holy One by thinking that the promises He has given in his Word are not for us in this dispensation? If we would receive we must ask. The condition comes in between the knowing and the asking, not between the asking and receiving. If we had realised and asked, what failure and sin we should have been spared—faults of temper, of irritation, of worldliness, and other things that mar our lives. If we ask in truth there will be no niggardliness in Christ's response. Besides fulness, there will also be freshness and fruitfulness in our lives.

THE AFTERNOON BIBLE READING

by Mr. Macgregor was an unfolding of the teaching as to the Holy Spirit, and was founded on Gal. iii. 13-14. This passage, said the speaker, has in it as much of the essence of the Gospel as any New Testament passage of equal length. Its main message is one about the gift of the Spirit. The word used for "promise" is scarcely ever used except when applied to a divine gift, bestowed as a matter of grace. We deal not with any mere blessing, but with the Blesser Himself. The words "The promise of the Father" (Luke xxiv. 4; Acts i. 4; ii. 32; Eph. i. 13) prove this conclusively.

Two things we learn here. This promised Spirit is He of whom the Father spoke, in Isa. xliv. 3, in Joel ii. 28; and in Zech xii., 10. He was also promised by the Son, see John, chaps. xiv., xv., and xvi. Another thing—He is the Spirit as He was promised. Many are greatly hindered in this study because their knowledge is not based on the promises recorded in Scripture. The Spirit is promised "to convince of sin"—no doubt primarily to convince the world of unbelief. But there is much unbelief in the hearts of believers, and the Spirit's convicting work is needed here. We lack love and joy because we have not the sense of great forgiveness. The Spirit is also to convince us of righteousness. His teaching alone can enable us to distinguish both real and spurious holiness. When we look at the perfect standard of Jesus Christ we cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner." He is come also to judge the Church for worldliness of motive and of action.

Again, the Spirit is the great Revealer of the hidden excellences of Jesus Christ. In his hands Christ will become more glorious—that is the supreme test of our having received the Spirit. He is also to be the Great Witnesser, the Indweller, and the Empowerer. The Acts teaches us how the Spirit is to be our daily Guide and Controller in life and work. He is the Overcomer in the struggle between the opposing powers of good and evil. He is the Intercessor in us. It is in the line of these promises that we are to regard the Holy Ghost.

Our reception of the Spirit is to be a main end of Christ's work. This settles the question of the ground on which we receive the Spirit. It is won for us not by our own action but solely by the work of Christ. Some have spoken as if the gift of the Spirit took us past the Saviour; but that is clearly not so. This gift is not the privilege of a favoured few, but the possession of all believers. The word "receive" has an active signification; we are to take that which is offered. In so far as we do not submit ourselves to the control of the Spirit we make the work of Christ of no effect. It is to be received "through faith." As we get salvation so we get that which makes salvation operative. All this is in order that the world should be blessed. If we have received the Holy Ghost, what are we doing to convey blessing to those around us? The promise of the Spirit is clearly and definitely connected by Christ with the evangelisation of the world. Let us rise to the greatness of our privilege and give Christ room to work in us and through us in those for whom He died.

EVENING MEETING.

A large company, embracing a goodly proportion of young people, came together at the evening hour, when Mr. Macgregor was again the speaker. He took up the incident of the healing by our Lord of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda, and applied it to the circumstances of modern folk, whether sick from the power of unforgiven sin, or the palsy of imperfect consecration. After an urgent appeal to the unsaved, he spoke of the spiritual paralysis that is too common in the Church. To all alike Jesus Christ is ready to come and give the word of release. Whatsoever be the "infirmity" from which the soul suffers, Christ desires to put the question, "Wilt thou be made whole?" To those who were thus anxious the speaker proceeded to offer some plain directions. The first step is to realise that the Lord alone can heal the sick soul. Let there be on our part confession of impotence and need, of whatever kind. Many futile sorts of attempted self-cure were exposed, and then the speaker urged to a confession of faith in Christ as the all-mighty Physician. The last step of all is definite surrender to that Christ, that He may have his way with us.

Among the speakers at the other meetings were Revs. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, J. Brash, C. G. Moore, E. W. Moore, etc. Capt. Tottenham presided throughout. Missionary meetings were held on several of the afternoons.

The Wish of the Weary.

To close my eyes on earthly things,
To see them not again;
To hear no more earth's din and noise,
To taste no more its hollow joys,
Its bitter pain.

To wake and find myself in heaven,
Its glories see;
To gaze my full on Him I love,
To join the songs of saints above,
In harmony.

To go no more for ever out,
Nor lonely be;
But face to face, and heart to heart,
Loved ones to greet; no more to part Eternally.

Yet, O my Lord, I am content
To wait Thine hour;
Grant me but grace to do Thy will,
To serve, or even to suffer still,
By Thine own power.

In acquiescence sweet to blend
My will with Thine;
Life's discipline to patient bear,
So I at last may truly wear
Likeness divine.

Letitia Jennings.

Morals in South London.—In April, 1896, an effort was made by a number of ministers and laymen in South London, under the presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer, to deal with vice and immorality in the parishes of Newington, Lambeth, and St. George's. The "South London Public Morals Association" was constituted, under the direction of a strong Executive Committee. The results of this effort, in conjunction with that previously inaugurated, have been as follows:—Fifty-eight charges have been made against keepers of disorderly and immoral houses; forty-seven convictions have been obtained; fifty-four houses have been closed and others have been transformed; several children have been rescued, and young girls reclaimed. A gratifying feature in this remarkable crusade has been the co-operation of the parochial authorities, who have according to law discharged the costs of prosecution, and have cordially assisted in procuring evidence. The police have also aided most promptly and efficiently. Efforts are now being made to deal with the owners of property which is being used for these purposes, and to urge on them their responsibility.

THE EVANGELIST.

How to Become a Christian.

By Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler.

TWO things are vitally essential to becoming a Christian. If any reader of this article is asking the momentous question "What must I do to be saved?" the Bible answer is—Repent, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. You cannot go in two opposite directions at the same time; your first step is to cut loose from your sins. Don't deceive yourself with the idea that yours are small sins; the snowflakes now falling before my window are tiny affairs, but accumulated they are enough to block the path of a locomotive. The only effectual hindrance to your becoming a Christian and securing eternal life is your own sins. Until you break off from them, you cannot lay hold on Jesus, and come into vital union with Him; no man can serve two masters.

Some persons may tell you that it is a very easy thing to become a Christian. Yes; it is an infinitely easy thing for the Omnipotent Spirit to renew your heart; and it will be a very simple and possible thing for you if you are willing to cut loose from your own sinful self, and fasten your heart-hold on the Saviour. Do not ask for any easier salvation than that; it will not be worth the having if it does not bring you a new character and a new style of conduct. "Some people," said good old Rutherford of Scotland, "want to have Christ for about nothing, and never have had a sick night over their own sins. This maketh loose work." It is just such loose work that produces the half-converted Christians. The ulcers of sin must come out first, if you desire to have a healthy, vigorous, and happy religious life.

Cutting loose from the dominion of sin must be attended with a cleaving to Jesus Christ. Open your New Testament, and read what Bartimeus and that poor woman in the coasts of Canaan did. She was in terrible earnest. Her health was gone; her money gone; and all hope of human cure abandoned. She believed that if she could creep in, and touch the hem of Christ's robe, she would be healed. So she presses through the crowd, and the touch of her outstretched finger was her acted prayer of faith. How quickly the blessing came! Her hemorrhage ceased in an instant, and she went home healed and happy.

A single contact of the soul with Christ Jesus has made many a one a Christian. The first honest approach to Him—the first sincere prayer for pardon—the first act to please and obey Him; these were like the touch of that woman who had the malady; they brought the blessing. Conversion is the act of turning to Jesus as the only Saviour. As soon as you begin to trust Him and obey Him the healing comes. You must understand that faith is vastly more than an opinion or a feeling. It is a transaction; it is the contact of a person with a Divine Person, of a weak and guilty and yet penitent soul with an all-sufficient Redeemer. You need to be shut up to this one tremendous truth—either Jesus Christ must save me, or I am for ever lost! A church service, or a book, or the best of sermons, or an "inquiry-room" or prayer, or any other good thing, will be a delusion if you attempt to put them in the place of a personal grasp on Jesus Christ. Faith is indispensable, just as the bucket is indispensable if you wish to draw up water from a deep well; but it is the water that you are after. True faith puts your soul into living contact with the loving Son of God. A touch is enough to begin with; but it must be followed by a strong constant cleaving. There is a moment when the graft is first inserted in the cleft bough and begins to touch it, but it must abide there until there is a vital union with the tree. "Abide in Me," says the blessed Jesus, "for except ye abide in Me, ye can bring forth no fruit." At this very moment that pierced hand is stretched out to you; will you grasp it?

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;

To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness; that He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.

God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law,

To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

Rom. iii. 24-26, 28. Gal. iv. 4, 5.

Evangelistic Notes.

Special services held in Lower-street Mission Hall, Plymouth, for the last fortnight by Mr. T. E. Ruth have proved a great blessing, and many have come out on the Lord's side.

Mr. Goudie, of Boxmoor, has conducted a successful ten days' mission at the Henry-road Hall, New Barnet. Several young people especially professed their faith in Christ.

Mr. E. P. Telford's Mission in Hyde-road Church, Manchester, came to a close on the 15th inst. It was originally intended to continue twelve days, but so great was the public interest that an extension was necessary. During the mission 250 persons have passed into the inquiry rooms. Both youth and old age have been found amongst the inquirers. In the inquiry room Mrs. Telford rendered good service; she is as powerful there as her husband is in the public service. The last meeting can never be forgotten, the central area of the chapel was filled with professed converts. The results of the mission will live in many hearts and homes. W. H.

A six-days' children's mission has been held in Hamond-square Ragged School, Hoxton, by Messrs. Morrison, McLean, and Braddick, Mrs. Shorey, Sister Ruth, and Miss Whisler. The meetings were well attended, and it is believed many were led to accept the Saviour.

An eight days' mission has been held by Mr. Henry Hull and a band of soldiers in Shaftesbury Hall, Deptford. The very first night the hall was crowded, so that some could not find admittance. In the after meetings there were many who were anxious, while every night found some inquiring the way of salvation. Mothers were gladdened by their grown-up sons and daughters coming to Christ; backsliders were restored, and in some cases husband and wife decided together to serve the Lord. J. T. M.

The meetings held at Wellington, Somerset, for three weeks by Mr. John Elliott have been greatly blessed. Three meetings were held in the serge factory during the breakfast time, and about 300 gave the preacher their best attention.

An encouraging Gospel mission has been held by Mr. Henry Thorne at Dover. All the meetings were held at Salem Chapel, one of the largest Nonconformist buildings in the town. The interest of workers and hearers grew day by day, until towards the end the building was packed. Persons of all ages and ranks have been blessed, and many names have been taken of those who openly confessed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Mrs. Thorne assisted in the inquiry room and in conducting meetings for women. E.

Mr. Newton Jones conducted a mission at Harrow Baptist Sunday School from Feb. 28 to March 4. The main facts of the mission may be summed up briefly as follows:—(1) A praying spirit before the missioner came. (2) Co-operation of the Methodist Sunday-school. (3) A fit agent, working judiciously and well. (4) Most pleasant spiritual results. (5) The good work continuing after the missioner's departure.

In the Garrison Schoolroom Barracks, Newcastle, eleven days' special evangelistic services were conducted by Colonel H. T. S. Yates, R.A., Mr. and Mrs. Procter, and others. There has been much blessing. Christians were greatly benefited.

The Brothers Weaver concluded a fortnight's mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Kilburn (Rev. Geo. Shapcot's). Night after night sinners have professed decision, and Christians have drawn out into higher life and fitted for service of the Master. Those faithful evangelists declare the whole counsel of God. C. H.

At Inkberrow and Stock Green, a nine days' mission has been held by Mr. F. H. Hutchins, of the Evangelistic Mission. The interest grew with the attendance night after night as God's servant sang and preached the Gospel. At Stock Green on Sunday afternoon the chapel was packed, with many standing outside the doors. It was resolved to adjourn to the lawn in front of the chapel, where under the canopy of heaven Mr. Hutchins delivered a most impressive address. The evening service was held at Inkberrow, when the chapel was filled. Some have shown signs of contrition, asking, "What must I do to be saved?" and believers have been refreshed. The pastor's heart is cheered, and he is assured that these services will result in abundant blessing to the neighbourhood.

Russian Orthodox Church.

By Mr. E. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

BY reason of our intimate historical and actual relations with the Church of Rome, the so-called "Catholic," we in England are apt to imagine Christendom as practically halved between that body and those who, protesting against its errors and claims, are known collectively as "Protestants." But in doing so we overlook an uncounted third division, of which the Russian or "Orthodox" Church is the largest member, though the shares of the Armenian, Chaldean, Coptic, and Abyssinian, and other Churches linked with it in theory and practice, while quite independent, are by no means small. The absolute union of State and Church in Russia is in itself a guarantee of isolation, cutting off all possibility of brotherly relation with other Churches, precluding missionary effort among them, and affording a sufficient reason for prohibiting their propaganda on Russian soil.

Some may object to according them the title they claim of "Orthodox." In spite of all its barriers, the Orthodox Church of Russia numbers among its members many who are one in Christ Jesus with believers everywhere. The dream of an outward union with either Anglican or Roman hierarchies is but an ecclesiastical ideal, which, if it were practicable, would be fraught with evil to both; but there is an actual union which does exist among the Spirit-filled, and of this our Stundist and Molokáni brethren are the visible expression.

In the State institution itself, however, facts are lost in symbols, and the truth that does exist is so deeply overlaid with error that it is extremely difficult to find. The result is that the mass of the people remains idolatrous though nominally Christian, while those who are able to study and think for themselves either fall off into infidelity or become staunch supporters of the existing order of things when they perceive what after all is there, though hidden so deep. In the Russian Church the Bible is free, and in Russia the agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society enjoy facilities of transport and travel as nowhere else. But the Bible is not understood and still is little read. The Old Slavonic dialect, in which the lessons and prayers in church are heard, is known to but a few; the priests are neither preachers nor teachers, and it is little enough they know themselves. They pose only as the representatives before God of a people that worships by proxy, and on the whole they have absolutely no influence with their parishioners, to whom they are not even expected to set a good example.

It is a beautiful thing to see the peasants flocking into the stately churches just as they are, leaving tools and baskets at the door while they worship, but it is very sad to see them merely bowing and crossing themselves, lighting tapers and kissing pictures of saints. Even in the railway-stations there are special shrines, or chapels, erected in the waiting-rooms, and in every street they abound.

Disguise it as we may by reference to the underlying truth, or the undoubted earnestness of many of the educated and enlightened Russians, we cannot dispose of the fact that among the peasant majority these pictures have but superseded heathen idols, and are actually worshipped, being called indeed, by the name of God. Innate spiritual yearnings are absorbed in worshipping material substitutes. Pictures are carried about from house to house and from town to town to bring blessings amply paid for in advance. One popular "eikon" in Kieff has had to be protected by glass, because its very diamonds were kissed away, to such lengths does devotion go. Eikons have been known to be turned to the wall when a dishonest deed was about to be done, lest they should see. Of course there are many "not made by hands," though Luke is supposed to have painted some.

(To be concluded.)

Inquiry-room Cases.

During the recent visit of the Brothers Weaver to the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, many interesting cases were recorded. One special feature of the mission was the large number of professed atheists and agnostics who came forward and made a profession of acceptance of Christ as their Saviour.

Amongst the seekers at the very commencement of the mission was found the son of a well-known minister. The change in this young man was very marked, and he directly set himself to work to get his companions to attend the meetings. He has confessed Christ at home, and also made it known among his friends.

One case was that of a man of middle age, who had been educated for the Roman Catholic priesthood. At manhood's estate he became partner with his father in a lucrative business, but the drink was his master. Whilst on a "spree" he enlisted in the Royal Engineers, where he held various positions. His time being up, he again took to drink, until he became a resident in a common lodging house. He was arrested by the power of God whilst Mr. Weaver was speaking from "What hast thou done?" and is now getting an honest livelihood with every indication of "the great change."

A fine young Scotchman, about twenty-one years of age, was weeping bitterly with his head in his hands during an after-meeting. Mr. Weaver invited him into the inquiry-room, and he was soon found rejoicing in Jesus. He had only been in the City two weeks, and had begun the downward path. He wrote home, telling his mother and his former minister what great things the Lord had done for him.

Mr. Weaver one Sabbath evening put his hands upon a better-class working man's shoulder, asking, "Have you any desire to know Jesus?" He replied, "No, I don't believe there is a God. I don't believe in the Bible. I believe I simply 'grew like a plant.'" On being asked to shake hands, he refused, saying, "No, I feel more like committing suicide." Mr. Weaver said to him, "God loves you!" The next night the very first boldly to stand up for salvation was this man, broken-hearted because of his sin. He and his wife are now constant in their attendance upon the means of grace.

An intelligent young fellow came several times for private conversation. It was found that he was an agnostic, and his chief difficulty was the question of inspiration. That barrier was soon broken, and then he opened his heart, saying that his master passion was gambling. At twenty-one years of age, through speculation, he was worth £20,000, at twenty-two years of age he owed £500. He was a member of over fifty clubs in the City, where he carried on his gambling business amongst the members. He made a public acceptance of Christ, and the next day resigned his membership in all the clubs.

For the North-West Frontier.

Rev. T. J. Lee Mayer, who has done good work on the North-West Frontier of India under the C.M.S., is about to return to his old field on an independent basis.

He writes to us: "There is a long frontier line from Cashmere to Biluchistan, in which there are only a few scattered workers; and between that frontier line and Persia and Bokhara a vast field utterly untouched by the messengers of the Lord of hosts, many splendid centres for reaching the tribes of Afghanistan and Biluchistan, where missionaries and doctors, and nurses, might profitably be located, both for translational work (for which there is urgent need), and for evangelistic itineration, and Gospel medical service. I have been working at the Biluch language for some time, and have St. John's Gospel well in hand and the first book of the Psalms ready for revision with the people of the land. On the Northern Frontier there are some ten dialects, in which there is at present nothing of the Word of God."

Mr. Mayer's address is 67, Foster Hill-road, Bedford. He is known to Col. Wroughton, Comer Lodge, De Pary's Avenue, Bedford, and Rev. E. Hassé, Moravian minister, Bedford.

Rome.—A daily noon prayer meeting is now held at the Y.M.C.A. rooms, 31, Via due Macelli. Visitors to Rome will be welcomed.

[256]

Work among Indian Gipsies.

Dear Sir,—I would like to tell your readers a little about a most promising work recently begun among a class of gipsies, called "Thieving Koramas," living in the Mysore jungles. About six months ago a number of the people belonging to this class were led by the preaching of a Christian colporteur and a converted relative to receive baptism. A few weeks later others followed their example, and last Sunday I baptized another group. Several more have definitely promised to join them in a few weeks, and the work is likely to spread far and wide.

I am trying to procure land upon which to settle these people, and shall afterwards have to advance, as loans without interest repayable within a limited period, small sums of money to help them in building houses. Hitherto they have been wandering about in the jungle, living temporarily in bamboo huts. Belonging to a class noted for their thieving propensities, they were obliged to procure a pass from the local police before they could leave their settlements and go to another place. Now they are freed from this bondage, and are rejoicing in social as well as religious liberty.

I have also to build a church and school, provide a teacher, and arrange for some of the converts to visit their relatives in distant settlements for the purpose of leading them to follow their example. Who will pity the gipsies and help me to carry on the work? This is real missionary work, and money cannot be better spent than in winning these children of the jungle for Christ.—Yours faithfully,

A. Dumbarton.

Shimoga, The Mysore, S. India, March 3.

Dr. Barnardo's Family.

Dr. Barnardo is sending to the New World another batch of his large and ever-increasing family. At the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. prayer meeting on Monday, he sought the interest of a large assembly in a party of 134 boys and lads about to leave for Canada. The party might have been larger, but it was thought well not to send out more than the number for whose emigration money had been provided.

In the course of a brief address Dr. Barnardo said that this party brought up the number of those who had been placed in the Colonies to a total of 8866. The average age of the party was thirteen and three-quarters; and the average residence in the Homes eighteen months. More than half the whole number were living on the streets when rescued. Dr. Barnardo addressed some kind words to the lads, and commended them to the prayerful sympathy of the meeting. He told of a lad whom he rescued a few years ago, who had ever since his settlement in Canada sent yearly contributions towards the work. That lad cost the Homes £25; and of that sum he had now repaid £17 10s. The incident is typical, as all know who have heard Dr. Barnardo on such interesting occasions as that of Monday last.

Home of Industry.

There was a good muster of workers and friends at the monthly gathering at 29, Bethnal Green-road, on Wednesday evening last week. The meeting was in charge of Miss Child and a detachment of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," from the Sailors' Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway.

Following the "coxswain" of the Crew, Mr. William Luff, two Russians, a Swede, three Englishmen, and an Irishman spoke warmly of their experience of the love of Christ and of their desire to persuade others to respond to the message of salvation. One was a venerable friend of over eighty, who said that after having been a seaman for fifty-seven years he was converted through reading a tract picked up in Ratcliff Highway.

With regard to Miss Macpherson's own work, it was mentioned that a party of young emigrants were to sail for Canada the following morning in charge of Mr. Merry, senior, and prayer was asked for them. Miss Macpherson herself is still very lame, and unable to get about at all, but her general health is good. She is able to attend to correspondence and to take an active interest in everything pertaining to the many branches of work in connection with the Home of Industry.

Work on the Karoo.

By Rev. D. Burford Hooke.

A recent mail brought me a most interesting letter from Aberdeen, on the Karoo, South Africa. It more than confirms what has been said as to the power of the natives to sustain religious agencies provided they are guided in the right way. Two years ago we visited Aberdeen. A more lonely, dreary town in the desert you could hardly imagine. It is thirty-five miles from Graaff-Reinet, the nearest town, from which we journeyed in a Cape cart. It has no industries, though "agents" own large blocks of buildings. Almost the only work carried on among the natives is superintended by Rev. James C. Weis, and its success goes far to show how eager are the coloured people to hear the Gospel, and how able they are to conduct their own affairs.

When I was there they had started mission work in various places. In fact, I found that so full were the people of the true missionary spirit that they had eight out-stations. One of these was forty-nine miles across the Karoo; two others were thirty-five and three were forty-two miles away. Think of the labour involved in seeing these places supplied! The nearest railway station is Aberdeen-road, twenty-five miles distant from Aberdeen town!

Mr. Weis, who is himself a native of South Africa, trained at Lovedale, now writes to me as follows:—"Our manse is completed. But the drought came upon us just as we were full of hopes of completing it with a small debt. Poverty set in fast, and we were forced to a loan of £250. Still we were not discouraged, and resolved, seeing our (S. African) Union did so much for us, to decline further aid in favour of other and weaker churches. A serious difficulty has since faced us. The room we hired for school purposes is in the main street, and of late Government and legal offices have been fixed close to us—two offices sharing the same stoep with us. We quite expect complaints to be lodged, and ultimately to be turned out. Naturally we could utilise our church; but, unfortunately, opposite it is a private school for the whites, and within a hundred yards is the public school. Your knowledge of South Africa will at once admit of the friction which will result.

"I bought a plot of ground for a school building, but the difficulty is to erect the building. We are too poor to venture an enterprise and increase our present liabilities. The people have not recovered from the drought, and will not for some years, as living is still dear. Through the help of some friends I have managed to complete the foundation, whereon is to be erected a building 30 feet by 50 feet. It is on the outskirts of the town. It will cost us about £200 to complete. We can manage the bricks at very little cost, and the building will not cost us more than £25."

Mr. Weis goes on to add an earnest appeal to British friends for help. I do not know an instance which better shows the enduring power of the natives in Christian work than that furnished at Aberdeen.

22, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London.

Women's Armenian Relief Fund.

Sir,—The last report from Dr. Raynolds, of Van, dated Feb. 19, deals chiefly with the orphanage; 128 boys and sixty-four girls had been received. He desires to know from his helpers whether they wish him to take on as many children this year as the money will allow, or to save some of it for future years. It would be cruel to turn them out at the end of a year, as all should remain three, and many five years, whilst the very little ones—now placed with suitable families—will require care for even a longer period. If necessary funds be forthcoming suitable premises can be rented and suitable persons found to undertake the care and education of yet another 200, or more. Only about one in thirty of the really destitute have at present been provided for. A certain portion of the most hopeful and advanced boys will give all their time to study and be trained as teachers; the rest will give half their time to study and half to learning some trade—tailoring, shoemaking, weaving, or cultivating vegetables.

The hon. treasurer is Mrs. Cole, 1, Trebovir-road, S.W.—Yours truly, (Mrs.) Mary Hickson, Hon. Sec.

32, Foystone-road, Earl's Court, S.W.

Letters to the Editor.

A QUERY.

Dear Sir,—A question was asked at a Bible-class which we found very difficult to answer. May I appeal through your columns for a reply to it? The question was as follows:—"If in our flesh dwelleth 'no good thing,' from whence come those good desires, noble deeds, and self-denying actions so often to be found before regeneration or conversion?" These are often spoken of as due to one's "better nature." Is this a right term to use, before regeneration?—Yours, etc.,

Inquirer.

THE CRISIS IN GREECE.

Dear Sir,—In this crisis of our national history, when the action of our Government must have an important bearing not only upon our future and that of the entire Greek race, but also to some extent upon Europe, I feel that there is special need of Divine guidance. I would therefore request through your columns that united and earnest and continued supplication be made for Greece, its rulers, and its people, that every step taken may be with a solemn sense of responsibility to God, and a desire to be used by Him in the execution of his own great purposes of mercy towards the oppressed whose cry goes not up in vain.

Whatever may be the opinion held outside as to the Greek movement for Crete, it is, first of all, a real outgoing of the nation's heart towards its suffering brethren—a sentiment which has grown in depth and intensity with every fresh arrival of refugees made homeless by Moslem greed and fanaticism.

It has been said that Cretan revolutionary movements are instigated by Greece, and therefore deserving of less sympathy. But these liberty-loving and brave islanders needed no instigation from any quarter to attempt to throw off a hated yoke; neither has Greece been anxious to stir up vain efforts, whose result has always been to bring to her shores great numbers of destitute people to be supported. But the race sentiment is very strong among Greeks, and at length it could no longer be restrained by coldly prudential considerations. The populace always and everywhere are more quickly responsive to such sentiments, but now in Greece all classes are moved, and the nation speaks as with one voice. Not only the kingdom of Greece, but the greater Greece outside wherever Greek hearts beat.

It is not from haste to acquire new territory that it rejects the idea of the proposed autonomy for Crete, but because it regards it, in the form now presented, as wholly unsuited to the emergency. There will inevitably be a repetition of the old hostilities, and the difficulties can never be adjusted through the instrumentality of Turkish soldiers acting as police, even under the immediate direction of the united Powers. It is to be hoped that wiser counsels will prevail, and some arrangement be reached which will secure the absolute freedom of Crete from the last trace of Turkish rule. Neither Crete nor Greece will be satisfied with anything short of that.

I would ask Christian friends not only to pray for a righteous issue of the present struggle, but especially that the noble and self-sacrificing enthusiasm which now prevails may lead also to a higher moral and spiritual life.—Sincerely yours,

Athens, March 8. M. D. Kalopothakes.

Doctors and Atheism.—The Mayor of Bournemouth, Dr. Hosker, in presiding at a meeting in the Shaftesbury Hall, Bournemouth, in aid of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, said there was an utterly erroneous and unfounded idea abroad, to which he gave the lie direct, that a large proportion of the medical profession were Atheists. It was not true. Medical men were brought up to view things in a broad light, and it might be that in scientific matters they saw things in a light in which other people might not see them. But he might point to hundreds of men—men who not only occupied eminent positions in the medical profession, but in literature, and in social life, who must be regarded by everyone as occupying very high positions also in the religious world. He did not wish to enter into controversy, but it had hurt him very much when he had heard it asserted that the medical profession, as a body, fostered Atheism. He denied the assertion, and contended that that profession was the last against which such a charge could be made.

The Bible in Ireland.

An advance copy has been sent to us of Capt. Kearney White's new report. It appears that God has granted, during the past year, much success in connection with the work of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. This is clearly shown by the letters and reports sent in by archbishops, bishops, clergymen, and superintendents. A rector, for example, writes:—"One of the guiding principles of your Society is to work as much by love, and as little by controversy as possible; and this has been faithfully carried out by all the agents who have been under my superintendence. They do not 'Strive nor cry, nor lift up their voice in the streets,' but go about their Master's work in the spirit in which He did Himself. They have gone from house to house in this group of seven parishes, visiting the poor and sick of all denominations, reading the Scriptures and praying where such was welcomed; and where it was not, speaking the Word in a spirit of friendship. It is the only method of working in this land of ours, in my opinion, that is at all likely to succeed, and its success will not be fully revealed till the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed. Your two Scripture readers here, both father and son, have won the respect and esteem of all. It is much in their favour to say that in this district, where there are ten Roman Catholics to one Protestant, there is not a house where they would not be sure of a welcome, and yet they neither were men who hid their light under a bushel, nor disguised the object of their mission."

The object of the Society is the same as when instituted in 1822, viz., to leave no part of Ireland without the blessing of an open Bible, and a message of love and peace, carried to the people by humble Scripture readers of Christian principles, visiting from house to house, reading the Scriptures and praying, when permitted. These readers are placed under evangelical superintendents throughout Ireland. Under these superintendents the men prove efficient workers, often gaining access where the minister would be refused admission. They also work in the large cities as city missionaries, and in the seaports visit ships, thus reaching all classes, irrespective of creed and denomination.

While the work itself gives cause for rejoicing, the finances call for sympathy. The income for the year was £2519 14s. 4d., and the expenditure was £2863 1s. 11d.

The committee desire to commend this blessed and deeply important work to all who have a zeal for the glory of the Lord and have the welfare of Ireland at heart. They seek co-operation in order to "go forward," and their earnest prayer in order that "showers of blessing" may descend upon the labours of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. The secretary and treasurer is Captain James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

"Enduring Hardness."

The missionary bishops in the Far North-west seem to come very near to the simplicity and hardness of early times. A letter has been received from Bishop Newnham, of Moosonee, in which he describes a very unpleasant experience he has lately passed through while making his way from Moose to Albany. He had to make a three days' journey in a canoe, but when not far from Albany the canoe broke down, and he determined to walk on while his men remained behind to mend the boat. The Bishop writes:—

"I waded ashore, and started to make a direct course across a few miles of swamp. But the swamp became bog, almost bottomless, and crossed by many a stream or ditch, and I was soon wet up to my waist. I did not want to turn back for fear my men would have passed, so I struggled on hour after hour. I had been up since midnight, and had only had a mouthful since the previous day, was heavily clad with high wading boots, which were soon filled with water, and the sun was beating on me. There was no dry ground for me to sit down on and rest, so I rested against some willows drawn together, which bore a part of my weight, and thus I took a dog's sleep once or twice. For some time I walked barefooted and barelegged, as I could not lift my boots full of water, but my legs and feet were so torn by the willows that I had to don the boots again. Thus I walked from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., and at last could only go a few yards at a time, my hands helping my legs to lift my feet, when my men, anxious about me, fired a gun, and I answered with a shout." The Bishop was soon rescued, but his feet had been terribly lacerated. Yet he preached to a crowded congregation of Indians the following day; but he adds with significant emphasis, "climbing the pulpit stairs was agony."

Athabasca, N.W. America.

Far away in the cold regions of North-West America lies the diocese of Athabasca. The distance from Winnipeg, the capital of Manitoba, is 1300 miles. It is 500 miles beyond the extensive prairies of Alberta, and 300 miles beyond Edmonton, the last point of civilisation. In the south-east corner of the diocese is situated Lesser Slave Lake. Around this lake are scattered some 1000 Indians, who gain their livelihood by fishing and hunting the fur-bearing animals as well as large game. Many of these Indians have never heard the good news of a Saviour's love; and until our mission, which stands at the north end of the lake, was established ten years ago, not a single child had been educated. The Indians were not only willing but anxious to have their children taught.

The building, which we call the Indian Children's Home, is in size only 24ft. by 30ft., with a small kitchen attached. In this small building we had last winter, including teacher, matron, and cook, thirty-four souls. In February, 1896, an epidemic of dysentery broke out amongst the children. The only cause for such an outbreak in such a cold, healthy climate was, no doubt, owing to the overcrowded condition of the Home. Should the Canadian Government send up an inspector, he would probably insist upon half our scholars being turned out for the benefit of the rest. The Romanists, who are ever on the alert, would reap the benefit. They, unlike ourselves, lack neither accommodation nor means. Many of these children, we believe, are the lambs of Christ's flock, and to see them handed over to the Romanists would be a blow that would almost crush out of us all the bright hope with which we have been so much cheered and encouraged through God's abundant blessing on our home work.

The only means of avoiding this threatened danger is to erect another building the same size as the present one, the cost of which would be £300, including furniture; and a schoolroom, which at present we have not. This would probably cost about £100. For clothing, and partly for support, we are entirely dependent upon the "Missionary Leaves Association" and the "Woman's Auxiliary" in Canada, without whose help we could not go on. We lay the matter before the Lord's people, and feel strong in faith that they will strengthen our hands by a generous response to this appeal.

George Holmes, C.M.S.

16, Salisbury-square, London, E.C.

The Sailors' Rest at the East End.

The Duchess of Albany was present at a meeting on Monday at the Mansion House on behalf of the proposed Albert Victor Sailors' Rest in West India Dock-road. This home will be managed by the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, which has recently secured the freehold of premises formerly known as the Board of Trade Shipping Offices situated at the junction of the Commercial and West India Dock roads. The cost of the site and alterations is estimated at about £3000. At the meeting several hundred pounds were collected as a result of an appeal by the Lord Mayor, who said the sailor's worst enemy was the "land shark" and this Society sought to protect him from this foe.

Archdeacon Sinclair moved a resolution, which, after referring with thankfulness to the work already done by the society, expressed the hope that the funds necessary for the present enterprise would be immediately forthcoming. Rev. John Watson said when a man was thrifty and far seeing he was respected, but when a man was open-handed and was not very careful he was loved, for prodigals had very winning ways. The breath of the sea was in every boy's mind, and when a boy ran away he went to sea, and often turned out the best member of his family.

Lord Kinnaird and Rev. W. J. Mathams then asked the Duchess of Albany to inaugurate a ladies' guild in connection with the Society. The Lord Mayor announced on behalf of her Royal Highness that such a guild was founded, and a number of children were presented with prizes as an acknowledgment of their efforts to raise subscriptions.

Cretan Refugees.—Sir,—There are at present in Greece more than 20,000 Cretan refugees—women, children, and old men. Many of them possess only the rags they stand in, and they are living on charity. Will some of your readers spare clothes, new or old, or anything else for these exiles? Parcels may be addressed, "Sa Majesté la Reine des Hellènes, Athènes, Grèce," and sent, under cover, to Mr. Damala, 22, Great St. Helen's-street, London, E.C. Should any find it more convenient to send their contributions to me I would gladly forward them to Athens.—Yours faithfully, Alice Rouse.

4, Bilton-road, Rugby.

The Y.M.C.A.

BAYSWATER ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this Association was held at the Paddington Baths Hall on Thursday evening. Mr. John Paton presided, and there was a crowded attendance.

Mr. Wild, the secretary, read extracts from his annual report. The membership had steadily increased. Correspondence had been maintained with members who had gone to every part of the world. Employment had been found for a number of young men who were out of work, and many departments of Christian enterprise, evangelistic and other, had been diligently prosecuted.

Mr. T. Cheney Garfit congratulated the Association on its satisfactory progress. He had seen the report in full, and was greatly impressed by the fact that spiritual work was kept in the forefront. "The glory of a young man was his strength," and the aim of all Christian Associations was to develop the physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual strength of the young men with whom they had to deal.

Mr. Marcus Wood, of the China Inland Mission, delivered a stirring address on the work of Christian evangelisation.

Mr. Paton (the chairman) congratulated the Association on having a man like Mr. Wild as secretary, who was so devoted to his work and always at his post.

Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe delivered a powerful speech on "Can a business man be holy?" Even in these "peculiar" days, a man consecrated to God in intellect, heart, will, and body, might dare to do the right, and joyfully trust in God for the consequences.

BRIEF NOTES.

A sub-district conference of the North-Eastern District Union was held on Thursday at Morpeth.

Meetings to inaugurate the opening of new premises have been held by the Chelmsford Association, and were largely attended.

A "membership campaign" at the St. Helen's Association has led 109 young men to join the institution in the course of a few weeks.

Mr. H. Harrison's Young Men's Bible Class at the Weston-super-Mare Association progresses; it is hoped that by the May Day festival the members will number 250.

Dr. Nansen's visit to Belfast under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. brought together a very large audience, and added a substantial sum by way of return to the new building fund of the association.

The membership of the Sydney Young Men's Christian Association now numbers 668. A heavy mortgage of £20,000 still rests upon the premises. During this year the members expect to have a scheme brought before them which will deal with this question, and, it is hoped, finally remove the serious hindrance which the debt has been.

The Swansea Association has held a successful social gathering presided over by the mayor, and addressed by Mr. W. Hind Smith, and others to commemorate the redemption of the building from debt. The neighbouring association of Neath has considerably improved its work since entering new premises. At Newport, Mon., the Sunday afternoon Bible-class has an attendance exceeding two hundred.

The Spring Conference of the South Wales District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Cardiff on Wednesday last week. Brief reports dealing with the work in the various centres were given by the delegates. Subsequently the Cardiff Association held their annual meeting, when Mr. W. Price, general secretary, spoke in encouraging terms of the work carried on by the Association, saying that the membership had doubled itself in six months.

The annual meeting of the voting members of the Bombay Association was held recently at the Apollo Bunder Rooms. The report showed that the past twelve months had been a period of solid and unmistakeable progress. Eighty per cent. of 174 meetings held in the central rooms have been of a purely religious character. The Sunday morning young men's Bible-class has been revived and its membership increased. A bi-monthly Gospel service for boys has been an occasion of much interest.

Requests for Prayer.—For a three weeks' mission in Uddingston, beginning March 21, conducted by William Thomson, jun., in connection with the four churches of the village.—For blessing on a mission, to be conducted by Miss Bonnycastle, from March 28 to April 4, at Lowesmoor Chapel, Worcester.—For blessing on a Gospel service in Mission Room, Moss Grove, Kingswinford, Worcestershire.—That God would greatly bless a three days' mission at Lyons Y.M.C.A. by M. M. Ernest Favre and Pasteur Frank Thomas.—For a mission at Carlisle, commencing March 28, to be conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie.

The Y.W.C.A.

Dedication meetings of the new premises, 459 and 461, Holloway-road, N., will be held on Monday and Wednesday next.

A new term opens this week at the Preparation Home, 14, Finsbury-square, E.C. Particulars can be had from Miss L. Duff.

Brentwood branch lately held its annual meeting, when Miss Ardill gave an interesting address on the work of the association. Rev. J. Hobson also spoke.

The annual meeting of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch recently took place. Addresses were given by Rev. E. A. B. Sanders and Dr. F. Montague Miller.

Our Own Gazette for April is full of interest and variety. Those who seek for bright, illustrated stories will find their wants met. While the Gazette keeps up its quality it deserves the support of all Y.W.C.A. secretaries and members.

On Thursday last the New Institute and Home at Hereford were opened by the Bishop. A charming old house has been acquired, some adjoining warehouses being converted into a large lecture-hall, class-room, committee-room, etc. The ladies have collected £465 towards the expense since Oct. 1.

The annual report of the Cambridge Institute (Holloway-road, N.) shows a membership of 239. Two members are working in the foreign mission field. Much encouraging work is reported in the Junior branch. New and more commodious premises have been secured, and will be opened shortly with accommodation for twenty-eight boarders.

A National Association for India has been formed, binding together all the scattered Y.W.C.A.'s in India, Burmah, and Ceylon, into one strong organisation. This most important step has been the result of the visit of Mr. James Stokes, who arrived in Madras on December 15. He is making a tour round the world in behalf of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations.

On a recent Monday evening the annual social meeting of the Aberdeen Association took place in the rooms of the institute. A satisfactory and encouraging report was given by the chairman, Mr. Gray C. Fraser, of work done in connection with the institute, as well as of its financial condition. During the evening an admirable and spiritual address was delivered by Mr. Henderson, Secretary Y.M.C.A., followed by brief ones from Miss Gordon, Midmar, and Rev. Mr. Swanson. The occasion was taken advantage of to present Miss Lewis, the late Hon. Lady Superintendent, with a testimonial for kind services during the past year, her resignation being due to her approaching marriage. A successor has been found in Miss Fanning.

The London Medical Mission.

The new report shows faithful work and many cheering cases of conversion. The direct medical mission work in St. Giles' and at the new branch in Lambeth have been earnestly maintained by Drs. H. Soltau and R. M. Gibson, with the aid of ladies training for the foreign field and the devoted nurses.

"Not a few cases have come before us of illness brought on by starvation; these we have been able to succour, and, when well enough to travel, have sent them to Folkestone to our Convalescent Home, where they have received benefit to both body and soul.

"It is unwise to print particulars of all our cases, but we have seen many blessed in the most unlikely surroundings, some of whom are, we believe, in the glory with their Saviour and Lord. Two old women have been for many years well-known figures at the top of Endell-street: the one kept a newspaper stall and in all weathers might have been seen at her post. The other kept an apple-stall at certain times of the year. During the cold weather we had lately, she one day suddenly fell forward and was taken up dead at her stall, the cold acting upon a weak heart and ill-nourished body having proved fatal. The other woman was nipped by the same cold and took to her bed. She had been an attendant here for a long time and drank in the glorious truths of the Gospel, passing away in perfect peace."

No mission workers can better ascertain the real needs of the poor than the doctors and nurses who are continually in their homes, and who see things as they are. Many mothers become ill with cold and hunger through pawning their own undergarments or going without food that the little ones may not suffer. Blankets and bedding are often lent in cases of rheumatic fever and consumption. The invalid, kitchen, and clothing funds continue to prove valuable to the mission.

Details are given of the Holiday Home, at Brasted, Chart; and of the Convalescent Home at Folkestone. The treasurer urges strongly the need for larger and more liberal aid. The Superintendent is Dr. Henry Soltau, 33, Short's-gardens, Endell street, W.C.

Scottish Notes.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, reports another gift of £500 towards his Consumptive Hospital at Bridge of Weir.

At a meeting of the Glasgow auxiliary of the Baptist Missionary Society Mr. Bruce, from China, said that never in the history of mission work in that country had the outlook been so encouraging.

In his third "Duff Lecture" at Edinburgh Dr. J. Marshall Lang said the church that ceased to be evangelistic would cease to be evangelical, and the thought of a church that had ceased to be evangelical would be as salt that had lost its savour.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society in Edinburgh the report complained of the widespread apathy with respect to Papal aggression and Romeward tendencies. One speaker said he was more afraid of the Scottish Church Society than even of Romanism in Rome or Ireland.

Under the superintendence of Rev. F. Brain Castle, the East Glasgow Wesleyan Methodist Mission reports a year of progress in every department of the work. The church membership now numbers 325, with sixty on trial and fifty-two juniors, a net increase of thirty full members on the year. During the pastorate of Mr. Castle there has been an advance of over 40 per cent in the membership. The church is now crowded every Sunday evening. Over 1200 adults are connected with the Pleasant Sunday Afternoons for Men and Pleasant Monday Afternoons for Women.

Irish Notes.

In accordance with time-honoured custom, Wednesday, March 17, was observed in Dublin and various other centres as a day of special and united prayer for Ireland.

The Methodists of Belfast propose taking a new departure in establishing a home for the training of deaconesses in that city in which ladies can be trained for home mission work.

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian Orphan Society was held last week in Belfast under the presidency of Dr. Williamson, Moderator of the General Assembly. The aim of this excellent society is that there should not be a single orphan in the church unprovided for.

The Mission to the Adult Deaf and Dumb in Belfast is doing a useful work. Its ninth annual reunion has lately been held under the presidency of Rev. Dr. Williamson. Reference was made to the late Rev. John Kinghan, whose whole life had been devoted to the welfare of the deaf, dumb, and blind, who had bequeathed £2,000 for the erection of a hall for the use of the deaf and dumb, and also £200 for the blind towards helping them to a trade after they had been trained.

The "Liberator" Relief Fund.

The fourth annual report of the "Liberator" Fund Committee is issued, and still there is no end to the fresh cases of mischief and misery that keep dropping in for relief. No fewer than 103 entirely new appeals were made during the year—two every week upon an average—most of them, say the committee, of a very piteous character. These late applicants are not only in many cases in distress quite as lamentable as any that have occurred all along, but they are especially deserving of sympathetic respect and generous help because they have evidently done their brave and resolute best to avoid charity. It is, indeed, deeply moving to read some of the letters published in this report from those who have striven so earnestly to avoid making their sorrows known. "The single sister I live with," writes a poor needlewoman, sixty-two years of age, "can do so little in the way of help, for, unfortunately, her money was put in with mine in the one name, so she is a sufferer as well as myself. How hard it all is, God and ourselves only know."

The hon. secretary of the fund is Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon-street, E.C.

Continental Prisons.—At the noon prayer meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday last, Mr Charles Cook told the story of his work visiting continental prisons during the past twenty-one years, and solicited a prayerful interest in the tour he is about to undertake. A large audience listened to the address.

Wandsworth-road, S.W.—Mr. John Soames, of the Howard-street Gospel Mission, writes:—"We have brought to a close for the season our free meals to poor children and the unemployed men and women, which we commenced in November. During the four months over eight thousand were fed, and many cases of distress were relieved."

Personalia.

Pastor Archibald Brown has preached some very helpful sermons in New York en route for the West.

Dr. Grattan Guinness has been lecturing and preaching at Madras and Calcutta; at the former place to educated Hindoos.

Rev. Hubert Brooke, formerly of St. Mary's Chapel, Reading, has been presented to the incumbency of St. Margaret's Chapel, Brighton.

Mr. T. A. Bailey, late of Cork, has accepted a very cordial invitation from leading missionaries and others to take up work at Poona among native students.

Mr. W. Willis, Q.C., who has recently been appointed County-court Judge for Norfolk, is a prominent member of the Baptist body and a preacher.

Miss de Broen, of the Belleville Mission, we regret to know, has again had several attacks of influenza, though much milder than last year. She has consequently not been able to come to England for any meetings.

Mr. Emilio Olsson returns to London on April 3, and will be glad to speak in chapels or halls from April 4 to 12 about the evangelisation of South America. Application should be made to Mr. W. Greene, 3, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.

Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, has been rather seriously indisposed for the past few weeks, and has been unable to proceed to Madrid, so as to inform himself as to the present position and outlook of the Spanish reform movement.

Mr. Joshua Poole.—We regret to learn that this veteran evangelist is suffering from giddiness and fainting fits. He has recently had a severe attack of syncope. Prayer is desired that, if it be God's will, he may be restored to a measure of health.

Dr. Andrew Thomson, the much-esteemed senior pastor of Broughton-place U.P. Church, Edinburgh, has resigned his pastorate on account of advancing years. He has been connected with the congregation for over forty years. His colleague and successor is Rev John Smith, one of the ablest preachers in the city.

Mrs. Bishop (Miss Isabella Bird), the well-known traveller, has reached London after an absence of more than three years spent in the Far East. Mrs. Bishop has during this time visited China, Corea, and Japan, and freely confesses that the fascination which the East exercises over her grows rather than diminishes. She has visited Corea no fewer than four times.

Obituary.

REV. WILLIAM BALLANTYNE.

For many years Mr. Ballantyne has been one of the leading figures in Presbyterian circles in London, having been clerk of the London Presbytery long before its division into North and South, and of the North Presbytery after its partition. Moreover, he had long done good service as minister of Wood Green and Canonbury churches. He had been failing for some time, but only took seriously ill about a fortnight ago, passing away on Thursday last, aged seventy-six. The interment took place on Monday at Highgate Cemetery.

REV. HORACE MEYER.

The death is announced of Rev. Horace Meyer, formerly vicar of Christ Church, Clifton. He had been in ill-health for some time, and about a fortnight ago underwent an operation at Brighton from which he never recovered. Mr. Meyer was educated at Catharine College, Cambridge, and began ministerial work in Birmingham in 1855. After labouring at North Mimms, Herts, and East Tisted, he became rector of Trowbridge in 1869. During the twelve years he remained at Trowbridge his preaching attracted large congregations to the fine old parish church. He resigned in 1881, having accepted the charge of Christ Church, Clifton, where he ministered for over twelve years, until ill-health caused him to retire.

REV. DR. RITCHIE, DUNS.

This earnest minister passed away on Saturday night at Duns. He was in the eighty-seventh year of his age and fifty-eighth of his ministry. Till within recent years he discharged unaided all the duties of the pastorate. During the long period of his ministry he was known as a faithful and able preacher. He was a man of superior gifts and attainments, but solid rather than brilliant. Theologically he was of the old school; his discourses were of the doctrinal type. He made his influence felt by the care with which he prepared for the pulpit, by his evangelical teaching, hy his unaffected earnestness, by his diligence as a pastor, and by his character as a man. He was greatly esteemed, and will be held in grateful remembrance by the people of that quiet Border town where he lived and laboured so long. The temperance cause found in him one of its most earnest and effective advocates.

MR. ISAAC SHARPE.

The death is announced of Mr. Isaac Sharpe, a leading and honoured member of the Society of Friends, in his ninety-first year. Mr. Sharpe death took place at Ettington, near Stratford-on-Avon. He has for the last twenty years been widely known by reason of his world-wide missionary journeys, cheering and ministering to missionaries in all parts. He but recently completed a long and arduous tour of this kind. Mr. Sharpe was secretary to the late Mr. Joseph Pease in the earlier portion of his life, and took part in the election of 1832, when Mr. Pease was returned as the first Quaker to Parliament. He lived at Middlesbrough till about twenty years ago, taking up missionary labours at a period when men usually seek retirement and ease.

Temperance Notes.

The Home Secretary states that he is most anxious to bring in the Inebriates Bill, but it is not ready.

The Government of Canada has decided to introduce legislation for a plebiscite of the Dominion on the prohibition question.

On the recent polling day in Halifax the publicans applied for an hour's extension, but the magistrates firmly refused to grant it.

Dr. W. J. Collins, the new chairman of the London County Council, is one of the medical men connected with the Temperance Hospital.

It is stated that in a group of eighteen short streets in Soho there are no fewer than seventy-six public-houses, besides innumerable clubs and restaurants where intoxicants are sold.

Rev. J. H. Jowett has announced that the deacons of Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, have unanimously decided that in future only unfermented wine would be placed upon the Lord's Table.

A large number of temperance veterans of 1837, whose abstinence has extended throughout the Queen's reign, will attend the Victorian Era Celebration to be held in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on May 21.

Since the opening of the Duxhurst Inebriate Home for women 3,000 applications for admission have had to be refused owing to the limited accommodation. Only forty-two patients can be provided for in the village itself.

The National Temperance League is arranging for a meeting to be held in the Queen's Hall of the People's Palace, Mile-end, for the purpose of demonstrating how abstinence affects the prosperity of working men.

In connection with the twenty-first anniversary of the B.W.T.A., to be observed on April 12, each branch is being urged to mark the coming of age of the Association by securing at least twenty-one new members during the year.

An Act has come into force in Victoria prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to children under fifteen, either for consumption on or off the premises. The Act also gives the people of a locality power to prevent new licences, and to reduce the number already in existence.

The Spring Conference of the Young Abstainers' Union was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening. Mrs. W. S. Caine read a paper on the work of the Union and how to extend and strengthen it among those whom it aims at reaching, viz., the children of the upper and middle classes. In the helpful discussion which followed, Dr. Eccles, Dr. Henry Williams, Mr. J. Louis Fenn, Mrs. H. Roberts, and others took part.

The evidence before the Royal Commission continues to show the bad state of things in various provincial manufacturing centres. Mr. Harold Wright, stipendiary magistrate to the Potteries, said the public-houses in his district averaged one to 200 of the population. In the present condition of the law it was difficult to prove permitting drunkenness, which was a serious offence, and one for which licences should be endorsed. He would abolish appeals to Quarter Sessions. The Chief Constable of Wigan took exception to the statement of a previous witness—that the hands of the police were tied by the action of the Watch Committee, the chairman of which is also chairman of a brewery company. The ex-town clerk of Wigan, another witness, recommended that a public inquiry should be made respecting the allegations as to the influence of the liquor interest on the local Watch Committee. Mr. C. S. Roundell spoke of the prevalence of drunkenness in Manchester on Saturday evenings.

Governesses' Benevolent Institution.—The new report shows a considerable increase in income for the past year, with the most gratifying result to many in very serious straits. Some of the letters given are of the most touching nature. The home has been of help to 181, while the asylum for the aged at Chislehurst continues to shelter many frail and worn-out ones. Information as to the institution may be had of the secretary, Mr. C. W. Klugh, 32, Sackville-street, W.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 4.

Peter Working Miracles (Acts ix. 32-43).

Golden Text.—Verse 34.

THE work of Peter, of which two instances are given in this lesson, took place during a period of peace in the church (31). The reason why the Jews ceased for awhile their bitter persecution is not given here; but Roman history supplies the explanation. The Emperor Caius Caligula resolved to establish the worship of himself throughout his empire. In A.D. 39 he ordered Petronius, the governor of Syria, to set up in the Jewish temple an image bearing the inscription, Caius, the new incarnation of Jupiter. The Jews were filled with consternation, and resisted in the most strenuous manner this impious decree. Petronius prevailed upon the emperor to leave the temple untouched; but altars to himself were raised outside the temple gates, and all the synagogues in Alexandria were declared to have become temples to Cæsar. It was while the Jews were engaged in resisting this decree, and saving their temple from profanation, that the Christians had rest. As God over-ruled the persecution for the purpose of scattering the messengers of the Gospel, so He made use of this period of rest for the edifying and multiplying of the Church.

A physical miracle, followed by a spiritual revival, is brought before us in each of these two incidents.

I. The first took place at Lydda (32), the Lud of the Old Testament. It was the chief city of the fertile and beautiful plain of Sharon (35), and was about twenty-five miles north-west of Jerusalem. Tradition makes it the birthplace of St. George, the mythical hero of the story of St. George and the Dragon. The Gospel had reached this city, probably through some of the disciples scattered abroad by the persecution (viii. 4). And it had produced fruit here, for Peter came to "the saints" (32). Can any of the scholars explain the term saints?

Æneas was evidently a confirmed paralytic (bedridden for eight years), and was absolutely helpless (33). He was not even able to seek Peter, for it is said Peter "found" him. He is a picture of those multitudes of people who have to be sought for, by patient self-denying labour, before the sound of the Gospel can reach them.

Peter's message (34) is very suggestive. (1) It spake at once of Jesus Christ. The man was not led to expect anything from Peter, but was turned at once to Peter's Lord. In a quaint church at Peille, near to Mentone, there is a pulpit, from which a hand is extended holding forth a cross on which the Saviour appears crucified. Every Christian worker may learn the lesson. Not of ourselves, but of Jesus, we speak. (2) It expressed Peter's strong confidence in Christ. He spake, not of a dead, but of a living Saviour, just as powerful in his work through his servants as He had been on the earth.

(3) It made a demand for faith on the part of Æneas. Could he be expected to obey the command to "arise" if he did not believe Peter's message? He had to do what in himself he could not do, and the fact that he did it evidenced how real his faith was in the living Saviour. Make a similar demand of each scholar. He believes the Gospel, let him evidence his faith by repentance toward God, and by yielding his life to the service of Christ.

This miracle was like the church bell. It called attention to the Gospel, and led many to seek the Saviour for themselves.

II. Joppa (36).—The modern Jaffa is a seaport on the Mediterranean, about ten miles north-west of Lydda. Dorcas is the Greek name for the Aramaic word Tabitha, meaning gazelle, a type of beauty and gracefulness. The truest beauty, and that which every woman may cultivate, is beauty of character. Dorcas was a disciple—a learner at the feet of Jesus—a fruitful branch in the True Vine, therefore a true disciple (Jno. xv. 8). Her fruit appeared in her "good works and almsdeeds." She did them—not formed committees, and raised subscriptions, and employed the service of others. Every garment was valued the more highly because it was proof of her own affectionate interest and diligent service. She was "full" of such deeds—not full in the sense of being proud in them; but she gave herself wholly to this work, and abounded in it. She has become an example to the Church. Her name describes one form of service in which Christians take part.

Strange that such a woman should die! Yet her death did two things:—(1) It called attention to her work (39). (2) It led to a wonderful exhibition of the power of Christ. In the presence of such a miracle, who could question the resurrection of Christ? Is it surprising that a revival followed (42), and that Peter's presence was needed to help to gather in and care for the new converts?

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

A Church Army labour home has been opened in Sheffield. Captain Green and his wife have charge of the home.

A most successful missionary mission has been held in Manchester. Bishop Tucker preached in the Cathedral, and special services were held in some fifty churches.

Rev. Dr. Samuel Kinns' lectures at St. Paul's, Onslow-square, S.W., on the Wednesday evenings of Lent, have been drawing large congregations, composed chiefly of cultured people.

The Bishop of Stepney, preaching at Torquay, said that by personal effort they were prevailing upon men to attend church in East London. On visiting one workshop it was found that only one man out of 500 attended a place of worship.

The annual report of the Gloucester and Bristol Diocesan Mission, which is directed by Canon Bowers, states that, in spite of the terrible epidemic that visited Gloucester, the year 1896 has been one of the busiest the diocesan mission has ever had.

Some misapprehension has been caused by the report that "the C.M.S. has received a valuable present of stock." The Society has received no such present since November last, when it was notified of a special trust, of stock of the value of £2 10s., only the interest of which is available as income.

The Very Rev. Herbert Mather, Provost or Dean of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness, has accepted the Bishopric of Antigua. He was ordained in 1856, and has had a varied experience of Church work. He was for a time in Newfoundland, whilst at home he has served in England, Scotland, and Wales.

The committee of the C.M.S. took leave last week of Miss H. L. Conner, returning, and Miss E. M. Stuart, M.B., C.M., Glasgow, proceeding to Persia. The following were accepted as missionaries of the society:—Misses C. Burnside, L. Mayor, and R. Murray, and Rev. Kenneth St. Aubyn Rogers, curate of Melton Mowbray.

The Consistory Court of St. Albans has granted a decree for a faculty for the erection of three stone figures on the chancel screen of Holy Trinity Church, Great Bardfield, Essex. The figures are to represent, in the word employed in the petition, "The Crucified Saviour, the Blessed Virgin, and St. John." The application was not opposed!

The thirteenth annual meeting of the Incorporated Free and Open Church Association was held at the Church House, Westminster, last week. The report stated that in addition to forty new free churches which had been built during the year, forty-six old churches had been made free directly or indirectly through the action of the association.

Cowper Church, East Dereham, which is built on the site of the house where the poet spent his closing years, is to be completed by the erection of a clock tower at a cost of £500. In the vestry is preserved the woodwork of the bedroom in which Cowper died, the door being in actual use, and in front of the church stands a polished granite monument to the poet's memory.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and Salford Ladies' C.M.S. Union was held last week in the Manchester Town-hall. The Lady Mayoress, who presided, spoke as a returned lady missionary. Bishop Tucker gave an address on the work of the missions in the territory with which he is connected. Addresses were delivered by Canons Keeling and Kelly, Prebendary Macdonald, and Rev. K. L. Jones.

A remarkable meeting, attended by Nonconformists as well as Churchpeople, has been held to express regret felt at Warminster at the disfigurement of the minster by the re-erection of the old Halliday pew. A resolution was passed asking Mr. Halliday, in deference to the feelings of his fellow-townsmen, to remove the same, and substitute a pew in keeping with the surroundings. Two days later a deputation appointed by the meeting waited on Mr. Halliday, and on conveying to him the request, received a decisive refusal.

Congregational.

Dr. Newman Hall preached last week at Knebworth Herts.

A special mission has been held with much interest at Seaford.

The work at Leyton is reported as flourishing and steadily growing.

Extensive renovations have become necessary at Bishopsgate Chapel, E.C.

Rev. B. Betts, formerly pastor at Exmouth, is now settled happily at Kew, Melbourne.

The seventy-sixth anniversary of Rev. D. Davies, who is still doing good service, has been held at South Cheriton.

In connection with the "Royal Record Reign," a special demonstration is being arranged by the Congregational Union in the City Temple on May 11.

Gipsy Smith began on Sunday an eight days' mission in the Cambridge Hall, Southport, in connection with the Free Church Council of the town.

The meetings of the Lancashire Union were held last week at Ashton-under-Lyne. When the Union was formed in 1806, it included twenty-eight chapels; now it includes 320.

An English service is held every Sunday at 10.30 a.m. in the Conference Hall of the McAll Mission, 23, rue Royale, Paris, near the Place de la Concorde and the Church de la Madeleine.

The workers at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, have planned out the whole surrounding district, so that a visit may be paid to each house at least once a month, and thus systematic efforts be maintained to reach the non-churchgoing.

The annual meetings of the Gloucestershire and Herefordshire Congregational Union were held at the Tabernacle, Rodborough, on March 15 and 16. Instead of a debt of £125 like last year, there is a balance in hand of over £25. Rev. C. Y. Potts, of Ledbury, was elected chairman for 1898.

More than 200 Samoan villages are now supplied with pastors who have had a four years' course in the Malua College, and some 5000 natives of Savage Island have been converted by means of Samoan evangelists. There are sixteen islands to the N.W. of Samoa which first heard the Gospel from the lips of Samoan teachers, and in New Guinea there are nearly twenty more of these living and working amongst the savages there.

Calls.—Rev. L. J. Bailey, of Wimborne, to New Tabernacle, Old-street, E.C.; Rev. A. K. Hodgson to Uttoxeter; Rev. John Stewart, of Bexhill-on-Sea, to Felixstowe; Rev. F. W. Piper to Grimsby: Rev. W. Nicholson, of Battle, to Selby, Yorks; Rev. J. Hutchison, jun., of Bowdon, to St. Ives (all accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. W. R. Edwards, of Bethesda, Brynmawr; Rev. L. Martin, of Llandilofs.

Baptist.

Mr. B. Warren has been recognised at West Drayton.

Rev. S. C. Allderidge, of Burnley, has been laid aside for a time.

Rev. H. Trueman has entered on his new charge at Barking.

The Baptist Missionary Society has raised £3409 for the Indian Famine Fund.

Mr. F. Mudeley, M.A., has been accepted by the B.M.S. for Shansi, China.

Rev. E. B. Woods has been recognised as pastor at Clarendon Hall, Leicester.

Woodberry Down Chapel issues a most encouraging report. The membership is now 591.

The general work at Forest Gate is reported as progressing, notwithstanding the illness of the minister, Rev. J. H. Evans.

[redacted] Church. [redacted] for the last six years [redacted] Baptist Church, Manch[redacted] has been called to the pastorate of Clapton Downs Church, London, the scene of the labours for many years of Rev. Dr. Tymms, now President of Rawdon College.

Rev. Joseph Clark, who has accepted the pastorate of the Tabernacle at Auckland, New Zealand, has taken leave of the congregation at Nottingham, at a meeting presided over by Alderman Brownswood, J.P. It was mentioned that at the last communion service twenty-six new members were received into fellowship.

At the recent celebration of the "semi-centennial" of the Calvary Church in New York, the minister, Rev. Dr. M'Arthur, gave interesting particulars as to the increase of the Baptists in the United States. "When Calvary Baptist Church was organised, in 1847, the population of the United States was 20,000,000, and of this number 660,000 were Baptists, in one sense or the other. To-day, with a population of 67,000,000, the States hold 4,000,000 of confessed Baptists in communion with the Church, and with those adherents who are not regular members of any Church, and yet profess the faith, the number will exceed 12,000,000." On the same occasion the venerable Dr. T. L. Cuyler congratulated the congregation on its growth and success.

Calls.—Rev. J. C. Taylor, of Bursiem, to Bramley, Leeds; Rev. D. Rees, of Aberfan, to Pontypool; Rev. J. H. Rees, of Narberth, to Griffithstown; Rev. L. Shakleford, to Clitheroe.

Resignations.—Rev. G. Short, of Salisbury; Rev. A. Walker, of Great Victoria-street, Belfast.

Methodist.

Stirring missionary services have been held at Holdsworthy.

An encouraging mission has been held at Grangetown, Eton, by Miss Peart.

Rev. J. Foster Holdsworth has concluded a fruitful mission at West Parade Chapel, Wakefield.

Missionary services have been held at Portsmouth and Southampton by Rev. W. R. K. Baulkwill.

A special series of services have been held at Newport, Isle of Wight, by Mr. W. Tarrett, of Bristol.

The eighty-second anniversary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society is being celebrated in Manchester and Salford this week.

Collections on behalf of the Indian Famine Fund have become general in Wesleyan chapels and schools, and the fund at the Mission House is now nearly £5000. Besides, many large sums have gone direct to the Mansion House Committee.

A memorial-stone to mark the renovation and extension of Oxford-place Wesleyan Chapel, Leeds, and seven foundation-stones of the new Sunday-school in connection with the chapel, were laid on Saturday. The estimated cost of the new buildings is £18,000.

Rev. Dr. Randles, President of the Wesleyan Conference, has been paying an official visit to Plymouth and neighbourhood. At a reception in his honour, held by the Evangelical Free Churches, he said that Nonconformity has a history, great and rich, in the development of Christian character, which they should teach their children.

Although overshadowed by a sense of loss, in the death of Rev. J. E. Clapham, first secretary of the mission, the annual meeting of the London Wesleyan Mission was largely attended, and had much to show of good work. Rev. J. S. Haworth presided, and Rev. W. D. Walters reported on the various branches, showing that alike in West London, the South side, the East-end, and the Central, progress is being made and genuine work done.

The annual returns from the Primitive Methodist circuits in the Manchester and Liverpool districts are all but completed. In the Manchester district it appears that out of forty-one circuits sixteen report themselves as stationary in membership; twenty-one show an increase, and three a decrease, whereas in the Liverpool district out of the forty-one circuits which it embraces fourteen are reported as stationary, twenty-one show an increase, and five a decrease. The net increase in the Manchester district is 168, whilst that in the Liverpool district is 112.

Presbyterian.

The anniversary of the cause at Stepney was held last week.

Rev. J. B. Meharry has been laid aside, but is reported better.

Rev. A. S. Bernie, lately of Orkney, has been inducted to the ministry at Arthur Hill, Newcastle.

The work under the care of Dr. G. Johnstone at Trinity, Liverpool, reports many tokens of encouragement.

The work at Higher Broughton, Manchester, is growing and deepening. The mission branch in Devonshire-street is vigorously carried on.

The reports to be presented to the forthcoming Synod, will, it is expected, show a membership of 70,636, an increase of 1,004 for the year.

The increase of income during 1896 has enabled the Home Mission Board of the United Presbyterian Church to raise the minimum stipend of its ministers to £186, and, where no manse is provided, to give £20 towards the rent of a house.

The various [illegible] Committees met last week at the College, Queen's-gate. A better provision for old and infirm [illegible] the purpose of the [illegible] and in 1897, [illegible] and made [illegible] the [illegible] of past[illegible] a large [illegible] for the Home Mission Fund and were [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] Rev. [illegible] Rothwell; Rev. H. P. [illegible] St. Vincent parish, Glasgow, Rev. Owen Foulkes, to Abergele.

Resignation.—Rev. J. M. Macnair, of Lowick.

Society of Friends.

The Friends Foreign Missionary Association Fund for the Indian Famine now amounts to nearly £4000. More money is urgently needed.

On the 20th ult. a new mission-hall and adult schoolroom, at the cost of £1500, was opened at Bishop Auckland. The seating accommodation is 300, and excellent and varied Christian work is well sustained.

At Doncaster, on the 6th inst., the foundation-stone of new adult school buildings was laid by Mrs. Gleadbury, and increased accommodation will thus be provided for the growing work of that important centre.

To the list of venerable and useful Friends lately deceased must now be added the name of Ann Knight Lury, of Clevedon, at the age of eighty-one years. She passed into rest on the 13th inst., one of her daughters being now on a missionary tour in North America.

Professor Rendel and Helen E. Harris are labouring earnestly to keep Armenia to the front, amid the needs of India and the Cretan imbroglio; and addressed a drawing-room meeting at Saffron Walden on the 5th inst., when eighty to one hundred persons were present. A collection was made on behalf of the orphans.

"The Work of Friends on the Continent of Europe" was the subject of a very able and instructive lecture, on the 8th inst., at Devonshire House, by Fielden Sharp, B.A., of York; the veteran writer and worker Wm. Beck in the chair. The service rendered by Friends for the last 20 years in Romish and other lands has been extensive and influential, but the military systems prevalent have made it hard for Friends to remain, and many have settled in English-speaking lands. The names of many devoted evangelists from England and America were revived, to the satisfaction of the highly appreciative audience.

Fallen Asleep.

At Northchapel, in the diocese of Chichester, Rev. J. Knight, for twenty-two years vicar of the parish.—A. Beetham, Westmorland, Rev. G. W. Cole, vicar since 1821.—At Winsford, diocese of Bath and Wells, at the age of eighty-one, Rev. Henry Tripp, for nearly forty years vicar.—At Burgh St. Margaret's, Rev. C. J. Lucas, for thirty-five years rector of the parish.—At Tamworth, Mrs. Sadler, aged eighty-one, a devoted helper of the Lord's work for many years.—In St. Thomas's Hospital, London, on 11th inst., Mr. T. Widdowson (after an operation), a Government inspector of schools, an earnest Christian, and an able writer.—At Hot Springs, U.S.A., Rev. Nathan Fawell, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and formerly a Wesleyan minister in this country.—At Narborough, Rev. J. M. Robinson, aged seventy-two, for thirty-one years minister of the Congregational Chapel in the town.—At Leicester, Mrs. Islip, aged seventy-six, widow of Rev. Francis Islip, formerly minister at Kitworth.—In the United States, Rev. Dr. William Kincaid, secretary of the American Congregational Home Missionary Society.—At Trowbridge, Mr. Isaac Pocock, aged ninety, a devoted worker for many years.—At Grimsby, Mr. James Atkinson, aged seventy-three, a valued Sunday-school superintendent for many years.—At Portadown, Mr. Wm. Mitchell, a most devoted Christian worker and a zealous and faithful class-leader in connection with the Methodist [illegible], aged seventy years.—At Limerick, suddenly, Mr. David Meredith, of Durrow, Queen's county, a sincere follower of Christ and a helper in every good cause.—At Castle Caldwell, co. Fermanagh, Mr. John C. Bloomfield, D.L., a prominent and active member of the General Synod of the Church of Ireland, and a strong and decided evangelical.—At Louth, suddenly, Rev. Alban Sayer, senior minister of the Free Methodist chapel.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, March 22, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

	£ s. d.
Mansion House Indian Famine Fund—M. T.	1 0 0
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission—M. P. A., 17s.; (Indian Famine) M. R., 10s.; Mrs. R. T., 5s.; J. M., Thank-offering, £1; S. L. E., 10s.; A. M. D., Pau, £2 10s.; A. G., Pau, 10s.; A. H., Pau, 4s.; J. C., Pau, 8s.	6 14 0
Christian Succour to India (Lord Radstock)—Miss K., 5s.; Thank-offering, S. C., 5s.; Gem, £5; Thank-offering, Needlewoman, 5s.; The Hut, £10; J. and G., £1 1s.; Ellen G., 5s.; Hue, 5s.; K. G., 5s.; F. P., £5; J. H. L., 5s.; M. S., 10s.; Mrs. E. S., £1; Brussels, £2; E. T., £2; Beta, £1; J. A., £1; Lower Winchendon Mission Hall, £2; H. H., 5s.; Mrs. U., 5s.; E. E. B., £5; Eva, 10s.; K. K., 10s.; Amy, 15s.; Nana, 5s.; E H., Grange Servant, £5; Maj.-Genl. L. T., £5 5s.	47 19 0
Famine in India—Miss K., 10s.; Thank-offering, S. C., 5s.; M. A. I., £1; Mrs. B. and Miss E. B., 10s.; M. L. G., Dolgelly, 5s.; M. M., Belfast, 2s. 6d.; P. L., 5s.; Mrs. M., Spain, £2; M. McG., 5s.; Collected B. A. W., 6s.; M. A. B., 5s.; Collection Ardrishaig per A. M. Q., £5; M. F. B., £2; H. G., Clifton, 10s.; Petros, 2s.; H. A. B., 5s.; M. W., 10s. 6d.; K. H., 15s.; Elista, 5s.; S. A., Lichfield, 5s.; E. M. P., 5s.; J. MacM., £1, S. and W., 10s.; S. G. G., £1; L. F. P., 2s.; V. H., 1s. 6d.; M. A. P., £1; Inasmuch, 6s. 3d.; Miss M.L., £2; Braybrooke, 17s.; Mrs. W. P., £2 2s.; W. J., 5s.; A. G. C., 1s. 3d.; Miss M. G., £1; E.M. H., 5s.; Three Poor People, 6d.; Worker, Faith Mission, 1s.; C. V., £1; S. A. W., 5s. ..	33 7 6
Pundita Ramabai's Home for Widows, Poona—M. P. A.,* £1; (Famine) J. G. B., £2 19s. 6d. ..	3 19 6
London Missionary Society (Famine)—W. H. F. ..	5 5 0
Baptist Missionary Society (Famine)—Z., 7s. 6d.; (Zenana Famine Relief) M. E. W., 5s.	0 12 6
Indian Famine (Beggars' Church, Agra)—A Family in Glasgow, 7s.; A Friend, 5s.	0 12 0
Indian Famine, Children, Poona (Mrs. Bruce), page 19	6 15 2

(Continued on page 29.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada ..	2½ dols. „ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2¾ dols. „ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4	Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8	„ „	4s. „ „
12	„ „	6s. „ „
24	„ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR younger readers should give careful attention to the series of articles, of which we give the second this week: "Is My Bible Really True?" Dr. Leach has written especially for those who would make themselves acquainted with the outstanding facts regarding the story of the Sacred Scriptures.

Evidences begin to appear that the recent judgment on betting will produce a good effect. The police are, in some cases, prosecuting, and the magistrates are not unready to punish. As a "place" has been defined, gamblers will find it difficult to carry on their trade in safety anywhere in what is not "a place." Now that law is approximating to philosophy in its definition of terms, the police will know that a gambler, when they see him at work, is in "a place."

It is cheering to hear on the authority of City men, as witnessed at the meeting of the National Temperance League held in the Mansion House last week, that there has been a great improvement in all classes in the City in the way of temperance. There is still, however, great room for reform in commercial circles. Spite of the condemnatory opinions of experts like the late Sir Andrew Clark and Sir Henry Holland, alcohol is still supposed by great numbers to increase the capacity for work, and to lengthen life. So long as this opinion exists, there will be some danger of the revival of the evil habits of the past generation. If total abstainers did their part to uphold their cause privately among friends and acquaintances, instead of leaving it to public speakers whose words are seldom heard by the unconverted, they would do good service. It would be the height of folly to slacken any effort because a partial victory has been gained. The stronghold of drink has yet to be captured.

The watchful supervision kept by Liverpool temperance workers on the liquor traffic during the last few years has done an immense amount of good in that city. Last week again a determined attempt to lower the age at which children may be served with intoxicants over the public bar was defeated, though upheld by a petition signed by 30,000 people. It seems almost incredible that so many signatures could have been obtained to a petition so obviously hurtful to the morals of the rising generation, and the Liverpool magistrates deserve all praise for having stood firm in their refusal to place a stumbling-block in the way of young children of tender age. The limit of legality is still too low rather than too high.

The opponents of state regulation of vice have very wisely issued a "manifesto" in view of the present state of affairs. They are not insensible to the grave question of the health of the troops in India, nor to the necessity for doing something of a positive kind. Of course, they maintain their cardinal principle that no improvement of health can be expected from recognising and fostering the vice out of which this special form of disease springs. Some of their points are of special importance: e.g., the necessity for providing safeguards against temptation—the desirableness, indeed the necessity for taking note of a soldier's history in the matter of this disease when his conduct sheet is marked. A bad man, who has done all his soldierly duties, should not be described as of exemplary conduct—officers should have the duty of keeping their men in as good health as possible. The manifesto thinks that there should be a Royal Commission to inquire into many points of importance, such as why the percentage of married soldiers has been reduced from 30 per cent. as it was under the East India Co., to 4 per cent. now—and why so many hospitals have been closed.

Most persons regarded the Arbitration Treaty between the United States and this country as dead, killed by the vote of the Senate; not so Mr. Cremer, who exerted himself so earnestly and patiently to see the Treaty made a fact. He still hopes that the President will send it back to the Senate, and that before that body meets next session the American people will have spoken with such emphasis as shall induce it to alter its position. Admitting the unfriendly feeling of many Americans to this country, he nevertheless believes that there is a good deal of enthusiasm for the Treaty on the part of the educated people, the religious bodies, and almost the whole of the commercial classes. If once these are aroused, they can compel the country to do as they please. The difficulty is to get them to stir. It is hard to know why they should be inert; for Mr. Cleveland's war scare is said to have cost the country many millions sterling, and the Treaty would prevent such panics. We will hope against hope in favour of this great human measure.

Some interesting replies have been sent to the Review of Reviews on the question of popularising the results of the Higher Criticism. From certain "advanced" men they are altogether in favour of the project, but from some others who are as competent to give an opinion there come suggestions of carefulness which, however wise, are scarcely likely to be heeded. It will no doubt be done if it "takes." "There is a general shyness," says the editor, "of what may prove to be premature statement." The Bishop of Southwark, in demurring to the proposal, states that the historical method of study is reasserting itself so much against "the mere literary imagination" that he thinks the Old Testament criticism very likely to follow the fate of the New Testament criticism in a short time. We are persuaded that "the mere literary imagination" would land us in hopeless confusion. Professor Adolf Kamphausen warns us against the incautiousness of many of his fellow-countrymen "who are always putting out uncertain things as certain." These testimonies are evidence that the tide of criticism is not flowing victoriously.

One of the functions of the local Free Church Councils will be to prevent future overlapping in the starting of new churches in the suburbs of large towns. How needful such an understanding has become between the various religious bodies was recently illustrated in a new suburb of London. In an area of 800 houses about to be erected, measures had been taken to build new chapels by four denominations, acting independently of one another. On this fact being ascertained, the newly formed Council endeavoured to promote a mutual arrangement by which one or more might retire in favour of the others, when it was discovered that in at least three cases out of the four matters had gone too far to retire. Whatever may be the issue in this particular case, it is self-evident that the time has come for a prevention of this waste of money and energy, which has caused so much mischief in the past, and if the Council can do this, they will perform a great and lasting benefit to religion.

A very serious communication as to the perils that beset American students in some European countries, appears in the New York Independent of March 18, from the pen of Dr. F. E. Clark, of the Christian Endeavour Society. His remarks apply specifically to sojourn in Germany, but we do not suppose that the environments of student life there are more dangerous than in other parts of the pleasure-loving continent. Indeed, these perils exist everywhere, even in America or in Great Britain, though in these lands there are counterbalancing influences. Dr. Clark says that the imbibing of Continental manners and ideals are not favourable to simplicity of life or belief; perhaps his most serious charge is embodied in this paragraph.

> The gravest peril will remain to be hinted, though it cannot be fully stated—the peril of absolute moral pollution and contagion. In many student circles on the Continent virtue is scouted as a nursery fable. Every fair young girl is looked upon as a hunter looks upon a fawn—something to be pursued and captured. The chances of an unprotected youth or maiden returning to America as pure and unsullied as when they left are startlingly small.

Of course, Dr. Clark fully admits the existence of many Christian homes or schools, and of Christian influences in all the large cities of the Continent; but on the whole he gives to American parents, thinking of sending their children to the Continent, Punch's famous advice on another subject—Don't.

The greatest lesson of Dr. Nansen's famous voyage with the Fram is that if we would succeed, we must work with the great forces of nature and grace—the forces of God's own activity. By going with the current which sets towards the Pole, he achieved more than any man. The ways of nature are closely scanned, and her lessons obediently followed by men of science; taking her least hint, they yield to her influence, and find out her secret. It is the true method in every kingdom of life. He who would succeed in social work must go with the nature he is saving, according to the laws implanted by the Creator of men. He who would be useful in the things of the Spirit must mind the things of the Spirit. "We are workers together with God"—and such cannot fail. All who would build for eternity must build upon the chief corner stone which has been laid in Zion. We must be in the Divine order if we would be in an order which endureth for ever.

A little book called "The Shadow Christ" (Fisher Unwin) deals in a fresh and suggestive way with the growth of the Messianic idea in the Old Testament. It is written in unconventional language, and is occasionally onesided in its statement of the truth, but it presents the prophetic Christ in a vivid and impressive manner. To those who have lost hold of the doctrine of types in the earlier revelation, this volume will be a stimulus to examine it anew, and a help to realise that law, psalmist, and prophet were equally haunted by the vision of the coming Messiah, whose mission and person were dimly but truly adumbrated to their spiritual sense. The writer truly points to Isaiah as the prophet who stood on the loftiest peak of Old Testament vision as regards the work of the Saviour. His exposition of the spiritual message of Job, and his place in the course of revealed truth, is particularly suggestive and brilliant. The book is the work of a true spiritual mystic.

A reviewer of a theological work said the other day that he believed there are thousands of preachers who have never truly apprehended all that is involved in the point that justification means a change of state, a permanent change of state, more than the forgiveness of sins, entire acceptance with God. As to "thousands" being in this condition of ignorance as to the distinction between pardon and justification, we can say neither yea nor nay, but we do fear that too many represent justification as a synonym for pardon, "the idea of piecemeal pardon keeping a debit and credit account with God." The result of this is that souls are never sure of their standing before God; no sense of security and peace fills them, they waver before temptation, and when they are overcome they feel as if all their Christian life had to be begun over again. But to be "in Christ Jesus," is to be in the Beloved who is for evermore accepted, and in whom the believer also is accepted. He may fail and sin, but unless he cast away the beginning of his confidence he still has his Saviour as his Refuge and Strong Tower.

Time was when for anyone to have said that he believed in the divinity of our Lord would have placed him among those who meant the deity of our Lord. Altered times have brought altered terminology, and altered meanings in the terminology. Unitarians who believe that Jesus was man, "purely and only man," will say that they believe He was divine, because they believe that all men are also divine. There is need to be careful of our words. We—i.e., believers in Jesus Christ who walk in the Spirit—are said to be partakers of the divine nature (2 Peter i. 4), but that evidently refers to the disposition and principles of "the new man" which all put on who put on Christ. It is confusing things that differ to say that we are divine as our Lord is divine. However, if the word "divine" is now to bear that debased meaning, another, which cannot be misunderstood, must be put in its place. A similar shift of meaning is threatened with the old form—"the Word of God," meaning thereby the Bible; for it is said that God has always spoken by men and speaks by them now, and therefore the Bible is only "a word of God." The practical effect of that view would be to leave us without any Word of God of which we could be sure.

The Eastern Crisis.

By Dr. GRACE KIMBALL.
(From New York Independent.)

If we err not in our understanding of the meaning of the times, we are on the eve of great changes in the political and social life in Turkey. The Ottoman dynasty, which has held unbroken sway over Turkey since 1250, is about to fall. It matters not whether it is to fall with a tremendous crash, and all at once, or whether it is to be gently borne down and out on the tenderly combined hands of the European Powers—its fall is writ large! What does this mean in the progress of the Kingdom of God? It means the end of the pan-Islamic caliphate, the breaking of the one bond that has so hardly held the Mohammedan world together; the loss of the power to enforce religious persecution; in fact, the beginning of the time when a Mohammedan can change his faith and not lose his life—the opening of the Mohammedan world to Christianity. Then will the burden of proof rest on the Christians. Then will begin a fair and square contest between the two religions, that it may be proved which is of man and which of God. And so far as Turkey goes, the burden of proof will rest upon American Christians, for they have and surely ought to keep the field.

The Armenians, for whom our churches have laboured and prayed and expended so much for the past sixty years, have passed through a terrible experience. They have been shaken to the foundation of their national religious and material being. They are coming out of this valley of death decimated, but, I cannot doubt, purged of much that obstructed and hindered the growth of evangelical Christianity among them. They are coming out of this inconceivably terrible experience with the object lesson of practically ideal and ideally practical Christianity wrought into every line of every page of the history of those fearful days and months of massacre and persecution. Unless the Armenian race is more unfeeling and ungrateful than any other race living—which they are not—never can the mention of "Protestant Evangelical" fail to call up in their hearts the image of the one and only strong arm of succour and full heart of sympathy that was theirs—their only comfort, hope or alleviation in all that bitter time. Hence we have the right to hope that through them and by them Christianity, evangelical and pure, may do its long-delayed work among the contiguous races.

While much of our ordinary missionary work has been cruelly broken up, many buildings destroyed, many lives of Armenian workers sacrificed, many more workers fled for their lives, much of even the old comparative freedom of moving from place to place for the moment gone, still the work is ours in great possibilities for the present. The very fact that much of the old routine of work is impossible, leaves the missionaries and other workers on the field with hands comparatively free to take up new lines of usefulness. . . .

I believe that before the massacre all missionaries in Turkey were convinced that one of the most Christlike and Christ-teaching enterprises possible would be the establishment of orphanages to take in the most pitiful class in society. No missionary but has felt his heart sore times without number as he has been obliged to turn from his door shivering, naked, homeless, and friendless little children, in whose wan and hunted faces he could see infinite soul possibilities. The churches sending him out to preach the Gospel do not put the means within his control of practising it also. But now the churches in their relations to the cause of Christ in Turkey, and each individual Christian in those churches are to be put to a great test. A very wonderful opportunity is opening out before them. Will they take it, or will they neglect it? In every mission station in Turkey orphanages should be opened, and opened on a liberal and large scale.

If our mission takes up this work on a large scale, it can, I am sure, count on very large contributions from English Christians and from Evangelicals in Europe. If it does not thus take it up, and do so promptly, we may be perfectly sure that other bodies will. Behold, a grand, an important, an historical opportunity. Are the churches supporting our Turkish work going to see it and rise up to meet it? Or are they going to let others come in and reap the fruit at this rich harvest time of so much of their own faithful sowing in past years?

Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Christian Succour to India.

Dear Sir,—Since I last wrote the accounts I have heard from different places show that the famine is far worse than is generally supposed in England. A recent letter from a lady, the wife of a Government official in the Central Provinces, says they witness the most harrowing scenes daily—infants found by the wayside left to perish by their parents; men and women in the fields and behind hedges dying. They compute that 200 die a month from starvation in the districts they visit.

What is terrible to think of is, that this state of things must get worse and worse till the autumn crop is reaped at the end of September, even if the spring crop does not fail, and by the latest accounts there is reason to fear that the hot winds have very largely injured the crops in Northern India. The price of grain, which is at famine rates, keeps up.

May I mention that a ladies' association has been formed for orphans, and that ladies who can give or collect £3 10s. per annum can provide the support of an orphan, which they can adopt, in an orphanage. The need of this is very great. Missionaries and others have orphans and waifs thrown on their hands in such numbers, and in an increasing stream, that they will be obliged to refuse them from want of means unless prompt and large help is given. Any lady able to give or collect £3 10s. should send it at once to Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C.

But the older people, and women in Zenanas, also have urgent need: these, therefore, should not be forgotten. The orphan subscription should be an extra effort, and not a substitute for the general funds for Christian succour.—Yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

42, Eccleston-place, S.W.

Birmingham Ballet Girls.—Eight social religious services for the members of the chorus and ballet who have been taking part in the pantomimes of the various theatres of Birmingham, have been held. After tea, bright cheery hymns were sung, and homely addresses were delivered. Seventy-nine pledges have been taken as a result of these meetings, which have been thoroughly enjoyed by all; and the hope was expressed that similar gatherings might be held next season.

Fashion-Keeping.

By Dr. BALGARNIE.

"Be not conformed . . . but transfigured."—Romans xii. 2.

ST. Paul's letter was addressed to Christians at Rome, the world's metropolis, the headquarters of its fashions, manners, and customs, and, as he hoped, about to become a chief seat of the religion of his Master. He knew that as the truth in Christ advanced from the humblest to the highest in the capital, from the slave to his master, from freed men and women to the free-born, nay, from the cottage of the peasant to the throne of the Cæsars, as the Church at Rome grew into the Church of Rome, the principles of Christianity would sooner or later come into conflict with the manners and customs of the world.

He was afraid of the compromise that leads to surrender, that the members of the Church would forget their own ideal, or might consent to lower it for the sake of making converts. He took the opportunity, therefore, of explaining to them the measureless superiority of their condition over that to be attained by the highest culture of "society." Their good breeding was that of the highest rank, for they were "born of God"; their Christian courtesy was that of the court of heaven; their fashion of dress, deportment, appearance, and mode of living was unsurpassable, for it was the pattern shown to them on the Mount. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transfigured (metamorphousthe) by the renewing of your mind."

Thus by a single word he strikes the key-note of the chapter: the harmonious working of the whole Church through conformity to the will of the transfigured Christ, and fixes for all ages the standard of perfection, in life, character, and conduct, in Him "whose face did shine as the sun, and whose raiment was white as the light." "Be ye transfigured."

The beauty, or glory, that was seen in Christ shone from within. It was not put on; it was not derived from dress or external ornament; it lent beauty to the seamless coat, but borrowed nothing from it. He was not arrayed like Joseph, or Solomon, or Herod, yet He was "glorious in his apparel," for the grace and glory of deity was within, and that, shining through the veil of his humanity, made Him appear "altogether lovely."

The perfection of dress is that it represents the character and position of the wearer. Where "the inner man" is Christlike, the outward man will be transfigured, and at last brought into complete resemblance. It is thus that the Church will "put on her beautiful garments," having first been made "all glorious within."

The beauty, or glory, that was seen in Christ was not paraded to the world. The transfiguration scene took place probably about midnight—the place has not yet been identified—and the only earthly witnesses of it were three Galilean fishermen. The world's fashions are put on to be seen and admired on their own account; the Christian fashion is to put on Christ, that He may be seen and admired of all who believe. The world's fashions are for show, the Christian graces are for service. The world's good breeding exacts respect for self; the Christian "lady" or "gentleman" shows sympathy and respect for others. "Jesus came and touched them."

The beauty, or glory, that was seen in Christ is unchanging.—The fashions of the world are ever altering, for its kings are many; "the righteousness of saints" abides, our King is one. That righteousness was perfected in the transfigured Christ, for in Him the Father was well pleased. That is our dress for eternity.

The Manse, Bishop Auckland.

Living Christians.

By Rev. Dr. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

THERE can be no substitute for living men and women in whom Jesus lives by his personal Spirit. Church machinery is good in its place; but it is not self-driving, and when driven, the godly man has the promise of the Spirit and not the machine.

Holiness does not mean sanctimoniousness, or sacramental religion. The word itself is the equivalent of the Saxon word wholth, and signifies health of heart and life. A holy man is a healthy man, who has been cured of the deadly disease of reigning sin by true conversion. One of the best evidences of his spiritual health is a clean conscience—a conscience enlightened by God's Word, kept sweet and wholesome by prayer, and ministering a constant comfort to its possessor. What a diseased member is to the body, that is a bad conscience to a Christian; it breeds continual mischief and misery. The reason why so many church members are spiritual dyspeptics—without any joy in their countenances, any ring in their voices, any power in their prayers, or any usefulness in their lives—is a diseased conscience. If Jesus Christ lives anywhere in a good man it is in his conscience, and then the man acts right instinctively. Old St. Augustine did not exaggerate this core-quality of holiness when he said that "a good conscience is the palace of Christ—the temple of the Holy Spirit, the paradise of delight and the standing Sabbath of a saint."

A healthy Christian has a strong appetite also for the Word of God. He believes in his Bible, and he flees as from a nest of adders from all those destructives who tell him that one part of God's Book is a myth, and another part of it is a legend, and much of it only a pious fiction. It is the strong meat that he feeds on daily—sweeter also than the honeycomb. His experience is the same as that of the gifted Dr. Horace Bushnell, who once said, "The worldly spirit shuts the Bible, the Spirit of God makes it a fire flaming out all meanings and glorious truths." To some people Mr. Moody's style of talking about the infinite riches of the inspired Word seems extravagant; one reason is that their spiritual taste has been corrupted by feeding on confectionery, or else their minds have been poisoned by listening to artful assaults upon the divine infallibility of the Book. A combination of Bible-diet and Bible-duties would make them as stalwart as Mr. Moody, who shows the feeding he lives on by the prodigious amount of work he accomplishes. When a Christian begins to emasculate his Bible, he is pretty sure to emaciate himself.

Holiness is power. It is the agreement of the soul with God. It is the agreement of the will that lets God rule; it is the agreement of love deeper even than the sweetest endearments of wedlock. From this harmony of soul with God's holy will flows a broad river of peace, which becomes deeper and wider, until like our Amazon, it empties into the ocean of eternal love. The healthy-hearted Christian who trusts God's promises more readily than the best government bonds—who tries to shape his life in conformity with Christ's commandments—who keeps his soul's windows open towards the sun-rising, who makes even crosses to be ladders on which to climb into closer fellowship with Jesus—such a Christian can never be made wretched by any change in outward circumstances. The sources of his happiness lie too deep down to be affected by wind or weather. The holiness of such a Christian is not a frame, a feeling, a transient emotion; it is the normal condition of a soul that has been "made whole" by the incoming and the indwelling of Jesus Christ. That little boy playing in yonder nursery is happy because he is well; and the Christian whose tongue is not fever-coated with sinful lusts, whose digestion assimilates Bible-food every day, and whose blood circulates warm and clean from Christ enthroned in the heart, is happy because he is holy. The joy of the Lord is his strength.

This style of Christian can only be made effective by personal contact with the irreligious elements of society. Christianity may sing and pray for a twelvemonth, and not a soul outside be reached or rescued or converted, until living men and women go where the sinners are and take hold of them. Jesus Christ put Himself in personal contact with the sick, the sinning and the suffering. The great revivals of sixty years ago—under Finney, Nettleton, Cox and their co-workers—sprang out of a stalwart faith and worked on lines of personal effort.

Tempered.

When stern occasion calls for war,
And the trumpets shrill and peal,
Forges and armories ring all day
With the fierce clash of steel.
The blades are heated in the flame,
And cooled in icy flood,
And beaten hard, and beaten well,
To make them firm and pliable,
Their edge and temper good;
Then tough and sharp with discipline,
They win the fight for fighting men.

When God's occasions call for men,
His chosen souls He takes,
In life's hot fire He tempers them,
With tears He cools and slakes;
With many a heavy, grievous stroke
He beats them to an edge,
And tests and tries, again, again,
Till the hard will is fused, and pain
Becomes high privilege;
Then strong, and quickened through and through,
They ready are his work to do.

Like an on-rushing, furious host
The tide of need and sin,
Unless the blades shall tempered be,
They have no chance to win;
God trusts to no untested sword
When He goes forth to war;
Only the souls that, beaten long
On pain's great anvil, have grown strong,
His chosen weapons are.
Ah souls, on pain's great anvil laid,
Remember this, nor be afraid!

Susan Coolidge in Congregationalist.

A Demoralised Army.—The Indian Army is utterly demoralised, so we are assured. No doubt the condition of affairs is bad enough, but there is just a suspicion that a conspiracy is afoot to get Parliament to sanction the re-enactment of certain Acts or to take some other steps to regulate vice. It behoves all who believe that righteousness alone exalteth to be on the alert. Under no pretence whatever must this conspiracy, if it exists, be permitted to succeed. There is only one way to counteract the evil, and that is to destroy the system of military service of which it is the inevitable product. If we must have soldiers, let us at least insist that the men shall be at liberty to marry as freely as other men are. We can well believe that such an idea will be regarded as preposterous by the "military authorities," to whom marriage, by the way, is not denied by the conditions of their service; but these gentlemen must be told that if they cannot organise an army of men living natural lives, we must find officers who can; and that in no case will we tolerate a return to the old system of "regulation."—New Age.

With the "Midnight Sun."

AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

THE chief feature of the passage from Athens to the Mussulman capital was the sight it afforded of the Dardanelles. We passed through the Strait in the light of the setting sun, which lent additional beauty to the scene. The extensive fortifications naturally aroused the interest of those whose tastes lay in the direction of things martial. This interest was heightened by the arrival on board of Turkish officials, without whose permit we could not proceed. Early the next morning the City of Mosques came in view, and the day being fine, the vessel sailed up the Bosphorus and back before landing her passengers, so that we might take in, as well as we could in such a cursory manner, some of the picturesque effects of that Strait.

Imperial palaces of various degrees formed an imposing foreground here and there to the rising hills, studded with houses and sparse vegetation. But to be appreciated more fully, the Bosphorus must be seen from one of the adjoining heights, such as that upon which stands Robert College.

Our arrival at the city was greeted with the usual hubbub of many voices, but from these we were delivered in due time by our dragomans, who escorted us in a procession of carriages through streets abounding in yawning holes and yelping dogs. Two days were occupied in sight-seeing; the chief points of interest being the Galata Tower, from which a grand bird's-eye view of the city is gained; the world-famed Mosque of San Sophia (for which we had been well prepared by an excellent lecture from Archdeacon Wilson, giving a most exhaustive and carefully compiled survey of its chequered history); and the Scutari hospital, celebrated from Crimean days and the work of Miss Florence Nightingale. The visit to the Royal Palace (referred to below) revealed èxhaustless treasure and recalling more than anything else scenes from the "Arabian Nights," of which children love to dream. Yet how wantonly useless they appeared, kept for ever under lock and key, and put to no kind of noble purpose. Another spot of tragic interest was the Imperial Ottoman Bank, where the notorious massacres broke out.

GORGEOUS WEALTH OF JEWELS,

The Bible House is naturally one of the first objects of interest to a Christian traveller, on arriving in this cosmopolitan city. And recent events have given to the institution a new and deepened interest, both in its Bible distribution, and in the relief of the persecuted Armenians.

The number of Bibles, Testaments, and portions distributed during the past year was 71,000; of these 2325 Bibles, 3559 Testaments, and 6254 portions were given—the rest were sold. Those given were mostly where the massacres have occurred. At Oorfa, one of the worst-treated places, the agent was authorised to give freely; there was a much increased desire for the Scriptures, and many who had a little money left paid for them. There were as many sold as given—many more than had been usual before the massacres.

All contributors to the Armenian Relief Fund are indebted to the Relief Committee, whose headquarters are at the Bible House, for the wise and careful manner in which relief has been distributed; and the accounts have been kept with exemplary exactitude. There have been several sources from which the moneys distributed by this Committee have been supplied. The Duke of Westminster's Fund; contributions direct to the Bible House, representing the American missionaries; donations from Armenians in America and Europe to their afflicted relatives and friends, whose use was specified. The Armenian Patriarch has remitted through the same channel, but these amounts do not come into this account. The total amount received since the massacres began to Jan. 31 last, is JUST OVER £200,000.

The balance at present unapportioned is something over £5000. The above is independent of the Orphan Funds, which have not yet been made up.

The Americans and the British have kept a survey of the field together, and distributed according to the need. This has greatly simplified a very difficult work, and prevented overlapping. The needs have thus been relieved from one fund, and there has been practically only one committee, of one accord and of one mind.

I spent one afternoon with some American missionary ladies in one of the quarters where 600 of the Armenians were murdered. Their own house was looted, and everything taken except two bedsteads. The man left in charge was killed, and also another man in their garden, while they were absent on their summer holiday in one of the islands of the Sea of Marmora. The American flag had been hung over the outer door of their house as a protection, and as the crowd passed up and down, they said, "We must not go in there." After a while, however, one of the police pulled it down, broke the pole, tore the flag into fragments, and trampled upon it.

The two missionaries bravely returned as soon as they heard of the murders. They found the streets covered with blood, and the walls bore marks where the heads of the massacred Armenians had been battered against them. Only ten out of 800 houses had not been plundered.

The Jews did not join actively in the butchery, but some of them would point out the Armenians' houses; and when the Turks had taken the best they contained, would buy the remainder for a trifling sum.

Many terrible and pathetic incidents were told me of those dreadful days and nights, when thousands were killed. An eye-witness had seen 175 carts laden with bodies and parts of bodies pass his house, for in many cases they were not only killed, but battered to pieces afterward.

A father had just returned from his work, and the family had sat down to supper, when they heard noises in the streets which at first they did not understand. By and by they knew that they were the howls of murderers and the groans of their victims. They sat in trembling terror through the night, and one of the children inquired, "If we ask Jesus, won't He save our lives?" So they prayed; and in the grey morning left their house round which the child's prayer had drawn the protecting care of God. For a considerable time they were unperceived. At length they met a man who drew a knife to kill them; but the mother and children begged him to spare them; and again the child's prayer was effectual. But, seeing the father, the Turk again drew his knife, but the mother and children moved him to pity, and he spared the father; though he killed the next Armenian he met. The family went to the islands looking for their missionary friends but did not find them. Then the praying child said, "Jesus saved our lives when we asked Him; will He not find us a place to go to?" And a kind Greek's heart was opened to give them shelter. And after a while they made their way into Egypt, where they are now.

After the forty-eight hours' massacre there were seven men hidden under faggots of wood in a cellar. Some Jews were looking through the house to see what they could find. When they came upon these men, they began to call for the Turks to murder them. A Turkish officer came in, who had just been touched to the quick by seeing the slaughtered children lying upon the street. He said, "No more; we've had enough of this." He took the men to the church, in which 1600 trembling creatures were huddled together, and saved their lives.

One of the horrors of the time was that men killed others of the same occupation. Bakers killed bakers, boatmen killed boatmen, and thus rid themselves of surplus and competitive labour in their respective trades.

During our stay at Constantinople a party visited the treasury and one of the palaces of the Sultan. I did not feel disposed to accept even the semblance of a favour from a ruler whose hands are red with the blood not only of men, but of women and children, massacred, mutilated, outraged. And when, at night, thanks were expressed for the favour of admission, and for hospitality, a good many inwardly dissented, and some wished they had not gone. An English pasha was present at this thanksgiving, and it is probable that the circumstance may convey to the mind of the Sultan a false impression as to what Englishmen think of him: otherwise I should not have mentioned it.

Beyrout, March 8. R. Cope Morgan.

ROBERT COLLEGE.

Before leaving Constantinople we visited, in company with Dr. and Mrs. Moule, and a few other friends, the Robert College. This is an educational institution maintained by the American Presbyterian Board of Missions, under the directorship of Dr. Washburn, son-in-law of Dr. Hamlin, its founder. A short trip on a local steamboat brought us to the little village of Bebec, which nestles on the hillside above which the College stands. It is a noble square edifice of solid masonry—thoroughness being its characteristic in both structure and curriculum. A considerable collection of scientific, natural history, and mineral objects, supplies material for most interesting study, of which the two hundred students avail themselves to the full. These young men are of many nationalities, and at the conclusion of their course receive diplomas according to their qualifications, which are of great importance to them in after life. Indeed it has been said that the students from this College

"HAVE BEEN THE MAKING OF BULGARIA."

The visitor is amply repaid for the toil of the ascent by the exquisite views obtained en route, and, at the summit, by the interest pertaining to the institution itself. By the wayside we met an Armenian colporteur on his rounds to sell the Word of God, in the circulation of which lies the only hope for the evangelisation of this dark and tongue-tied land.

The Armenian orphan children cared for by the ladies referred to already, and by others in another suburb of the city, are a very touching sight. We went into the class-rooms to see them at work, and were pleased by their sweet singing, bright open countenances, and expressive dark eyes. What a blessing are such places of refuge for the little ones, all of whom have lost father or mother, or both parents! One wee mite, three years of age, soon made friends, kissing our hands in Eastern fashion, and placing them on her forehead.

From Constantinople we set sail for Beyrout, but after a rough day in the Archipelago we were glad of break for a day to visit

SMYRNA AND EPHESUS.

The former is a go-ahead little port of some interest, though, of course, the original Smyrna of the New Testament lies buried below four or five others that have been built in succession upon its site. The tomb of Polycarp is the chief "sight," though here, as at Constantinople, as much interest centres in its street life as in its inanimate "lions." There is a capital Sailors' Rest, well situated on the quay. Besides the workers in charge, we also met the pastor of the Greek Evangelical Church, and the English chaplain, both of whom are warmly interested in the work of the Rest.

Forty-eight miles from Smyrna is Ephesus, concerning which also Archdeacon Wilson had given a most instructive lecture. Hither repaired about a hundred of our passengers, part of the journey being by train and part by means of animals. Once a thriving port, it now lies a heap of ruins, largely covered with masses of débris, forsaken alike by sea and man. On the ancient quay stands, still in fairly good condition, the old custom-house. How many feet have hurried to and fro along its highway, eager to discharge their cargoes and sell them to the best advantage! Now all is changed; the sea beats against the walls no more, the hasty feet have long since passed to their long rest. Before us lay the remains of the once famous theatre to which St. Paul was hurried by Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen. The outline of the structure is quite distinct, with a few of the original marble seats still in position. It is supposed to have seated 24,000 persons.

We happened to have a guide who was possessed of a full sense of his own importance, but with a store of knowledge, not only limited, but largely apocryphal. For instance, he seriously informed us in the theatre, that "St. Paul here, during a wild beast performance, preached the Gospel, and the king was so angry at the interruption that he had a prison built on the opposite hill, in which Paul was kept captive."

The city is being excavated by the Austrian Government, but at present only a small part has been opened up. The Stadion is clearly defined with the bases of the great pillars at its entrance. Several sarcophagi are exposed in the "street of the tombs." One large tomb, with a cross cut in the stone, was pointed out as that of St. Luke; but this is probably as legendary as many other "facts" that we have learned.

By the time this appears in print, we shall have been a week or two in Syria and Palestine, our first port being Beyrout. Meantime, some of the hours of voyage have been beguiled with a course of lectures of exceptional value from Canon Tristram upon the researches of the Palestine Exploration Fund. Very strongly he maintains that the developments of discovery are every year yielding more and more evidence in support of the historical accuracy of the Old Testament. He meets theories and surmises with solid facts, which the critics, German or English, will find it hard to dislodge. How earnestly we wish that some of our ministers and teachers at home, who so glibly announce or uphold this theory and that, would fortify themselves first with such facts as are now public property. Meantime, we rejoice that "the foundation of God standeth sure."

G. E. Morgan.

As the work of the Palestine Exploration Society progresses, methods and results are described in detail in the Quarterly Statement, which is sent free to all subscribers of half-a-guinea and upwards. The operations of the Society have confirmed the Holy Scriptures in hundreds of ways, and made large contributions of facts that are of value in interpreting and illustrating the Old and New Testaments. In addition to many large publications giving a complete survey of the land, Western and Eastern, the Society has brought out important introductory volumes by Canon Tristram, Sir Charles Warren, Lieut.-Colonel Conder, Professor Hull, and others, dealing with the land and its inhabitants, associated, on the one hand, with archæology and physical geography, topography and geology; and on the other hand with ethnic characteristics, manners and customs.

One of the most useful books for the general reader is Thirty Years' Work in the Holy Land: A Record and a Summary, 1865-1895, by Sir Walter Besant (3s. 6d.). This volume brings down to date the striking narrative that was issued on the Society attaining its majority. There are many illustrations, and not the least valuable portions are the appendices, giving a chronological summary of the Fund's work and a list of Colonel Conder's identifications. The index enhances the use of the book for purposes of reference. Other excellent works are The Bible and Modern Discoveries, by a Member of the Executive Committee of the Fund (7s. 6d.); and The City and the Land, a series of seven lectures on Jerusalem and Palestine (3s. 6d.).

A new work of great interest is The Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem, 1099 to 1291, A.D. By Lieut.-Col. C. R. Conder, LL.D., M.R.A.S., R.E. (7s. 6d.) We have here an account of Palestine, Syria, and Western Asia during the rule of the Franks. The volume not only includes a history of the Crusades, but describes the manners of the Franks, and of their Oriental subjects, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries; their customs, dress, amusements, laws, religion, buildings, and daily life are described, with personal accounts of the great leaders, such as Godfrey, King Richard, Saladin, St. Louis. Though founded on special knowledge, the whole is written for the general public in popular style. The work has a peculiar interest at the present time, by reason of the fact that the condition of the Oriental is almost the same as in the time of the Crusades.

The Society also issues several valuable maps. Subscribers to the funds of the Society have several advantages which may be learned (with other particulars) from the secretary, at the offices of the Society, 24, Hanover-square, W.

A Visit to Johannesburg.

In a recent issue of the South African Pioneer, Rev. Walter Searle gives a very gratifying account of the work of the South African Mission in Johannesburg as witnessed by himself. He says:—

The changes wrought are as wonderful as they are rapid. Scarcely four years ago I was in Johannesburg for the first time, and I vividly recall the little low-roofed Institute where the Mission meetings were then held. Eighteen months later I travelled from Pondoland to attend the first Convention, held in the bright new mission hall, opened free of debt, and soon filled to its utmost capacity. This first hall, however, soon proved too small, and has been replaced by a handsome Doric building of much larger size, and excelling the former in every respect, and yet like its predecessors in being opened free of debt. How wonderfully God can supply the needs of his own work.

Come with me to the Joy and Gladness Meeting, held on the Saturday evening, after the open-air in the Market-place. Having marched to the Hall, we had a real time of praise and testimony. No wonder that the unconverted drawn into these meetings get saved on the spot. They hear so much of the bright side of the Christian life that they begin to desire it. A lady whose husband two years ago was one of the richest mine owners in the City of Gold, speaking of her conversion in one of the Mission meetings, she said she thought the whole world was hers, she was so happy; and could to the praise of God say that the happiness had lasted, in spite of the straitened circumstances to which she had been reduced. Young men working on the mines, and young merchants in the city, also spoke of their joy in God, and their trust in His power to keep unspotted from the world.

Immediately after breakfast on Sabbath three carriages were at the door, put at the disposal of the workers by their owners, warm friends of the mission, who drive them off every Sunday to the mines. I went to the native service. We carried the harmonium to the native compound, and soon gathered round us beneath that cloudless sky a large dusky group, and I rejoiced that both Mr. Jones and Miss Doddrell were able to speak to them, without an interpreter, of the great salvation. In the evening I took the Hall service. Much prayer had been offered for this evangelistic meeting, and we all felt the power of God, who gave us signs following.

My brief visit to Johannesburg convinces me that the imperative need of the city is being met by the South African General Mission. The workers are devoted to God, and are living as witnesses as well as doing a truly Pentecostal work amongst the Europeans, the heathen, and also the Jews. Their manifold work will have a warmer place than ever in my heart and my prayers.

The Gordon Evangelistic Mission expects to work five tents this season in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, Elgin, and Kircardine, and they will be glad of the prayers of the Lord's people. Also for much blessing on the services in the Gordon Evangelistic Mission-hall, Justice-street, Aberdeen. The Superintendent is Mr. J. Anderson, 614, George-street, Aberdeen.

Dr. Parker's Week Service.

The pastor of the City Temple has recovered from his recent attack of weakness and was in his accustomed place last Thursday at noon. The audience filled the area of the church, and there was a goodly proportion of ministerial brethren.

The text of the sermon was Matt. v. 2: "He opened his mouth and taught them." I am much struck (said the preacher) with the things that Christ did not say. He took for granted the intelligence and sincerity of his hearers. The preacher is bound to do that; though it is his hardest task. Christ never attempted, for instance, to prove the existence of God; He assumed it as part of the necessity of things. The only way to prove God is by godliness. The devil is proved in the same way—by oppression, cruelty, strife, anger, hatred, sharp practice. Get rid of all such devilishness and you do not need to trouble about the devil. Jesus preached God—"the kingdom of God is at hand." This evidential method is mathematical and scientific. You cannot have a theory about the Godhead; theory is not a New Testament word. Christ dealt in facts not in theories. A theory of the atonement! No, I have a new man, a new force, and a new thinking, but not a theory. You can carry a theory in your hat, but the sacred ideals and glorious transforming passions: these are the fruits we gather at the Cross of Calvary. Preach godliness, and men will see that if it comes right in the character it must be right in the argument.

Christ never attempted to prove the necessity of prayer. If you magnify theories about these great matters, it proves that you may have read about them, but you have never felt them. "When ye pray," said Christ. The man who questions about prayer has never prayed and cannot pray. He may have read prayers, or heard them read, which is quite another matter. Some day he will be frightened into the cry, "Lord, save me or I perish"; then it will be said, "Behold he prayeth." He has gone out of himself and taken the leap into God. Only when you are molten with the very fire of God can you be welded into harmony with Him. Never consult cold iron as to whether you can make a horseshoe.

Christ never sought to prove the immortality of man. He took us as men made in the image and likeness of God. "I go to prepare a place." Where? "In my Father's house." Death is only a little bracket coming in; speak of life not of death. You do not know how much you are. Strange if after I have prayed I should die in the next kennel to my dog! Am I to be slain like an ox? Our immortality is not to begin; it began when God made us.

Christ advanced no theory of revelation. Some modern preachers tear the Bible to pieces in the morning, that in the evening they may put it together again. They have boxed its ears, taken out its entrails, spat upon it, hugged it and taken it back again, and have allowed it to be nailed to the gallows. Yet it is here! The Bible is the best proof of the Bible. Whenever I am very low down there is only one book that can bring me up—they call it the Bible. What a "night-light" this Book makes! Surely it is not a wonderful thing that the God who created man should make some communication to him. Let us have no doubts about God, prayer, our own immortality, or revelation. Let us say with the poet—

> It is the divinity that stirs within me.

As to revelation, we know that as we do rightly, we are quiet, and strong, and full of hope.

The Betting Decision.—It is understood that the Anti-Gambling League have caused a large number of summonses to be served on bookmakers for ready-money betting at the Horncastle Meeting.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 4.

"My..."—Psa. cxliv. 1, 2.

NOTICE that repeated My. David had learnt that nothing can take the place of personal dealings with God. Surely he had realised the fulfilment of his own thoughts about dwelling in the House of the Lord all the days of his life, and beholding his beauty. There is a great fear, lest many of God's most earnest and devoted children may be losing Jesus in these active days. We allow our work for Christ, our doctrines about Him, and our rules for becoming like Him, to intercept our view of Him. Too seldom do we get so near Him as to be able to talk to Him face to face; or pile word on word in our ineffectual effort to tell Him what we think of Him. One who loved much sang:—

Jesus, Jesus, dearest Lord,
Forgive me if I say
For very love, thy dearest name,
A thousand times a day.

After all it is not thoughts about Christ, but Christ Himself that we all need. To know Him in all the various aspects of his character, as Loving-kindness, Fortress, Shield, and Conqueror! Jesus can be the complement of all your need, and as the days pass, you will probably find yourself put into situations which will force you to discover in Him some new aspect, some fresh characteristics, something that would never have appeared to view, till you had reached the point of vision which some awful exigency furnished. Then put out your hand and say My.

MONDAY, April 5.

"Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."—Psa. cxlv. 13.

These words are engraven on the door of a mosque in Damascus, which was formerly a Christian church. Originally they were plastered over by stucco, but this has dropped away, and the words stand out clearly defined. They seem to be contradicted by centuries of Mohammedanism, but they are essentially true. Just now the kingdom is in mystery, but soon it will be manifested.

Jesus is now gone to the Father to be invested with the kingdom, as a Roman official might have gone from the provinces to Rome for his investiture on the part of the emperor as pro-consul or governor. And Daniel tells us that when He comes to the Ancient of Days, He will receive from Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom that all the peoples, nations, and languages should serve Him, and his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that shall not be destroyed. It shall break in pieces, and consume all other kingdoms. The iron, clay, brass, silver, and gold shall be broken in pieces, and become like the chaff of summer threshing-floors, but it shall become a great mountain and fill the earth.

We are called to receive a kingdom that cannot be shaken. We are to reign with Christ for a thousand years in this world, and for ever in the next. We have been made kings unto God, and we shall reign for ever and ever.

Triumphing over Sin, and Death, and Hell, and Thee, O Time.

TUESDAY, April 6.

"In that very day his thoughts perish."—Psa. cxlvi. 4.

The R.V. marg. gives the alternative purposes. And surely we all have had reason to notice the vacillation and infirmity of purpose which characterise too many of the sons of men. They promise to visit us every week, in our sickness or bereavement, but after a few months drop off. They pledge themselves to perform certain functions, but get lax, and ultimately the grass grows thick where their feet should have kept it down.

But we have most to complain of ourselves. Who among us has not bitterly to reproach himself for the evanescence of noble resolution—the dying down of earnest purpose? Too often they have been like the early dew, and the morning cloud. In the day in which we made them our purposes have perished.

What is the remedy? It is suggested in those memorable words of Jesus, "The water that I shall give shall be in him a well of water, springing up unto eternal life." When once Jesus has been allowed to do his chosen work in the soul, he opens a subterranean passage to the reservoirs of eternity, along and through which the supplies from God's own heart begin to enter and rise up within the soul. Abide in Him, and the sap of his life will suggest, renew, and reinforce the purposes of the holy life. Rise up, O well, for ever rise, within hearts that desire a fixed purpose to love God.

WEDNESDAY, April 7.

"He healeth the broken in heart...He telleth the number of the stars."—Psa. cxlvii. 3, 4.

How wonderful that these two qualities should blend in one Being. That God tells the number of the stars is only what we should expect of Him. They are his flock, lying down on the fields of the heavens, and as a shepherd has a name for each of his charge, so has God for the stars. But that He should be able to bend over one broken heart and bind it with his sympathy and heal its flowing wounds, this is wonderful, amazing, divine.

It is said that in a healthy man the clenched fist is about the size of the heart. So in God, his might is the gauge of his mercy: his hand of his heart. The mountains of his strength show the valleys of his tenderness.

Yet surely it must be so. The stars are after all only things, great masses of matter; whilst hearts are those of living, sentient beings which He made, redeemed, and loves. They are the adornments of his House, whilst broken hearts are his children. Shall he have names for the one and no care for the other? This text is exquisitely illustrated in Jesus. Through Him God made the worlds; and by his pierced hands tears have been wiped and stifling sobs silenced all through the ages. Is your heart bleeding: He knows, he cares, He loves, He bends over and heals with exquisite sensitiveness and skill. Yea, the stars may fall from heaven as untimely figs, but He will never cease to tend and comfort his own.

THURSDAY, April 8.

"Stormy wind fulfilling his word."—Psa. cxlviii. 8.

As it rushes through the forest, the hurricane tears down the rotten branches, and makes way for the new shoots of the spring; and as it searches out the intricacies of the crowded alleys and courts it bears away the fever germs, and changes the atmosphere. Do not dread it, if you meet it rushing across the ocean and churning up the mighty billows on its way; know it to be your Father's strong servant, intent on fulfilling some errand on which it has been sent.

Stormy winds not unseldom invade our lives. All had been so fair and blessed with us. The south wind, blowing softly, had led us to suppose that we might make for another harbour. But not long afterwards the tempestuous Euroclydon beat down on us, bearing us far out of our course, and threatening us with destruction. But even under those circumstances, dare to trust. That stormy wind cannot separate you from God, for through its mad fury his angels will visit you, his care will surround you, his purpose will be fulfilled of bearing you toward Rome, with its opportunities of witness-bearing (Acts xxvii.).

The great matter to remember is to run before the wind. Let its course be yours. Yield your will to God's Word, and even though it bears you far out of your course, dare to believe that it is the quickest and best way of attaining the harbour which God has prepared. There is nothing terrible or alarming in fire or hail, snow, vapour, or stormy wind, when we can see God behind them.

FRIDAY, April 9.

"The Lord taketh pleasure in his people."—Psa. cxlix. 4.

The Lord watches us more closely than we realise. At each turn, his eye is upon us, and when we manifest some trait of obedience or devotion, it sends a thrill of pleasure through his heart. Of course our standing is always in his grace. We have no claim on Him. Our virtues are his gifts. We love only because He first loved. Our comeliness is placed on us by our king. And when we are at our best we always need the sprinkling of the precious blood. But still it is the constant teaching of Scripture that we may please God. This was the testimony borne of Enoch before his translation, and the Apostle exhorts us to walk worthily of the Lord, unto all pleasing. He tells us not to entangle ourselves in the affairs of this life, that we may please Him who hath chosen us to be his soldiers.

How well it would be, if this were the aim of every day, the purpose of every sermon, the motive of every act. It were easy to be baptized in the waters of death, if only on emerging we might stand beneath the opened heavens, whilst a voice said, "This is my beloved child, in whom I am well pleased." Let us strive for this. Let our eye be ever fixed on that beloved face, checking any act that might threaten to bedim it, prosecuting all that might bring over it a smile of loving appreciation and thankfulness.

SATURDAY, April 10.

"Praise ye the Lord! Hallelujah."—Psa. cl. 6.

The Psalter begins with "Blessed" and ends with "Hallelujah." Obedience in walk and conduct leads to blessedness, and this culminates in rapture. The heart that does God's will in the world may not be always happy, but it is always blessed; and when patience has had her perfect work it will break into such rapture as to need all creation to help its song to perfect and complete expression.

Your life may resemble the Psalter with its varying moods, its light and shadow, its sob and smile, but it will end with hallelujahs, if only you will keep true to the will and way and work of the Most Holy.

Your estimate of the world is often pessimistic to the last point, but if you will but be still, and let God finish his work perfectly, you will hear all things that have breath saying, Hallelujah, the kingdoms of the world have become those of the Lord and of his Christ.

God is preparing the whole universe to be an orchestra of praise and adoration to his Son. On one occasion a great conductor, amidst the burst of 500 instruments, is said to have missed the piccolo; he stayed the entire performance till it chimed in. Nothing can satisfy God till creation's groans are changed to rapture, and the curse, which restrains her songs, is lifted from the face of all nature; but He wants to hear your voice.

The Odd Minute Society.—This quiet work was started about fifteen years ago, in order to provide clothing for the poor, thus affording help to mothers' meetings, medical missions, and individual cases of need. Its foundress, Miss Popplewell, has lately been called home, but we, who were closely associated with her in the work, hope to carry it on as before. Its mission is to induce invalids and others who have some spare time, to spend an hour and a half weekly in making garments, or to become honorary members, paying not less than 1s. quarterly. We will send a copy of the rules to any who are anxious to increase the usefulness of the society.—Yours faithfully,

(Miss) M. Denham Smith, Treasurer,
30, Dorset-square, N.W.
(Miss) E. M. Habershon, Secretary,
27, Devonshire-street, W.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

II.

I WANT to take you into the ancient centuries to peep at people who lived 300 years before Christ came on earth. It is a long way back, but you need not be alarmed at all, for the Old Testament records events thousands of years earlier, and the last of its writers died before the time to which I am now leading you. I want to let you know something about an old Bible which had a strange name, but which had a wide circulation, was very popular in many places, and in a wonderful way was blessed of God in preparing the nations for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which was to be published when God had all things ready for it.

This book was called the Septuagint, and though it is an odd sort of name for a book, you must try to remember it, and be patient while I tell how it came into the world. It has a great deal to do with our Bible, and we cannot find out where ours really came from unless we know a little of this. This Septuagint Bible was in the Greek language, and was made from the Hebrew about the year 280 before Christ. It was the first complete translation of the Old Testament from the original that was ever made, and was certainly the most important.

I should like to tell you if I could how it was made, but unfortunately we have

NOT MUCH REAL HISTORY TO GUIDE US.

There are several pleasant stories which profess to tell of its origin. One of these says that the Egyptian King, Ptolemy Philadelphus, was anxious to have a fresh translation of the Hebrew Bible, of which he had heard much, that it might adorn the great library which there was at Alexandria in the third century before Christ. The King's librarian, Demetrius, told his majesty that he would never get the translation of the Hebrew Scriptures so long as he held so many Jews in slavery in his country.

The story goes on to say that the king set a vast number of slaves free, and then sent to Jerusalem valuable presents to the high priest and asked for scholars to be sent to him to make him a Greek Bible. The high priest and the other officials were greatly delighted, and selected six great scholars from each of the twelve tribes of Israel, and sent off the seventy-two thus chosen to Alexandria to do the work the king wished done. For these men he provided each a separate room, and they began their work. In seventy-two days each man had produced a translation, and when they compared them it was found that each copy exactly agreed with all the rest! This was taken to be an evidence that God had inspired them all. Not many believe the story now, but Josephus and many of the early Christian fathers not only told it but doubtless believed it.

There is one thing about which we can be tolerably certain, and that is that the Septuagint, which had this name because of the seventy men engaged upon its translation, was made in the third century before Christ, and probably about the year 285 B.C.

I will tell you, in few words, why I think it was made. It is well known to historians that when the Jews returned from captivity to their own land, they had almost forgotten the Hebrew language. This is not to be wondered at. Of those who came back only the smallest remnant had seen the land before. Two generations of them had been born in the land of captivity. In touch with the life of another nation, and surrounded by influences that were powerful, it was no wonder that they ceased to speak the language of their forefathers.

But vast numbers of Jews never returned at all. When the last of the exiles reached home in the year 445 B.C., they left behind them a larger number, known as the Jews of the Dispersion. The Septuagint was made about 160 years after the last company of Jews had returned to Palestine under Nehemiah. During that 160 years the Jewish race had multiplied and spread enormously in those Eastern lands.

GREEK WAS THE COMMON TONGUE

of these Jews in many lands, and to meet their requirements and fulfil the purpose of God the Septuagint or Greek translation of the Bible was made. It released the people from their dependence upon the priests for the Word of Life.

The influence of this old Bible was marvellous, and the effect it produced in the world can never be told. It was to all intents and purposes a popular book. It put the Scriptures into the hands of the people. It was the wide and far-reaching influence of this Book which prepared the world for the coming of the Great Prince, whose star the wise men who came to the cradle of the infant Christ, had seen in the East. And it did more than anything else to prepare the Eastern world for the reception of Christianity. Our Bible came through this channel.

THE FOUNTAIN HEAD.

One step more, and we are at the fountain head. It is but a short journey from the Septuagint, the Bible of the LXX. (as it is often called) to the original source from whence flows the stream of Old Testament inspiration.

We have assumed that the date of the Greek version is the year 285 B.C., and that it was made by scholarly men from Hebrew manuscripts, and was the first ever so made.

If we can find out anything about their Hebrew manuscripts, and be sure that they were there, we shall know where the Old Testament portion of our Bible came from, for we shall be at the original sources. Let us see.

In the 8th chapter of the book of Nehemiah there is a marvellous description of the reading of the law which you should carefully notice. In a broad open space before one of the gates of Jerusalem there is a vast concourse of people.

ON A PULPIT OF WOOD

Ezra stands up to read the law of God to the newly-returned exiles. Assisted by the chief men, he translates and expounds the Word of the Lord. Day after day this continues. The effect of this was that a few weeks later all the people confess their sins, and enter into a solemn promise to keep and observe the Law.

This is made all the more impressive by the fact that the priests, the Levites, and the chief men of the tribes solemnly sign their names on a parchment roll, and seal it as a sacred document to witness what they have done.*

The Jews tell us that the names on the list thus made formed the first members of the Great Synagogue. The chief work of the synagogue was to collect, select, and preserve for the world all the MSS. which compose the Hebrew Scriptures. This Great Synagogue was a most important one. Ezra was its first president, and at different times it had as members such men as Daniel, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, Zerubbabel, Nehemiah. It is supposed to have ceased about the year 300 B.C.†

We know how carefully and jealously the Hebrews guarded their sacred books. Josephus says: "During so many ages as have already passed, no one has been so bold as to either add anything to them or take anything from them, or to make any change in them; but it becomes natural to all Jews, immediately and from their very birth, to esteem those books to contain Divine doctrines and to persist in them, and, if occasion be, willingly to die for them."

We, therefore, conclude that the Septuagint was the original Hebrew Bible turned into Greek; that the messages which Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalmists, spoke to their fellow-countrymen, almost exclusively in the Hebrew language, are the same messages which the Septuagint speaks in Greek. As our Old Testament contains the books of the Hebrew Scriptures, which were translated into Greek for the venerable Septuagint version, is it not correct to say that we know that the Old Testament portion of our precious Bible came from the men whom God in olden times inspired to tell forth his mind and will concerning the salvation of the world by Christ Jesus?

* See Neh. viii.-x.

† Smith's "Bible Dictionary." Article, "Synagogue, the Great."

Aggressive Work.—26.

A DAY'S RUN.

AT 9.45 A.M. I entered a L. and N.W. Railway carriage at Edge Hill Station, in which were three well-dressed men. I remarked that we were all travelling either to heaven or hell, and I presumed we ought to know to which. None replied, but all silently looked at their newspapers until we reached Crewe. Here several others got in. I then hazarded another remark in the same direction, and one man answered. This led to a general conversation, which continued uninterruptedly until we reached Wolverhampton and Birmingham. One of those in the carriage was a strong Calvinist, and reasoned in rather a contentious spirit from his standpoint. He was a Christian man, but sadly wanting in judgment in riding his hobby under such circumstances.

I had an hour to wait at Birmingham, and whilst taking lunch in the refreshment-room a gentleman sat near me at the table. I talked with him about the truth, and found he was a Unitarian. He listened, however, as I gave him my views, and as I recommended total abstinence as the next best thing to conversion. For a while I gave my booklets about and spoke to people, meeting with some very interesting cases.

At 1.30 I left for a town further south. Again three men were in the carriage. Two were friends, and one was reading. I made a few remarks likely to draw out conversation, but the two preferred their own conversation, and the other his reading. Although I clearly stated the way of life, I could not induce a conversation.

Business at this town being finished, I caught the 3.40 train for Birmingham on my way home, but before entering the carriage I gave a booklet to an elderly gentleman, and asked if he were saved. He joyously replied, "Yes; forty-four years ago, praise the Lord." In the carriage there were once more three men, and I immediately started a conversation upon the usual subject. Two of them readily joined—one was an elderly gentleman, who said he doubted the truthfulness of Scripture. The other sympathised with my views, and was evidently a Christian. We two worked away at him to get him to study his Bible, and so give it a fair chance, which he allowed he had not done, but I think he would in future.

At Birmingham I had another hour to wait, and after speaking to a number of people in the station, I joined the 5.50 train for Wolverhampton and Liverpool. Upon this occasion six of us occupied the compartment. I usually find it desirable to speak soon after entering, and several of them joined in the conversation. One was a Christian, who said but little for some time, another was a very talkative man, but seemingly unconverted. The burden of his remarks was that he believed in doing right instead of talking about faith and all that sort of thing. I showed him that faith was almost everything; that what we believed regulated and directed our lives and caused us to act rightly or wrongly as the case may be. The conversation continued until we reached Crewe. All here got out excepting the talkative man and a young man who had sat in the corner without uttering a word. I then addressed the young man, asking if he had an interest in these matters; and he promptly answered, "Yes, for fourteen years." That he had godly parents, and was taught these things early in life, besides he believed everything I had said. The talkative man now felt himself in the minority, and remained silent and thoughtful until we reached Liverpool.

Liverpool. D. M. Drysdale.

[Copyright.]

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER EIGHTH.

THE EASIEST AND BEST WAY OF LEARNING THE DECLENSIONS OF A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

THE law of association, in one form or another, ought always to be brought into use in learning declensions.

Declensions can generally be mastered in less than half the time thus than would be required to master them by repetition.

How can declensions be thus learnt?

1. Learn the nominative singular by comparing it with some other word. This ought to be learnt thoroughly, so that you are in no danger of forgetting it.

2. After having so learnt it, then compare first one and then another of the cases of the singular with it, noticing carefully wherein they resemble it, and wherein they differ from it.

By this means you will not merely impress them on your memory, but associate each of the cases in your consciousness with the nominative. They will be likely to remain so united in your mind, and to recall each other. See Prins. 22-24.

Take the first German declension, Mann. Try how long it will take you to learn it thus if you do not already know it.

Nom. Mann.
Gen. Mannes.
Dat. Manne.
Acc. Mann.

The probability is that you yourself will be surprised at the rapidity and ease with which you can thus learn it. But what is more important, and equally remarkable, is the tenacity with which the mind retains declensions which are learnt thus.

After having mastered the singular, you will always find it better not to go to the plural immediately. The mind can only grasp one thing at a time. Let it have time to grasp one thing before asking it to try and grasp something else, especially something of the same kind, and you will not regret it.

After having allowed the mind time to grasp the singular, then take the nominative of the plural and proceed just in the same way as you did with the singular. The nominative singular will most likely help you to learn the nominative plural.

You can hardly be said to have mastered a declension thoroughly till you can take in the whole of the singular, and afterwards the whole of the plural at one view. Do not be content till you can do this, except where, like the Finnish and similar languages, there are an unusually large number, then try to take them in four or five at a time. This will unite them, not merely with the nominative, but with each other.

One well-known system of teaching languages advises not to spend more than ten minutes at a time in study, especially at the beginning. The popularity which the system has attained, especially on the Continent, notwithstanding its length and costliness (the work consists of fifteen parts and costs 15*l.*) and the results which some of its pupils have attained prove, to some extent, the soundness of the advice given.

Though I could hardly give the same advice, yet I would say as strongly as I can, both for the sake of the memory and the mind, never attempt more than the mind can grasp, and never lay more stress on quantity than on quality in language, nor in anything.

Do with everything in language as Sir T. F. Buxton did with everything in law, and you will attain the same results in the one as he did in the other. "I resolved," he tells us, "when beginning to read law, to make everything I acquired perfectly my own, and never to go to a second thing till I had perfectly accomplished the first."

There is another way of learning declensions, which some think is still better than the one already given. It is to combine the distinctive endings into one or two words and to learn these.

Take, for example, the first declension of Greek nouns. I will keep to the old order of the cases:—

Nom. φωνη
Gen. φωνης
Dat. φωνη
Acc. φωνην
Voc. φωνη

How easy to combine the distinctive endings here into one word. The word "sin" gives them all. How easy to remember this. He who learns the nominative thoroughly and remembers this one word has the whole of the five cases at his finger-ends.

Take the second declension:—

Nom. ἱππος
Gen. ἱππου
Dat. ἱππῳ
Acc. ἱππον
Voc. ἱππε

This is equally easy to combine and almost equally easy to remember. The words οσουω ονε give all the cases. He who remembers the words can easily recall the cases.

The plurals and the duals can be learnt in the same way. The former may be a little more difficult than the singular, the latter are much easier.

If the method here given be followed, there ought to be no difficulty in mastering the declensions of the Greek nouns in an hour or two.

Great care ought to be taken to learn the nominative thoroughly, even before looking at the other cases.

There are some languages, like the Spanish, French, and others, in which the nouns do not change in the different cases; the change in the case is indicated by the change in the article.

These, also, though often very difficult to learn by repetition can be learnt with ease by the application of the method here given.

Take, for instance, el padre, the father (Spanish)

Nom. el padre.
Gen. del padre.
Dat. al padre.
Acc. el padre.

All that is necessary here is to combine the differences of the article into two words.

Nom. and Acc. el.
Gen. and Dat. delal.

Or, if you wish, you can combine the whole into one word, eldelal. This is easy to remember. But if you remember this you can easily recall the whole of the cases.

The French is equally easy. Take the same declension:—

Nom. le père.
Gen. du père.
Dat. au père.
Acc. le père.

How easy to unite the articles into two words, le duau; or even into one, leduau. How easy to retain. How easy to recall.

There is hardly any language to which one or other of the methods here given cannot be applied.

Rev. J. McNeill in Liverpool.

THIS mission was to have closed on Friday, but Mr. McNeill has been so much encouraged that he has decided to stay a fourth week, giving the evenings to Birkenhead, but continuing his Business Men's meeting at the City Hall, Eberle-street, at 12.30, and a special meeting for women, which he started last Tuesday afternoon, at Hope Hall, at 3 o'clock.

Notwithstanding the Lenten addresses now being given by prominent clergymen to business men at St. Nicholas Church, near the Exchange, at the same hour as Mr. McNeill's meetings at the City Hall, he has had crowded audiences of city men who have eagerly thronged the building day after day, the larger proportion having to stand closely packed during the whole of the service. Mr. McNeill's addresses have been very searching and practical, the message has been made clear and plain at each meeting, and no one could have attended without being brought face to face with the truth as it is in Jesus. Every effort has been made to keep these meetings strictly for men only.

A noticeable feature has been the large number of clergymen and ministers of all denominations who have daily attended not only these midday gatherings, but night after night at the Circus. Mr. McNeill has been encouraged by their presence. Revs. Archdeacon Madden, Canon Rycroft, Canon Burbidge, Canon Honeybone, Revs. Charles Garrett, Revs. H. W. Bainbridge, C. Musgrave Brown, Robert McLean, George Peters, Thomas Puddicombe, Dr. Bowman, Herbert Wood, J. H. Atkinson, George Lord, James Fraser, A. B. Barkway, J. A. Irvine, Walter Macfarlane, Eli E. Walter, J. K. Nuttall, F. G. West, Wm. Baker, and many others have taken part.

It was felt that some special service would have to be held for women who could not very well get to the circus at nights, so at the commencement of last week Mr. McNeill decided to have an afternoon meeting at Hope Hall, which accommodates about 1400 people. On the first day it was packed, and each day since numbers have been turned away. Seeing a few men amongst the audience, Mr. McNeill caused some amusement by referring to them as "bearded ladies," and desired that they should not come any more.

Owing to want of room, Mr. McNeill purposes having these afternoon gatherings at the Circus during the last week. The idea in taking Hope Hall was to reach the ladies residing in Princes and Sefton Parks, but it has proved far too small.

The Gospel meetings at Hengler's Circus have been crowded to excess each night, and many have been unable to obtain admission. The Word preached has been with power, and, whenever the opportunity was given, many in all parts of the vast building raised their hands for prayer. Special cards were distributed during the week to be filled in by those who had received decided blessing. These are now being returned in large numbers signed by those who have been helped, restored, or converted, and stating their Church connexion. The committee have been so much encouraged by the manifest results that they have taken the circus for a fourth week, so that while Mr. McNeill is preaching over at Birkenhead in the evenings, the meetings at the Circus will be continued. Mr. Henry Lakin, from Burton-on Trent, who has recently conducted a mission at New Brighton with blessed results, has been engaged for this special service and we are looking forward to a time of reaping, Mr. Lakin being specially adapted for gathering in the harvest.

On Saturday evenings the Circus has been utilised for Gospel temperance meetings. Dr. James Wood (ex-Mayor of Southport), Mr. Henry Lakin, Rev. Henry Postance (Chairman of the Church of England Temperance Society), Rev. H. W. Bainbridge, Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, Rev. Herbert Wood, Dr. Thorpe, town missionaries and others taking part. Much blessing has resulted from these gatherings. Special pledge cards have been issued and the various temperance societies are uniting in the effort.

On Sunday, April 4, Mr. McNeill will hold his closing meetings at the Circus.

Liverpool, March 27. Thos. A. Leigh.

Rev. J. B. McCullagh,

MISSIONARY TO NISHGA INDIANS.

A PECULIAR interest attaches to mission work in the Canadian North-West and the regions beyond on the North Pacific Ocean. The conditions are not such as to entice or attract missionaries of an easy-going type. On the contrary, an indispensable qualification for usefulness, alike amidst the Indian settlements and the scattered white populations, is an ability to turn the hand to the thousand things that are associated with what is known as "roughing it." For work under the many drawbacks and disadvantages of life beyond the confines of civilisation, far from home and kindred, we must have manly men, bishops that can help themselves, evangelists that are kind, brave, and go-ahead.

It is of one of these hardy toilers that we give a portrait to-day. Rev. J. B. McCullagh, who is a C.M.S. missionary, left England in 1883 to teach the Nishga Indians, an interesting tribe having settlements on the Naas River, in British Columbia. Accompanied by his young wife, he arrived at Aiyansh in the cold of November, finding just four walls and a roof in readiness for him. The fact that the natives were thirsting for a knowledge of God supported the mission pair in conditions that were cheerless and depressing in the extreme. The people wanted to learn, but there was no school; in a very short time some wanted to worship, but there was no building set apart for holy convocation; all along they had sicknesses and needed nursing, but there was no hospital. During the past fourteen years a good deal has been done to meet these varied wants.

Having reduced the language to a written form, Mr. McCullagh began to give the people portions of Holy Scripture. He taught reading to all whom he could induce to attend school, and civilisation and education made rapid progress. As converts cheered the missionary's heart, the men were banded together in a Red Cross Association for open-air preaching among the heathen; while the women were enrolled in a White Cross Association in aid of church work and for nursing the sick. One by one the chiefs countenanced the mission, and some became obedient to the faith. Heathen customs were abandoned, and at length the efforts of the worker met with general appreciation.

Such has been the progress that in the latest report of the C.M.S. we read:—

There are 125 adherents, of whom sixty-six are communicants. Mr. McCullagh has Indian Christians under training, who spend four hours daily in study, and four hours in teaching in the school. This is attended by twenty children, while a night-school has twelve adult pupils. The smallest child can now read fluently in the vernacular. Several members of the congregation are able to read music, and these form the church choir.

This is very remarkable, when it is remembered that fourteen years ago the language had not been reduced to writing! Mr. McCullagh shows himself a surveyor and engineer by making roads, bridges, and waterworks; he writes prose and poetry, and prints for the instruction of natives and the information of friends thousands of miles away; he is "guide, philosopher, and friend" of his people—"medicine man" and "sky pilot"; and for the sake of his work he faces many difficulties and discouragements. He enjoys shooting the rapids on the Naas, although only in a river barge; he would not mind type-setting in the summer-time "if there were no marjoys"—mosquitoes! His people call him "chief," and it is his joy to know that many have left the devil's service to follow him as he follows Christ. A typical case is given in a recent booklet of "Extracts" from his journal:—

After a prolonged illness, Silas Sgaden, one of our sawmill company, passed away to his eternal rest to-day. He died like a soldier on the battle-field in the flush of victory. Gathering up his remaining strength and waving his arm, he shouted "Hallelujah! once more I confess my faith!" Then, with an emphatic motion of the hand, as though he were out street preaching among the heathen, he declared his belief in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Thus he died exultingly.

Early in 1892, Mr. McCullagh gave a lantern lecture in the house of a native. Describing the event in his journal, he says:—

About 250 heathens were present. The lecture was on the life and death of Christ, and it produced a profound impression. But, alas! the great attraction among the heathen during the winter was the Ulala, or cannibal dance, at which human flesh was rated at from £1 to £3 a bite, many regarding it as a profitable business to offer their flesh (generally their arms) to the dancers. Picture to yourself such scenes, enacted by naked savages, besmeared with ochre, and bedecked with feathers, howling and writhing through fiendish contortions, in the lurid glare of blazing logs, and encircled by an audience drawn from the various Nishga tribes, and you will see "the heathen at home," perfectly at home in darkness such as this.

Things have improved since then; yet still, "there is much land to be possessed." Besides the daily work, most diligently carried on, Mr. McCullagh has since 1893 erected a sawmill; forming a company of natives to manage it. These supplied all the building material for the new school-house and mission-house, also for the new church. He now asks friends in England, by subscribing £150 annually for a few years, to enable him to engage a printer that he may be free to devote himself to the other departments of the mission. A second request is for a supply of medicines. There are other needs, further information of which, with particulars, may be had of Mrs. Foquett, of Ilfracombe, the mission correspondent in this country.

Mr. Francis Murphy is said to have obtained over 14,000 signers to the pledge during his two months' campaign in Boston.

Notes from Over Sea.

HOWEVER much theologians may question the teaching of Henry Drummond, we laymen who have been enriched by his words hold his memory in tender remembrance. His loss is felt as that of a personal friend. We loved the man. To us he was the embodiment of a noble Christian manhood of the highest type. His presence beneath our roof brought to the household a holy atmosphere. We recall the Sabbath when he was here last as one of the sacred days of memory.

We met him later at different times, and felt the magnetism of his lovable personality. No wonder that the young men at Mount Hermon and the young ladies at Northfield and in the college at Northampton looked upon him as an "Israelite without guile." And now the untiring soul is in the midst of the great realities which he sought to reveal to men.

England has sent us within a few weeks another man of the same type of character: one who has won his way to our hearts—Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, captain, physician, surgeon, missionary, giving the strength of his glorious manhood to the fishermen off the dreary coast of Labrador. Said a lady to us, not specially interested in mission work, after a parlour meeting when he spoke: "He comes nearer to my ideal of Christ as He appeared to his disciples, than any man I ever saw."

In speaking of young men, let us speak of one of our own Boston men, upon whose business judgment, tact, counsel, Mr. Moody relies more perhaps than any other—Henry M. Moore, President of his Board of Trustees at Northfield. A leading business man of the city, keen, bright, sagacious, and above all so loyal a Christian, that no fault can be found with him by his sharp competitors in trade. Said a gentleman to me, as he was speaking to a large audience, "I'll take stock in that man, for I buy goods of him!"

Converted in his earlier manhood, through Mr. Moody's influence, he at once, with no delay or half-heartedness, added to his morality and business ability devotion and consecration to his Master. An eloquent speaker, he is welcomed by the most eminent D.D.'s to their pulpits, and is sought for in every direction. For many years one of the State Committee of the Y.M.C.A. of Massachusetts, his advice, and counsel, and help is invaluable. The last Moody Campaign in Boston rested we may say entirely upon him, the raising of money and the various details of the great work were placed on his shoulders, and right royally did he carry it through. We asked him once why he did not give up his business and give his entire time to evangelistic work. His modest yet characteristic reply was, "I think I can do more good, wield a greater power, as a business man." With large-hearted partners he is able to carry out his plans, and, while not slothful in business, is fervent in spirit. He is at this writing carrying out Mr. Moody's idea, and securing for a noon meeting every Monday for some weeks for Mount Temple some of the most popular and spiritual ministers of the city to preach, with the same choir that assisted Mr. Moody the last two months.

The beloved Joseph Cook, giant in frame and giant in intellect, is not able this winter to continue, as in former years, his "Monday lectures," but for a time Alexander McKenzie, D.D., of Cambridge, takes in some respects the place of Mr. Cook. No one, however, can fill the place of that unique scholarly man, with an eloquence born of conviction.

S. E. Bridgman.

Northampton, Mass, U.S.A., March 15.

North-West Frontier of India.—With reference to the notice of his intentions given in our last week's issue, Rev. T. J. L. Mayer writes to say that he is not in a financial position to do more than pay his passage out, and would work under any society true to the Scriptures, and accepting them as the sole rule of faith and practice. Mr. Mayer hopes that means will be provided for his early return to the field. Possibly some home-keeping Christian may be looking for one to go out as a substitute for personal service.

Mr. Moody and Colportage.

WITH his wonderful intuition as to the special needs of the time, Mr. Moody has for the last year or two been ardently pushing forward the work of Christian Colportage in the United States. He has already been permitted to see much fruit of the effort. From a booklet prepared by Mr. A. P. Fitt, one of his helpers, we take some testimonies illustrating the good which has been accomplished.

FROM A MARYLAND PASTOR.

"While at the Northfield Conference I was greatly impressed with what was said in reference to the Colportage Library work. Being a minister of the Gospel down here, in 'old conservative Maryland,' I doubted the advisability of taking these books out on the highway, for fear my people would think I had gone to peddling. I prayed over the matter, and finally gave my order for one hundred copies. They came in due time, and I crucified the flesh, and went out with my horse and buggy from place to place. The first day I think I preached as many as eight little sermons, at the railroad station, on the country-road, one on a man's farm, and elsewhere.

"Being anxious to have some special meetings at one of the churches of which I am pastor, I had a few preparatory meetings and carried the books. A number purchased them at the close, and on my returning home I asked a young man of German parentage to ride as far as his gate with me. He did so, and on leaving I reached my hand down in the buggy and gave him a book. I did not know what it was, but he told me afterward the title was, 'The Second Coming of Christ.' The next Sunday afternoon, at the regular preaching service, he arose and came to the altar for prayer and was converted. He then led his sister, his mother, his father, and his older brother to Christ. A most gracious revival has broken out, and up to last night there have been between sixty-five and seventy conversions, as near as we can count."

FROM A NEW YORK WORKER.

"During the past six weeks we have sold over 2550 books. A number who were destitute are now self-supporting, some even keeping their families. Several tenement-house people have sold small quantities in their own neighbourhood. We have encouraged this for the sake of getting the Gospel into the poor houses. One man used to live by begging from door to door, and had a wife and two children to support. He came to beg at the Mission one day, and I started him out with the books. From that day he has never had to ask any help, and the whole family are now in much better circumstances. Another man came into the mission drunk. He was converted, and I dressed him up a little and started him out with half-a-dozen books. He has money in both pockets now."

FROM A S.S. SUPERINTENDENT.

"I believe this is one of the best methods that has ever been introduced for reaching all classes of people. These books are constantly preaching while we are in other parts, and reach a large number of people that never enter our churches.

FROM A Y.M.C.A. SECRETARY.

"A rumseller sent a man to me yesterday for employment. I gave him ten of the books. He went back to the rumseller's place, and sold seven of them in the saloon; in four hours he sold twenty books to saloon people. The bookseller has a wife and four children. By this sale he got 1 dol. 60 for food for six persons, a man out of work was given employment, and twenty good books placed among people who could not be reached by ministers. The man is not a drinking man. The books are the solution of a great question."

AMONG THE PRISONERS.

"By means of the Prison Fund, which Mr. Moody opened in connection with the Colportage Association, over 150,000 Bibles, Testaments, and books have been distributed gratis, with the help of local Christian workers. The results have been quick and numerous. A young man applied to the Young Men's Christian Association secretary at Brocton, Mass., for help. He seemed so earnest that the secretary handed him a few of the Colportage Library books, and told him to sell them and keep the proceeds. The young man seemed very much affected, and finally said: 'If it wasn't for that very book I wouldn't be here asking for work. Somebody brought me a copy when I was in jail, and I read it and was converted. And I said, when I got out I would lead an honest life.' Then he added: 'If God can use me to sell these books and bring to someone else such a blessing as I have had, I shall be glad.'

THE ENVELOPE SYSTEM.

"Each book is placed in a large envelope, and the worker proceeds to the district where the canvass is to be made, and leaves at every house a book, saying that he will call again in a day or two. When he returns he takes a supply of other books, and calls at the houses where books have been left. Whenever possible he makes a sale, and during the course of conversation, by using a little tact, information can be gained as to whether they are Christians, whether they attend any church. By visiting saloons, and offering to sell the bar-tender a volume of Spurgeon's sermons, or some other religious book, he can be engaged in a religious conversation, a thing hardly to be accomplished in any other way.

"There are in every community a number of persons who cannot attend church, even if they wished. For instance, mothers with young children, the sick, those engaged in certain occupations, such as the police, etc. These can be reached with books and by personal visitation only. Two-thirds of the population of the United States never go to church, and hence, if they are to be saved, the Gospel must be carried to them in some way. The great point about the 'envelope system' is this: An entrance is gained into homes that would otherwise be closed against Christian workers; and as the profit from the sale of the books gives ample remuneration, the work can be carried on without any expense to the church or society."

Home Teaching for the Blind.—Viscount Midleton presided on Tuesday week at the annual meeting of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind. The forty-first annual report stated that nearly 2000 persons are being visited by the blind teachers whom the Society employs. The Society's income is far below the regular expenditure, and this cannot be reduced without discharging some of the teachers, and leaving hundreds of blind people without their much-prized books. During the past year there were 1216 readers to whom embossed books were lent; 192 new cases were taught; 44,464 visits were paid to the blind at their homes or in workhouses, and 6534 books were in use. Lord Midleton commended the work to the sympathy of all present, and asked them to enlist others in the good cause. The Bishop of Stepney and Mr. Sidney Gedge, M.P., also spoke warmly in support of the Society's efforts.

Prayer for China.

MEETINGS in connection with the Prayer Union for the women of China were held on Thursday last in the Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Bloemfontein-road, Shepherd's Bush.

Rev. F. B. Monti, the pastor, presided in the afternoon, when some few details were given of this Union for regular and sustained prayer for the women of China. The speakers included Rev. F. W. Baller, Mrs. Hudson Taylor, Miss F. H. Culverwell, and a Christian Chinamen, whose few earnest words on behalf of his people were interpreted by Mr. Baller.

Mr. Hardie, who presided in the evening, spoke of his deep interest in missions, and told how from a certain Sunday-school in Notting-hill, of which he had been superintendent, five missionaries had gone forth—three to China, one to India, and one to Spain. He also illustrated what women can do by reference to the work of the Presbyterian Women's Missionary Association, concluding with a high eulogium of Mrs. Stott's new book on her experiences in China.

Mrs. Stott spoke with much power on the leadings of the Lord as seen during her twenty-eight years' labours as a missionary. Little did she say as to her own work, but much as to the faith, prayer, and devotion of the poor Chinese women in making known to heathen neighbours the Gospel of salvation. A little band in Wun-chau had, out of their poverty, raised, cash by cash, enough to maintain a Bible-woman, and otherwise aid in spreading the Gospel. For example, a poor beggar-woman had told, as she went about, what little she knew, and had been much used of God. Altogether the aspect of things is very hopeful in the district around Wun-chau in which Mrs. Stott labours.

Somewhat diverse, however, is the state of things at Gan-king, where the next speakers, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hunt have been labouring. Here, as appeared, from their narrative, prejudice and utter carelessness prevail, and it is a time of breaking the fallow ground rather than reaping, which is yet to come. True, there is encouragement, and the Lord has given precious souls; but for the most part the missionaries in this district have to sow in faith and wait for the harvest. The great need, as urged by Mr. Hunt, is more labourers, they are so terribly few, and more intense and earnest prayer that the Spirit of God, may touch these poor blind people, and open their hearts to receive his loving message.

The Prayer Union is composed of those who agree to pray daily for the women of China, and those who labour amongst them. The secretary is Miss Elizabeth Boyd, 6, Birkbeck-road, Victoria-road, Acton, W., who will gladly give information and welcome new members.

The Volunteers of America.

THROUGH the merciful providence of God and the unfailing assistance of his Spirit, we are brought to a position, after a year's growth, from which we can report a progress that is seldom given the most favoured of his followers to realise. Our advance is not only remarkable from a statistical standpoint, but stands out clearly as an achievement through Divine intervention. It is furthest from our desire to parade our growth in the form of figures before the public, but it is sometimes necessary to use this medium to indicate our progress.

Not including the Pacific Coast Regiment, from which we have not received the later returns, our records show that there are 3680 soldiers and recruits at our officers' command for service. It must be taken into consideration that the returns in soldiers and recruits represent not more than nine months' work, when there were not more than some ten posts. We have 160 officered organized posts or societies, and during a recent month there were over 1500 persons professed conversion in our meetings.

We commission to-night our five-hundredth commanding officer, whose whole time will be employed in the Volunteer movement, and there are twenty more applicants, passed by the regimental officers, of a suitable character. We hope to commission to-night our three-thousandth member in our Defenders' League, while Mrs. Booth receives into the Volunteer Prisoners' League the twelve-hundredth prisoner. Ballington Booth.

34, Union-square, New York.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Ted, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Our Help for Starving India.

Text for Sunday.—Jesus said, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever."

Hymn.—Songs and Solos, No. 381.

I AM sure that every one of you has rejoiced at the sum which God has enabled us to send to India during the past few weeks. My nephews and nieces and their friends have now sent to Mrs. Bruere, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, Poona, near Bombay, the sum required to feed over a hundred orphan boys and girls for one year, and I have written to ask Mrs. Bruere to tell us something of how she is managing with her large family from time to time. We must not forget that most of them will want food next year too, and for several years, till able to work for themselves, so I hope you will give no less liberally when you do not hear of the horrors of famine, but when boys and girls in India get as hungry as you do here.

Besides this large sum, the £5 13s. acknowledged on March 11 went to Miss Jessie Hewlett, at Mirzapur, on the Ganges; the £4 14s. acknowledged on March 18 went to the Rev. G. M. Bulloch, at Almora, in the Himalaya Mountains; and the £3 10s. 2d. acknowledged on March 25 to Mr. Lampard, of Balaghat, in Central India; and the £2 7s. 8d. acknowledged to-day has gone to Miss Hill, of Patna, whose letter we read last week. I have asked all of these to write and tell us about the use they make of it, and having seen them all at work in India, I am certain they will make the best use of it. Remember that the famine must last all the Summer through, till the next harvest comes.

The Boys that are Wanted.

The boys that are wanted are good boys,
That are noble in mind and heart,
Who would scorn to oppress the weak ones,
But would bravely take their part.
The boys who are wanted are true boys
Who have taken Christ for their Lord,
Who have given their lives to his service,
And who strive to obey his Word.

The boys that are wanted are pure boys
Whose goings are kept by the Lord;
Who at home, at school, and in playtime,
Shed their influence abroad.
An influence gentle, but mighty,
That all those around them can tell
They are noble, and pure, and Christ-like,
And copy their Master well.

Dora Sharman

Bible Lesson for a Rainy Day.

"Hear the Music of the Rain."

1.	God prepares the Rain for the Earth	Ps. clxvii. 8
2.	Hath the Rain a Father?	Job xxxviii. 28
3.	He sends the Rain	Matt. v. 45
4.	He shall come like Rain	Ps. lxxii. 6
5.	Showers of blessing	Ezek. xxxiv. 26
6.	Abundance of Rain	1 Kings xvii. 41
7.	Former and latter Rain	Joel ii. 23
8.	Doctrine shall drop as Rain	Deut. xxii. 2
9.	Rain righteousness upon you	Hos. x. 12
10.	As the Rain cometh	Is. lv. 10
11.	Rain came and destroyed	Matt. vi. 27
12.	A covert from Rain	Is. iv. 6
13.	Rain over and gone	Songs ii. 11
14.	Clear shining after Rain	2 Sam. xxiii. 4

Newcastle-on-Tyne. Geo. Summers.

Personal.

Our "Honours List" cannot appear till next week, as all the answers have not yet been received.

May Dring.—I am sending out no collecting cards for the famine, as what I wanted my nephews and nieces to do was to see what they could deny themselves to send to those in need, but of course you can collect as well as give if you like. Frances, Edith and Maud.—Thank you. Uncle Tom is quite well, and hopes to be back in a week or two. Uncle Ted.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S.	Mark	xii. 1-12.	Th.	Mark	xiii. 11-23.
M.	"	xii. 13-27.	F.	"	xiii. 24-37.
Tu.	"	xii. 28-44.	Sat.	"	xvi. 1-16.
W.	"	xiii. 1-10.

Donation List.

Mrs. Bruere's Work, Poona.—J. A. F., £3 6s. 8d.; S. W., £4; G. M. G., £3 16s. 8d.; W. McE., £2 10s.; Three Juniors, 1s. 1d.; Rob Roy, £4 1s. 8d.; Mrs. A. G.'s Daughter, 2s. 6d.; Woodcliff Sunday Class, £3 6s. 8d.; F. C., 2s. 6d.; Mrs. T., £3 6s. 8d.; School Pupils, Woolston, 3s.; Collected, Meeting, Montrose, £1 16s. 8d.; E. C. B., £1 10s.; F. and F. S., 2s.; Collected E. B., 2s.; total, £28 8s. 1d. Total to March 30, £341 10s. 11d.

Indian Famine.—For Jesus' Sake, £1; M. O., 2s.; B. S., 1s.; Girls' Training Home, Walkley, 15s.; C. K. D., 4s. 6d.; Miss E. S. C., 5s.; C. P., 2d.; total, £2 7s. 8d.

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—E. N., 5s.; M. G., 1s.; N. H., 6d.; total, 6s. 6d. Total to March 30, £2 2s. 8d.

From My Nephews and Nieces.

Dear Uncle Ted:

When I read the piece called "Hireling Shepherds," I concluded that I had been a "hireling" over the Bible Searcher. I am afraid I have been doing them for the sake of getting my name in, and for going in for the competitions, instead of wanting to search my Bible. But I do not mean to have that motive for the future. I am so sorry for the Indians; we are going without meat this week, and are going to go without something else next week, for the famine. May (14).

Perhaps you would like to hear about our Children's Missionary Band. There are seven working members, and we meet every other Saturday afternoon to sew, etc., for the L.M.S. We also answer the missionary and Bible questions in the News from Afar, the L.M.S. children's magazine, every month. Besides the working members, we have six associates—those who cannot come to the meetings, but work at home; and among all these we have five copies of News from Afar monthly, and three missionary boxes. Of course we cannot do very much, but we do the very best we can, and last year earned by our sewing 15s., besides what was in our own boxes. We also paint Bengáli and Telugu texts for the schoolrooms in India, and are now making clothes for Indian children. I thought this might encourage others in little country villages to do what they can, no matter how little it may be, for the Master's sake.

Muriel (15).

I am only a little boy about nine years old, but I see that you have a great many nephews and nieces quite as young who are sending you money for the poor starving children in India. I love Jesus very much, and so I wish to please Him; therefore I send you a postal order for four shillings to be sent to his little hungry lambs for his sake.—

Richard.

Our Sunday-school at Cambridge Hall, Kilburn, supports one orphan. My brother and I give a penny a week, sometimes a little more.

Matilda and Annie (ages 16 and 11).

A missionary lady told me a story about a heathen woman, of which I think you would like to hear. A Hindoo woman, whose father had taught her to read, entered a monastery; and one day a man gave her one of the Gospels, saying, "I cannot read it, I thought perhaps you could." Eagerly she took the book and read: "In the beginning was the Word." "Ah!" she thought, "this is what we are looking for." She went in search of a missionary to explain it to her (as there was not one in that town), and travelled very many miles, from town to town, asking if the Christians lived there. At last she came across a catechist, who took her to a missionary. She drank in the truth earnestly, and afterwards went back to her native town, and is now a Bible-woman. I thought this taught us a beautiful lesson of longing for God's Word.

Bessie (12½).

If any of your nephews and nieces like Mr. Martin Hall, of Uganda, as well as I do, they will be glad to hear some of his letter. Mother has just had a letter from him, so I send you a copy. Stanley (11).

Extracts.—"I am living a 'Robinson Crusoe' life here on the islands of this great lake, and greatly enjoy my sphere, though it is a rough life and food is scarce. Give Stanley my love, and ask him how he would like a lunch such as I had a week ago—boiled plantains, stewed white ants and mushrooms, eaten off leaves on the floor with the fingers! Not long ago I had a great delicacy in the shape of stewed grasshoppers, which taste much like shrimps.

"My watery parish consists of about fifty-six distinct congregations, on eighty-six different islands, extending from about fifteen miles north of the Equator to twenty miles south of it. Such a parish necessitates a good deal of travelling in the crazy native canoes, such as would have made even 'Rob Roy's' blood run cold. They leak at every seam, and one is liable to wettings, which will in time bring fever and rheumatism, humanly speaking.

"However, I have written home to some of my well-to-do friends to send me out a sailing boat. Meanwhile I am trying to build one in spare moments, which are few. I am just now closing a fortnight's tour among the more southerly islands, helping the teachers, examining and baptizing catechumens, and furnishing the teachers with Scripture portions to sell.

"The work on the islands is specially hopeful, as there is still enough real persecution from the heathen to keep things healthy."

Victoria Nyanza, Dec. 9, 1896.

Mary (11) does not like to write and tell you herself that she is a member of the Regions Beyond Helpers' Union, and in one of Dr. Guinness's money-boxes has taken about £1 3s. this year. She has also collected £1 11s. 6d. for the London Missionary Society. Last year she collected £1 for the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, and, as you know, is now doing without sweets for the Indian children.

A Mother.

My daughter Flora wishes me to tell you that she has this week sent two shillings to the Indian Famine Fund. It has been most amusing to hear her plans with her little brother of five, who is her only playmate. She has been so interested in what she reads in The Christian about what the children have done in order to send money, that she has been going without her jam for a few weeks, and then, as she heard about children performing and getting money that way, they proposed that they could perform, if Dada and Mamma would give them a penny each to see them. Consequently Flora has made out a programme with most laughable details, for instance, "Franky to stand on one leg for a time; drive his sister like a wheelbarrow," etc., but I must not detain you with all the details, suffice it to say that I believe their little hearts are in the right place about it, owing largely to what they read in The Christian.

A Mother.

We thank Thee, Lord, for all the gifts
Thou dost on us bestow,
And pray for help to live like Thee,
Whilst here on earth below.

We know, dear Lord, that all have sinned,
But Thou giv'st pardon free;
And all the blessings of to-day,
Oh Lord, have, come from Thee.

A Searcher.

Bible Searcher (No. 65).

QUARTERLY PRIZE COMPETITION.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is strictly observed, especially No. 7? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Classes:—
   - I. Those under eight years of age, who will do questions 1, 2 and 3.
   - II. Those between eight and twelve, who will do questions 1, 2, 3, and 4.
   - III. Those between twelve and fourteen, who will do questions 3 to 8.
   - IV. Those over fourteen years of age, who will do questions 3 to 12.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Class to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Ted" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your Class, your Full Name and Address, and your Age last birthday.
5. Number your answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. The reference (chapter and verse) must be given with every answer to every question.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
9. Answers must be posted not later than Tuesday, April 13. The results will be announced on April 22.
10. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and no papers can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly. Although the questions will take longer to do than the usual weekly ones, remember that you are working for a prize, and have more time than usual for doing them.

1. What do you know about Abraham?
2. What do you know about Deborah?
3. Give an explanation of the parables of the sower applied to your own daily life, saying how the seed is sown, and what things hinder its growth.
4. What does the writer of the epistle to the Galatians tell us about himself in that epistle?
5. Quote a prophecy from Gen. xv. referring to Egypt, and give the reference recording its fulfilment.
6. Quote a prophecy from Gen. xvii. about the man of whom it had been foretold that his hand should be against every man,
7. What did Abraham tell Isaac when he asked where the sacrifice was? Quote a passage from St. John's Gospel of which this reminds us.
8. Write in as few words as possible from the book of Numbers who a Nazarite was.
9. Of whom was it said that he slew more at his death than in his life, and how did he do it?
10. What word were certain of the Israelites unable to pronounce? which were they, and how did they pronounce it?
11. Quote a promise from Mark about giving a cup of cold water.
12. Quote the verses from Galatians containing the words "through, in or of, the Spirit."

CHILDREN CORRECT NINE TIMES AND OVER.

Arnold Akers, Violet Annesley, Gordon, Olive, and Constance Andrews, Ernest Allen, Fannie and Nellie Ames, Ernst Aldwinckle, Violet Ashworth, Wm. Aston, Owen J. Akers, Arnold Allen, Aline Bazett, John Baring, Gracie Barnes, Eliz. B. Black, Herbert Braddon, Katharine Blackie, Willie Bellerby, Florence Bellerby, Millicent, Wallace, and Rhoda Bentley, John Benger, Lealie and Herbert Berry, Frances Bennett, Mabel Birney, Emily Bridgewater, Gertrude Brookfield, Bert Brotchie, Stanley Boxer, Phyllis Boyd, Annie Boniface, Lavinia Barnes, Janet Black, Teresa and Lilian Blackie, Mary Ballingal, Nellie Bellerby, Ethel Benger, May and Gordon Bligh, Ralph Bourne, Lily Boxer, D. A. Bennie, Ethel Beauchamp, Wm. E. Clarke, Mary E. Clarke, Jack Clarke, Lottie Carter, Willie, Maggie, and Mary Charles, Lionel and Gladys Calvert, Rosalind Clarke, J. A. Chamberlain, Willie and Harold Cheesman, Elma Cheal, Henry Cheney, Willie Christie, Ida, Mabel, Annie, and Edith Cole, Dora, Corrie, Herbert Compton, Dorothy Cooper, Ruth Coupe, Annie Cooper, Lilian Collins, Arther, Henry, and Annie Couch, G. Brereton Code, Mary T. Colville, Eric Chance, Maud Cleal, Bessie Cheale, Fred. Compton, Dora Colebrooke, Oscar Cross, Susie Cumbers, Nellie Couch, Violet and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Carrie Dawe, Randolph Daintree, Margaret Davison, Helen Daniels, Ellen Drake, Frank Dean, Nellie and Willie Dowsett, Grace and Kathleen Dodington, Cecil Dodd, Claud Donaldson-Selby, Kenneth Dunbar, Gordon Duncan, Marjory and Dorothy Dyke, Lilian and Stuart Ellacott, Willie and Ernest Edmonds, Eva Edmundson, Kate, Bessie, Maggie, and Mabel Fletcher, Willie, Reginald, and Ernest Findlay, Lilian and Christopher Fidler, Fanny Field, Herbert Fowler, Marion and James Freegard, Vera Fulcher, Annie Fleming, Lee Gardner, Mary L. Graham, Constance Gabbett, Minnie Giddings, Constance and Sybil Godfrey, Christabel and A. D. Goodwin, Daisy Groves, Thea Guinness, Mabel S. Godfrey, Euphemia Graham, Helen M. Hunter, Ethel Hutchings, Fredda Hunton, Nellie and Rex Hatchett, Winifred Harvey, Dorothy Harris, Margaret Hassé, Annie Hazeldine, Evelyn and Dorothy Hewer, Ernest, Lilian, and Clarice Herivel, Victor Henry, Theodora Hill, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games, May Hunter, Charles and Mena Hunter, Tom and Harcourt Hunter, Irene and Ruth Harrison, Frances Harris, Jack Harris, Frances and Florence Hoyte, Gladys Isaac, Lucie and Archie Jacob, Sinclair and Moffatt Jackson, Robert Jones, Agnes Jones, Dudley Joyce, Norman and K. G. Johns, Frank Jones, Grace and Dora Joyce, Elsie Johnson, Isabella, Agnes, Alexander, Thos. and Willie Kay, Emily and Lucy Kelk, Susie and Willie Kean, Jane, Hubert, and T. A. and K. G. Kirkpatrick, Gertrude Kingerlee, Frances and Dorothy Keable, Maggie Kirkbride, Flora King, Sidney and Mary Law, Guinefred Leigh, Arthur Llewellyn, Doke Lewis, Ethel and Kathleen Light, Maud and Elsie Leigh, Dora Marples, Trevor Matthews, John Menzies, Hilda Medill, Maria Morris, Evelyn Moir, Eva Monti, Dora Muir, S. E. Mackintosh, Barbara Maconchy, Jan D. Macgregor, Margaret Macphee, Margie and Gracie Marston, Hilda Matheson, Laura Macaulay, Nellie, Abraham, Thomas, and Bella Mack, Alan Marples, Ivy Maunsell, Margery Matthews, Mary and Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Maggie Menzies, Bessie Millar, Ethel Morgan, Frank Morris, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Arthur Moir, Amy and Maude Nottage, Blanche Norcock, Maude and Eva Oakes, Arabella Onslow, Alice Mary Palmer, Jessie, Willie, and Maggie Palmer, Charles Parkin, Duncan Payne, Ethel and Kathleen Pasley, Douglas Parkes, J. Ernest Pearce, Myrtle Perry, Norman, Vera, W. M., Louie, and Mary Penny, Kate Penny, Edwin Peters, Isabel and Gladys Phipps, Jessie, Margaret, and Lillian Pook, Mary Plumb, Ada Palmer, Winnie Page, Gertrude Partridge, Daisy and May Petrides, Alfred and Dorothy Penny, Walter Perryman, Nellie Peachey, Eddie V. Proctor, Geo. W. Powell, Edyth, Gordon, and Gracie Reeve, Marion and Robert Richards, Olive, Sydney, and Cecil Robertson, Frances Rawle, Hilda Rawson, Connie and Alice Rouse, Matilda Robinson, Evelyn Shaw, Margery Smart, Dollie and Bob Salt, Dorothy Sharp, Rosetta Shawin, B. H. Spencer, Agnes M. Starry, Flora Simmons, Nellie Skinner, Florrie Smith, Gertrude and Constance Scott, Lucy and Kenneth Soltau, Betty Stocks, Eric and Ronald Studd, Emily Stuart, Hilda and Constance Schaeffer, Muriel Shaw, F. D. B. Stalker, Maggie Smith, Jessie Snowball, Muriel Taylor, Ethel Taylor, Arnold Taylor, Annie Tawse, Olive Tritton, Louie Tibbits, John W. Thomson, Frank Thompson, Herbert Turnbull, Edith and Maude Tyson, Frances Taggart, Janet Thomson, Frank Tomkins, Mary Tongue, Howard Toller, Hugh Tufnell, May Vickers, Gertrude Vennicott, Mary Walton, May and Ronald Watson, Jessie West, Willie Wheeler, R. H. and W. F. Williams, Ethel Williamson, Horace Williamson, Noel and Phillis Wright, Harry, Arthur and Herbert Wright, Ida, Elsie and Grace Wright, Maggie Wight, Helen, Lilian, and Elsie Willoughby, Frank R. Wilson, Pringle Wilson, Gertie M. Wood, Ida and Allan Woodman, Nellie Walker, James Williamson, Evelyn H. Wood, Edgar Yerbury.

[ans.]

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (No. 64).

1.—Mark i. 35	5.—Mark iv. 19	9.—Mark ix. 24
2.—Mark i. 40, 41	6.—Mark v. 19	10.—Mark x. 52
3.—Mark ii. 17	7.—Mark vi. 34	11.—Mark i. 11, 24; iii. 11; v. 7
4.—Mark iii. 35	8.—Mark viii. 34

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 53. J. A. Field (Sydney). No. 55. D. McArthur, J. Garrett. No. 56. J. Garrett, M. H. Lister, B. and N. Whitehead, A. Lombard*. No. 57. B. and N. Whitehead, A. Lombard. No. 58. C. Cane (S. Africa). No. 59. H. E. and C. Gartshore, J. Scott, D. H. Marshall, A. and H. Baillie. No. 60. H. E. and C. Gartshore (America), D. P. Grove. Nos. 61 and 62. E. Menter (Malta). No. 59. Q. and L. Dale (India).

No. 63.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

M. Aldwinckle, O., G., and C. Andrews, V. Annesley, F. and N. Ames H. Allen, M. Adams, D. A. Bennie, A. H. Bowker*, J. Buchanan*, J. C. Bell, A. S. Barker, W. and A. Bellerby, G. Brookfield, M. Barton, M. and G. Bligh, A. Baker, E. Beauchamp, E. M. Barclay, G. Barnes, L. Bentall, J. Baring, R. M. Bentley, M. S. Ballingal, B. Brotchie, A. Bazett, R., L., T., and K. Blackie, J. Boston*, L. and S. Boxer, G. B. and J. B. Baker, N. E. G. Bellerby, G. Brand, E. Bergen*, O. M. Begbie, D. B. Benson, H. S. Bone*, F. L. Bennett, M. Baker, L.* and H.* Berry, W., M., and Mary Charles, D. and E. F. Corrie, M. T. Colville*, W. Christie, M. Collins, N. Coote*, M. E. Clarke*, C. M. Craven, V. J. Chamberlin, L. Collins, A. M. Cole, D. Cooper, B. Cheale, T. Cole, G.* and L.* Calvert, Arthur Couch, L. Carter, M. J. Cheal, L. Coles, L. Clarke, A. Cooper*, R. Coupe, H. J. Cheney*, A. M. Carter, R. and E. Dunn, C. and T. G. Donaldson-Selby, D. Daintree, C. Devenish-Meares, C. K. and E. A. Dodd, G. Duncan, K. Dunbar, C. Dawe, D.* and M.* Dyke, M. Davison, E. E. Drake, E. L. Edmundson, S. T. Ellacott*, L. and C. Fidler, E. and W.* and R. Findlay, F. and Wm. Field, A. E. Figgis, Maggie*, Mabel, K., and B. Fletcher, A. Fleming, E. Gray, H. and S. Godfrey, C. and A. D. Goodwin, M. Giddings, G. E. Gill, M. L. Graham, M. S. and C. Godfrey, D. Greenacre, V. Holford, J. Handersyde, H. M. Harcourt, Tom and M. V. Hunter, F. Hunton, M. Hasse, N. Hatchett, J. and M. D. Hogg, W. Harvey, E., Chas., and Mena Hunter, V. Henry, R. Hamilton, Emily Hearn, L. M., C. M., and E. P. Herivel, N. Horsford, A. E. Hazledine, F. E. and D. E. Harris, Ethel Hutchings, R. Harrison, S. and M. Jackson, A. and L. Jacob, Frank and Robert Jones, K. G. Johns*, E. Johnson, Stanley D. Jones, Agnes Jones, A., W., T., S., and Alex. Kay*, M. Kirkbride, R. M. and A. C. King, F. King, G. Kingerlee, E. M. and L. Kelk, W. B.* and S. A.* Keen, J. E., D. T., K. G., and T. A.* and H. Kirkpatrick, L. Ladd*, E. Larwill, M. F. Leigh, G. L. Leigh, E. Leigh, D. Lewis, E. and K. Light, A. Llewellyn, J. and M. Menzies, A. Marples, L. B. Macaulay, S. E. Macintosh, B. C. Mather, Maria Morris*, Frank Morris, A. L. Moir, J. H. Mather, E.V. and M. D. Maitland-Kirwan, H. M. Medill*, J. Maunsell, N. and B., and A.* Mark, M. Matthews, A. G. Macnair, M. J. Macphee, D. and M. Morris, M. McCallum, B. Maconchy, J. D. Macgregor, G. and E. Morgan, D. and T. Mackenzie, B. Norcock, D. Nathan M. and A. Nottage, E. L. and M. N. Oakes. M. Owen, T. M. Oldham, L. and H. Orr, H. Parkin, M. Palmer, K.* and E. M. Pasley, N. and L. Peachy, W. M. Penny, J. Pook, A. M. Palmer, W. C. Perrymond*, A. K. and D. Penny, D. Patten, G. Partridge, E. G. Palmer, J. W. and R. and M. W. Pickering, W. Paige*, W. and M. and J. C. Palmer, Chas. Parkin, M. E. Plumb*, F. S. Phillips, M. and N. and T. Petrides, E. T. Peters, O. and C. Robertson, D. W. and A. B. Ramsay, P. R. Robinson, E.* and G.* Reeve, A. and C. Rouse, F. Rawle, H. Rawson, E. H. Rainey, T. Roberts, G. Remmington, G. and Wm. Smith, B. and D.* Salt, C. and G. Scott, H. Shackleton, D. and M. Shaw, B. Symes, E. Stuart*, D. and F. Stafker, E. and G., M. and W., Gladys and Undine Shaw, N. Skinner, J. and T. Stanier, D. Sharp, Ernest and Eric Seymour, B. H. Spencer, E. Saunderson, M. Tongue, F. Thompson, E. Taylor, A. and W. E. and M. M. Thomson, P. H. and H. W. and A. R. and L. Turnbull, Ada Taylor, G. Tingey*, F. Taggart, E. and M. Tyson, J. W. and Janet Thomson, R. H. Theobald, H. J. and F. Tomkins, L. Tibbets*, G. and L. and Freddie, F. H. and M. A. Trotter, M.* and D. Vickers, G. W. Vellacott. Elsie Vigars, R. and M. Watson, E. Winpenny, F. White, J. and H. Williamson, J. G. West, E. V. and L. and G. E. and H. Willoughby, E. G. and G. and Ida Wright, W. Wilson, G. M. Wood, R. H. and W. F. Williams, M. Walton, A., Harry, and Herbert Wright, P. Wilson, H. Wodson, F. R. Wilson, E. and L. Whenday, T. Watson, G. Weir*, E. M. White, E. H. Wood, M. and J. Wight, L. Youlden.

No. 64.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

O., G., and C.* Andrews, A. and O. J. Akers, V. Ashworth*, J. Alen, V. Annesley*, V. Armstrong, Wm. Aston, L. Athole, A. D., E., and H. Allen, D. G. Arbuthnot, L. Barnes, R., K., L., and T. Blackie, E. and L. Berry, M. S. Ballingal*, J. and E. Benger, B. Brotchie, M. Birney, V., F. K., and W. Bellerby, G. B. and N. Brookfield, H. Braddon, A. and C. Bazett, W. and M. Bentley, P. Boyd, G. Barnes, N. Bellerby, E. Bridgewater*, E. M. Barclay, M. Barton, G., D., and M. Bligh, E.* and J.* Black, D. Cooper, H. J. Cheney, J. and R. Clarke, D. J. Clarke, M. J. Cleal, B. Cheal, A. E.* and E. T.* Cowley, M. Campbell, E. M., A. M. and M. Cole, F. and H. Compton, E. Church, J. A. Chamberlain, K. A., and T. O. Cross. Mary*, M., and W. Charles, E. Cheal, Eric and E. Chance, T. and M. Cullen, R. Coupe, K. and B. Code, S. Cumbers, L. Carter, H. and W. Cheesman, G. L. Dickie*, V. T. Chamberlin, W. E. Clarke, A. Coopie, G. Dodington, V., K., T. G., and C. Donaldson-Selby, L. M. Daw, M. Dring, R. and D. Daintree, W. R. and D. M. Davies, J. Dunlop, M. Davison, C. and A. Dodd, V. C. Dickinson, N. and W. Dowsett, M. Dalzell, E. Daisley, L. M. Ellacott*, E. and W. Edmonds, E. L. Edmondson, M. Fooks, A. and F. Figgis, V. Fulcher, M. G. and J. T. Freegard, M., Mabel, and R. Fletcher, Thea Guinness, M. E., D., and A. H. Greenacre, H. and T. Godfrey, L. Grierson, L. Gardner, C. Gabbett, D. Groves, M. and C. Godfrey*, Thea Hill, V. Henry, E. and D. Hewer, D. and J. Hughes-Games, N.* and R. Hatchett, E., Chas., and M. Hunter, E. C. S. and M. R. Hogge, F. and D. Harris, Francie, Flor. and S. Hoyte, D. and L. B. Hardie, J. Harris, G. T. Isaac, D. V. and Dora and G. E. Joyce, K.* and N.* Johns, E. Johnson, A. and L. Jacob, E. M. and A. Jepson, R. and F. Jones, Lizzie King, F. King*, F. and D. Keable, L. and E. M. Kelk, G. Kingerlee, S. A.* and W. B.* Keen, A. Loveridge, D. Lewis, M. F. Leigh, E. and G. Leigh, R. and E. M. Light, A. Llewellyn, H. Lovell, S. E. and M. Law, L. F. Morice, D. Marples, D. Morrison*, H. M. Medill, S. Mariner, G. and C. Macdonald, Maria Morris, R. Measom, E. and A. Moir, G. and M. Marston, J.* and M.* Menzies, H. Matheson, A. Marples, D. and M. A. Morris, I. D. Macgregor, E. Nash, A. and M. Nottage, G. O. Beirne, A. V. Onslow, J.,* M., and L. Pook, D. Payne, D. Parkes, G. M. Pike, A. M. Palmer, M. E. Plumb*, W. Page, K., D. and A. Penny, N., M., and L. Peachey, K. A.* Pasley, C. Parkin*, E. T. Peters*, T. W.* and G. M.* Phipps, J. E. Pearce*, L. M. and W. M. Penny, G. W. Powell, M. Perry, H. H. Palmer, K. Pell, E. Quick, M. Reeves-Palmer, H. and W. Russell Smith, H. Rawson, N. Read, M. Reynolds, Jas. and John Rogers, F. Rawle, E. Rumbolds, M. L. Rickards, M. A. Robinson, F. E. Roden, S.,* O.* and C. Robertson, M. and R. Rickards, A. H. Sanders, Flor. Smith, K. Shackleton, M., C., and G. Scott, B. Stocks, J. and E. Snowball, M. D. and F. B. Stalker, E. and K. H. Soltau, B. H. Spencer, N. Skinner, M. L. Symon, B. Shield, B. Steadman, F. Simmons, E. Shaw, R. Sherwin, M. Smart, R. Studd, A. M. Sterry*, B. Stevenson, W. F. B., Undine, G. E., E., and M. Shaw, A. Taylor, A. Tawse, H. M. Toller, F. Thompson, H. Tufnell, M. and H.* Taylor, O. Tritton, E.* and M.* Tyson, F. Taggart, M. Tongue, M. Vickers, H. Willoughby, E. Williamson, W. Wheeler, L. and E. Whenday, N. Walker, F. R. Wilson*, W. F. and R. H. Williams, M. and R. Watson, T.* and A.* Woodman, G. Webb, Her, Harry, C. and A. Wright, G. M. Wood, Q. and H. J. Williams, M. H. and C. H. Washington, F., N., and C.* Wright, J., G., and E. G. Wright, B. and Wm.* Ward.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Presbyterian Church, Highgate, April 9. Mr. H. Hankinson, Maindee, Newport, April 24—May 3. Mr. Reginald Callender, Underriver, Sevenoaks, April 9; Bedford, April 10-11. Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Eastbourne to April 9; Woking, April 9-12; Watford, April 12; Horsham, April 13-15; Croydon, April 17-19. Mr. Goodman, Plashet Park, to April 11; Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 24-May 2. Mr. W. L. Seyler, All Saints' Mission Hall, Caledonian-road, April 9. Mr. Sidney Spiers, Anerley, April 21.

Annual Meeting at Exeter Hall, April 1.—Chairman, afternoon at 3 o'clock, Rev. E. A. Stuart; evening at 6.30, Mr. W. F. A. Archibald.

The Young Abstainers' Union, for the promotion of total abstinence among the sons and daughters of the upper and middle classes, reports a thorough re-organisation in the operations. For the last six months the work of the union has been carried on by Miss Salmon voluntarily. The scattered branches are making encouraging progress.

Temperance Notes.

Gen. Neal Dow celebrated his 93rd birthday on Saturday week.

Statistics show that out of 15,083 cases treated in Liverpool dispensaries nearly 8000 were those of persons injured while in a drunken state.

The Manx boarding-house Bill, enabling the boarding-house keepers of Douglas to supply their summer visitors with beer and stout, has fallen through in the House of Keys.

The first volume of evidence before the Liquor Licensing Laws Commission has been issued. Those who have leisure to wade through the bulky tome, will find it pregnant with serious facts as to the liquor trade and the evils associated therewith.

A somewhat original strike has taken place at Hemixem, near Antwerp. An apprentice was dismissed by his employers for introducing gin into the factory, and the prospect of losing their habitual tipple caused seventy-five workmen to strike at once!

An attempt to obtain a licence to open a public-house opposite a Board school in East Dulwich was vigorously opposed by the local branch of the B.W.T.A., who procured 800 signatures against the proposal. At the Newington Brewster Sessions the licence has been refused.

Mrs. Down has returned from a tour in the North of England where she addressed meetings for the W.T.A.U. at Rawdon, Wingate, S. Shields, West Sleekburn, Shankhouse, Choppington Guide Post, How Mill, Mealsgate and Scarborough. Pledge were taken and the addresses listened to by very appreciative audiences.

Mr. Rothera, coroner for Nottingham, told the Licensing Commission that he had seen much drinking among women as early as nine o'clock in the morning. He had seen mothers in the beer-houses as early as that hour, with their children in their arms, and he had seen children in perambulators drinking beer given to them by their parents.

The Garrison Gospel Temperance Services, Newcastle-on-Tyne, came to a close for the season on Thursday evening. Rev. W. Dryburgh gave an address entitled "Nemesis." Colonel R. Upcher, D.S.O., commanding troops, presided, and his cheery remarks were most helpful. This finishes a six months' campaign of temperance work in the barracks here.

The Newcastle papers announce that Mr. Tennyson Smith has broken down in the middle of the great Temperance Mission, in the Olympia, Newcastle-on-Tyne, a building seating over 4000 people. After a few days rest, he hopes to carry through a mission at Keighley, which has been extensively advertised, and then to rest for three weeks, commencing work again at Stroud, on April 24.

In the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Saturday afternoon, Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., presided over a meeting, held in connection with the National Temperance League, for the furtherance of temperance in commercial life. Mr. John Wilson, M.P., gave statistics obtained from a Scottish insurance office, showing that a larger degree of mortality prevails amongst publicans than any other classes. Addresses were also delivered by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., Mr. R. A. Allinson, M.P. (director of the Midland Railway Company), Mr. Andrew Johnston (chairman of the Essex County Council), and Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P.

The report of the French Commission charged with studying the means of combating alcoholism proposes a programme of instruction for schools in the secondary stage. It is to consist of three parts—hygienic, economic, and psychological and moral. Under the first head the pupil will have the physiological and pathological action of fermented liquors explained to him. Under the economic head "the influence of alcoholism in the impoverishment and ruin of the individual and the family" will be treated. The "cost of drink to the country, and its effect on crime, suicides, and accidents of all kinds," will be brought home to the scholar, as well as "the train of moral evils alcoholism entails on the individual and the race."

There was a large gathering on Wednesday night at the People's Palace on the occasion of the annual meeting of the London Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S. It has been the custom to hold the meeting in the West-end, and the idea of holding it at the People's Palace was to stimulate interest in temperance work in the East-end. The Bishop of London presided, and delegates were present from various parts of the metropolis. The report showed that the number of members of the society was about 13,000, and that during the year ninety-two new branches were founded, making a total of 635. Thirteen police-court missionaries were employed and six mission women. In the past year 1,351 pledges were taken; 679 girls and women rescued from shame and degradation; 11,772 persons materially helped; clothing, fuel, and food distributed; prisoners visited; situations found for applicants, etc.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 11.

Conversion of Cornelius.—Acts x. 30-44.

Golden Text.—Verse 43.

THE Church's commission (Acts i. 8) required that the Gospel should be preached to "the uttermost part of the earth." Recall the circumstances which led to Philip's ministry in Samaria. This lesson tells of a greater advance. "The middle wall of partition," which had separated Gentiles from Jews, was now to be broken down. The strong prejudice of the Jews presented such a formidable difficulty in the way of this extension that miraculous agencies needed to be employed. Tell the story of the whole chapter by presenting three different scenes.

I. The first is at Cæsarea, the Roman capital of Judea. It was built by Herod the Great, and was named after Cæsar Augustus. It was at that time a large and flourishing city. Cornelius was an officer, having under his command a hundred Italian soldiers (1). Note what is said as to his character as a religious man, who worshipped God, adopting the Jewish hours of prayer (3, 30), and whose piety found practical expression in almsgiving (3). To maintain such a character in his position was no easy matter. Yet, let one of the scholars read xi. 14. So that even a man like Cornelius needs the salvation of Jesus. Apply the lesson, the greatest prayerfulness, combined with most abundant almsgiving, cannot purchase salvation. Tell of the visit of the angel, and the explicit directions he gave, and the prompt obedience of Cornelius (3-8).

II. Scene two is in Joppa, where we left Peter in our last lesson lodging with Simon, a tanner. As the trade of a tanner was held to be abominable by the Jews, it is remarkable that Peter should have lodged with him. The time was noon (9), just before the messengers from Cornelius arrived. The vision (10-18) was very significant. The four corners of the sheet represented the four quarters of the earth. The various creatures contained in the sheet—many of them unclean to the Jews—represented the Church, which would include men of all nations. "What God hath cleansed call not thou common" (15) was the call to Peter to give up his Jewish prejudice against Gentiles and to be prepared to see them entering the Kingdom of God. The repetition of the vision three times gave emphasis to it. Peter, yet puzzled and perplexed, found the explanation of the vision in the visitors who appeared immediately inquiring for him.

III. The third scene is that to which the verses of our lesson introduce us. Peter, accompanied by six brethren (23, xi. 12), is in the house of Cornelius in Cæsarea. The congregation included many others besides the household of Cornelius (27). Note especially what is said of them (33). If the same could be said of every class, and of every congregation, how much easier preaching and teaching would become! To Peter the event was a momentous one; as important as that of the Day of the Pentecost. Knowing the strong prejudices of his people, it required courage and resolution to take a step that he knew would so bitterly offend some. In the sermon the opening sentences (34, 35) express his own surrender to the truth which for the first time was presented to him. Practical application may be made of the truth that God's gifts are not for a special class, but for all. None are excluded but they who exclude themselves. The blessings announced in the Gospel are specially two. (Find them in verses 36 and 43.) The foundation facts upon which these blessings are offered are the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus (37-41). The condition upon which these blessings are to be received is faith (43); and the prospect of the solemn Judgment Day (42) enforces the message. Teachers and preachers could not have a better model.

But Peter never finished his sermon (see xi. 15). It would seem as though the Holy Spirit were eager to get into Gentile hearts, and to bring into the Church these first fruits from the Gentiles, and could not wait till the conclusion of the service. He "fell on all that heard the word" (44). Perhaps the miraculous gifts of the Spirit appeared, for Peter afterwards said "the Spirit descended as on us at the beginning" (xi. 15).

Yet note, that though filled with the Spirit they did not ignore the ordinance of baptism. They might have said, "We have got the baptism of the Spirit, what need have we of the outward ordinance?" Peter reasoned in just the other way (47). The Spirit always leads in the path of obedience.

Among the lessons this narrative suggests are these:—(1) The most devoutly religious man needs to be saved by Jesus. (2) It is always best, both for inquirers and for servants of God, to follow implicitly the light given. (3) The door is now opened for all—have we entered in?

The Church of Russia.

By Mr. BUDGETT MEAKIN.

(Concluded.)

RUSSIAN churches are all more or less alike in principle, if not in detail, so the description of one will serve as a type. It is a provincial cathedral, perched on a lofty hillside, with a glorious view and imposing appearance, greeted from afar by wayfarers with bow and cross, for every church is so saluted as soon as seen. A gilt-topped cluster of domelets and cupolas, surmounted by crosses, lends it lightness and grace, though its walls are white, with but little adornment. Inside these are supported by four massive pillars some ten feet square, and the solid walls are pierced by long, high windows of unstained glass. The floor, made of cast-iron plates, is furnished neither with pews nor chairs, but the lofty ceilings and vaults are rich with portraits of Christ, of Mary, and of various saints, gigantic in proportions, gazing down on one with open eyes; while the walls are rich, if rude, in their display of scenes from unknown worlds or Bible history.

But the principal feature is the eikon (sacred picture) screen, separating the chancel from the body of the church. This appears to be of richly-gilt castings, relieved by blue and white, divided into panels filled with "portraits" of saints in oils and metal, tier on tier, some busts, some full-length. On closer inspection the screen is seen to be composed of wood and plaster ormolu, gorgeous and new, though that does not detract from its impressive appearance; nor does a similar discovery detract from the effect of the gilt and silver shrines and candlesticks and candelabra which abound. But a very American-looking roll-top desk of ample magnitude, with a strong box for stool, does certainly recall the office or the shop, which latter, indeed, it is, for here are sold the candles, large and small, which the faithful will place on one of the neighbouring stands, to be snuffed out by an attendant before too much has burned, to make room for others.

Most of the older churches are either overdone with ornament or are glaringly gay, though from afar the infinite variety of cupolas in pink and white and green and gold and spangled blue lend picturesqueness to the plainest. But art is advancing even in ecclesiastical Russia, and the modern masterpieces of St. Saviour's at Moscow, and St. Vladimir's at Kieff, are superb in their interior decoration, softly-blended frescoes and old gold with marbles and granites in delicate tones. And when they are filled with vocal music by itself, in volume unknown out of Russia, but entirely male, the effect is transcendental. In the centre of the eikon screen are the "royal doors," through which no layman is admitted but the Emperor, and he on the day of his coronation alone, when he administers the sacrament to himself. On either side are less sacred doors, by which one may pass to see the altar-table and the reliquaries, though in the centre no woman may tread.

The people present during service look upon the rites performed here, full though they be of symbolical meaning, as no more than charms to preserve them from evil, the slightest variation in which would render them useless. In this belief have most of the Russian martyrs suffered torture and death because of a change in spelling or making the sign of the cross, or of the style of an eikon, while the one grave question of spirit has been lost sight of. A man may hold what belief he likes, and follow what line of conduct suits him, so long as he pays his tithes and does not openly attack existing institutions. The Molokáni and the Stundists would not be interfered with if content to support the illiterate clergy and attend their ministrations. In the matter of free-will contributions the Russians are probably unsurpassed, for not only are the almsboxes, which abound at every turn in streets as well as in the churches, liberally patronised, but on Sundays the people are accustomed to several collections at once, each plate being for a different charitable or religious object. Truly, a model for us! And in their philanthropic institutions the Russians are by no means backward.

Besides the married parish priests, whom they all despise—the "grey" clergy—there are the monks—the "black" clergy—celibates all, who have passed through the monasteries and inhabit them, from whose ranks bishops are appointed; far more learned and far more lazy, on the whole, the men who pick the ecclesiastical plums. With them, too, rank the nuns, who manage their convents on business lines, make eikons and candles and sacramental bread, and carry on farming. Of course, besides this they teach and nurse and train orphans; so do the monks, who have played by no means an unimportant part in Russian history, and who have secured the choicest sites for their retreats. There are entertained the numerous pilgrims on their way to spots of sanctity, for one of the features of Russian religious life is itinerant mendicancy. Palestine is flooded with Russian palmers in increasing numbers. Fasts, too, long and severe, hold a prominent place; for the Russian, whatever else he may be, is religious, and earnest at that.

In reply to an inquiry as to the hope there was of the regeneration of the Russian Church, one of those best able to judge, long resident in Russia, described it as a milder form of what we see in Romanism, less aggressive, less developed, always dependent on the State; the State so constituted as to depend upon it; the two institutions one and so far indivisible. The Roman Church as ecclesiastical, he considered, therefore, to be capable of development, but the Russian Church as political, to be incapable. But, thank God, there is a germ of the leaven of truth at work.

A Mission at Woolwich.

A fortnight's mission will be held by Major Whittle and Mr. Stebbins at Woolwich, commencing April 18. The announcement has awakened the keenest interest in the district. The former visits of Major Whittle are remembered with feelings of deep gratitude, and we are daily receiving proofs that Christians of all denominations are anticipating much blessing from his visit this year. Special prayer meetings are being held, and the Lord's remembrancers are pleading in private for showers of blessing. The evangelistic meetings are to be held in the Woolwich Tabernacle, and the afternoon Bible readings in the Hall connected with St. James's Church, Plumstead.

The following friends have promised hearty co-operation: Revs. S. Henning, J. Quarterman, and H. C. Wisdom (Church of England), J. M. Fergusson and J. Moir (Presbyterian), J. Cole, F. J. Exley, and J. Jones (Baptist), C. R. Andrews and M. Simmonds (Primitive Methodist), J. Gledhill (Free Church Connexion), Mrs. Anderson, of East Plumstead Mission, Mr. W. J. Ruffell, of Charlton Mission, Colonel Watson, Colonel Foster, Colonel Travers, Colonel Richardson, Captain Orde Brown, Mr. T. R. Richardson, and many others. The secretaries are Lieut. McGill and Mr. W. Kemp.

Your readers will like to know that one who received blessing during Major Whittle's first mission at Woolwich has erected a mission hall in a very needy district, paying the whole cost himself. The Major was also greatly blessed to the soldiers. Will all interested in the thousands employed in our great Arsenal and in the Army pray that we may enjoy a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord? J. Wilson.

Woolwich Tabernacle.

Dublin Deaf and Dumb Association.—The missionary, Mr. Maurice F. G. Hewson, has worked among his fellow deaf mutes in Dublin for the past thirty years, providing services on Sundays in their own language, obtaining employment for deaf mutes, visiting the sick in their homes, etc. The Society also grants pecuniary relief in deserving cases, but has no endowment. Help will be thankfully accepted by Miss Hewson, 2, Leeson-park, Dublin.

Welcome Mission, Portsmouth.—Workers and others have been spending two days in waiting upon God. The subject especially considered was "the prayer life." Four Bible readings were given by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, and many were led to dedicate themselves to become intercessors for the salvation of others. Mr. Hogben spoke upon the many answers to prayer constantly received by him as secretary of the "One-by-One Band." It is intended as an outcome of these meetings to form a prayer union for Portsmouth.

Rabbi Lichtenstein's Work.

By Mrs. BARON.

THOSE who love Rabbi Lichtenstein for the truth's sake, and those who, knowing something of him personally, love him for his own sake also, will learn with regret that he has been suffering much the last few months. An old trouble, combined with great exhaustion and weakness, brought him very low; and he was at one time so ill as to receive a visit from the members of the Jewish Burial Society (Chevra Kadisha) whose duty it is to repeat prayers around the dying, and to attend to all rites after death, including the interment. These visitors came, thinking the opportunity a favourable one, now he was so ill, to ply him with all persuasion, urgency, and also threats, in order to induce him to recall the many testimonies he had given for Christ. If this were not done, they assured him, he would have a dishonoured burial.

The Rabbi's letter describing this visit, involuntarily recalled to mind a similar scene in past history, when Wickliffe lay on what appeared to be his death-bed, and was beset by the friars with like urgency and threats. Whether or not the Rabbi has ever read of this, I cannot say, but his reply was the same: "I shall not die, but live, and proclaim the wondrous works of God." His persecutors were again foiled. The fear of death is a very real torment to a Jew, and the sincerity of the Rabbi's faith would be in nothing so apparent, as in his adhering to it, when the angel of death might be felt to be near at hand. So, when the Chevra Kadisha retired discomfited, they must have carried with them a conviction that the faith which sustained the old man in view of the end was one which had plucked the sting from death.

Although often suffering much, Pastor Gordon, of Buda Pesth, wrote of the Rabbi at this time, that he always found him unweariedly at work with his pen. He felt that his life might not be spared much longer, and spoke with no hesitation of his being taken away, but so much the more earnest was he to leave as much testimony to the Lord Jesus, as it should be in his power to write. An interesting outcome of the Rabbi's work is reported by Pastor Gordon. Among the Jews of Buda Pesth a fresh sect has lately appeared, which has appealed to the Government for recognition. This sect rejects the Traditions, and regards the Old Testament only as of authority. The Jewish community does all in its power to destroy this new movement.

Later letters from Rabbi Lichtenstein speak of a gradual improvement in his health, but of his being perfectly inundated with letters from all parts, some full of curses, some full of rejoicing and thanksgiving. He expressed himself as being full of wonder how it came to pass that the ever-constant stream of correspondence had suddenly overleaped its banks, and become a mighty torrent, not to be coped with. The explanation came later to our knowledge. Pastor Frank, of Hamburg, without his knowledge, had recast, in a somewhat briefer form, and with a slight change of title, the Rabbi's pamphlet, "Eine Bitte." He has also sent over 2000 of this abridged pamphlet to Rabbis in the German and Austrian Empires, giving only Rabbi Lichtenstein's home address. Thus the dear old man has his time more than full, and his weak hands have more work than they have strength to do, but he is glad in the Lord that it is so.

Friends of Israel desirous to have fellowship with Rabbi Lichtenstein and his work can communicate with the hon. secretary of the London Council, David Baron, 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

The Hastings B.W.T.A. report that last year's conference gave a fresh impetus to the work and added nearly 150 new members. About £300 has been raised to build a cottage in the Inebriate Farm Colony.

The Temperance Central Evidence Board has arranged to issue a concise summary and analysis of the evidence given before the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws. The first volume, treating of the evidence given to the end of 1896, deals chiefly with the various forms of licences, and gives particulars which should be of considerable value to those desirous of understanding the present complicated licensing laws. The work will be published for the Board, in the course of a few days, by the Church of England Temperance Society.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. Thomas Waugh has been holding a ten days' mission at Lancaster-road Chapel, Bayswater, W. Large audiences have been attracted, and great power has been manifested. The men's Sunday afternoon meeting has created much interest. Large numbers profess to have found Christ, and the whole church has been revived.

The Los Angeles Herald of March 9, reports Mr. Sankey's stay in the town of Redlands, Cal., and a meeting he held at the Y.M.C.A. There was an overflowing audience, to whom the evangelist discoursed on his Gospel songs, several of which he sang. In the same town a revival is recorded in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Henry Varley has had a mission in Los Angeles, Cal. He has preached a full rounded Gospel, bringing forth things both new and old from the Word. His vigorous denunciation of worldliness in the Churches and of sin in the world has aroused many a sleeping conscience. His words of counsel to ministers have helped many to become better servants of the Master. Mrs. Varley has been doing a good work among us, though in a very quiet way. Mr. Varley goes from us to Santa Barbara, Oakland, Salt Lake City, Minneapolis, and other places farther east. D. Read, Pastor.
First Baptist Church.

A ten days' mission has been held (commencing, March 14) in the Primitive Mission Hall, Higher Hillgate, Stockport, by Mr. T. H. Ibbott and workers of the Manchester Bible Carriage Mission. The meetings have been a great success. The hall workers have been blessed, and besides a number of children, a class of eight or ten young men, who have been the source of great anxiety to their teacher, sought and it is hoped found the Saviour.
F. H.

Mr. Henry Smith has completed a fourteen days' mission in Manchester. The Upper Moss-lane Mission Hall was crowded to its utmost limits night after night. Not only have many, both young and old, professed to accept Christ, but believers of all denominations who came in crowds testify to having been quickened.

Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fortnight's mission at Souldern, Oxon. The services were held in the Wesleyan Chapel, which was well filled each night. The Gospel message was faithfully and earnestly delivered, and many have been impressed.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been twice this winter in Cincinnati. Probably nearly a thousand in the seven different localities where he had laboured during the short time he has been here have professed conversion. I was present at his meetings here twenty-six years ago, when it was stated that upwards of 5000 joined the various churches.
D. Muller.

Mr. Moody has completed a mission in Cincinnati, extending over several weeks. Immense crowds have attended his ministry. He addressed the local ministers as to the continuance of the special effort. Meetings were held in factories at noon. The evangelist arranged to conduct a four days' mission in Chicago at the close of the Cincinnati work.

Dr. Munhall has been holding very successful evangelistic meetings on the Pacific Coast. As a result there are in Oakland, Cal., said to be six hundred professed conversions, and his meetings in Alameda are also of the most promising character.

Mr. Josiah Nix has brought to a happy termination a most successful week of mission work at Gosport. The mission was of a united character, and all denominations joined heartily in the services. On the whole some 450 persons profess to have given themselves to Jesus Christ, and have now been entered upon the membership rolls of the various churches.

Mr. Charles Inglis, since his arrival home from America, has been evangelising in King's Lynn. The various ministers and their people have heartily united in prayer and effort; and the hall has been crowded night after night. The afternoon Bible readings have also been largely attended. There is every evidence that the mission has been blessed to many. Mr. Inglis gave on Monday, at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, an interesting account of his evangelistic tour in Canada and the States.

Mr. W. R. Lane closed on Sunday a mission in Halstead, Essex. Very careful preparation and much prayer had been made, in view of the special meetings; hence the wave of blessing which has been granted is regarded as a distinct answer to prayer. Large gatherings were held on the first Sunday, and during the following week the audiences grew night by night. The meeting for men only, last Sunday afternoon, was attended by 800, and proved intensely solemn. In the evening the Congregational Chapel was packed, while a neighbouring chapel was also crowded by the overflow. A wonderful spirit of inquiry has been granted. The schoolroom, used for the after meetings, has been filled by earnest inquirers, and large numbers have given in their names as having received blessing.

Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, commenced a seven days' mission in the Co-operative Hall, Lancaster, on Monday week. The meetings were of a very helpful character, and many who did not openly make a confession must have received blessing. Mr. Greenwood spoke at Lord Ashton's works and at one or two other mills during his visit, with good results.

From Sunday, March 14, to Sunday, March 28, the Hucknall Torkard Free Church Council conducted a united mission in the town. Eleven Free Churches took part. The evangelists were Messrs. J. G. Stanger, F. Holmes, H. Bray, and A. Aspland, all of the London Evangelisation Society. They preached the Gospel with great simplicity and power, and God has abundantly blessed their labours. Many have professed conversion, backsliders have been reclaimed, and Christians have been edified and strengthened in the faith.

Work in Spain.

The director of the Matamoros Gospel Hall in Malaga, Dr. Enrique Blanco, writes: "A large number attended at the monthly prayer-meeting." It is a good sign in Gospel work when the prayer-meeting is well attended. From Alicante Dr. Francesco Albrecias, director of the Gospel work in that town, writes on March 18: "I have seventeen children in my school. Few Gospel missions in Spain have started under more favourable conditions. Our Bible-classes are being listened to with much attention." Albrecias is one of the best and most earnest workers in Spain. He sends many interesting details.

From Caldas de Montbuy, Provincia de Barcelona, Miss Lawrence also writes a letter containing much encouraging news as to the progress of the work. These three halls require £13 monthly to carry them on. W. Greene.
3, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W.

Arise.

Arise, my soul, there's gladness for thee yet;
In place of sin and sorrow's baleful skies,
See righteousness and peace before thee set—
Arise, my soul! thy God has said, Arise!

When earth lay shrouded white in winter's snow,
Dark draped with cloud, and life congealed and numb,
While tempests howled the funeral dirge of woe—
To such a scene, we cried, Can summer ever come?

But now—near Eastertide—as to a tomb,
Come breathings of the south with smiles between;
Blithe birds awake and sing, bright blossoms bloom,
And Earth walks forth in her new robe of green.

Beside the mounds where we have lain our dead,
Or by the grave of years bestowed in vain;
Amid soul-desolations and blank dread,
Do we exclaim, No joy can come again?

Look up, sad heart, thy God still reigns in heaven;
And as He turns earth's winter into spring,
As easily He says, Your sins be all forgiven,
And heals the broken heart and makes it sing.

He who with Spring makes glad the loneliest place,
Who raised his Son from Calvary to the skies,
Is calling me by that life-giving grace
Which changes earth to heaven. My soul, arise!
Donegal. J. K.

Mr. Fegan's Homes.

The Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, was, on Wednesday week, transformed into a farewell meeting in connection with the departure of seventy boys from Mr. Fegan's Homes for Canada. The company of juvenile emigrants included numbers of little fellows, and ten or twenty big strong lads, who will find plenty of work awaiting them on the other side.

Mr. S. Smith, M.P., who presided, opened with an address on the emigration of children from this overcrowded land to Canada, where there is room and welcome for all who are willing to work. He himself had given considerable attention to this subject of emigration, and had inquired into certain complaints raised. The conclusion he had come to was that so long as the children and elder lads sent out are carefully selected as suitable for the conditions of life in Canada, and properly trained in obedience and industry, they are sure to be heartily welcomed by the Canadian farmers.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan followed with a few details of the circumstances under which some of the boys had been brought to his Homes, of the training they had received, and of the future before them. The little ones would be adopted by farmers. Usually these find happy homes and real kindness. They are, however, carefully looked after by experienced visitors, who watch over the boys' welfare. The elder boys will probably, on arrival at Toronto, be at once hired by farmers, and, provided they are willing to work, will do well. The cost of receiving, training, clothing, and emigrating a boy is from £10 to £12; surely a small sum well spent. He had hoped to send out a hundred in this party, but funds only sufficed for seventy, and his rule was to use what God sends, and never to go into debt.

Rev. W. Fuller Gooch followed with earnest and faithful words addressed to the youthful emigrants; who were afterwards commended to God in prayer.

Dublin Medical Mission.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held on March 23. There was a large attendance. Sir Philip C. Smyly, M.D., chairman, said the work of the Mission is limited for want of means; there is an ample supply of workers. The care of the poor is an important feature. Mr. Wm. R. Wigham, hon sec., read the fifth annual report, which stated that the attendance at the dispensaries has greatly increased, as also at the Evangelistic services preceding them. These last half-an-hour, and the door is kept open for another half hour, thus making it optional to attend the meeting.

Dr. Herbert Lankester, of the C.M.S., said Medical Mission workers get an opportunity of going into houses, which would otherwise be closed absolutely to the Gospel. There is no doubt that Medical Missionary work is increasing. Missionaries in Ireland, no doubt, have special difficulties, but so there are in the foreign field. The aim of the Medical Missions is not only to heal the sick, but to make the saving knowledge of Christ known.

Dr. J. J. Long (Mission Doctor), said the people who come to the mission are of the poorest class, living in courts and alleys in tenement houses; in some cases from six to ten families live in the same house. They are mostly of the labouring class, and the majority are Roman Catholics. During January and February there were registered at the mission over 3,500 patients, exclusive of visits paid at the homes. A great deal more could be done if the funds were larger.

Mrs. Lankester also gave an excellent address.

The hon. secretaries of the Mission are Mr. W. R. Wigham, Albany House, Monkstown, co. Dublin, and Mrs. E. J. Figgis, jun., 6, Simmonscourt-villas, Donnybrook, Dublin.

P.O. Orphan Homes.—At the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Hall, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday evening last, the annual meeting of the Post Office Orphan Homes Institution, formed with the object of educating and maintaining the orphan children of Post Office employées of the minor establishments, was held under the presidency of Mr. J. C. Lamb. The annual report showed that during the past year eighteen children entered the homes, nineteen left for situations, and the total number now under the care of the institution is 137. A legacy of £1000 was left to the institution by the late Mrs. Rennie of Anerley.

Good Deeds Before Conversion.

WE have received several answers to the question propounded by "Inquirer," "If in our flesh dwelleth no good thing, from whence come those good desires, noble deeds, and self-denying actions, so often to be found before regeneration or conversion?"

On the one hand it is pointed out that when the terms are understood the difficulty practically vanishes. Though a man may have "no good thing" in him as regards obedience to God's holy law, he is not thereby rendered incapable of natural affection and the exercise of the generous impulses which God has implanted in him. Indeed, the Apostle Paul writes of Gentiles, to whom no law like that of Moses had been given, "doing by nature the things of the law, showing the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience being witness therewith, and their reasonings accusing or excusing them" (Rom. ii. 14, 15).

One correspondent ("H. Y.," Eastbourne) calls attention to the thirteenth Article of the Church of England: "Works done before the grace of Christ and the inspiration of his Spirit are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they spring not of faith in Jesus Christ, neither do they make men meet to receive grace, or (as the school authors say) deserve grace of congruity; yea, rather, for that they are not done as God hath willed and commanded them to be done, we doubt not they have the nature of sin."

Other correspondents suggest that good deeds arise from the promptings of the Holy Spirit working in those who have not as yet come to submission to Christ.

"C.S." (Cromer) writes:—"The Scriptures seem to me to speak of only two natures in man, i.e., the old and the new. All mankind inherit the old from Adam, whereas those who are born again receive the new from the second Adam. Therefore to speak of a 'better nature' before regeneration, is apparently without warrant from Revelation. In 1 Cor. xiii. 3, the Lord speaks of one's 'giving all one's goods to feed the poor,' and 'one's body to be burned,' as nothing worth, unless resulting from the new birth; for in 1 John iv. 7, we read, 'every one that loveth is born of God.' Again in Matt. vii. 22, the Master characterises 'prophesying,' 'casting out devils,' and 'wonderful works,' as iniquity, when done by those whom He disowns."

Another correspondent ("A. C. S.," Camden-road, N.) calling attention to the story of Cain and Abel, says:—"Both were moved to offer sacrifice to God. Cain's good works were centred in self, but Abel, by offering a lamb, looked off to Christ, and thus acknowledged his need of the atonement. The works of Christ imputed to us and wrought in us by the Holy Spirit is the only good thing."

In some notes on Rom. vii. and viii. "T. F. H." (West Kirby) says:—"In Rom. vii. the Apostle is answering his question, Is the law sin? by showing that, so far from being sin, it brought sin out, and gave strength to it, so that 'he,' the man under law died (v. 9), for sin worked death by that which was good (v. 13). But the exercises of a soul under law showed that by reason of the power of sin nothing good (i.e., the law) could be performed; there was the desire to do good, but no power; for in himself—i.e., in his flesh—there dwelleth no good. The result of it all is, that no satisfaction is found till the flesh is entirely given up and the soul looks to God for deliverance out of the body of death, through Jesus Christ, and then he realises that while with the mind he himself could serve the law of God, yet the permanent and unalterable tendency of the flesh was to serve the law of sin. The next chapter gives the full deliverance, as being 'in Christ,' God doing what the law was too weak to do, and the righteousness of the law fulfilled in the believer walking after the Spirit. Thus in 'me' is no good; my best (as men may view it) is still, and must ever be, short of God's law, holy as it is, and just and good."

Finally, "J. E." (Westbourne Park, W.) points out that the fall did not reduce man to less than a man; his capacity to love his fellow remained, and he could feel and exercise it to the point of self-denial.

"While man could do nothing to restore himself or to improve his fallen state, God at once commenced that gracious work, and every revelation which He has given has tended to re-elevate humanity, even where the Holy Spirit has not regenerated. The Word of God treats of man primarily in his relation to God. In that relation, in him, unregenerate, in the flesh, there is no good. The world regards man solely in his relation to man, and calls things 'good' and 'noble' without regard to God. The works of the most beneficent man who is content to live without God in the world, or to have a God of his own conjecture, or to be at enmity with the true and only God, are probably otherwise seen and designated by the holy angels."

Protestants in Madagascar.

THE Daily News Paris correspondent writes:—"It is unfortunately too true that religious intolerance exists in Madagascar under French rule, and in fact as part of French rule as applied by General Gallieni's officers. I happen to know a few facts about this new revocation of the Edict of Nantes from French officers—not Protestants—who were revolted at what they saw. All this takes place in the provinces, and we may trust without the countenance of General Gallieni, though certainly not without his knowledge. In some cases French sentries have been placed at the door of Protestant churches in order to prevent natives from attending public worship. The Jesuits have inaugurated a system of proselytising in Madagascar which shows contempt for the rights of conscience as utter as in the good old times of rack and thumbscrew. The Jesuits issue to natives cards of Catholic membership which, as a matter of fact, give the holders privileges over their Protestant countrymen. The Jesuit card is recognised by the local military authorities as a passport.

"I hope Pastor Lauga will some day publish the discreditable story of the attempt to 'convert' in extremis Rainiluiarimpandry and the Prime Minister just as they were going to be executed, an attempt which was actually successful in the case of the Prime Minister. The story of these bogus conversions, with which I am well acquainted, is interesting as showing the boundless power of the Jesuits in Madagascar. A few months ago a French officer told me, 'The Queen is Protestant, the Jesuits are therefore against her. If she comes to grief it will not be through any fault of hers, because she is behaving most loyally; but it will be through Jesuit influence.' The dealings of Jesuits at present with the Malagasy are a matter I would leave to the French authorities at home to investigate. I cannot tell the whole story, but will merely remark that zeal for saving souls leads these worthy missionaries into habitual dishonesty. I only wish the French Government may order an inquiry into the subject of religious equality under the French flag in Madagascar."

In the correspondence of The Times it is stated with reference to the appropriation of mission buildings: "The Society of Friends' Foreign Mission Association, which has had to give up its hospital at Soavinandriana, will receive as permanent property all the numerous houses and lands situated both in Imerina and in the provinces of which it has hitherto enjoyed only temporary possession. The London Missionary Society in turn cedes the spacious college of Faravohitra for 150,000f., which is to be occupied by the Courts. The L.M.S. has also given up its normal school for an indemnity of 26,000f. and a large girls' school at Andohalo. The latter, however, will not be vacated for a year, and the indemnity will then be fixed. In return the London Missionary Society, like the Friends' Association, receives the perpetual ownership of all the other land and building it occupies in Imerina."

Invalid and Sick.—The Sick Children's and Invalids' Dinner Tables in Paddington report that during the year 3160 invalids had been fed, an advance of 582 over last year; 1397 being children and 1763 adults. All these were weak and suffering, and unable to provide for themselves the nourishing food needful to enable them to perform their daily work. The children's dinners are on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The City Missionaries of the district carve for the adults on Wednesdays and Fridays, afterwards giving them a short Gospel message. All who can are expected to pay one halfpenny. Over 1770 free tickets have been given for distribution to district visitors and others who, in their ministry amongst the poor, know where such help is most needed. The superintendent is Miss Haben, 77, Church-street, N.W.

Letters to the Editor.

THE QUEEN'S DIAMOND JUBILEE.

DEAR SIR,—When the Jubilee of our beloved Queen was celebrated ten years ago it was a time of rejoicing in which the poor children of the nation were well remembered. Sunday-schools, Board schools, and workhouse schools were fêted, and young hearts made glad, while also taught to be loyal. But one class was apparently overlooked. I refer to children in orphan homes. Through all the brilliant summer of 1887 those who were working in institutions conducted on quiet lines felt the strain of narrow means, which always comes to such work at times of large public expenditure or of great efforts for noble objects. The three hundred orphans under my care had no share in the general festivities beyond a small piece of cake each which was all that I could afford to give them from the almost exhausted exchequer of the Home, and I found upon inquiry that many orphan homes had been similarly forgotten. I then resolved that if I lived to see another time of public rejoicing I would call attention to the fact—not as a begging appeal for my own work, which would be inconsistent with the principles on which it is conducted, but in the hope that children in orphanages, whose lives are necessarily somewhat monotonous, might not again be overlooked.

Our gracious Queen has such tender loving sympathy for the widow and fatherless that she would rejoice to know her little orphan subjects were remembered, and those who care for them were enabled to give the little ones such a bright Jubilee holiday that they would look back on it all their lives with pleasure and thankfulness. Most benevolent persons have some favourite home or orphanage in which they take especial interest, and if they will send to the managers contributions to be spent for the children's share in the national rejoicing, there will be many centres of loyal love and happiness and many young hearts made glad. I shall be only too delighted if I am enabled to give my three hundred and twenty dear orphan children such a holiday treat as they have never had before. But it is not for them alone; it is for the little ones in the various orphan homes all over the kingdom that I ask a share in the coming jubilation, on the principle of sending portions to those for whom nothing is prepared.—Yours faithfully, CHARLOTTE SHARMAN.

Orphans' Home, West-square, London, S.E.

OUR ARMY IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—I beg strongly to support your correspondent, F.R.C.P., in protesting against the nomination by the Royal College of Physicians of a committee to report on the advisability of petitioning Parliament in favour of the re-enactment of the C.D. Acts.

I feel certain that there are thousands of our fellow-practitioners who would sign a petition to Parliament against such re-enactment. Would not the Vigilance Committee undertake to obtain as many medical signatures as possible to such a petition?—Yours faithfully, M.D., L.R.C.P.

Paris, March 23.

DEAR SIR,—Desire for the welfare of soldiers is leading some persons now to advocate the readoption of a plan to render vice easy. We may not, however, forget that easy vice is not harmless vice. The body perhaps may be kept free from a terrible disease, but the moral fibre and the spirit must suffer even more seriously. Surely what a Christian nation should try to do is to render virtue easy and not vice.

Is not enforced celibacy the great stumbling-block? If this were put out of the way, nature would be on our side, and the God of nature too. Is it impossible to make provision for the proper maintenance together of husbands and wives and children, so that every detachment of the army may become a wholesome colony and a centre of right influence? Even though fewer soldiers could be maintained, yet assuredly their quality would be superior, for we might then confidently expect them to be sound in body, pure in mind, and right in spirit.—Yours faithfully,

H. OLIVER ALLBROOK.

58, Bodney-road, London, N.E.

The late Dr. Ward Richardson regarded tobacco as twin evil with strong drink. In his recently published Memoir he says: "I have not a line to write in favour of tobacco, and for a long series of years—twenty-four at least—I have scrupulously avoided smoking because of its bad effects on health and vitality. Smoking is not simply a dirty habit, but one that injures the body. It is not in character with the work of the animal machine. It stupefies the mental organs; deranges the blood; impairs the circulation; weakens the digestion, and stunts the growth. It also produces local mischief, and is most distinctly provocative of some fatal forms of disease. No child ought ever to be inducted into its use, and in a sanitary world conducted on sound principles indulgence in tobacco would be unknown."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The six weeks' series of special meetings promoted by the N.E. Metropolitan District has now been brought to a conclusion. The lowest attendance at any of the mass meetings was about 800, and the highest, at the Shoreditch Town Hall, from 1800 to 2000 men. This occasion was remarkable from the fact that on that particular night, although the rain fell in torrents, the hall was filled, and several hundred men were turned away.

In the after meetings large numbers of men expressed an earnest desire to remain for special prayer. Many professed to be converted to a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Numerous total abstinence pledges were taken.

At each centre the opinion of the men assembled was unanimous in favour of extending the scope of this special effort in accordance with the original resolution of the District Union.

The subject of "Impurity" was dealt with by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Dr. Harry Guinness; "Gambling," by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Hon. and Rev. E. Lyttelton (Headmaster of Haileybury College), Rev. J. E. C. Welldon (Headmaster of Harrow School), and Rev. W. Hay Aitken: whilst "Intemperance" was dealt with by Canon Fleming, Colonel Barker, of the S.A. Social Wing, Rev. George Gladstone, of Glasgow, and Mr. W. S. Caine. Dr. Guinness also rendered valuable service by conducting most of the after-meetings.

The Gospel mission at Hackney was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. Although the attendance at these meetings was comparatively small, the cases of decision for Christ were most encouraging.

Although the outlay for hire of buildings, printing, advertising, etc., was considerable it has been fully met. As the result of this experiment evidence has been given that every district of the metropolis and each of the large provincial towns may be sytematically worked upon the same lines. The practicability of the scheme and the enormous possibilities for good results have been fully demonstrated. Future arrangements will be discussed by a special committee of the national council on Friday next.

BRIEF NOTES.

Association work has been commenced in Galicia, where there are now three centres.

New premises, in a favourable situation, have been opened by the Association at Milan.

The seventh annual conversazione was held at the Sheffield Y.M.C.A. on Thursday evening.

The result of a membership campaign at Cardiff has been an addition of 180 to the Association.

The annual report of the Taunton Association shows a total membership of 401, compared with 316 in the previous year.

A new Association, the third in Portugal, has been founded at Lordello do Ouro, a suburb of Oporto. The president is Mr. Thomas de Miranda.

A successful conversazione and book reception has just been held at the Cork Association under the chairmanship of Mr. Edwin Hall, D.L.

The Portsmouth Association has entered into the occupation of new premises in a good thoroughfare, opposite the Victoria Barracks. The formal opening took place on the 24th inst., Colonel Haines, president, being in the chair.

On Sunday evening last the younger members of the Trowbridge Association were invited to a special meeting for a talk by Mr. P. E. Coulson on "Signals." Forty-five attended, and the meeting gave great cause for encouragement.

The report of the Brandon Association, Manitoba, shows good work, with 14,069 attendances. The spiritual operations are well sustained and productive of fruit. Many homeless young emigrants find in the room a friendly welcome, good literature, and help in obtaining employment.

The anniversary of the Ilford Association was celebrated on Thursday evening by a public meeting in the Congregational hall and schoolroom, kindly lent for the occasion. Mr. J. H. Bush occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Rev. C. H. Vine and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

A Y.M.C.A. has been successfully inaugurated at Barnsley, under the presidency of Dr. Horne, J.P. The inaugural public meeting, held in the Arcade Hall, was an enthusiastic gathering. Addresses were given by the president, Mr. Foster E. Brady, Revs. A. Dawson and E. H. Reynolds, and Mr. F. C. Bennett.

The Western Alliance of Associations in Germany, numbering 400 centres and 25,000 members, celebrates next year the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation. It has purchased at Elberfeld a valuable site, and is erecting thereon a handsome Alliance building, in which, among other things, the journals and various publications of the Alliance will be printed.

A sub-district conference was held at Morpeth on Thursday last. At the afternoon meeting Mr. J. Harding presided, and reports were given by Mr. J. C. Moor and others. In the evening the president of the local association, Mr. W. S. Wilkinson, was in the chair. Addresses were given by Messrs. Councillor H. Crawford Smith, J. C. Moor, H. F. D. Joselyne Blyth, T. Wilson, and others.

An appeal is published from Mr. N. Cairis, a doctor, who is the president of the Y.M.C.A. at Athens. This Association has already been two years in existence. It has been connected hitherto with the Evangelical Church of the capital of Greece. It is desirous of working in future among all young men of the city; and to this end it is engaged in an earnest endeavour to acquire its own premises.

Under the lead of J. R. Mott, a Students' Y.M.C.A. of Japan has been organised. The central committee consists of ten Japanese and five foreign missionaries. The remarkable spiritual blessing which has attended Mr. Mott's student conferences in other Asiatic countries has characterised all his work in Japan. Mr. Pettee writes that not for years, if ever before, has Okayama seen such meetings.

The Vienna Association is making rapid progress. Its statutes have been approved by the authorities, and it possesses premises in the centre of the town. It has a secretary, Mr. de Ziegler, and publishes a monthly organ, which is very useful for recruiting purposes. The committee consists of members belonging to the different churches. In addition to the prayer meeting, the Association has regular Gospel meetings on Sundays, at which a good number of young men are always present.

Excellent results have followed a series of conferences held at Chefoo, Peking, Shanghai, and Foochow, in China. A very general revival in Bible study has begun. No less than seventy-six Chinese have offered to devote their lives to Christian work among their own people. Another result, in part, of these conferences is the organisation of the National College Y.M.C.A. of China, by which Christian students in all parts of China may be enabled to feel their united strength, and gain mutual help in the Christian life and broader views of the work that lies before them in gaining China for Christ. Twenty-two out of the twenty-seven College Associations were represented at the gatherings.

The Duke of Fife, on Monday night, at Exeter Hall, distributed the prizes of the educational classes and athletic clubs. It was no exaggeration to say, he remarked, that Exeter Hall, since it became the home of the Y.M.C.A., had had a most important, beneficial, and, he trusted, lasting influence upon the lives of thousands of young men who were scattered all over the globe. When the Queen came to the throne there were no such societies in existence, and young men had to grapple as best they could with the temptations of life. When he thought of the many young men the Association had saved from peril and had benefited morally, intellectually, and physically, he realised what a deep debt of gratitude the whole community owed to it. Sir George Williams, who presided, said that in 1831, Exeter Hall was opened to the public, and in 1881 the Y.M.C.A. entered into possession of the building, and had made it what it was.

Christian Endeavour.

A district union has been inaugurated in Coventry.

A vigorous C. E. conference has been held at Rochdale.

Christian Endeavour is making rapid strides in Castleford and Pontefract district.

The Endeavourers of Dacca in Bengal hold a beggars' service every Thursday. A handful of rice is given to every beggar, and then the Gospel is sung and preached.

Dr. J. R. Miller has recently been urging upon all who are active in the Christian Endeavour movement the importance of making Christian doctrine fundamental in the teaching of the society.

One old woman in a Bengalee society attended a Christian Endeavour meeting for three months without missing a meeting, though she had to walk a long distance, and to wade streams when the water reached to her thighs.

A successful gathering of the Oxford and District Union was held on Thursday. In addition to five-minute speeches on "Society Aggressive Work," and "The Topic and its Place in the Meeting," the organiser of the open-air work and the secretary spoke on the future work of the Union.

The fourth annual convention of the Leeds and District Union took place at the Burley Road Baptist Chapel on Saturday week. A Free Parliament was held in the afternoon, when papers on the "Christian Endeavour Constitution" and "The Pledge" were read by Rev. Henry Webb and Mr. Thomas Elsworth. In the evening a public meeting was held. The report showed there were 43 societies in the union with a membership of 2,350.

The Y.W.C.A.

The annual tea and meeting of the Dawlish branch was held on the 15th inst.

The great meeting in connection with the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, to be held in the Albert Hall, has been fixed for July 1.

Rev. E. E. Gill, deputation secretary to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, gave a lecture on the work of the Homes at the monthly social of the Southport Institute.

The annual social meeting of the Frenchie (Fife) branch was held on the 12th inst. Rev. Geo. Lowe occupied the chair. Addresses were given by Mrs. Gillespie and Miss M'Leod.

A proposal is on foot to start classes for women, in connection with the St. John Ambulance Association, provided a sufficient number come forward, to be held in the rooms of the Inverness Y.W.C.A.

A well-attended meeting was held on the 16th inst., in the Lecture Hall of the Brighton Y.M.C.A., to inaugurate the opening of a new Servants' Home and Registry Office, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. The Countess of Chichester presided.

At the annual meeting of the Dorking branch, whose headquarters are at Clarendon House, about 100 sat down to tea, and over 300 members and friends attended the meeting. Lady Cotton, president, and Miss Carter, secretary, gave addresses.

Under the auspices of the Penrith Y.M. and Y.W.C.A., a lecture entitled "A Month amongst the Kaffirs" was given by Mr. Gilkes, of Kendal, who commented upon the growing influence of missionary work amongst the Kaffirs, and stated that indolence and superstition were the two greatest evils that had to be fought with.

While mass meetings for men were being held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in last week, at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end Road, meetings for young women were held in the Y.W.C.A. room. The room was full each evening. Mr. H. Kidner presided at the three meetings, and addresses were given by Miss Dodd and Miss Hawes.

The Lockerbie Free Church Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s are displaying considerable activity, and on Sunday evening, the 14th inst., under their joint auspices a crowded public meeting was held in the Easton Hall, Lockerbie, Rev. J. D. Macgilp presiding. A Gospel address was given by Miss Todd, the travelling secretary of the National Union of the Scottish Y.W.C.A.

The Monthly Record for March states that the Central Institute members raised during 1896 £259 18s. 2d. for home missions, and £44 6s. 9d. for foreign missions, including £12 7s. for a Japanese Bible-woman, £10 15s. 9d. for the Loving Service League, and £10 for a Chinese Bible-woman. Of the amount raised for home missions, £140 9s. 11d. was for the headquarters' "coin collection."

The close of thirty-one years of the Boston Y.W.C.A. was observed at the Berkeley-street Home. The annual report dwelt chiefly upon the timely assistance given through the Travellers' Aid Society to young women newly arrived in the city. It showed that in the year past 1658 girls, 142 of whom were friendless, were thus directly aided, and that with this purpose in view 446 steamers had been met at the docks.

The Fifield Village Mission reports that, notwithstanding the removal of the founder and leader, the work is being vigorously carried on in a circle of villages around Maidenhead. The missionary, Mr. G. R. Shaw, reports many instances of blessing amongst children and adults. The secretary is Mr. W. Hammond, Fifield, near Maidenhead.

Flowers for Factory Girls.—There are in connection with the Factory Helpers' Union forty-nine evening homes and clubs opened for girls. Will your readers send flowers, tied into small bunches, to be distributed both there and in the factory workrooms? These nosegays have helped to open the door of many a factory, and of many a heart within the factory, and have been the means of drawing in fresh members to the evening home and club. Miss L. E. Tritton, 69, Cromwell-road, S.W., will gladly give all necessary information.

Rotterdam.—The eighteenth annual report of the Rotterdam Branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society shows the work to take several forms. The safety and comfort of sailors are promoted in different ways, not only by evangelistic meetings, but by temperance advocacy, visitation on board ship or in hospital, etc. Thousands of Gospel tracts, copies of Holy Scripture, books and periodicals, have been distributed to seamen and officers. The reading room has been open twelve hours daily to all seamen, and a goodly number through the year have availed themselves of the privilege of using it. Hundreds of letters have been written to wives and mothers. The missionary is Mr. John Jones, 128, Schiedamsche Dijk, Rotterdam.

Irish Notes.

A member of the Methodist Church at Kingstown, Dublin, has bequeathed £1000 to various funds of the church.

The Protestant Orphan Society of Antrim and Down is doing a good work. It has now upon its books 714 children, with seven apprentices.

The Island View Home of Rest, Dalkley, has been reopened for the admission of delicate girls. Constant testimony is being borne to its practical value.

Rev. Chas. Inwood, Belfast, intends to ask the approaching Conference to release him from ordinary circuit employment, in order that he may devote all his time to addressing meetings on the deepening of spiritual life.

By the death of Mrs. Pringle, of Inverness, several large charitable bequests under her husband's will now become payable, including about £2000 to the Presbyterian Orphan Society, Belfast; £500 to the the poor of the First Presbyterian Church, Larne; £500 to the poor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Larne; and £1000 to the Society for the Orphans of Presbyterian Ministers and Missionaries.

Scottish Notes.

The first emigrant party for the season in connection with Mr. Wm. Quarrier's homes were to leave Glasgow for Canada yesterday (Wednesday).

The Sailors' Mission in Aberdeen is meeting a great need in the town. The work is slowly but surely spreading, and all classes of seafaring men are being brought under its influence.

The Edinburgh Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission continues its useful work among the lapsed masses of the city. Last year nearly 45,000 persons attended the breakfasts and the Gospel services.

At the recent annual conference in Edinburgh of the Young Women's Guild of the Established Church, there was a warm discussion on the temperance question. A strong protest was made against having barmaids to serve in public-houses.

The U. P. Church has an active City Mission in Glasgow. A staff of fifty-eight paid agents are employed by the various congregations, and these are assisted by 1100 voluntary helpers in visitation and other work. Several of the speakers at a recent meeting of the mission dwelt on the hindrances from the drink curse.

New buildings have been opened in connection with the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society in Glasgow; the premises are near the exit from Duke-street Prison, and have cost over £3200. An admirable work is being done in meeting discharged prisoners, finding honest employment for them, and otherwise influencing them for good.

It is understood, says the Edinburgh Evening News, that the question of amalgamation between the Free and United Presbyterian Churches has been advanced in a marked way of late, and it is believed that the forthcoming General Assembly of the Free Church will give such a deliverance on the subject as will lead to the immediate beginning of the formal negotiations for union. No extreme opposition to going forward is anticipated, and, on the other hand, there seems a growing disposition to give early effect to what is believed to be the conviction of the great majority of the Church.

Reedham Orphanage.—The yearly festival in aid of the funds of the Reedham Orphanage, Purley, Surrey, was held last week in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hotel Métropole, under the presidency of Mr. Wm. Henry Brown. The orphanage was founded in 1844 upon undenominational principles, to which it has always adhered. It has fed and clothed and educated nearly 2000 children. The annual cost of the institution is about £8000. Of this £2300 is assured at present by regular subscription; but the board of management are obliged to rely upon the uncertain sources of legacies and donations for the large balance of £5,700, the institution having no endowment whatever. There are now more than 300 fatherless children in the Orphanage.

Young Christians' Missionary Union.—A meeting in connection with this Union was held at Shoreditch Tabernacle on Saturday, Rev. F. B. Meyer presiding. Mr. E. J. Patrick and Miss Whetherley, who are going forth in connection with the S.V.M.U., gave accounts of God's leading. Mr. Meyer said his earnest desire was that missionary circles might be started in all the churches in London, and a copy of the Y.C.M.U. pledge put in the hands of every young Christian. Dr. Harford Battersby spoke of the open doors waiting for Christ's servants in different lands. Rev. F. W. Baller, China Inland Mission, and Mr. Gabner, of the S.V.M.U., also spoke. All information about the Y.C.M.U. can be obtained of the hon. sec., M. E. J. Wigney, College-buildings, Temple-street, Newington, S.E.

Obituary.

MRS. W. COOMBS, AYLESBURY.

The wife of the Rev. W. Coombs, of Aylesbury, passed away on March 17, after severe suffering. The funeral took place at Princes Risboro', in the burial ground adjoining the Baptist chapel, whose pastorate her husband held for fourteen years, but resigned a little more than a twelvemonth ago in consequence of failing health. A large congregation of the Risboro' people gathered at the funeral, Mrs. Coombs having endeared herself much to them by her ministry of love. Tender sympathy is felt for Mr. Coombs in the deep sorrow of this bereavement. He removed to Aylesbury on leaving Princes Risboro', but still serves the churches of Bucks as secretary of the County Association. J. W.

MISS MAY E. BONAR.

On Wednesday, March 24, the grave closed over the remains of this devoted labourer for the Master. The youngest daughter of the late Rev. A. A. Bonar, D.D., of Glasgow, Miss Bonar was only thirty-two years of age when a short illness called her home. She lived well, and by her amiable and lovable life she made many friends. Her time was given to medical mission work among the poor, and also to lads in the Finnieston district. She kept a reading room open every evening in the mission-hall for the benefit of these young lads, and her influence over them was very great. When her body was carried out of the house there were hundreds of the district people lining the terrace, and at the grave her class of lads were present along with scores of mourning friends to pay a last tribute to one who was greatly loved.

MR. F. W. CROSSLEY.

We regret to announce the death, which occurred at the Star Hall, Ancoats, on Thursday afternoon, of Mr. Francis William Crossley. He was in his fifty-eighth year. Mr. Crossley was a member of a family which originally came from the North of Ireland. When a boy he was apprenticed to the great Armstrong engineering firm at Elswick, Newcastle-on-Tyne. While still a young man he came, with his brother William, to Manchester, and they began business together on quite a small scale. Having bought the home and colonial rights of the Otto gas-engine patent, they soon established a great business. During the last fifteen years Mr. Crossley has taken a very prominent part in many kinds of philanthropic work, and especially such as had a religious bearing. He was best known, perhaps, for his great and practical interest in home mission work. He and his brother began a mission in Openshaw connected with, though not exclusively confined to, their own works. It was very successful from the first, and ultimately Mr. Frank Crossley built the Star Hall, at a cost of £21,000, and, with his wife and daughter, ministered personally to the needs of a neglected district. Mr. Crossley was remarkable for the great generosity with which he would contribute to any ameliorative work of which he approved. He was a vice-president of the United Kingdom Alliance, and was amongst its most valued supporters. Though much occupied with the cares of a great business and large social schemes, Mr. Crossley found much time for the study of literature and art, and was a man of wide reading and culture. By all classes, says the Manchester Guardian, his death will be lamented as that of a man of generous heart, who was sincerely anxious to promote the public good.

Mr. L. K. Shaw, of Manchester, writes: "A noble life has passed from our midst, and Manchester, if not the whole country, is the poorer. The vast concourse which gathered on Saturday at the Star Hall, Ancoats, comprising clergymen and ministers of all denominations, with leading representative men from every department of Manchester's busy life, testified to the general esteem and reverence with which Mr. Frank Crossley was regarded, while the thousands which followed the remains from thence to the grave displayed a depth of affection rarely seen in this hard work-a-day world. He and his devoted wife set a high standard of Christian living. They preached it from the Star Hall platform and lived it. From the day, some ten years ago, when he resolved to leave his beautiful country house that he and his family might live amongst the poor of this great city, to last Thursday when the last summons came, a pattern life has been lived and an object-lesson has been daily before the merchant princes of this district, which we know has awakened serious thought in many minds and which surely will bear fruit in days to come!

"When the resolve was taken to give up the luxury of country life, which his ample means and literary tastes entitled him to, he chose the poorest and most neglected quarter for his abode, where was a large public-house and singing saloon—a very centre of all that was low and debasing. This he purchased and demolished, and on the site erected the large mission hall, the subsidiary hall, coffee tavern, deaconesses' houses, etc., now known as the Star Hall, Ancoats, adding thereto a modest dwelling for himself and family. There they have lived ministering personally to the spiritual and temporal needs of the dense population which surrounded them.

"Mr. Frank Crossley had no narrow sympathies; they went out to the oppressed and suffering in all quarters. None will ever know all he did and all he suffered in intense feeling for the Armenians; he gave largely, and worked nobly by pen and speech in their behalf. Foreign missions enlisted his very warm and practical sympathies. He visited India last year. Local objects, specially rescue work among the young and the fallen, had his warm support. Truly our responsibility in Manchester has been greatly increased by the fact that such a life has been lived amongst us."

Personalia.

Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby has been appointed hon. sec. of the Native Races and Liquor Traffic Committee, in succession to the late Rev. J. Grant Mills.

The late Mrs. Hilton.—A biography of this much-esteemed lady has been written by her son, J. Deane Hilton, and will be published by Messrs. Isbister and Co.

Canon Tristram, D.D., who is travelling in the East with the "Midnight Sun" party, has met with an accident at Jerusalem, having broken his leg. No details are yet to hand.

Mr. Budgett Meakin having concluded his winter course of lectures, leaves next week, by way of Portugal, for Morocco, in the interior of which he proposes to travel, returning to England in July.

Mr. Marshall Broomhall, B.A., second son of Mr. B. Broomhall (for many years secretary of the China Inland Mission), was married, on March 17 at Tientsin, China, to Florence, youngest daughter of Mr. J. K. Corderoy.

Rev. J. W. Todd, D.D., of Forest Hill, Sydenham, the well-known Baptist pastor, is, we regret to learn, seriously ill. He commenced his ministry in 1845, and though during recent years living in retirement, he has led an active life, filling various offices among the Baptists and serving many churches in and around London.

Miss Meredith Brown has been interesting large audiences in Pittsburgh in her mission work in London. In Baltimore Miss Brown addressed a large audience of ladies. She is visiting Chicago, where the prospect is encouraging, and has an urgent invitation from Boston to tell Christians there of her labours in West London.

Mr. Chas. T. Studd lately spent three days in Louisville. He delivered addresses at the Presbyterian and Baptist Theological Seminaries, at the Louisville Hospital and University Medical Colleges, and the last night of his stay he spoke to a great union meeting. His visit has awakened much interest on the part of those indifferent to the claims of the great mission field.

Pastor George Wainwright, of Bournemouth West, continues in a delicate condition of health. He recently returned from Mentone, but the anticipated improvement had not been effected, and he has been to South Devon. Dr. Kidd has advised Mr. Wainwright to go either to South Africa or Tasmania. He may be assured of the very warm sympathy of his Christian brethren in his weakness.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker, the father of temperance advocates, has announced his intention to retire from the temperance platform on May 21 next, the day on which he will have completed sixty years of active work on behalf of the temperance cause. He is now eighty-four years of age. It was in May, 1837, that he made his first public appearance in London, when he addressed a meeting in Exeter Hall, convened by the New British and Foreign Temperance Society. Since that time he has devoted his life to the work he had so much at heart.

Rev. H. M. Dyke.—In a letter from our venerated missionary brother, Rev. H. M. Dyke, of Morija, Basutoland, he says:—Several changes have been made since Mr. R. C. Morgan was here. Some of our brethren have left on furlough; others are feeling the effects of age. Still, I am glad to say, progress is made. My dear wife and I especially are realising the infirmities of old age, and there are many indications that we may ere long be released from the earthly tenement. May we look forward to that time with joyful anticipation, by the grace of God being faithful to the end. The marriage of our son with Miss Aline Mabille took place on Jan. 21.

The Birmingham and Midland Counties Wholesale Brewers' Association, and five of the local retailers' societies, have issued a circular to the licensed trade asking all retailers to discontinue "the pernicious practice of giving sweets and other presents to children coming for beer on Sundays."

THE BOOK WORLD.

My Silver and My Gold. By G. S. Eddy. (1s. Marshall Bros.) Four Scripturally conceived and earnestly written chapters on Christian stewardship in the matter of worldly substance. They form a powerful plea for entire consecration of life.

Prayer in the Four Gospels. By W. E. Winks. (Baptist Tract and Book Society.) A deeply interesting little treatise, with special reference to the "Prayer Gospel" (Luke). Mr. Winks has read with care; and his pages are calculated to prove of real assistance to prayerful students.

Kingless Folk. By Rev. John Daws. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) An admirable series of addresses to children on the animals of the Bible, with a due admixture of description and application. Some of them are in verse form, and all are well within the compass of the youthful understanding.

By Doctor's Orders. By Annie Frances Perram. (3s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist S. S. Union). A well-told tale, illustrating the perils of the social use of alcohol, and especially the responsibility that lies on the shoulders of medical men in prescribing intoxicants. It would make an excellent Sunday-school or Band of Hope prize.

The Quiver for the present month has, amongst a budget of good matter, a paper by Earl Compton, M.P., on Ragged Schools and the work of the R.S.U. Mr. Burgin gives a readable account of his visit to Armenia. Both these articles are admirably illustrated. Indeed, the magazine abounds in capital pictures. (Cassell & Co. 6d.)

Lady Blanche Balfour. By James Robertson, D.D. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) A slight but not unworthy biographical sketch of the mother of the present First Lord of the Treasury. Her life, chastened by sorrow and marked in all its course by high Christian motive and devotion to duty, was at once beautiful and beneficent.

Within. By Rev. Andrew Murray. (1s. Service and Paton, 5, Henrietta-street, W.C.) These four short addresses on the inner life are good specimens of Mr. Murray's simple spiritual teaching. No one can mistake his meaning, and every reader with a willing heart will be helped by their perusal in his longings after a fuller realisation of Christ's indwelling.

The Children's Study: England. By Frances E. Cooke. (T. Fisher Unwin.) This history of England from the Roman invasion to the Education Act of 1870, is delightfully written, apparently without religious or political bias, and is sure to be read eagerly by many who have long passed childhood's years. The important study of history is here made fascinating as well as informing.

Messages of To-day for the Men of To-morrow. By G. C. Lorimer, D.D. (5s. Christian Commonwealth Company, Limited.) These addresses show a wonderful range of knowledge, and a great gift of applying it to the practical affairs of serious life. The style is a trifle rhetorical, but not too much so to hide the moral aspects of the matters discussed. Neither the themes nor their treatment are commonplace, and the teaching is eminently robust.

The Early Churches of Great Britain, Prior to the Coming of Augustine. By J. Hunt Cooke. (2s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard.) The contention of this little work is that the early churches of Great Britain are the ancestors of the modern Free Churches. However one may feel in regard to this point of controversy, all may well take an interest in the early struggles of faith and the beginnings of Christian testimony in our land. And of these Mr. Hunt Cooke gives us a glimpse which is at once clear and charming.

Messrs. Isbister & Co. are publishing a popular series of monographs on English Abbeys and Cathedrals. Four of these are before us—Westminster Abbey by Dean Farrar, illustrated by H. Railton; St. Alban's Abbey by Canon Liddell, illustrated by F. G. Kitton; Winchester Cathedral, by Canon Benham, with illustrations by H. Railton; and York Minster by Dean Purey-Cust, illustrated by Alexander Ansted. The historical descriptions are clearly marked by fulness of knowledge, while the illustrative drawings are exquisite. (1s. each net.)

Annual Charities Register and Digest. (Longmans, Green & Co. 4s.) This well-known and admirably classified guide to charitable institutions, has this year been issued at the low price stated instead of 10s. 6d. as formerly. To many the usefulness of the volume will be much enhanced by the introduction dealing (certainly from the Charity Organisation Society point of view) with the principle of useful help to the poor, the test of institutions, Poor Law affairs, "begging letters," and a host of allied questions bearing on charitable work generally.

Armenosa of Egypt: A Romance of the Arab Conquest. By Charles Henry Butcher, D.D., Chaplain at Cairo, formerly Dean of the Cathedral at Shanghai, China. (6s. Blackwood & Sons.) A picture of life in the seventh century of our era; facts from some of the papyri discovered in recent years being set in a powerful description of the religious and political state of Egypt at the time. There are several exciting passages in the story, which powerfully illustrates the cleavage between the Monophysites and Melchites on the subject of the nature of our Lord.

The Thackerays in India. By Sir W. W. Hunter. (Henry Frowde.) This delightfully-written chapter in Anglo-Indian history enshrines the names and memories of the immediate ancestors of the great English satirist, as well as of other Englishmen who helped to found our Indian Empire, and who now lie in Calcutta graves. Some of these sons of adventure were the product of a rougher and less scrupulous time. While we could not emulate all their methods, we must not forget the difficulties and sanctions amid which they lived. The able author does ample justice to their memory.

Egyptian Self-Taught is the latest issue in connection with Thimm's "Self-Taught" Library. (2s. and 2s. 6d. Marlborough & Co.) This manual has been prepared with the assistance of Professor Flinders Petrie (so well known in connection with excavations in Egypt), Sir Alfred Milner, and others, who have concurred that some such work on the language is much needed, especially in view of the extended relations opening up between this country and Egypt and the Soudan. The book is a very acceptable guide to colloquial Arabic as spoken in Egypt, and particular attention has been given, in the vocabularies and conversational phrases, to the requirements of army and navy officers, merchants, travellers, explorers, and missionaries. The system of translateration will assist in the acquisition of a correct pronunciation.

Is Science Guilty? or, Some of the Sins of Scientific Civilisation. By Avary W. H. Forbes, M.A., Barrister-at-law. (2s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) Madam Neo Science is here put on trial for crimes against human welfare. The witnesses, Population, Competition, Hurry, Literature, Sunday, Social Habits, Faith, Evolution, and others, tell a familiar story; they are up-to-date as to their facts, and apt in their quotations from accepted authorities. At length the jurors, who bear well-known names, and represent different phases of thought, render a twelvefold verdict (taken from their published works). The prisoner is found guilty, and denounced as a common impostor and a public enemy, a traitor to the laws of human nature and a foe to the common weal. There are several racy chapters in the book, which is replete with positive instruction, interwoven with warnings against scientific sins and follies, and popular errors and dangers.

The Ideal City: The Crowning Vision of Patmos. By Rev. John Thomas, M.A., of Liverpool. (3s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) This is a bold treatment of Rev. xxi. 9-xxii. 5, in the form of twelve sermons, all of them characterised by breadth of view and depth of conviction. The preacher's eloquence animates the page as he endeavours (as he says) "to reinstate the closing scene in the Apocalypse into its true position as the crowning conception of the ideal city, in which human life, both individual and social, shall find its perfection." Yet these pages "deal no less with the needs and aspirations of the individual life than they do with the constitution of the ideal city. For the social unity is in great measure the individual written large." Howsoever, in our individual studies, we may interpret the closing chapters of Revelation, we have here a most suggestive exposition; and the pages are rich in striking expressions and gems of thought.

In the April Light and Leading, Mr. Joseph G. Rotherham gives some practical hints respecting the best methods of musical preparation in Sunday-school work.

Catholic Ideals: How far can they be realised by the Free Churches? By E. S. Bannester, B.A. (3d. Partridge.) Conceived in a right spirit, this essay is calculated to help Nonconformists in the higher aspirations of life.

Holy Scripture, the Sole Authoritative Expositor of Divine Truth, by the late Dean Goode, is in its fourth edition. The pages are as rich in information as they are sound in argument. They abundantly show that Church authority is the approved pathway to the Church of Rome. (6d. Nisbet.)

Calvinism: Is it according to Calvin? By L. Stileman Gibbard, M.A. The object of this booklet is to show in a simple manner that the strict Calvinistic theology, as it relates to the doctrine of election, is not according to Calvin himself. The pages are obviously written for the assistance of those who suffer mental and spiritual distress through a one-sided and disproportionate exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. (1s. per dozen, post free. The Author, Sharnbrook House, near Bedford.)

Story of the Conversion and Baptism of Leo Levi, a Spanish Jew, is the long title of a booklet by Rev. Aaron Sternberg, of the British Jews Society. The pages have a deep interest for those who pray and labour for the enlightenment of Israel. Rev. John Dunlop, secretary of the same Society, is to be congratulated on the increasing circulation of his striking booklet The Bag, the Bottle, and the Book. The pages should suggest capital addresses for Christian workers. (J. Snow & Co., 2 Ivy-lane, E.C.)

An Anti-Cigarette League has been established among the Grammar School boys of New York. It has now ninety-five branches in as many schools, with a membership of over 40,000.

Kensal Town Medical Mission.

The new report gives the attendance for last year as 4704. "As we think of all the people who have attended the Medical Mission, and have each one heard the Good News faithfully told week by week by one of the workers, we rejoice at the seed sown, and believe that God is watering and will give the increase."

The maternity work has also increased, 154 mothers having been attended during the year. "For this branch fresh help is asked. The number of cases has quite gone beyond the strength and time of one nurse, and we are now trying to secure further help. For this forward movement an addition of at least £24 will be needed."

The Home of Rest at Herne Bay was reopened last year, in a fresh house, for four months and a half, and afforded a happy holiday to eighty-two visitors. It was delightful to see the people refreshed by the bracing air, returning to London and their daily toil renewed and strengthened in body. Several professed to receive much spiritual help, and there is reason to believe that God sealed his Word on many.

The hon. sec. is Miss E. C. Thompson, The Cottage, Gospel Mission, Kensal-road, W.

Dover Soldiers' Home.

The Soldiers' Home reports a year of earnest fruitful work. The Home has proved a place of refuge for those who, having been for years slaves to drink, have become teetotalers, but for a time have had to fight against the temptation.

Earnest words spoken in hospital to Private A. resulted in conviction of sin and afterwards led to decision for Christ. He had been for six years a leader in drink and recklessness among his comrades, and sad was the story he told of wasted years and opportunities and of a brother led astray, whose early death he felt laid at his door. Now a new man in Christ Jesus, he is the wonder of his unconverted comrades, who would not believe he could live without drinking and swearing; but six months have passed away and he is still trusting, proving God's promise to keep, and doing all he can to bring others to the One who has changed his whole life.

The barracks have been constantly visited by Mr. Andrews, the caretaker of the Home, himself an old soldier; and it is hoped that the words of warning and invitation spoken there will in many cases bring forth fruit.

The lady superintendent is Miss Mansell, 118, Snargate-street, Dover.

Fallen Asleep.

At Barnard Castle, Teesdale, on 19th inst., Mr. Joseph Dixon, aged eighty-one, a liberal and devout supporter of the Lord's work and of Methodist movements.—At Harrogate, Rev. Ninian Wright, aged seventy, for nearly fifty years an earnest Wesleyan minister.—At Hertford, on 18th inst., Mr. H. Rayment, J.P., a liberal helper of the Lord's work.—At Broompark, Sheffield, on 19th inst., Mr. J. J. G. Tuckwood, aged sixty, a devoted worker, giver, and Sunday-school superintendent.—At Bromyard, on 21st inst., Mrs. W. B. Row, wife of the minister of Congregational Chapel.—At Morecambe, Mr. Z. Craven, formerly a well-known worker at Great Horton.—At Huddersfield, aged sixty-one, Mr. Joseph Calvert, a leading temperance advocate in the district.—At Birmingham, Rev. R. D. Billings, aged eighty-nine, for many years a valued Baptist minister, and since his retirement a useful worker at Heneage-street, Birmingham.—At Northampton, aged seventy-five, Mrs. Manton, wife of Rev. T. C. Manton, first minister of Mount Pleasant Baptist Chapel.—At Holme Lea, Llandudno, Miss Charlotte Anne Tasker, an earnest helper in Y.W.C.A. and similar work.—At Harrow-on-Hill, on 21st inst., Rev. Thomas Smith, aged eighty-three, for thirty years pastor of the Baptist Church at Harrow.—At Thorner Vicarage, aged sixty, Rev. J. W. Muscroft, for many years rector of the parish.—At Wath-upon-Dearne, on 21st inst., Rev. H. Partington, aged eighty-eight, vicar of the parish for sixty-four years.—At Strabane, Rev. Robt. Burroughs, B.D., rector of Leckpatrick.—At Cork, Mr. S. W. Levis, late of Skibbereen, a retiring man, but a most faithful and successful Christian worker in connection with the Methodist church, aged seventy-nine years.—At Banagher, co. Derry, Rev. Canon Scott, rector of Banagher, aged seventy years.—At Bambridge, Ireland, William Hopkins, over eighty years of age, and for nearly forty years a valued agent of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—At Battersea-rise, on 27th inst., Mrs. Cecilia Burns, aged sixty-seven, wife of Dr. Dawson Burns.

Christian Union for Social Service.—Dear Sir,—Will you kindly allow us to name to your readers, who may be willing to promote the work of the "Training Colony" at Lingfield, some of the things much wanted there at present? The chief of these is a piano, or American organ, especially for purposes of worship. A few books, fresh in thought if not in binding. Magazines, such as The Review of Reviews, Good Words, The Fireside, or The Sunday Magazine, and such instructive papers as The Beekeepers' Journal, The Field, or The Poultry Farm will be very acceptable and helpful.—Yours truly, J. F. B. Tinling, Hon. Sec.
4, Dalmeny-road, Tufnell Park, N.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission to young men at Peckham Y.M.C.A., by Mr. J. Albinson, commencing April 4.—Praise for the Holy Spirit's blessing on mission in Raphoe, co. Donegal, conducted by Mr. Crawford, Irish Evangelisation Society.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2¼ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THIS week's issue has a special missionary interest. In addition to our sketch of a successful missionary worker in China, there is on page 11 a most important appeal from the Student Volunteers to the Churches in Britain, which we hope will receive due attention.

The admirals in charge of the European fleets before Crete, show, by their constant appeal for fresh instructions, that the Powers are still sadly behind the march of events in their handling of this grievous trouble in the East. As yet, the Greek and Turkish troops that are face to face on the Grecian frontier have not come into collision, but any moment may see the beginning of a struggle, the end of which no human foresight can foresee. If the Powers were to insist that the Turkish soldiers and officials in Crete be removed, and the insurgents were really persuaded that the offer of autonomy was genuine, the immediate ground of war would be averted, and time would be gained for practical measures of conciliation. So far, the only point on which clear unanimity exists is that the autonomy should be dependent on the suzerainty of the Sultan. Colonel Vassos' appeal to the peoples of Europe, as distinct from their Governments, shows a real appreciation of the difficulty. The moral feelings of the nations are all on the side of justice and freedom. But there is no adequate machinery at present whereby these sentiments may express themselves. The one hope that remains is that every day's delay in the outbreak of hostilities may open the eyes of the European Governments to their duty.

The efforts of some of the Vestries in the central parishes of London and other great cities to cleanse the streets from the evils of impurity must be supplemented by greater alertness on the part of suburban parishes, otherwise the evil will only change its form. There are evidences that those who are thus interfered with in their unholy calling are spreading themselves in the circle of the suburbs, where the thoroughfares after dark are in many cases beginning to lose their quiet character and are being infested by disorderly characters. Here is an opportunity for the Free Church Councils to concentrate the influence of their respective bodies in a determined attempt at hindering a threatened calamity to public morals. It is easier to prevent such an evil than to cure it.

The Church of England May meetings this year are to include a novel and significant item in their list of meetings. This is a gathering under the auspices of the Church Reform League, and the chairmanship of the Bishop of Rochester, in favour of Church reform. Canons Gore and Scott-Holland, and other prominent Churchmen, are to be among the speakers. "The demonstration is intended," according to The Rock, "to show that English Churchmen irrespective of party or politics, are united in their desire for reform, and that they are eager to 'cleanse' the Church, as the great demonstration at the Albert Hall a few years ago showed they are able to defend it."

The opening of the bicycling season has one serious aspect which should receive more notice from religious teachers than it has hitherto done. That is the increasing tendency on the part of young people belonging to religious families to spend fine Sundays in long rides into the country. The plausible reasons given in defence of this practice, because of its healthfulness, apply only on the ground that physical health is the sole desideratum of young people. This plea covers only a small part of the needs of human nature. Those who indulge in this way are mainly those who have opportunities during the week of attending to the needs of the body. Meanwhile the soul is neglected, and the higher education for which the Lord's Day was established is quietly put in the background. Is it not time that a timely word be uttered from the pulpits of our churches on this matter?

Mr. H. A. Kennedy, who writes from Stepney Meeting House, E., puts the blame for the decline of old places of worship in crowded districts, on the right shoulders when he exonerates the ministers and the handfuls of souls left behind, and singles out those who have grown well enough off to leave the poor districts, thereby making them poorer still, and those educated and well-to-do folk who have never been there at all. While claiming a full share of pecuniary help, because it is owing to Christ, he says that the need of these churches for human help is greater than their need of money.

If you think you have no time and no ability, look into your lives again, and look honestly. You may find yourselves richer in these gifts than you imagine.

Mr. Kennedy believes the only way in which a successful work can be done in such districts as Stepney among working-men is by persons going to live and labour on the spot. This conception of service is, no doubt, forcing itself more and more upon Christians, and in some cases is being acted upon.

According to the report of the Irish Association for the Prevention of Intemperance, there is need for a new temperance campaign in Ireland. All over the kingdom, indeed, there is an increased amount of drinking, the cost of the increase in Ireland alone being half a million sterling in excess of the previous year. The total amount spent there even in 1895—apart from the consumption of foreign wines and spirits—was £11,735,438, or an expediture at the rate of £2 11s. 3d. per head of the whole population. There has been a corresponding increase of convictions for drunkenness and offences caused thereby, and this largely among women. It is lamentable that with the spread of temperance principles increased commercial prosperity should be accompanied by such effects. All this should put additional nerve into those who are earnestly fighting with the widespread evil of drink, the parent of so many other forms of iniquity.

The Anti-Jewish campaign, for the present quiescent on the Continent, shows signs of breaking out in the United States. A new paper called The Gentile World has been started, whose aim seems to be to provoke an active hatred of the people through whom the best religious blessings which the world enjoys have been vouchsafed. History shows no sadder phenomenon than the consistent ingratitude of Gentile nations towards this unfortunate race. If as a people they have as yet refused to receive the fulness of the revelation of whose earlier stages they were the divinely appointed channels, that is only the greater reason why we should do our part in drawing them into the circle of the truth instead of embittering them still more against it by these constant and senseless attacks. Conversion, not persecution, should be the watchword of the nations in their treatment of the Jews.

The Church Association has written to the Prime Minister begging him to "avert the dishonour," on the part of the Queen, of accepting the Pope's "Golden Rose." The protest is good and justifiable, but the reasons alleged are peculiar. History is ransacked with a view of proving that is a fatal gift to those who have accepted it, and strange instances are mentioned of princes and queens who have been unfortunate in various ways after its bestowal. Surely the one valid reason against such a course is to be found in no superstitious ideas, but in the fact that, as head of a Protestant Church and country, it is undesirable that Her Majesty should accept official favours from the head of the Romish Church as such. We hope the petition, which is to be presented to the House of Commons as well as to the Queen, will succeed, in spite of the somewhat irrelevant grounds on which it is based.

One of our popular journalists thinks that if we take the current literatures of France, Germany, Italy, and Scandinavia, as indicating the opinion of the most educated classes on the subject of religion, "one would say that religion, in the old sense, had almost died out of Europe." However, he is firmly convinced that "religion is not dead, but hibernating as preparatory to a new metamorphosis." The yearnings of the soul, at present so feebly supported by reason, are to find a "clear scientific sanction." We fancy that in every age the educated classes have been a poor guide to the state of true religion, and that, if their attitude be the gauge of religious faith and feeling, religion has always been hibernating. Yet, notwithstanding that, it has a remarkable way of getting about the world, and of making itself felt by almost every nation under heaven. It gets along without a scientific sanction, as in Paul's time it dispensed with a philosophic sanction. It appeals to heart and conscience, and reason justifies their decision.

Mr. Baring-Gould's new "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte" contains the striking picture of a man who, with soaring ambitions and a demoralised nature, was for all that harassed and checked by better thoughts, which did not quite forsake him. His was a divided nature, and therefore unable to realise itself in satisfying deed. The same may be said of every one who is ignorant of the liberty of the Spirit of the Lord, and is not consciously working out a Divine ideal. And while the deeds of a Napoleon, often amazing for their stupendous wickedness rather than for their genius, receive immense attention, we can only wonder what he would have done had he been guided by truth and love. In some beautiful and enduring manner he would have gained the satisfying of all his vast capabilities, instead of being hurled to the dust, to be, in his fall and shame, an eternal warning to profane ambition. We cannot wonder at his overthrow when we know he proclaimed that "God had made the Emperor his own Divine image on earth, and that to honour and serve the Emperor was to honour and serve God."

Rev. Maurice Phillips, of Madras, writing in the Harvest Field, says that the attitude of the non-English educated Hindus towards Christianity, in those districts where the Gospel has been preached regularly and systematically for years, is very friendly. They scarcely ever oppose it, or try to defend the religions of Vishnu and Siva. Thousands declare themselves Christians every year, and thousands more are secret disciples of Christ. This is a very remarkable testimony to the value of regular and patient Christian service, and shows that we should go on from day to day in the strong faith that in due season we shall reap. Our mistake is in too often fixing the "due season" by some methods of calculation of our own. We antedate the harvest; we want to deal in "futures;" and our illicit traffic is covered with shame, for all unbelief dishonours God and injures his work and his workers.

It was not an original remark on the part of Dr. John Hall, but one which ministers and all other Christian workers would do well to keep in mind. "You must press men into the kingdom of heaven by the weight of your personal character. Any one can talk, but character alone impresses." It is indeed the solemn fact that every worker gives himself in his work, whatever that self may be, which ought to lead him always to be able to say with Paul, "As of sincerity, as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ."

Church Association.—The society has been chiefly known in the past for the uncompromising resistance which it has offered to ritualistic practices and Romish tendencies in the Church of England. Its latest development has proved very popular, and is known as the Protestant Van and Colporteur Mission, which appeals to wider sympathies, and engages the interests of all Protestant Christians. The Van and Colporteur Agency during last year distributed 86,597 free Protestant publications; it sold 43,394; it visited 1,575 villages, and gave 2,780 Gospel and Protestant addresses. The Association has at the present time 11 vans, but unfortunately the demands on the Association have been so great that three of them are at present laid up for want of sufficient funds. This is not because of any falling off in the liberality of Protestants, as is proved by the fact that only ten years ago the whole income of the Association was £2,176, this having been increased every year since, until at the end of 1895 it reached £7,548, the largest income ever received. Owing to the loss by death of several generous supporters, the income for last year, 1896, was only £7,000: that is, a decrease of £548. This income of £7,000 is altogether inadequate for the work which the Association has in hand, and hence the necessity for the urgent appeal for funds which the Council has lately made.

"Keswick" in London.

OPENING MEETINGS IN ST. JAMES'S HALL.

THE Convention in London for the advancement of the spiritual life, which has been eagerly anticipated by many during the past months, opened its regular sessions in St. James's Hall on Tuesday forenoon. The previous evening there was a full meeting in the smaller hall, for prayer and some words of preparatory exhortation. Mr. Robert Wilson presided.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe struck an admirable keynote for the Convention in an address from 2 Sam. iii. 17, 18—Making Jesus King. In the course of his remarks he said: "The one great platform on which we seek to hold this Convention, and all similar conventions, is that we know not what any man's "ism" or denomination is. By the grace of God we keep the one flag on our banner—

ALL ONE IN CHRIST JESUS.

We must not encourage what we know to be false doctrine, but we are here to say that while we know absolutely nothing of sinless perfection except in Christ Jesus, nothing of "perfectionism" as applied to human beings; nothing of a life that is without sin, or of an instantaneous sanctification so that a man passes in an instant from a vile careless sinner into a perfectly sanctified soul, except as it may be done in purpose and desire—while we know nothing of a merely emotional religion that tends to passivity or quietism, yet we can say that we do set forth, so far as we know, one Lord and Master, one God and Father, one Holy Spirit, who is mighty to work in those who take Him, and that from that moment we become men and women of war, who can keep rank and go forward as God would have them, and who are all of a perfect heart to make our David King."

At the meeting on Tuesday forenoon the area and first galleries of the great hall were full, and there was a goodly platform, Mr. Wilson being in his accustomed place in the chair. After a hymn of praise most earnest prayer was offered by Prebendary Webb-Peploe. Another hymn followed—

Nothing unclean can enter in Where God in glory reigns.

Then Bishop Barry, the vicar of the parish in which St. James's Hall stands, in a brief address, cordially welcomed the Convention, inviting those attending it to resort to his church near by for private prayer, and to the communion service on Friday morning. He commented in very simple but earnest terms on the desire of all Christians to cultivate the hidden life, not as a matter of argument, but one of personal victorious experience. He referred also to the restlessness of the age, to the wretched religious divisions in the Church of Christ, and to the crusade against evil which Christians in the West-end especially had to carry on; and in view of these and other needs of the time he heartily hailed any effort such as this Convention to deepen the spiritual life of believers of whatever name, and to empower them for the work to which the common Lord has called them.

After prayer, Rev. E. H. Hopkins gave the opening address, with a view of removing any that might be in the minds of those present, which would hinder the reception of blessing. He took for granted that in many hearts there was a feeling of deep need because of repeated failure in the Christian life. There may be difficulties connected with doctrine, with social surroundings, or of a personal kind. Confining himself to the first kind of difficulty, Mr. Hopkins, on behalf of the Keswick platform, entirely repudiated any claim to absolute freedom from sin in this life. The best of Christians have daily to make confession of sin to the very last. Others are puzzled in the matter of gradual growth as opposed to immediate sanctification. Distinction must here be made between the sanctification of character, which is progressive, and that condition of soul which is a prerequisite to all Christian growth. There must first be adjustment before there can be the doing of God's will, which is the great business of life. Many Christians are spiritually dislocated—out of fellowship with God; when that is set right, a wondrous blessing comes to the soul, and the hindrance to progress is removed.

MISCONCEPTIONS AND PREJUDICES

Some seem to think that when this adjustment comes about, there is a total cessation of conflict in the life. That is not so. We must distinguish between inward rebellion and Christian conflict. The one will be gone, but it is only when this blessing comes that true conflict begins. The blessing comes not by struggling, but by trusting; but there will be plenty of effort and activity, which must be the outcome of Divine power received simply through faith. Again it is said that this teaching leads to quietism and inaction. The danger is on the other side. When God lays his hand on us, He will use us. But we will discover the grand difference between being an agent and an instrument. God is ever the worker, we are his tools—not machines, but intelligent, voluntary instruments. There is a deep rest within, in the midst of the intensest activity, but not so-called "quietism."

Summing up, Mr. Hopkins described the thing which they sought to induce as "soul harmony with God." That implies a condition of fellowship with God, of fitness for service, and of equipment for conflict. In this conflict we must use no carnal weapons, or be lured out of our victorious position in Christ by the wiles of the devil. God help us in this Convention to know not only what it is to have life, but to live, day by day.

The meeting was closed with another song of praise, and with prayer led by Revs. F. B. Meyer and C. A. Fox.

The Convention will be held forenoon, afternoon, and evening, up to and including Friday evening; on Saturday morning there will be a missionary gathering.

Resurrectiontide.

O'er the wintry landscape bending,
Verdure clad with rainbow wing,
From a fairer sphere descending,
Comes God's beauteous angel Spring.

Welcome springtide, bard of gladness,
Holy Resurrectiontide,
O'er is winter's night of sadness,
Earth her prison-gate flings wide.

And from out those gloomy portals
Rise the flowers sweet and fair,
Emblems of the pure immortelles
That the happy seraphs wear.

And on each the glad truth golden,
Breathed by every perfumed breath,
Love inscribed by sunbeams golden,
Joy from woe, and life from death.

Agony and crucifixion,
Mortal anguish, stony grave,
Afterwards love's Benediction,
Power a ruined world to save.

First the plain of battle gory,
Sin o'ercome, and self laid down,
Winter's death, then springtide glory,
Robe and palm, and Victor's crown.

Harriet Julia Evans.

The Indian Revenue Authorities have noticed that the sale of methylated spirit is going up by leaps and bounds. Inquiry being made, it was ascertained that a process was in action by which the wood naphtha, which was depended on to make the liquid undrinkable is extracted, and a big profit made by sale of the deflavoured product. The authorities have, therefore, devised a means by which, by the admixture of something called "caoutchoucine," it will be impossible for even the most sodden dipsomaniac to swallow the liquid.—Medical Press.

To British Churches.

MEMORIAL OF THE S.V.M.U.

BEFORE Christ left the earth, He commanded his followers to preach the Gospel to every creature. The early Church, inspired by the hope of the appearing of her ascended Lord, carried the message far and wide throughout the then known world. Now, on the threshold of the twentieth century, a new horizon stretches out before us. For the first time in history God has made known to us his earth in every part. One by one, He has unbarred the gates of almost all the nations, that his Word might have free course. To-day providence and revelation combine to call the Church afresh to go in and take possession of the world for Christ.

The last hundred years have witnessed a remarkable revival of the missionary spirit in the Church, and now a little army of 11,000 soldiers valiantly faces, in a thin and scattered line, the hosts of heathendom. Our Lord, who said, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," is in these latter days raising up a new force, to fill the broken ranks and join in the great crusade for the evangelisation of the world. The Universities and Colleges, which are the training-ground of leaders of thought and action, have recently become centres of an awakening zeal for the cause of Christ. In Britain and America students are dedicating their lives as never before to the work of foreign missions.

The Student Volunteer Missionary Union of Great Britain has, since 1892, banded together 1300 men and women under the declaration: "It is my purpose, if God permit, to become a foreign missionary"; and already 300 of these are serving their Commander in the forefront of the fight. This Union is not a society for sending out missionaries, but acts as a handmaid to the Church by influencing students to devote themselves to the service of Christ in heathen and Mohammedan lands. Besides having this direct object, the Union presses upon all Christian students the duty of supporting the work abroad by real sacrifice, systematic missionary study, and definite prevailing prayer.

An International Conference, held at Liverpool at the beginning of 1896, was attended by 715 students from twenty-three different nations, and was marked by the presence and the power of God. Here, after careful thought and earnest prayer, the British volunteers fell into line with their American brothers by adopting as their watchword,

THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD IN THIS GENERATION.

Now, as volunteers waiting to be sent, we bring this watchword of the Student Missionary movement on both sides of the Atlantic before the Church of Christ, praying that God may guide his people to carry it into practical effect.

But it will be asked, What does the watchword mean? Simply that the good news of salvation was intended by God to be made known to the 1500 millions of his present human family, and that the responsibility for this gigantic undertaking lies on all who have been redeemed by his Son. God has "committed unto us the word of reconciliation," and from whose lips shall the heathen now living ever hear that word, if the Christians of the present day fail to discharge the debt? Surely He who said that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all nations," wished his followers in every age to carry the message of his love to the whole fallen race.

We do not understand evangelisation to mean, on the one hand, conversion, which is the work of the Holy Spirit, or, on the other hand, a mere hurried proclamation of the truth of Christ. We understand it to mean that the Gospel should be preached intelligibly and intelligently to every soul in such a manner that the responsibility for its acceptance shall no longer rest upon the Christian Church, but upon each man for himself. Hence the watchword is perfectly in harmony with the educational, medical, and pastoral influences now in operation in the mission field.

As regards the probability of its achievement within the duration of an average life we hazard no prophecy. Our marching orders require instant obedience, without reference to the time that may be occupied. But there is abundant evidence that the Church has the men and the money that are needed. If the missionary enterprise of reformed Christendom were carried out on the scale of the Moravian Church, we should have a force of 500,000 heralds of the Cross, who could be maintained at a cost of one-half the annual savings of Great Britain alone. This vast number is far in advance of what is required on the highest estimate of the need, especially as the heathen are more and more responding to the voice of Christ, and going forth themselves to tell their countrymen of Him.

When we look at the condition of the world around, there are many indications that the hand of God is visibly preparing the way for the coming of his kingdom, and that the time is ripe for an advance of our Captain's armies all along the line. The awakening which has taken place in many of the Universities and Colleges of the home lands is spreading to those of Australia, Africa, and Asia. Students of the West are telling the story of the love of Jesus to their brothers of the East, and these in turn are becoming lights in the dense surrounding night. We are realising our common brotherhood and clasping hands across the seas to "Make Jesus King." The Bible is now in the languages of nine-tenths of the human race. The blight of Turkish rule is a solemn challenge to the Church to win back for God's Kingdom lands of Bible scenes. The leaves of the Tree of Life are beginning to heal Africa's open sore. China's conservatism is already becoming the sure anchorage of the truth of Christ. The troubled cry of India rings loudest at this juncture in our ears. By entrusting to our rule that mighty empire, God has placed us in a position of unique privilege and dread responsibility. This trust, if we abuse it, may be taken from us, and we may for ever lose the honour of leading the way in the path of obedience to the will of our Risen Lord.

Let us, however, frankly own that with heathenism so vast and so strongly entrenched, the evangelisation of the world in this generation is an impossibility unless the Church ceases to be so engrossed with things of time. But if, as we believe, it is God's purpose for the Church, what need we more? Dare we lower our expectations, seeing they are from Him? It is true that for its accomplishment a great upheaval of Christendom must take place. There must be a return to our Lord's conditions of discipleship, forsaking all and losing life itself. Even now we see a widespread search for deeper consecration and for a clearer discernment of the mind of Christ. But before the testimony of the Cross can be everywhere accompanied with the Holy Spirit's power, God must be given complete sovereignty over the lives of his children, that so the promise may be fulfilled: "The nations shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes."

We venture to ask you, who are called to the holy office of guiding the counsels and action of the Church, to recognise our watchword as expressive of the present duty of the Church, and to ACCEPT IT AS YOUR MISSIONARY POLICY. We beseech you to enlarge your borders, and to direct your plans with a view to carrying the Gospel to all men speedily. In the name of a thousand Volunteers we entreat you to use your influence, by voice and pen, to rouse the Church to a realisation of the present crisis, to claim her sons and daughters, and her wealth to send them forth, and thus redeem the shame of centuries.

Fellow-Christians, we ask you to take the part God allots you in the evangelisation of the world in this generation, for the work cannot be done unless each fills his place in the universal plan. We beseech you to yield yourselves, your children, and your substance to Him who bought you with his precious blood, and then go forth or stay as his Spirit may direct. We entreat you to give yourselves continually to prayer that the Lord of the harvest may thrust forth a multitude of labourers into his harvest field.

This our appeal we lay before you, respectfully and hopefully, under the solemn constraint of a deep conviction of the present duty of the Church to accomplish the Great Commission of her Lord. God grant that the whole Church may hear the voice of Him who has waited all these years for the preaching of his Gospel to a lost world, and yield complete and glad obedience ere this generation shall have passed away.

Signed on behalf of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, Executive.

- HOWARD HENRY, Trinity College, Dublin.
- G. T. MANLEY, Christ's College, Cambridge.
- A. T. ROBERTS, Bala College, Wales.
- AGNES ROBSON, Queen Margaret College, Glasgow.
- J. RUTTER WILLIAMSON, Edinburgh University.

Secretaries.
- W. R. MILLER, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London.
- J. H. OLDHAM, Trinity College, Oxford.
- F. W. S. O'NEILL, Presbyterian College, Belfast.
- RUTH ROUSE, Girton College, Cambridge.
- D. M. THORNTON, Trinity College, Cambridge.

Home of Industry.

A CABLEGRAM has been received from Mr. Merry and party, stating that they have arrived at Stratford, Ontario, all well. My heart has been specially cheered by seeing six of our young men home from Canada on a visit to their friends. Most of them were bright happy Christians, able to give a reason for the hope that gladdened their lives. Some went out over twenty years ago, only five years old. Our Father in heaven has blotted out of their memories the pitiful circumstances they were rescued from.

We ask help by prayer for the seventy third party now gathering. Shirts, socks, clothing, to fill fifty to a hundred boxes are needed.

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Jerry McAuley Mission, New York.—At the recent twenty-fourth anniversary it was reported that the attendance during the year was about 40,000, and that over 2000 have professed to be converted.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

III.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

OUR Lord lived and taught and died before the Gospels we possess were written at all. After his ascension into heaven, almost a generation passed before the earliest Gospel was published. We do not know that He wrote a line, except with his finger on the floor of the Temple when the Pharisees brought a fallen woman into his presence.

He came down from heaven, published the good news of salvation, called and trained his disciples, breathed upon them the Holy Ghost, and went back to heaven without leaving behind Him any written Gospel at all. The legacy He left to the world was not an organised Church, nor a proud priesthood, nor a set of written documents, but the small band of disciples, whom He had Himself trained to carry on the work he came to start. In the fierce controversies of the present age it may help us to remember this.

CHRIST AND HIS SALVATION

were before any part of the New Testament was put into writing. Men found rest and peace, and salvation in Jesus Christ, before there was a Christian Church, a Christian ministry, or Christian scriptures. If the New Testament should suddenly be lost, and the organised Christian church be destroyed, men would still find salvation; for the Spirit of God is in the world, and moves upon the hearts of men, and guides them into the way of peace.

On the Day of Pentecost the disciples received their full equipment as witnesses for Jesus, and preachers of the good news of the Kingdom of God. Beginning at Jerusalem, they went forth to many lands to publish the good tidings of great joy which God had made known for all men. With their own lips, and not out of a book, of their Lord's life, of his death, and his glorious resurrection and ascension into heaven. Out of their own experience and knowledge they spake the things concerning their Lord. They declared what they had seen and heard and felt of the love of God. Men believed the story which the disciples told. In many places they came together for worship, and being of one heart and mind formed Christian churches for mutual help, a good while before the Gospels and Epistles were written.

THEY TOLD THE STORY

What need had the disciples and their early companions of written documents at all? Had not they been the companions, the pupils, and friends of the Master? They had seen his glory in the Mount of Transfiguration. They were present when He called Lazarus from the grave. They saw Him on the cross. Had they not also seen Him alive after his resurrection? They were the witnesses of his ascension to heaven.

THE LIVING WITNESS

was better than any written testimony. Writing could not describe the looks, the tenderness, the pathos, the sympathy, the patience, the mercy, the pity, and the deep love of our Lord, as could the witnesses which He Himself had chosen and fitted for this work.

But as time went on great changes came. The little company of the Apostles, the original witnesses, began to decrease. Some were killed, and others were growing old. So long as they remained, and could have access to the churches, all went well. But as Christianity spread, and churches grew up far apart from each other, and men saw the apostolic band diminishing, it was natural that they should be anxious to have the precious words they had heard put into permanent form, so that they might have them always, and hand them on to all who should follow them.

Then, too, many of the churches which the original Twelve, and some of their more active companions, planted in different places, called for special communications from their founders. Disturbances in some of the churches, unfaithfulness in others, the generosity of some, and the needs of many, led disciples and apostles to send letters to those churches, all more or less embodying containing statements concerning the mind and will of God, and filled with precepts and principles concerning the duty of Christian men and women. All these writings were highly prized, and would doubtless be kept as treasures by the churches to which they were sent.

THE TEACHING OF JESUS,

All these writings would be regarded as precious treasures by the various bodies which held them, and would be deposited in safe keeping, together with their copies of the Old Testament. It is certain that at a very early period some churches had possessed themselves not only of copies of the Gospels but also of most of the Apostolic Epistles. It is the story of some of these that we have to tell, so that we may know where our New Testament came from.

We will begin by looking at three of the oldest Bibles in the world. They are all written in Greek, and are very ancient. Their names are the Alexandrian manuscript, the Vatican manuscript, and the Sinaitic manuscript. These three faded old books are very precious, and are carefully treasured by the nations that possess them. One is in the library at St. Petersburg, another at the Vatican library at Rome, and one in the British Museum at London. I shall, in our next article, have a short story to tell about these three old books. I want now in a few lines to tell you something about their great age. There are no dates upon them, but they are believed to be of the fourth and fifth centuries. But some readers may ask how do you know their age if they have no dates? There are several ways of arriving at it. The form of the letters in which a Greek manuscript is written; the way in which the words are joined together; and the plainness or ornamentation of the initial letters, all are guides in fixing the date. If ever you look at a Greek manuscript, and find that all the writing is in capital letters, and that the words in one line are all joined together without any division, you may conclude that it is of a very great age. It will be written this way:

JESUSCHRISTTHESAMEYESTERDAYTODAYANDFOREVER.

The documents written this way are called uncial manuscripts, and are always ancient. Those which are modern are written in a running or flowing hand, and are therefore called cursive. All these three old Bibles are written in the uncial (or large) style.

Work in Spitalfields.

After celebrating the jubilee of the founding of the King Edward Ragged School and Mission, the managers are able to strike a joyful note in regard to the continued prosperity of their efforts. "The number of agencies in active operation is larger than it has ever been, and in most of them we have to report an advance on previous years," says Mr. Charles Montague, the superintendent. In addition to the direct Christian work a great deal is done to foster habits of thrift and industry among the young people of both sexes. Carpentering, fretwork, and more artistic work are taught to boys, while girls learn dressmaking, cooking, etc. In winter dinners are given not only to the more needy class of children but to elderly persons. Temperance teaching, especially among the young through the Band of Hope, is progressing well. The free night school and the free library enable many to continue their education, so that they become eligible for situations of a better class than their parents were able to fill.

The King's Daughters held their 11th anniversary not long since, and were able to report a membership of 400,000 in all parts of the world.

With the "Midnight Sun."

THE snow-clad peaks of Lebanon added greatly to the beauty of the scene as we entered the bay of Beyrout on the early morning of March 8. This interesting port is the chief centre of commerce in Syria, with a population, mostly Christian, of about 100,000 souls.

It seemed perhaps a little incongruous at first to hear of "taking the train to Damascus," but, as it had to be done, we entered upon the undertaking with as little prejudice as possible. At any rate, we were free from the reminders of our frailty with which advertising enterprise has disfigured our English lines; and the scenery en route, undulating, picturesque, grand, presented an ever varying and living interest. The journey was leisurely, not to say slow, like everything else in these parts. With only two trains each way per diem, the officials doubtless find that there are too many hours in their day. Why, then, grudge them the pleasure of a genial chat with everybody when the train stops? There are only twenty-two intermediate stations, at many of which the industrious little engine obtains well-earned refreshment, requiring a stoppage of three, five, or seven minutes; so that ample time is given for taking in the surroundings.

But it is a beautiful journey; its charm would be destroyed by express speed; it affords an unsurpassable view of Mount Hermon with its vesture of eternal snow; and loses few while gaining many advantages as compared with the old-time diligence route.

By noon we reached Zahleh, where we left the train for a drive of several hours through the valley of the Lebanon to where we spent the night. Early next morning we were afoot to see the majestic ruins (dating from the second century) of the Temples of the Sun, of Jupiter, and of Venus in the immediate vicinity. The little town has had centuries of chequered history, having been occupied, destroyed, or rebuilt in turn by the Phœnicians, Seleucidæ, Romans and Moslems. It is believed to have been originally the scene of the Baal-worship referred to in Scripture, and has been notorious for the atrocities and vice which characterized its idolatrous rites. In the walls of the Acropolis, built probably by the Phœnicians, are "the largest blocks of stone ever known to have been used in building." Six are from 30 to 34ft. long, supporting others 64ft. in length, while in the quarry, half-a-mile distant, lies another ready dressed, but never removed, which is 68ft. long, 16ft. 9in. wide, and 14ft. 6in. high.

BAALBEC or HELIOPOLIS,

Returning next day to the railway, we resumed our journey to where we arrived in the evening. The two days spent here were very fully occupied in examining the leading features of this the oldest city in the world, with its native manners and customs until the last few years so little changed. Of course, the authenticity of reputed "sites" is often obscured by some uncertainty; but "the street called Straight," with the not impossible house of Ananias, and the city gate by which Paul, "led by the hand," entered on his way from Jerusalem, are pretty generally accepted. More caution is exercised as regards the spot outside the city where he was stricken at his conversion, or the house from which he was "let down in a basket;" as also regarding "Naaman's house," now, appropriately enough, used as a small leper hospital. Parts of what are believed to be the original walls of the city, built prior to the time of Abraham, are also pointed out.

DAMASCUS,

The narrow streets, crowded with heavily-laden camels, mules, asses, horses, and here and there a carriage; the hubbub of drivers, workers, buyers, sellers; the costumes of Jews, Mohammedans, Christians, and Bedouins from the desert, not so far away—all keep the visitor on the alert, as well for bodily safety as mental interest. A most entertaining day may be spent in the "bazaars" and "markets," watching the manufacture of works of art and the necessaries of daily life; testing the elasticity of Eastern prices; emulating the competitive subtlety of vendor and purchaser; and perchance triumphing at last in a purchase at a reasonable price.

Beyond all this was the pleasure derived from visiting the scholastic, medical, and evangelistic, at work in the city. One is here reminded of Longfellow's lines, with the substitution of one all important name,

VARIOUS CHRISTIAN AGENCIES,

Trust no future, howe'er pleasant,
Let the dead Past bury its dead,
Act, act in the living Present,
Christ within and God o'erhead.

THE IRISH PRESBYTERIAN,

the oldest of these Protestant missions in Damascus, has an encouraging work. It has several schools, which are attended not only by Protestant children, but also by many belonging to the Greek and Romish churches. Then there is the Mission of

THE LONDON JEWS SOCIETY.

The recent baptism of two or three members of a Jewish family led to considerable opposition, so that the attendance of the children was largely diminished. It is, however, again gradually increasing. Rev. J. Segall, the superintendent of the mission, took my father and one or two of the friends to call upon a venerable and genial old gentleman of eighty, who has been deposed from his position of Chief Rabbi, on account of his leaning toward Christianity. Free conversation with him was impossible, but the visitors were conscious of sympathy of spirit, and when they said good-bye to the dear old man, who followed them to the outer door, they felt that they were one with the oneness for which the Saviour prayed.

Here, as at Beyrout, Zahleh, Baalbec (and also in other districts which are not on our route), splendid service is rendered by in the education of the young, under the care of European and native teachers. There are thirty schools, while for the adults there are at several of the stations Bible-women and Scripture-readers, as well as medical work at Baalbec, Damascus, and Tyre. In Damascus there are three schools, with nearly 300 children, under an efficient staff, and four Bible-women for visiting and teaching women to read.

THE BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS

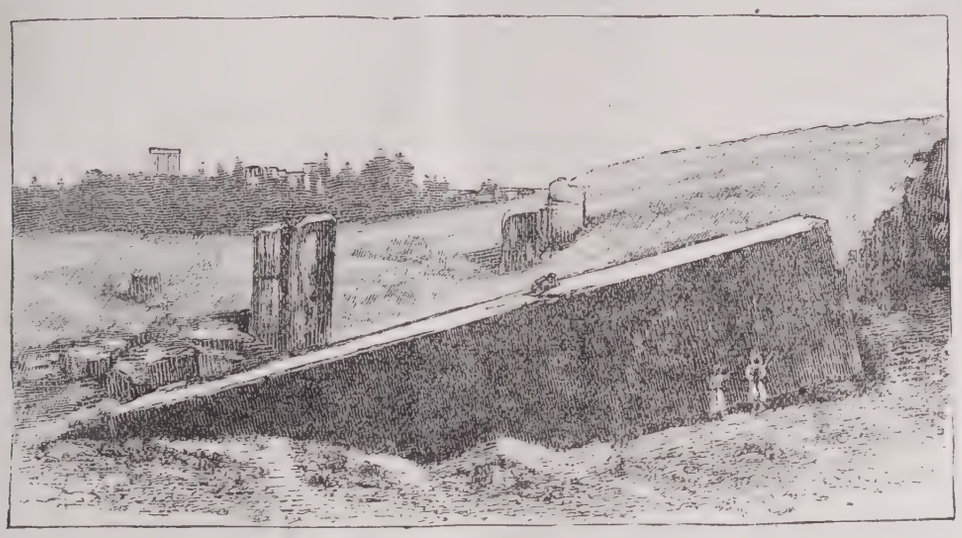
The influence of the various Protestant schools in Damascus has been specially felt among members of the Greek Church. Their children attend these schools on week-days and Sabbaths, Bibles and books are freely bought or are borrowed from Protestant libraries, and read by them, and Gospels have been introduced into their own schools. Lately the Greek Church Girls' School has been in Russian hands, and the new energy thereby developed in trying to keep Greek Church girls at their own school, has somewhat affected numbers elsewhere, although not to a great extent. Twenty years ago education was considered injurious to girls; now even the Moslems have come under the influence of the Christian desire for such education, and are either providing girls' schools themselves in the towns, or are sending their daughters to those of the Christians. Formerly only little girls could appear in the streets every day on their way to and from school; now it is not considered improper for young ladies to attend regularly when draped in the woman's izar, or sheet-like covering in use.

Many pupils go from Damascus to the Beyrout College to take the course for pharmacy or medicine, the favourite professions, and of these several doctors are now in practice in their native town. Others, generally boarders, become teachers in town or village schools, or work in the American missions of the Lebanon and of Egypt. We visited all the schools, and were pleased to notice in each the excellent care and attention which prevailed.



LARGE BLOCK OF STONE AT BAALBEC.

We also spent an hour or so one morning in the dispensary of the

EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSION.

No less than fifty-eight patients of all sorts and conditions attended by appointment for treatment, for almost as many different ailments. During the first hour a meeting is held, in which the claims and blessings of the Gospel of Christ are brought before the people. It was evident that the physician and surgeon, Dr. Mackinnon, has his hands more than full day by day, and the influence of his work is very helpful to the other agencies mentioned above. A new hospital is now in course of erection, which will be an inestimable boon. It was commenced on the Queen's birthday last year, and will, it is hoped, be completed by the same date this year.

G. E. Morgan.

Jerusalem, March 21.—I am reminded by a letter of Archdeacon Wilson in The Manchester Guardian of March 8, of one or two facts which I omitted to mention in my letter from Athens. I give them in his own words.

"Dr. Kalopothakes, who is a prominent member of the Relief Committee, and Madame von Fischer, who is assisting the American missionary ladies in obtaining orders for embroideries by Armenian refugees in Constantinople and Asia Minor, requested me to make a collection on board the Midnight Sun in aid of the Cretan refugees, and with the concurrence of Mr. Perowne I gladly consented to do so." Archdeacon Wilson at once advanced £15: over £30 was given by the passengers. The Archdeacon added that "One of the newspapers speaks bitterly of the English, but notes with pleasure that the passengers of the Midnight Sun gave three cheers to the crew of the Greek ironclad lying a the mouth of the harbour as we passed them."

I imagine the cheers of some were intended for our own ironclad, The Nile, and for the Powers; those of others for the Greeks. And when "Rule Britannia! Britons never, never, never shall be slaves," rang on the evening air, I think some meant to magnify Great Britain, others to encourage Greece; for in this large party there are necessarily different shades of opinion, and feeling, and interest.

I cannot help expressing, on behalf of those who sympathise with Greece, our thankful appreciation of the outspoken and high-toned articles in The Daily Chronicle, The Methodist Times, and The British Weekly, which have reached us, and of the letters from representative men in the last-named paper. I hope other papers which we have not seen have taken the same line.

It may be for our good that we should be sharply brought to consider our ways. We seem to have got into a comfortable period, and to be in danger of becoming practically mere materialists, like the Sadducees, who believe that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; as John Gambold says, "their mark and inspiration, Common Sense." We needed a tonic, and it may be hoped that our nerves will be more tensely strung.

An Englishman sang of the isles of Greece,

Eternal summer gilds them yet,
But all except their sun is set.

Their sun, however, seems to have set and again arisen, and Greeks are now telling England that her sun is setting. Words which used to be uttered with enthusiasm, as e.g.,

Of the three hundred grant but three,
To make a new Thermopylæ, have ceased to move us. That is a foreign language to this generation. We no more echo the call to the oppressed—

Hereditary bondsmen, know ye not,
Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.

On the contrary, we command them to suffer silently, in the interest of Turkish bondholders. The god Mammon rules the world.

We are becoming laissez faire to everything but our earthly interests, our physical comforts, our psychical enjoyments. And we have given ourselves to strifes of words, wherein is no profit, to the subverting of the hearers.

If we have not actually become like the elders and nobles of Jezreel, who were the tools of Jezebel in stoning Naboth and taking his vineyard, we have, like the other inhabitants of the city, stood by and seen it done. We have tried to keep peace for and with the Assassin (but not the peace of God), when we should have made his house like the house of Ahab, and brought upon him the judgment of Jezebel and Athaliah.

But we are beginning to be ashamed of ourselves, and to remember and reflect that God, who made heaven and earth, is on the side of those who maintain the righteous cause.

I very much regret to add that Canon Tristram, who has contributed so much to our instruction and interest, is suffering seriously from a compound fracture of his leg, caused by the kick of a horse. It will probably detain him in Jerusalem for some weeks. It is providential that his two daughters are with him. Rev. W. Hazeldine, vicar of the Temple Church, Bristol, was also dangerously hurt by a carriage, which threw him down, injured an eyebrow, and broke two ankle bones. He was attended by Dr. Hallwright, of Birmingham, one of the passengers, brought to Jaffa by rail, and cleverly hoisted on board on a stretcher.

I am sure many will be thankful that these accidents have not been fatal, and will pray for the recovery of the sufferers. R. C. Morgan.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 11.

"Quiet from the fear of evil."—Prov. i. 33.

"Whoso." This promise is to us all. To the man in the street, as much as for those of us who have been nurtured in Christian homes.

The evil is taken out of things for those whose hearts are full of God. Nothing which God allows to come to us is really evil, except sin. Put away sin from your heart, and let it be filled with Love and Faith, and behold all things will become new. They will lose their evil semblance, because you will look at them with new eyes. Men talk against the March wind, but when they understand that it is cleansing fœtid dens of fever-germs, they regard it as a blessing. Men dread change, anything unwonted or unaccustomed, but when they find that the transplanted fruit-tree will often attain a greater maturity than when left to one spot of soil, they welcome it. If you look at things apart from God, especially if you anticipate the future without Him, you have good cause for fear; but if you hearken to and obey Him, if you know and love Him, if you abide in God and God in you, you will see that the evil is not in things or events, but in yourself. Give yourself as alms to God, and lo all things will become clean to you.

Death shall lose its terrors, and become the Father's servant, ushering you into his presence. Pain and suffering shall but cast into relief the stars of Divine promise. Poverty will have no pangs, and storm no alarms. You shall become so habituated to find the rarest blessings associated with what often men dread most, that you will be quiet from all fear of evil, and able to look with equanimity on a sea of troubles.

MONDAY, April 12.

"If thou seek her as silver, and search for her as for hid treasures," etc.—Prov. ii. 4, 5.

There is a beautiful illustration of the truth of these words in the life of Justin the Martyr, who died for the Gospel in the second century. As a young man he earnestly sought for truth, specially that which would arm him with self-control. He took up one system of philosophy after another, trying them as a man might explore mine after mine for silver. Finally, he found that every effort was futile.

> All at last did faithless prove,
> And, late or soon, betrayed my love.

At length, wandering in despair on the seashore, he met an aged man, a Christian, who spake as none had ever done to his heart, and pointed him to God in Christ. Beneath those words, that afternoon, he understood the fear of the Lord, and found the knowledge of God.

Thomas longed for evidences of the Resurrection, and Christ came to him. The Chamberlain, as he sat in his chariot reading the book of Esaias the Prophet at chapter liii., was desirous to know the truth, and Philip was sent to him. To Saul of Tarsus, groping in the midnight, there came fuller revelations than ever Gamaliel gave, through Stephen and Ananias, led by the Spirit of God.

But you must be prepared to sacrifice all. He who seeks diamonds, or pearls, or gold will leave his native land, and what other men hold dear, and centre his whole attention on his quest. Not otherwise must it be with those who would understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God. They must be willing to count all things but loss, to sell all they have, in order to buy the field with its treasure-trove.

TUESDAY, April 13.

"He shall direct thy paths."—Prov. iii. 6.

Thy paths! Then every man's path is distinct for him, and for no other. The paths may lie side by side, but they are different. They have converged, they may diverge. When Peter had been told of the rugged nature of the predestined path which was marked out for him in the Providence of God, he turned towards John, his companion and friend, and said to Jesus, "What shall this man do?" And the Lord instantly replied, in effect: "That is a matter in which I can brook no interference; it is entirely a matter for my choice and will; if I will; it may be that he shall tarry till I come." The strong self-element was burnt out of Peter by a tragic martyrdom, but from John by a long waiting.

We need to be divinely directed. The man who stands above the maze can direct you through all its labyrinth by the readiest path. God who made thee for thy life, and thy life for thee, can direct thee, and He only. But there are two conditions that thou must fulfil:—

First: Lean not to thine own understanding. One is apt to pride oneself on one's far-sighted judgment. We consult our maps and guides and the opinions of fellow-travellers, to find ourselves at fault. We have to learn that our own understanding is not keen enough or wise enough to direct; we must abjure and renounce all dependence on it.

Second: In all thy ways acknowledge Him. Let thine eye be single: thy one aim to please Him; thy sole motive, his glory. It is marvellous how certainly and delightfully our way opens before us when we no longer look down on it, or around at others, but simply upwards into the face of the Master Christ. Then a still small voice says behind us, "This is the way; walk in it."

WEDNESDAY, April 14.

"The path of the righteous is as the light of dawn, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov. iv. 18, R.V. marg.

This may be referred to the work of God in the heart. He who commanded light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God. A little glimmering ray at first, God's light in the soul grows ever from less to more, revealing Himself and manifesting ourselves, so that we are growingly attracted from the self-life to circle around Him.

But probably it is true also of the graciousness of the believer's life. At first it shows itself in little acts of blessing on children and the poor; but the range of influence is always apt to increase, till what was a glimmer of helpfulness becomes as the sun shining in strength. The Sunday-school teacher becomes the preacher; the visitor among the poor becomes the philanthropist; the witness to the Gospel in the factory is called to witness in the great theatre of the world. See to it that there is a steady obedience to God's least promptings and monitions. Follow on to know the Lord, and to be conformed to his all-wise purpose.

Once again, notice the comparison in its exquisite beauty. Light is so gentle, noiseless, and tender. There is no sound, its voice is not heard. So is the influence of the holy soul. Its life becomes the light of men. As with the angel over the plain of Bethlehem, it sheds a light around those whom it will presently address.

THURSDAY, April 15.

"The level path of life." "He maketh level all his paths."—Prov. v. 6, 21, R.V.

It is a remarkable expression, "the level path of life"; and there is great comfort in knowing that God is ever before us, levelling our pathway, taking insurmountable obstacles out of the way, so that our feet do not stumble.

It may be that you are facing a great mountain range of difficulty. Before you obstacles, apparently insuperable, rear themselves like a giant wall to heaven. When you cross the Jordan there is also a Jericho which appears to bar all further advance, and your heart fails. But you are bidden to believe that there is a level path right through those mighty barriers; a pass, as it is called. The walking there is easy and pleasant if only you will let yourself be led to it. God has made it, but you must find it. How we dread the thought of those steep cliffs! It seems as though we could never climb them; but if we would only look at the Lord instead of at the hills, if we would look above the hills to Jehovah, we should be able to rest in sure faith that He would show us the level path of life.

Your path is not level but full of boulders which have rolled down upon and choked it. But may this not be partly due to your mistakes or sins, to your wilfulness and self-dependence? There are sorrows and trials in all lives, but these need not obstruct our progress. The text surely refers to those difficulties which threaten us with their arrest, putting barriers in our way. These would be levelled if we gave the direction of our lives more absolutely into God's hands. When Peter reached the iron gate he found it open; when the women reached the sepulchre door they found the stone gone.

FRIDAY, April 16.

"Bind them continually upon thine heart, tie them about thy neck."—Prov. vi. 21.

If the son addressed here is bidden to thus care for the words of his parents, how much more should he ponder those of God as given us in God's blessed Book.

When thou walkest, it shall lead thee.—There is a little circle of friends whom I know of who read this book of Proverbs through every month for practical direction on the path of life. A Westcountryman said of this collection of wise words, "If any man shall maister the Book of Proverbs, no man shall maister he." Take for instance the weighty counsels of the first five verses. How many lives would have been saved from bitter anguish and disappointment if only they had been ruled by them. Let every young man also ponder the closing verses. Let us all meditate more constantly on the Word of God.

When thou sleepest, it shall watch thee.—The man who meditates on the Word of God by day will not be troubled by evil dreams at night. Whatever unholy spirits may prowl around his bed, they will be restrained from molesting him whose head is pillowed on some holy word of God. And on awakening, the Angel of Revelation will whisper words of encouragement and love.

And when thou awakest, it shall talk with thee.—The heart is accustomed to commune with itself about many things, but when the mind is full of God through his Word, it seems as though the monologue becomes a dialogue. To all our wonderings, fears, questionings, answers come back from the infinite glory in words of Scripture.

SATURDAY, April 17.

"Say unto wisdom, Thou art my sister, and call understanding thy kinswoman."—Prov. vii. 4.

In other places Wisdom seems to stand for the Word of God, who was God. Are we then unduly stretching the matter when we allow these words to remind us of the gentler, tenderer, more womanly aspects of the character of the Lord Jesus? In Him there is neither male nor female, because there is the complete human nature, and the characteristics of man and woman blend perfectly. Two or three traits occur to us from his earthly life.

It was with the sensitive purity of a woman that He bent his face to the ground and wrote on the dust when her accusers brought to Him a woman taken in the act of sin. It was with the thoughtfulness of a woman that He provided the meal for his weary and wave-drenched sailor friends on the shores of the lake. It was with a woman's intuition that He read Mary's desire to anoint Him for his burying. It was with a woman's patience that He bore with His disciples.

It is this in Jesus which has so deeply satisfied men like Faber, Bernard, Rutherford, and thousands more who have been shut from the delights of human love, but have found in Jesus the complement of their need, the satisfaction of their hunger and thirst. In Him the vision of the sweet mother of early childhood is restored, or of the angel-sister now with God, or of the early love which was never destined to be realised.

Women find in Jesus the strength on which they can lean all their weakness; and men find the tender thoughtful sympathy to which they can utterly entrust themselves. We are born for the infinite and divine; earthly loves, at their best, are only the patterns of things in the heavens. They are priceless, but let us treat them as sacraments, setting forth the unseen and eternal. F. B. M.

Deep-Sea Fishermen.

WORK IN LABRADOR.

WHILE much attention is being attracted to travel and adventure amidst ice and snow, and the world is showering its honours on the man who for scientific objects has risked his life amidst circumpolar perils, it is good to look around and see that for the sake of Christ's Gospel deeds no less brave are being enacted. Inside the Arctic circle, north of the mouth of the Mackenzie River, Rev. O. Stringer, with his devoted wife, is working among the Eskimo, to whom the name of Jesus was entirely unknown until he took up his station there, as he himself informed me. During the winter the sun is lost for one month entirely in this region. Then there is Rev. E. J. Peck's work in Baffin's Land, Cumberland Inlet, where communication is quite usually a matter of two years, where there are not even one's own crew of kindred spirits to talk to, and where intellectual companionship is entirely absent. Here Mr. Peck's companion, Mr. Parker, and six men lost their lives last year. The Moravian Brethren in Northern Greenland and Labrador live out their solitary lives at times for thirty years without the prospect of returning to a loved family and the cherished associations of home. Their wives are chosen by lot, and sent out to them to share the isolation of their lives, while their dear children, lost to their parents when seven or eight years old, if ever seen again, are by that time grown into estranged men and women with occupations and interests of their own.

For long travels with Eskimo dogs and komatic or sleighs over frozen seas and snow-clad mountains, Doctors Robinson and Willway, medical missionaries, of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, have accomplished wonderful work. In the winter of 1894, when quite new to Arctic travel, Dr. Willway covered with his dogs 1200 miles, visiting all the stations between the Straits of Belle Isle and Davis Inlet, north of Hopedale, and all the north side of the Straits to Blanc Sablon and back, preaching the Gospel, healing the sick, and often assisting to keep the actual wolf from the door by the timely giving out of labour for relief, also flour, pork, and molasses.

In the winter of 1895 Dr. Robinson, though only just invalided home from medical mission work in Central Africa, accomplished 2000 miles in the same way. Equipped with some 12 to 18 dogs, a good sledge, a half-breed driver, his sealskin sleeping bag, and Eskimo skin clothes, he started from Rigolet, a station of the Hudson Bay Company in Hamilton Inlet, where he had a small cottage hospital, to which he had removed the patients he could not discharge from the summer hospital on an outside island called Indian Island. Leaving in December, he was able to carry enough medicines, in compressed tabloid form, to enable him to treat during his long trip 300 sick persons. He travelled north, now over the sea, now over low promontories, now over high and dangerous mountains as far as Nackvak, the most northern station of the Hudson Bay Company in Labrador, and the most northern settlement also of any kind on the coast. On the southern journey he visited up the long inlets of Hamilton and Cartwright, and once again reached Cape York in time to proceed down the Straits, travelled to Blanc Sablon, and was back at work at Battle Hospital before the sea opened enough to allow the first fishing schooners, harbingers of the great summer fishing fleets of 20,000 fisher folk, to pick their dangerous path north through the ice floe.

Dr. Willway again this winter is on his travels. Under date of January 8 he writes: "The journey west to Harrington Islands and back is now an accomplished fact (i.e., 400 miles). I am now bound north. The fall has been the severest on record, according to the books in the Merchants' Room at Battle Harbour, which show the temperatures, etc., for over forty years back. This is, of course, fortunate in one way, for it makes the ice safer and often the snow harder, and therefore better travelling."

Dr. Willway tells of many cases of suffering relieved, and as in past years God has been pleased to follow with his blessing these loyal efforts "to preach the Gospel to the poor and to heal the sick."

But here also ladies share the dangers and difficulties of an Arctic climate. In 1895, Nurse Carwardine remained all winter alone at the little mission hospital at Battle Harbour. Now driving with a dog-sleigh to visit someone too ill to reach the kindly shelter of that outpost of Christian love, now tramping on snow shoes to some humble cottage to cheer those in trouble, and carry the presence of her Master into the lonely settler's home. Much work had also to be done by her for the hungry and naked, for the summer fishing had been a failure, and the Newfoundland financial crash had cut off the usual winter supply. This winter, Nurse Williams, formerly matron in a comfortable English hospital, is wintering at the same little hospital, the doors of which, on that bleak and inhospitable coast, have not been closed for over three years. She writes cheerily by the only winter mail carried by dogs 800 miles to Quebec. A nasty accident with the dogs seemed likely to prove fatal in late December, for having slipped down, the whole hungry pack at once attacked her, and had it not been for the fortunate arrival of a man with an axe it might have been fatal. When we were at Hebron this year, the Eskimo told me that the dogs had recently killed and half eaten a boy of thirteen years, who was bringing a seal from his father's kayak to the tubik or tent.

But we in England must not exaggerate the dangers, as we are very apt to do, simply because we have no actual experience of Arctic ice. When a gale of wind has heaved a sea under the ice fields, and sent it "all aboard," as our men say, I have seen with my own eyes a man slip into the frigid water as he endeavoured to jump from one piece of ice to another. What did he do then? His companion with his seal gaff hooked him out again (they never go alone). Then he took his clothes off on the ice; wrung out the water and put them on again—while if it was only his legs in, he scrapes off the "fish ice," as they call it, and coolly pursues his occupation. The ship may be four or five miles away before a change can be secured, and yet, though a medical missionary, and therefore likely to know if any harm resulted, I cannot remember any bad consequences.

If your readers would specially remember those brave men working for God amidst dangers and privations, no little good would be the result, in the blessing that would descend on their labours and their peoples, from the recent voyage to the "Farthest North."

Wilfred Grenfell, Supt. R.N., M.D.S.F.

The Council of the M.D.S.F. have appointed Sundays, April 4 to 18, as Mission Hospital Sundays—the extension of time is necessary owing to the exigencies of weather and other influences at sea.

Mr. W. F. A. Archibald gives an account in Toilers of the Deep, of further developments of the temperance operations of the Mission:—

"Miss Marion Channing, who has been a most energetic friend of the Society as hon. secretary at Reading, and also as hon. secretary for the Scotch and Manx Fisherlads' Association, is giving up the latter work into the hands of Miss Agnes Stanley, on purpose to undertake the position of hon. organising secretary of our Temperance Society.

"It is hoped to establish a branch in each of our principal fishing ports, and this portion of the work can of course be extended to include fishermen of all kinds, if no similar organisation is doing the work in any particular port. At Gorleston, Great Yarmouth, Mrs. Newport, about a year since, started amongst the fisherlads and the men and their wives at Gorleston with whom she corresponds, a temperance association known as the 'Mizpah Temperance Band.' This little band already numbers over seventy members, many of whom are very enthusiastic advocates of the temperance cause. It is proposed to make this the nucleus for work in Gorleston and Yarmouth, and to turn the Mizpah Band into the Gorleston and Yarmouth branch of the Society."

Lord's Day Rest.

THE fortieth anniversary of the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association was held on Wednesday last week in Holborn Restaurant.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who presided, commended the work of the association as neither political nor sectarian in its efforts. He viewed with disfavour the action of those who participated in social and political demonstrations in London on the Lord's Day, though no doubt those who did so were actuated by the best motives. He concluded by advocating the necessity for London pastors and clergymen doing all they could to make the religious ordinances in their places of worship as attractive as possible. He had occasionally attended "dead-and-alive" services in the metropolis which had made him doubt whether or not it would not have been better for body and soul if he had taken instead a walk in the suburbs.

The secretary of the Association, Mr. Charles Hill, afterwards presented the fortieth annual report, which showed that the expenditure for the year had been £1423, as against £1200 receipts. The committee regretted to record that during the past year Sunday labour had been "most unnecessarily inflicted on the attendants at seven Metropolitan museums and picture galleries for the mere gratification and amusement of a small section of the public who are striving to make the day of rest a day of sight-seeing for some and toil for others." There were 438 petitions to Parliament in furtherance of the objects of the society, and the signatures were 33,911, as against four petitions with 191 signatures presented for the Sunday opening of museums. Reference was made to a memorial signed by 734 members of the dramatic and musical professions "who desire to express the hope that the law which prohibits the Sunday opening of places of amusement and entertainment for money on Sundays may be upheld." It was further stated that the London County Council music licences declared that the person licensed "should not open his house or place on the Lord's Day." This condition of the licence, it was contended, had been "grossly violated at many halls, hotels, and restaurants, with the distinct sanction and connivance of the London County Council."

Lord Kinnaird thoroughly endorsed all the chairman had said with respect to the scope and work of their Association. It was representative of all parties, and all worked together for the good of a common cause. He earnestly hoped that the younger members of the community would take a more active interest in the labours of the Association. He alluded to the great amount of ignorance that existed in many parts of the country on the question of Sunday Observance, and urged the necessity for active steps being taken to remedy the evil. He suggested that what was wanted was a great educational movement whereby proper instruction upon the subject could be obtained. His lordship also referred to the good results that might be obtained if in our Sunday-schools there was systematic instruction upon our Lord's commands with regard to the observance of Sunday, and the dangers which would result from neglect of that command. He felt that such teaching would be of much value, and would have a beneficial effect on the rising generation.

Addresses followed by Mr. H. Williams (a working man), Mr. G. F. Chambers, Miss Amy Sedgwick, Col. Rotton, and Messrs. Johnston, Girdlestone, and Butler.

A week of prayer and effort on behalf of the observance of the Lord's Day is being arranged for April 25 to May 2, when it is hoped that many clergymen and ministers will preach on the observance of the Lord's Day and many Christians will on each day of the week offer special prayers to God that this Divine gift, this inestimable blessing may be preserved to our country and race.

Congo-Balolo Mission.

THOUGH only a few years old, the Congo-Balolo Mission is an enterprise with a worthy record and full of youthful vigour. The record is one to stir the hearts of such as feel for the woes of Africa; and present activities, so joyous and promising, call for devout thankfulness to a gracious God for sending forth John McKittrick and his numerous successors in labour in Lololand. Like all African missions, this has had clouds intermitting the sunshine, discouragements as well as fruition; but the faith which justified the inauguration of the work, and has sustained those who went forth and such as were instrumental in sending them, has grown with the years, and is now strong in confidence that still more abundant blessing will attend continued efforts, and crown future testimony for Christ among the millions of Central Africa.

The eighth anniversary of the Mission was celebrated on Tuesday evening last week, when Exeter Hall was filled with friends and supporters of the work. The "attraction" did not consist in speeches alone; for Dr. Harry Guinness was announced to give an illustrated report by means of limelight views, and farewell was to be bidden to a party of outgoing missionaries. The chair was occupied by Lord Kinnaird, who was influentially supported. The devotional portion of the service was undertaken by Messrs. E. H. Glenny, Eugene Stock, J. Colville, M.P., and Dr. W. McAdam Eccles. In prayer and song the friends threw themselves and the work upon the Lord of the harvest.

Dr. Harry Guinness introduced the following missionaries, returned and outgoing: Mr. and Mrs. Bowen, Mr. Gilchrist, Miss Gilchrist, Miss Rudkin, Messrs. Ellis, Frost, Woollings, Whiteside, Lower, and Stannard. As there was not time for each to address the meeting, the whole repeated Psalm xxiii., and brief statements were made by Messrs. Bowen and Gilchrist. The former, from the Bongandanga district on the Lopori River, told of the conversion of cannibal natives, who, being men of peculiar oratorical powers, are doing noble work as evangelists. The latter dwelt upon the need of the many tribes who are still sitting in darkness, having never heard the name of Christ.

Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. Church Missionary Society, spoke words of hearty sympathy with the Mission, and emphasized the urgent need of Christian testimony in the dark places of the earth. He deplored the prevalent misconception whereby Christians fail to distinguish between things truly great and mere worldly trifles. The way to spread peace is not by displaying military power, but by sending the Gospel throughout the world; on this the world cannot be educated until it is converted, but Christian society requires to be so educated, in order that work for God and man may be seen in its true light. The speaker looked forward with prayerful interest to the time when workers from the C.M.S. outposts in the Uganda country would join hands with the missionaries who are penetrating the country along the upper reaches of the Congo river.

In the course of his report, Dr. Guinness intimated that up to the present sixty missionaries had gone to the Congo in connection with the Mission. During last year twelve were sent, and a like number is leaving this year. The limelight exhibition included portraits of many of the workers and native scenes and incidents. At the various stations there are at present 150 church members, and a larger number of people who have learned to read, and are being influenced for good. The work of Scripture translation is progressing, three Gospels having already been published. During the current year £10,000 will be required to carry on the work; and towards this amount promises and offerings were gathered towards the close of the meeting. The concluding address was by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, who held that the Church needs more true enthusiasm for Christ and his cause. Mr. Gooch led the meeting in a searching of hearts on questions of love and duty, sacrifice and service, in the name of Christ.

[294]

Children's Scripture Union.

THE annual gatherings of this useful and now world-wide organisation took place in Exeter Hall on Thursday last. There was a large and representative attendance of local secretaries from London and different parts of the country, and the general public also mustered in strong force. Rev. E. A. Stuart, who is president of the Union, occupied the chair in the afternoon.

Mr. T. B. Bishop, hon. sec., gave an interesting account of the work of the past year. He spoke of the successful efforts being put forth amongst young people in different parts of India by Mr. Bernard Herklots, who has been welcomed there by all Christian denominations. The work in Japan, commenced in 1884 by the late Mrs. Marshall Lang, has been specially encouraging. Dr. Whitney, who superintends the work there, states that the Union has grown to such dimensions in Japan as to necessitate the appointment, if possible, of another travelling secretary at a cost of £50 a year. The need of a Bible-woman is also urgently felt. A somewhat discouraging reference was made to the position of the Union in Madagascar. The French occupation of the island has so interfered with the work of the missionaries that the Scripture Union cards have fallen in number from ten to five thousand.

The Chairman addressed the secretaries present on a seven-fold idea of service, as contained in Scripture: the service of the slave, of the child, of the household servant, of intimacy, of obedience, of the man who will follow his master anywhere and everywhere, and service for the people. This seven-fold idea, added Mr. Stuart, threw a beautiful rainbow across all the dark clouds of service, and lighted them up with a glory as from heaven itself. Though the world might think little of it, the Master would Himself recognise their service in that day when He would say to each, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Rev. L. G. Scott Price (Tinnevelly) said that there are now over 4000 Scripture Union members in that district. He further testified to the great assistance that they gave towards the extension of Christian work. A young people's mission, composed of young men varying from eighteen years of age, regularly went to the different villages in Tinnevelly, holding meetings for the children and others.

Mr. A. G. Dodderidge addressed the younger portion of the audience, specially pointing out the need of conversion to God as the basis of successful work for Him. Mr. J. R. Naylor (Derby) showed how necessary it was, for the sake of example to others, that God's professing children should live absolutely consistent, earnest, and cheerful Christian lives.

Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who presided at the evening meeting, emphasised the importance of a strict adhesion to Bible truth in the religious training of young people. He went on to illustrate the powerful influence that youth can often exert in leading to the Saviour those of maturer years. He read a number of letters received from sailor-lads on the North Sea, who bore witness to the great spiritual benefit they had received through the instrumentality of the Children's Scripture Union.

Rev. Dr. Wright (British and Foreign Bible Society) dwelt on the indestructibility of the Word of God. This Jubilee year, he said, would be a record year in Bible circulation. On the previous day they received from the Bible Society's agent in China and the Settlements the remarkable statement that he had printed and put into stock 545,000 copies of the Scriptures this year. Rev. T. Longstaff (Vicar of Cinderford, Glos.) gave a very encouraging account of the work carried on by the Union in his district. Amongst the other speakers, Mr. R. Callender (assistant-secretary) gave some useful hints as to the adoption of certain methods likely to make the work increasingly successful; Mr. D. M. Thornton gave facts to show how powerful an influence the Union is exercising upon the boys and young men at our public schools and universities; and Mr. A. E. Gwyn closed the speaking with a few appropriate words.

Stratford Conference Hall.

THE Conference Hall in West Ham-lane, Stratford, is the outcome of aggressive work, and for the advancement of the same it exists, and commands the ardent support of Christian men and women in East London and beyond. Not only is the Hall a centre of evangelistic endeavour, carefully organised and vigorously conducted; but it is the home of the Y.M.C.A. with a host of allied institutions, giving direction and help to scores of workers, and influencing a large working-class population for their moral and spiritual good.

The anniversary of the Hall falls in the springtime, when nature is full of promise; and at the recurring celebrations those who carry on the work look forward with unwavering hopefulness. This spirit, so indicative of faith in the Gospel and trust in the God of truth, rightly prevailed on Wednesday last week, when Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided over the public meeting. The unfavourable weather interfered somewhat with the attendance, but it did not depress the leaders of the work. As usual, Mr. C. Boardman presented the report, which opened with a note of thankfulness for the many evidences of the thirst of the people for the Gospel, and the power of "the old, old story" to allay that thirst.

Describing the various agencies, the report said:—The men and women's Mizpah Bands have been busy in their various spheres of labour. The evangelistic section of the band has held eighty-seven meetings in mission halls, etc., in addition to meetings conducted weekly in common lodging-houses, rescue homes, and workhouses. In the open air, Gospel meetings have been held, some of them being continued through the winter. No less than 300 meetings have been held during the year by members of the Mizpah Band and Y.M.C.A. While the temporal needs of the people have not been neglected. The Slate Club reports an income of £78 7s. 3d. The Y.M.C.A. enrolled 117 new associates, and thirty-six (a large increase on previous years), who gave satisfactory proof of having taken Christ as their Lord and Saviour, were admitted into full membership. The interest in foreign missions has not slackened, and another member has gone into college to be trained for foreign service, making a total of eight in the field and three in course of training.

KEEPING SPIRITUAL THINGS FIRST,

The Christian Workers' training class has been much appreciated, and has been very helpful to those members who are privileged to proclaim the Gospel in the open air and in mission-halls. The intellectual and physical needs of the young men have been provided for by the debating chamber, the gymnasium, and other institutions. The young men's Sunday afternoon Bible-class (strictly limited to young men) has MADE MARKED PROGRESS.

From an average attendance of ninety-eight, at the beginning of the year, the numbers steadily increased, till at the close an average attendance of 132 was registered. The Junior Y.M.C.A., in addition to other week-night meetings, has a Bible-class on Sunday afternoons, which is attended by lads between twelve and sixteen years of age. The average attendance during 1896 was 102. The Y.M.C.A. Children's Mission has continued its work amidst many encouragements.

The work among the young women has steadily advanced; there are now 131 regular attendants at the Tuesday evening Bible-class. In connection with the work of the Hall, the sympathies of the people have been enlisted in behalf of the regions beyond, and over £100, largely collected at meetings, was sent to various missionary societies. But for the expenditure of a considerable sum in repairs, the balance-sheet would have shown something on the right side; there is nothing to discourage in the fact that the sheet shows a balance of £15 due to bank and cashier.

The meeting was warmly spiritual in tone from beginning to end. The Chairman's words were eminently stimulating, and the address of Mr. John Colville, M.P., on the work of the Holy Spirit was highly appreciated. The Countess Schimmelmann gave a deeply interesting account of her labours on the Continent. At the close of the meeting several sums were promised towards the support of the various undertakings, among these being the reflooring of one of the rooms, and the repairing of the useful little Iron Hall.

Mrs. Grace Stott,

OF THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

A QUARTER of a century of active Gospel service in such a field as China surely gives one the right to produce a book descriptive of foreign missionary work. We think that all will agree in this, who are privileged to read the volume which Mrs. Stott has written and which Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton have recently published under the title of "Twenty-six Years of Missionary Work in China." It is in the form of a personal narrative, embracing the labours of her husband and herself in China, from their marriage in 1870 to the time of his death, which took place at Cannes exactly eight years ago, and her own subsequent efforts to carry on and extend the work in which they had been jointly engaged.

A few months after Mr. Stott's death we gave in these columns his portrait and an account of the truly remarkable success which God had vouchsafed to him and his life partner in preaching the Gospel to the Chinese in the city of Wenchow and the surrounding district. We need not now repeat any of the details then furnished to our readers. The full story is told in Mrs. Stott's book, and a most inspiring record it is of devoted service for Christ carried on in the face of difficulties, oppositions, and persecutions that would have caused less faithful servants to falter, if not to relinquish the task. God had regard to the faith and zeal of this Christian couple, so that after years of liberal sowing and patient waiting, they saw the fruit of their labours in the founding and growth of native churches in Wenchow and elsewhere. The book amply confirms what we have often heard from the lips of friends working in China, that when the Chinese are thoroughly turned from their idols to worship and serve the true God, no greater or more persistent fidelity to his truth can be found in the converts of any land.

Mrs. Stott gives some interesting details of her early Christian life, which ought to carry an encouraging message to all young friends who are looking to God for light and guidance on their future path. Four years after her conversion her heart was greatly drawn out towards China, through the addresses in Glasgow of Mr. Hudson Taylor, prior to his first departure for that spiritually needy part of the world. Failing health at that juncture prevented Mrs. Stott (Miss Ciggie as she then was) from proceeding abroad, The clear message came to her that she was wanted for a time in her native Scotland. She responded to the call of duty, and as to the result she writes:—

> After three and a half years in the slums of Glasgow, my health being restored, I felt the time had come for me to go forth to China; having in the meantime become engaged to Mr. Stott, I was sent out by the C.I.M. to share his labours and be as far as possible a helpmeet to him.

She sailed in December, 1869, and in the end of April, 1870, was married to Mr. Stott at Ningpo. Thenceforward till her husband's lamented death nineteen years later they were one in heart and devoted service for the Master among the Chinese, and it would be impossible to say which of them had greater blessing by God's help in their Christian life and testimony. Both were greatly respected and loved by many of those among whom they laboured. After Mr. Stott's death an eloquently simple but most touching tribute was paid to his memory by one of the converts, and this appears in the book. The writer quaintly observes:—

> Mr. Stott's disposition was straight and righteous and very intelligent; in that respect there are very few men like him. To look upon him was to feel awe, but to know and come near him he was gentle and gracious. In all matters he thought all round first, and then acted. His words were few, but his wisdom was great. Whatever he said he always did. ...He came to Wenchow twenty-four years ago, and four years later Mrs. Stott joined him. Together they worked the will of God, happy that they were chosen for such work. They organised churches, opened and maintained boarding-schools, not regarding time nor money, rescuing orphans and other poor children, teaching them to read and understand the Bible. Not afraid of toil and suffering, he went out to near and distant places preaching, selling books, and helping the distressed. All this he did that the Gospel might spread abroad.

For compactness and expressiveness of style, and for the power of saying a great deal in few words, the writer of this delightful tribute is much to be envied.

Towards the close of the same year in which her husband died, Mrs. Stott returned to her loved and now hallowed field of service at Wenchow. She was accompanied by Miss Bardsley, who has proved to be, in answer to the prayer of herself and her husband before his death, as a very daughter to her in her widowed loneliness, as well as an able helper in the work. The latter half of the book is taken up with the further developments, successes, discouragements, and vicissitudes of the work at Wenchow. We cannot here go into details, but we very warmly commend the narrative to all lovers of missionary effort. Mrs. Stott assumed her husband's place in the direction of the work, and she was fortunate in many of the native helpers that God raised up, as well as in the reinforcements that came from the home country time after time. Specially interesting are the accounts given of the periodical journeys made to surrounding stations, so as to confirm the faith of the little native Christian communities, or break up fresh ground with the Gospel message. These abundant labours must have been a great strain on Mrs. Stott's health and strength, as the ultimate issue proved. The reports of these journeys embodied in the book are frequently from the pens of some lady helpers who accompanied her, and thus an element of variety is given to the story. Here and there the reader gets pleasing glimpses of matters affecting the country and the people not generally to be found in missionary literature. Writing of one journey, Mrs. Stott's pen goes almost into ecstasies about the "unsurpassed beauty" of the mountain scenery through which she and her fellow-travellers passed. She says:—

> Altogether it was a scene to inspire the commonest mind and send the poet and the painter into raptures. Yet in the midst of all this beauty, poverty and filth, sin and misery abound. Our hearts were drawn out in deep gratitude to God that in this remote mountainous region, with its widely scattered villages, the Gospel of his grace was known and loved by not a few.

In the summer of 1892 Mrs. Stott and Miss Bardsley took a much-needed change and paid a visit to Japan. The latter supplies an interesting account of this trip, and it is instructive to read the comparison she draws between the Japanese and Chinese people:—

> We are very thankful that our work lies in China, for though we have trials and difficulties that workers in Japan have not, they have difficulties we know nothing of. The Japanese are lively, polite, clever people, beautifully clean, and in many respects loveable, but they have no depth. Quickly converted to Christianity, many as quickly go back; they often take offence and leave one church and join another. The Chinese, on the other hand, are quiet, sober people, filthy in all their habits, slow to take in an idea, and as slow to adopt it; but when once they do nothing will move them.

Failing strength eventually convinced Mrs. Stott that additional help must be got for the due maintenance and oversight of the growing work. In February, 1895, Mr. and Mrs. Woodman, who had been earnest workers at the Soldiers' Home, Lichfield, before going to China, were designated by Mr. Hudson Taylor for Wenchow. They reached the city in time to take a part in the very interesting celebration of Mrs. Stott's fiftieth birthday and her completion of twenty-five years' service in the foreign field. It was a time of happiness and rejoicing, and the tokens of love and goodwill which she received from the native Christians must have rewarded her for all the years of exhausting toil she had spent among them. Troublous times unhappily followed some months later, and persecution broke out in the district. Mrs. Stott's health was so precarious, that she was immediately ordered back to England, and she was not able to pass the ordeal of formal good-byes. In the autumn of 1895 she left China, and sailed for the home country by way of Canada. The voyage partly restored her strength but when she reached New York on the homeward journey, she learned by telegraph that her successors at Wenchow, Mr. and Mrs Woodman, with other English and native helpers, had fallen victims to cholera. In the providence of God she herself had been removed from the district before the dangers came, and her life is still spared. A period of residence in this country has given her renewed health and vigour, and it is her earnest hope and desire to spend her remaining years among her loved Chinese, though much of the burden and responsibility must in future rest on younger shoulders. Her many friends will wish that the desire of her heart may be granted, and that God will yet enable her to add a fitting crown to a life of willing devotion to Christ and his Gospel.

(From photograph by Mr. T. C. Turner, Barnsbury Park, N.)

Impressions of India.

By DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

THERE is an overwhelming impression of almost countless multitudes, with needs and destinies as important as our own. One is stirred to compassion, for they are still as sheep without a shepherd. India contains one-fifth of humanity, and the bulk are still utterly unevangelised.

This vast people is wholly given to idolatry. Temples, small, dark, dirty, ugly, and repulsive, stand open everywhere. Vile images of men, monkeys, bulls, and elephants are adored. The mind and conscience of the people are in abject slavery to the vilest superstitions. The darkness of India can be felt. It is a world of moral night. Religion has become animalism. The immoral priest washes his senseless idol, and worships it before your face. The Brahman stands there to argue in his defence. The fakir sits naked in the sun, smeared with ashes, with wild, uncombed locks, like a beast from the woods, and deems himself the most religious of mankind. India worships three hundred millions of divinities. To her, God is everything, and everything is God, and, therefore, everything may be adored. Snakes and monsters are her special divinities. Her pan-deism is a pandemonium. The things she sacrifices to idols she sacrifices to devils.

O for light! light! Millions grope at noon, and stumble into perdition without a warning voice. They know not the true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent. And we in England and America are content to preach and press the Gospel, time after time, with measureless labour and expense on our home thousands, and leave these millions untaught, unwarned, unshepherded! How is this? Our missionary societies send them a few missionaries, but what are our churches doing? What right have the churches to delegate this tremendous work of raising up the entire heathen world to a few overburdened societies? Let every church arise and do its share directly for the salvation of mankind, and the problem of the world's evangelisation will soon be solved. Let every pastor, every elder, every deacon, every church member, every Sunday-school teacher, every individual Christian, be taught to feel this work is mine. I am personally responsible to give the Gospel to some part of this unevangelised world. I have my share to attend to in this sacred business. No other can do my work, or answer for me before the judgment seat of God. Let me do my personal part in the work of saving mankind, or renounce the name of Christian.

No door is shut in India. The cities are open, the towns, the villages, the streets, the shops, the zenanas, the halls, the market-places, the whole country and population. You may go where you will, and say what you will, none daring to make you afraid. The people sit by the wayside waiting for you. They wait, with their meek eyes looking out for the advent of the messenger of saving truth. A change has come over their thoughts. They have begun to scorn their priests and suspect their idols. They are willing to hear God's Word when it is brought to them. But there are few to bring it. Scarce one Christian in a thousand has the heart to help them. Mammon is too mighty for our pity and piety. Our small home interests hide from us the immeasurable interests of a perishing world. The millions of the heathen to most of us are as though they had no existence whatever. Who shall roll away the dark reproach? Let each one roll it from his own door. Our responsibility is individual. As individuals let us meet it in all its magnitude.—Missionary Review of the World.

Slavery in Zanzibar. — According to Mr. Chas. H. Allen, of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, we may shortly expect to hear that a proclamation has been issued declaring the abolition of slavery in Zanzibar and Pemba.

The Gospel in Venezuela.

THE monthly organ of the Scripture Gift Mission (84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.) publishes a deeply interesting letter from a lady missionary in Caracas, Venezuela, who had circulated Illustrated Gospels in Spanish, supplied by the Mission.

"Let those who murmur at the free distribution of the Gospels and New Testaments get to work among the dark and prejudiced Roman Catholics who surround us. The interest in their souls shown by giving them the Gospel, arouses in them a fresh train of thought, which, in time, we hope the Gospel may confirm. An illustration of this we had in a woman who, supported by her son, refused to let us be hindered entering her house. 'They do not come to beg,' was the most convincing reason she could give for receiving our visits, and letting us with open door sing and read to her.

"Some encouraging incidents recently came under our notice:—A man living in the country had a Testament which from old age and long use had almost become worn out; he inquired if he could have it reprinted, knowing no other way of replacing the book. The price asked for reprinting was utterly beyond his purse. Through becoming acquainted with friends of his, whose hearts had been touched by the Gospel, we were able to send him the much longed-for copy.

"An old woman visited by my fellow-worker, and who began to attend our cottage meetings, listened to the Word of God with a strikingly prepared heart; her ready confirmation of what she heard made us wonder. But one day recently all this was explained, by her showing us her hidden treasure—a New Testament. The date of printing showed its age, and then the old lady explained its history. Her own sister on her death-bed had, in the early part of her illness, besought her to read it to her, until to the other also it became a source of joy; and then when the sick woman was dying, she charged her old sister to 'guard the book well,' and, putting it into her hands, soon passed into the presence of God. Like the great majority in Caracas, she thought we were all 'Judios' (Jews)—a name which means to them haters of Jesus and all his friends. But finding we accept the words of 'Jesus Book,' she gives us much reason to hope she will also face the same odium to follow Jesus.

"A poor persecuted woman, who had cried for mingled sorrow and joy over her Saviour's wonderful sufferings through love to her, sought us in deep distress, her old wrinkled Indian face so full of misery, because she could not keep her loved New Testament. Persecution had burst out upon the lonely and defenceless woman. As she could not hide her book, she had to leave it here. Our joy was great on the receipt of your Gospels, to be able to give her one to read when the eyes of her persecutors are not on her."

"I want to have a new name."—The April issue of Niger and Yoruba Notes gives some deeply interesting extracts from letters by Miss Grover, of Ibadan. Describing a visit to Yematu, the lady says:—"I spent a short time talking to Mrs. Allan, and then went into the Prince's compound. The women welcomed me as usual, and were eager for 'The song of Jesus.' The woman who had first suggested the singing, told me that she used to come to Kudeti services when she was quite a little girl, before she became the Aremo's wife. She presently said 'I want to have a new name.' We found she wished to be baptized. She said, 'When people believe in Jesus, you give them a new name, and they learn to read the book.'"

Medical Missions in Ceylon.

THE two medical ladies, Drs. Curr and Irwin, arrived in Ceylon on Dec. 31. They were welcomed in Colombo, and were pleased with their first impressions of the country. They were expecting, after seeing the medical work in Colombo, to proceed to Jaffna by the overland coach route. They will live with Dr. and Mrs. Scott for a few months while making a start in the language, and at the same time they will be able to help Dr. and Mrs. Scott in their medical work. They will in this way gain some familiarity with Eastern diseases and with the manners and customs of the people before they formally open the Women's Medical Mission work and assume its responsible duties.

The Mission-house, medical, surgical, and lying-in and isolation wards, also the nurses' training home, dispensary, preaching bungalow, and gate-keeper's house are all built in a satisfactory manner, and handed over by the contractor to the mission without debt or incumbrance. Many native Christians have written to us expressing their feelings of gratitude to God that He has permitted them to see the planting of such a beneficent institution in their midst.

Before the medical ladies can occupy the premises and begin operations, supplementary work, estimated to cost nearly £200, should be carried through. We have no funds in hand for these works. Under ordinary circumstances we could address meetings, and no doubt collect this amount, but at present our time and strength are taxed to the utmost in connection with our work for the Armenian orphans and for the famine sufferers of India. We believe that God has unmistakably called us into this work at this time, and He is giving us a signal blessing in it. After these works are completed, the Medical Mission can soon be opened. Any help will be most gratefully received. Mary and Margaret W. Leitch.

N. York.

Frank Crossley.

We have laid him down to slumber,
Snow-white flowers upon his breast;
Every circlet spoke devotion
To the life that is at rest.

From his cradle to his dying,
As he walked in step with God,
He was scatt'ring seeds of kindness,
All along life's dreary road.

He was courteous, he was tender,
He was beautiful of soul;
And the joybells rang in heaven,
Tho' with us the church bells toll.

Would you know how much we loved him?
Ask of those who weep to-day,
With a heart that's next to breaking,
And a grief that must have way.

Ask the poor who shared his bounty,
And the rich who knew his love,
And the wanderers he guided
To the better life above.

Ask the friends he helped in trouble
With his ever-open purse,
And the girls that he had sheltered
From despairing, and from worse.

Tho' the grave has claimed the casket,
Yet the diamond shines up there,
In the Lord's triumphal chaplet,
With his other jewels rare.

J. Wakefield MacGill.

Christian Workers at Keswick.—Dear Sir,—I appeal once more on behalf of those Christian workers, foreign missionaries, and others who are unable to afford a visit to Keswick. I shall willingly undertake to take charge of and disburse any funds committed to my care for the purpose of sending such friends to the next convention. In former years great blessing has been received by many a weary depressed Christian worker, and a new impetus has been given to the work of others. Friends sending gifts for this fund should do so as soon as possible, so that early arrangements may be made. Friends applying for help would expedite matters by kindly sending the names of two referees.—Yours faithfully,

Wellesley C. Bailey.

17, Greenhill Place, Edinburgh.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Ted, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Uncle Tom at Nazareth.

I WONDER if you have been thinking I have forgotten you because my promised letter has been so long coming? I have not done that, but I have been waiting till I visited a place in which I knew you would be interested; and I think you will like to hear a little about Nazareth, where Jesus spent his early life on earth.

I arrived there on a Saturday evening, but as it was quite dark I had to wait till Sunday morning before I could see what the place was like.

The little town is built on the side of a hill, from the top of which a beautiful view of the country round can be obtained. The streets are very narrow, hardly wide enough sometimes for two donkeys to pass if they have any loads on their backs. Carriages are never used, except those that convey travellers from Haifa, near Mount Carmel, to the Sea of Galilee and back, and they cannot be driven in the town itself.

The streets are not very clean, but they would be a good deal worse if it were not for the dogs which abound in great numbers. They belong to no one in particular, and feed on the rubbish that is thrown into the streets. They get very much in your way as you walk along, but one could forgive them that if they did not keep up such a terrible noise at night, barking and howling and making sleep impossible until one has got used to them.

It seemed so wonderful to think that Jesus had really lived here. Of course the old houses have decayed and new ones have been built over and over again, and it is very doubtful if the spots which are pointed out as those on which stood either the home of Jesus, Joseph's workshop, or the synagogue in which our Lord worshipped are the real ones at all. It matters very little whether they are or not, but when you climb up the hill I have mentioned just now, you are quite sure that Jesus looked upon the same mountains and valleys which are spread out before you, and that his feet trod upon the same ground.

One of the most interesting things in the town is the fountain to which the women and girls come with bare feet to draw water. They carry large stone pitchers on their heads, which must be very heavy when filled with water, but they balance them so cleverly, and do not seem to feel their weight. Little girls also come with smaller pitchers according to their strength, so that they learn how to carry them when they are quite little mites. The fountain is the one meeting-place where the women can have a little gossip, and while filling their vessels they chatter away at a fine rate.

During the afternoon I saw a very curious wedding, quite different from any we ever see in England. I do not know what the beginning of it was like. I can only describe the part that I saw. On an open common a great crowd of men, women, and young people assembled, and in the middle I found the bridegroom sitting on a chair. He did not look very happy, but perhaps that was because he was shy and did not care about having such a fuss made over him. The women formed themselves into one group, and the men into another, and then with various kinds of musical and unmusical instruments they sang and danced about him for about two hours, while he looked the picture of patience and endurance. "But where was the bride?" I expect some of you will ask. She was at home during this part of the ceremony, but after a while a horse was brought, upon which the bridegroom mounted, and then for another hour he was escorted by the happy crowd through the streets of the town until at last he came to her house. Then she joined him and went with him to the house of his parents, which, I understood, was to be their home. Fortunately, it was a very fine day, or I do not know what they would have done, for it appeared to take the whole town about half a day to marry this one couple! Some English ladies presented the bridegroom with a silk handkerchief for the bride, which pleased him and his friends very much, but it looked as if it would be very much crumpled by the time it reached her.

In the morning I was surprised and pleased to meet Mr. Hutchinson, of the C.S.S.M., whose name is known to most of you. He was travelling with a party of friends in the opposite direction, and when after this wedding I visited a Christian Orphanage belonging to the Society for Female Education in the East I found he had given an address to the children an hour before.

You will be interested to hear about this orphanage, I am sure. It is for girls who have lost one or both of their parents, and there are about ninety in it at present, whose ages range from three or four to thirteen or fourteen years. You know girls marry very young in Eastern countries, and so it often happens that when one of these orphans passes her twelfth or thirteenth birthday she is sent for by her father or brother or uncle, to be married to a husband they have chosen for her, whom perhaps she has never seen. Of course the missionaries are very sorry to lose her, but there is no help for it, and they can only hope and pray that the lessons they have been teaching her while in the orphanage will make her a good and true Christian woman.

They were having their tea when I saw them, and so I thought it would be a good opportunity while they were all together to tell them about the large family of boys and girls who read this page. They were much interested to hear that so many in England would read about them, and all held up their hands to send their love to their little English brothers and sisters. Then they sang very prettily this hymn, of which the lady superintendent kindly gave me a copy:—

NAZARETH HYMN.

We are little Nazareth children,
And our Father placed our home
Mid the olive trees and vineyards
Of his earthly childhood's home.

For the Lord who loves the children,
And was glad to hear their praise,
Cares that Nazareth children know Him,
Do his will, and choose his ways.

Cares that they should keep in memory
All that sacred life spent here;
Try in heart to walk beside Him,
Safe and happy in his fear.

For we know that He is coming,
Every knee to Him shall bow,
And the joyous shouts to greet Him
We would raise in Nazareth now.

Jesus, Master, dwell within us,
Make a temple of each heart,
Pure and loving, true and holy,
For Thy service set apart.

Uncle Tom.

Temperance Week.

Text for Sunday: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. x. 31.

Hymn: Songs and Solos. No. 135.

THE form of Christian Endeavour I wish to bring before you this week is a very important one, because it means endeavouring to rid our land and every land from one great curse which lies in the way of Christian work of other sorts, like a rock where a road ought to be. You will hardly be able to realise yet, for many years, all that this curse brings on the World—the curse of strong drink, not drink that can be taken to the glory of God, but drink that is taken to satisfy the thirst that it creates, and which can never satisfy it. What I want you now to do is to take the fact of the evil of intoxicating liquors from those who have seen it themselves, and to determine that by God's help you will never drink them, unless on special occasions, prescribed by a doctor, and in writing, just as he would prescribe opium or any other poisonous drug, when he cannot give you anything else. I trust that you all either have signed or will sign this pledge, and for Christ's sake will endeavour to lead others to do so too. It is better to deprive ourselves of any possible pleasure, rather than to run into one unnecessary temptation. I read the other day of a little "five-year old," seated on her father's knee while he was talking to some friends on temperance. During a break in the conversation she looked up to him and said, "But, Papa, if no one began to drink, there would be no drunkards." The little one had learned a great truth.

Wisdom from the Far East.

Here are some proverbs I picked up abroad.

The Japanese say:—

"First time, man drinks wine; second, wine drinks wine; third time, wine drinks man."

The Chinese say:—

"Intoxication is not the wine's fault, but the man's."

"Let those who desire to break off drinking observe when sober a drunken man."

"Medicine may heal imaginary sickness, but wine will never dispel sorrow."

What do my nephews and nieces say?

Uncle Ted.

Alcohol is poison, I must never drink it,
It will hurt my body though I may not think it;
It will hurt my soul by yielding to temptation,
Though my Saviour bought me with his great salvation!
So I have determined I will never take it;
Jesus, hear my promise, help me not to break it.

Lucy Taylor.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S.	Mark	xiv. 17-31.	Th.	Mark	xv. 1-15.
M.	,,	xiv. 32-45.	F.	,,	xv. 16-32.
Tu.	,,	xiv. 46-59.	Sat.	,,	xv. 33-47.
W.	,,	xiv. 60-72.

An Escape from a Scorpion.

NEARLY four hundred years ago there lived in Italy a celebrated artist named Benvenuto Cellini. One day, when he was three years old, he was playing in the kitchen, and saw a curious little animal under a bench. He immediately ran to it and seized it round the middle; so that its head was left sticking out on one side of the child's little fat fist, and its tail on the other.

Grandfather Andrew, an old gentleman more than a hundred years of age, was in the room, and Benvenuto ran up to him and said, "Granny, look at my pretty little lobster!" The old man saw at once that it was not a lobster, but a scorpion, a most dangerous reptile, with a dreadful venomous sting. He was terribly frightened, and tried to coax Benvenuto to give the creature to him; but the boy refused to do this, and began to make a great hullabaloo, crying that he would not give up his plaything to anybody. The noise brought in his father, who, with great presence of mind, snatched up a pair of scissors, and snipped off the scorpion's head and tail, and thus saved the little boy's life.

Don't you think we may learn an important lesson from this true story? If you search your Bibles you will find scorpions mentioned in several places. Little Benvenuto did not know that the creature was a scorpion, and that it could sting. And a great many children—and grown people too—are like him. They want things which are not good for them, and sometimes get them, and then cry and make a great fuss if they are taken away.

There is a passage in the twenty-third chapter of Proverbs which tells us of something which is very pleasant at the first, beautiful to look upon and good to taste, but "at the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." I wonder which of you could tell me what it is. Sperabene.

Personal.

As this week we commence a new quarter with the Searcher, I hope that not only will all the nephews and nieces I have already, try prayerfully to answer every week, but that each will try and introduce a new one, especially from among those who do not have Christian teaching at home. I am sure you all know many such. The next competition will be set on July 1. I am glad to see how many have taken a practical interest in our bathing machine for the cripples at Southend, but be sure you do not let the bathing season commence without its being in place. If 160 of you send a shilling this week, the amount will be raised. There are more than a thousand who send in answers. Many thanks for the "blotters" and flowers received. They have been much appreciated.

T. Murley (Oldham).—Your last answers rendered you eligible for the Prize Competition, but you forgot to put your address.

Donation List.

Indian Famine, Children (Mrs. Bruere).—Cootham Mission Hall, £1 0s. 4d.; Eva, 1d.; A Ladies' Missionary Prayer Meeting, £3 6s. 9d.; J. E. C., £1; E. M. W., 5s.; Mrs. D., 5s.; Mrs. G. K., £5; Missionaries in Tunis, 16s. 6d.; total, £11 13s. 8d. (Total, to April 5, £353 4s. 7d.)

Indian Famine.—A Brother and Two Sisters, 1s.; Nellie S., 5s.; Norah and Freda, 10s.; Children's Class, 5s.; Ella, 6d.; For Jesus' Sake, 5s.; B. P., 2s.; total, £1 8s. 6d. (Sent to Rev. Dugald Revie, F.C. Mission, Nagpur.)

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—Ella, 6d. (Total, to April 5, £2 3s. 4d.)

Bible Searcher (No. 66).

(Rules posted on receipt of a penny stamp.)

All answers to be from Gen. xxiv. to xxxiii. Children under ten do the first three; under thirteen do the first six.

1. Of whom did Abraham's servant ask help when sent to seek a wife for Isaac? Give his first words.
2. When his errand was successful, what was the first thing he did, and what were his first words?
3. What were Laban's first words of welcome to him?
4. Why did God say He would fulfil his promises to Abraham? (ch. xxvi.)
5. Describe in not more than 100 words how Jacob sinned by deceiving his father, and what came of it? (ch. xxvii.)
6. What were the last words of Jacob's vow at Bethel? (ch. xxviii.) Have you ever thought whether you could not make a similar promise to God?
7. Why was the place where Laban and Jacob parted called Mizpah or watch-tower?
8. What did Jacob reply when the angel with whom he wrestled at Peniel asked to be let go? How was he answered?
9. Describe in not more than 100 words how Jacob and Esau met again.

Next week will be devoted to the Christ-like Life, and the Searcher will be on the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Results of Competition will be announced April 29 (not 22, as stated last week).

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 55.—J. A. Field (Sydney). No. 57.—J. Garrett*. No. 58.—Bessie Whitehead (S. Africa). No. 59.—Charlotte Cane* (S. Africa). No. 60.—A. Baillie, Jean Scott, D. H. Marshall (Canada). No. 61.—Vera and Frank Sjostrom, Dorothy Groves. No. 62.—Vera* and Frank* Sjostrom, Dorothy Grove, Ruth and Olive van Milleugen (Cyprus).

No. 64.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

C. Arnold, M., E. and D. Aldwinckle, N. and F. Ames, M. Adams, J. Baring, D. B. Benson, R. Bourne, M. G. Bungey, H. C. and W. J. Barfield, E. Beauchamp, E. and D.* and G.* Bartlett, M. B. and C. B. Baker, G. Brand, W. S., J., and Jim Buchanan, E. R. Ballard, J. C. Bell, R. Browne, C. L. Badham, A. H. Bowker* R. M. Bentley*, F. L. Bennett, A. Baker, D. A. Bennie, E. Brayfield*, L. Boxer, Ida Cole, G. and L. Calvert, L. Coles, D. Caistor, M. E. Clarke*, M. Collins, M. T. Colville*, D'A. Chapman*, S. Crowley, Wm. Christie, J., M., and W. Carter, N. E. Coote, A. M. Carter, M. and C. Craven, A. M. Cole, E. and D. Corrie, C. Chapman*, D. Colebrook, M. Clarke, N., H., Annie, and A. Couch, E. and W. Cookrem, C. M. Cook, K. Dodington, K. Dunbar, H. C. Daniels, M. and D. Dyke, C. Dawe, G. Duncan, E. and R. Dunn, C. and W. Devenish-Meares, M. Egginton, A. Fleming, T. Feuchter, W., E., and R. Findlay, V. Foley, H. A. Fowler, W. Furmage, Wm. and F. Field, L. and C. Fidler, Flor. and F. F. Falconer, E. C. and M. L. Graham, M. Giddings, S., M. and E. Gray, E. Grieve, C. and D. Goodwin, A. Grainger, Eva Gray, M. W. Green, J. and M. D. Hogg, L. Hill, R. Hamilton, Helen, H., Tom, and M. V. Hunter,

C. H. and J. and M. Handasyde, W. B. Harvey, M. Hasse, A. E. Hazledine, L. M., E. P., and C. M. Hetivel, E. Hersey*, E. and Edith Hearn, M. and H. Horlock, E. Hutchings*, I. and R. Harrison, F. Hunton, V. Holford, L. Jack, S. and M. Jackson, A. C. and R. M. King, R. and H. Keable, V. and M. Maitland Kirwan, M. Kirkbride, T. A., D. T., H., and K. G. Kirkpatrick, A. Alex, Isa and T. Kay, T. Lawrence, E. Larwell, E. Leighton, N. Meade, L. B. Macaulay, E. and M. McCallum, B. & N. & A. & T. Mack, J. Maunsell, M. J. Macphee, F. and E. Mackenzie, G.* and E.* Morgan, T. J. and M. Matthews, K. McClure, B. Maconchy, H. Malaher, P. Morris, L. and Q. Matthews, W. Mitchell, A. G. Macnair*, B. H. Millar, F. E. Mann, E. Macnacharn, H. and L. Morris, D. Muir, E. C. Monti*, S. E. Mackintosh, T. and D. Mackenzie, F. L. Munce, M. Nevill, E. Newton, B. Norcock, E. L. and M. N. Oakes, H. and L. Orr, T. M. Oldham, V., D., N., and M. Petrides, W. C. Perryman, T. Piper, D. O. Phillips, E. V. and E. F. Proctor, S. Pim, D. Patten, W., M., J., and A. Palmer, H. Piggott, G. Partridge, J. Robertson, C. and A. Rouse, L. M., A. B., and D. W. Ramsay, E. and T. Roberts, P. M. Read, J. and T. C. Roe, G. G., E., E., and Gordon Reeve, E. H. Rainey, B. Scantlebury, D. N. and M. Shaw, D. and B. Salt, M. Slater, V. Standley, B. Symes, F. A. Shadbolt, D. and J. H. Stanier, D. Smith, E. and T. Seymour, M. Stanley, E. Stuart, M. Seddall, D. Sharp, C. and H. Schaeffer, M. Smith*, J.* and J. W.* Thomson, F. H. J. Tomkins, M., G., and F. H. Trotter, A. Thompson, G. Tingey*, H. W., L., P., and A. Turnbull, M., W., and A. M. Thomson, T. Toop, F. and S. Thomas, L. Tibbits*, G. W. Vellacott*, E. Vigars, E. H. Wood, P. A. and E. V. Willoughby, E. M. White*, P. Wilson, G. Weir, T. and J. E. Watson, J. G. West, M. Walton, H. and J. Williamson, M. J. and J. J. Wight, A. and F. Waring, E. Wheadon, C. and E. Yerbury.

Those who have been correct the whole quarter:—

Gordon and Constance Andrews, Alme Bazett, Herbert Berry, Emily Bridgewater, Mary E. and Wm. E. Clarke, Mabel Cole, Dorothy Cooper, Margaret Davison, Cecil Dodd, Ernest Edmonds, Reginald and Ernest Findlay, Lee Gardner, Minnie Giddings, Rex Hatchett, Winifred Harvey, Margaret Hasse, Dorothy and Joshua Hughes-Games, May Hunter, Chas. and Mena Hunter, Lucie and Archie Jacob, Norman Johns, Alex. Kay, Doke Lewis, Laura Macaulay, Abraham, Nellie, and Bella Mack, Ivy Maunsell, Alice M. Palmer, Maggie Palmer, Duncan Payne, Myrtle Perry, Wm., Louie, and Mary Penny, Vera Petrides, Gladys Phipps, Margaret and Lillian Pook, Sydney Robertson, Margery Smart, Betty Stocks, Horace Williamson, Noel and Phillis Wright, Gertie M. Wood, Allan Woodman.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, Presbyterian Church, Highgate, April 9. Mr. H. Hankinson, Cinderford, April 22; Gloucester, April 23; Newport, April 24—May 4; Ross, May 5-6; Hereford. May 7. Mr. Reginald Callender, Underriver, Sevenoaks, April 9; Bedford, April 10-11; Winchester, April 13. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Kemp Town, April 20; Lewes, April 27; Kemp Town, April 28; Hayward's Heath, April 29; Southboro', April 30. Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Eastbourne to April 9; Woking, April 9-12; Watford, April 12; Horsham, April 13-15; Croydon, April 17-19. Mr. Geo. Goodman, Plashet Park, to April 11; Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 24-May 2. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Foresters' Hall, Wickham Market, April 8; Needham Market, April 9; Shrewsbury Hall, Redhill, April 10-20. Mr. W. L. Seyler, All Saints' Mission Hall, Caledonian-road, Ap. 9. Mr. Sidney Spiers, Anerley, Ap. 12.

The Orphan Working School.

The 139th yearly dinner in aid of the funds of this Institution, with Homes at Haverstock-hill, Hornsey-rise, and Margate, was held on Tuesday week in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, under the presidency of Mr. Horace B. Marshall.

The Chairman remarked that the Orphan Working School was scarcely a new Institution, as for nearly a century and a-half it had carried on its beneficent work. Nearly 6000 children had been fitted within its walls for the battle of life. Beginning with twenty, it now had 500 inmates. They were received from the earliest infancy up to the age of fourteen, and were taught, educated, and clothed. During the last quarter of a century about fifty lads from the Orphan Working School had entered into the employment of the firm to which he belonged, and he could bear personal testimony to the value of the training they had had. The institution was wholly unsectarian, the object of the committee being to make all the inmates Christians in the widest sense. It cared for the future of both boys and girls, and it should be remembered that the boys and girls of to-day were the grown-up people of to-morrow. The value of the charity was abundantly shown by the last report. To continue the work, they needed £13,000 a year, and he pleaded for the increased support needed. The average cost of each child was twenty-five guineas a year. One gratifying incident was the support extended to the School by former pupils.

The Archdeacon of London, Colonel Wellesley Robinson, and Rev. D. A. Herschell followed with addresses supporting the claims of the Institution. The secretary of the orphanage is Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, 73, Cheapside, E.C.

Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.—The annual meeting of this society was held at the Old Hall, Lincoln's Inn, on Tuesday week, Mr. Justice Kekewich in the chair. The report stated that the total number of cases dealt with by the society during the past year was 1,317, and the average cost of assisting discharged prisoners for the year had been 15s. 3d. The chairman said that the duties of the society lay entirely with the Pentonville prison, the numbers discharged from which prison were about 1,000 per month. Mr. Kenelm E. Digby said that during the short time he had been at the Home Office he had been impressed with the importance of prisoners' aid societies. Since 1880 the number of prisoners belonging to the "star class"—those who had no criminal antecedents—in convict prisons was 2,183. Of that number only 20 had returned to penal servitude under fresh sentences. The figures with regard to women were even more favourable; of 93 female convicts who had been placed in the "star" class not a single one had returned to penal servitude. Mr. T. T. Bucknill, Q.C., M.P., Recorder of Exeter, and Mr. de Rutzen, senior magistrate of Marylebone, also bore testimony to the value of the work.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 18.

Gentiles converted at Antioch.—Acts xi. 19-26. Golden Text.—Verse 18.

SEVERAL new places are mentioned in this lesson, the position of which should be pointed out on the map. Phenice, the narrow strip of land between the Mediterranean and the mountains of Lebanon, extending as far north as the modern Beyrout. Cyprus, of which so much has been heard of late, is an island in the Mediterranean, about sixty miles from the Palestine coast. Some of the disciples are said to have been men of Cyrene (20), in Africa. But the chief place mentioned is Antioch, which was to become the centre of the Church's work. This city was the capital of Syria. It was situated on the river Orontes, about sixteen miles inland, and was 300 miles north of Jerusalem. It was named after Antiochus, King of Syria, by his son Seleucus Nicator, who built the city B.C. 300. It is with the formation and early history of the Church in this city that this lesson deals.

Antioch, like the other places mentioned, received the Gospel through the disciples formerly belonging to the Church at Jerusalem. God permitted the devil to stir up a storm of persecution, and by means of this the good seed of the kingdom was scattered throughout all these regions. But the peculiarity about Antioch is that here the preachers did not confine themselves to Jews only, but ventured to speak even to the Greeks (20). It is hardly likely that tidings of Peter's preaching to Cornelius had reached these scattered disciples. Their conduct is therefore more to be admired. "The love of Christ constrained them." It was contrary to the very spirit of the Gospel to confine it within the narrow limits of one nationality. Besides this, the desperate need of the people moved the disciples to speak. Where should the Gospel be preached if not among those who are most in the darkness of ignorance and sin?

They were not left in any doubt as to their new departure. "The hand," that is, the power, "of the Lord was with them" (21). Conversion is his work. If He opened their hearts to receive the truth, and inclined them to turn to Him, was not this his own seal upon their service? Of the many lessons suggested note only two. The first concerns the teacher. See the supreme importance of having the hand of the Lord with us in our work. The second is for the hearer. What is the proper result of hearing the Gospel? Let the scholar read it in verse 21; then press the question, Has that result been attained in him?

How wisely events are timed by God! If tidings of this movement had reached Jerusalem before Peter had been called to preach to Cornelius, what dismay, and even indignation and wrath, would have been excited! The Church was prepared for the message (22). Barnabas was the most suitable man for this mission. Note his character (24), and give emphasis to the three things declared concerning him. Show the connection between the three. The only true goodness comes through faith and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Arnot thus summarises the result of his visit: (1) "What he saw—the grace of God. (2) What he felt—he was glad; and (3) What he did—he exhorted them" (23). The grace of God then is something that can be seen—that is, by the man who has the eye to see it. As a rule men see what they want to see. Many a traveller goes to a foreign country and never comes across a missionary, nor a converted native. Not because there are none; but he is not looking for them. Barnabas could see the difference between these converts to Christianity and the wickedness of the surrounding city. It was a light shining in a dark place.

His exhortation is appropriate for all young believers (23). Illustrate by the limpet which cleaves as closely to the rock. They were to make this cleaving to Christ to be their "heart purpose"; not a mere resolution, made under pressure of some deep feeling, but a constant, steady, unwavering purpose. How much need they had for it in view of the temptations to which they were exposed! Only in nearness to Christ can any believer be safe.

At Antioch there began that companionship between Saul and Barnabas which continued for so long. The last mention of Saul was in ix. 30. No doubt he has been witnessing for Christ in Cilicia; and as he had been marked out as Christ's witness to the Gentiles, it seemed the right thing to bring him into this young church (25, 26).

The name "Christian" (26) may have been given in mockery, but it is very appropriate. Believers receive their life from Christ, are constantly dependent upon Him, seek to become like Him, and devote themselves to Him. If this is a true explanation, ask of each scholar, Are you a Christian?

R.S.U. at the Mansion House.

BY the kindness of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, a special meeting, in connection with the R.S.U., was held on Tuesday week in the Mansion House, which was well filled.

The secretary, Mr. John Kirk, made a statement setting forth the recent and remarkable development of the cripple branch. He dwelt particularly on the holiday homes at Southend and Windsor, and one about to be built at Bournemouth for reception of weary cripples likely to benefit by a change. The whole circle of the cripple department of the R.S.U., with its hundreds of workers, its home visitations, local centres, tender ministries, and distribution of books, toys, instruments, and clothing, appeals in a peculiar way to the sympathies of all. A very special effort is being made in connection with the Queen's "Diamond Jubilee" in raising a fund of £10,000 for the extension and perfection of this work among cripples.

The Lord Mayor said that the cause of suffering children appealed to everyone. There was no such affliction to parents as to have an afflicted child; yet in thousands of poor homes were to be found pitiful, pain-stricken, helpless little ones whose claims on the public were surely peculiarly strong. Much had already been done by the R.S.U. workers in the way of carrying sunshine into these darkened homes, but were funds forthcoming very much more might be done to relieve and gladden these poor creatures. He concluded with a strong plea for liberal help to the R.S.U.

The Lady Mayoress, in a few touching sentences, said that she loved little children, and deeply sympathised with those who were crippled and thus deprived of the enjoyment and freedom so dear to childhood. She felt sure all agreed with her in this pity, and hoped they would testify to the fact by subscribing all they could to the R.S.U. to enable its workers to alleviate their sufferings and their pains.

Alderman Treloar, who has rendered in many ways valuable aid, followed with a hearty and sympathetic address.

Archdeacon Sinclair said that it must be borne in mind that this peculiarly touching work among cripples was only part of the large and far-reaching operations of the R.S.U. with which the name of the Earl of Shaftesbury will for ever be associated. The Archdeacon proceeded to give some particulars of the manifold operations of the R.S.U., in ragged schools, Bible-classes, industrial classes, Gospel, temperance, and other services; clothing and relief agencies; 6000 cripples were under visitation in all parts of London, while eleven Holiday Homes are maintained for sickly little ones from the slums.

Miss Coles gave an animated description of the kindly ministry of helpers all over the metropolis for the relief of home cripples.

Mr. H. Wood, J.P., and Lord Frederick Fitzroy followed with effective little speeches on behalf of the work of the R.S.U. and Shaftesbury Society.

Mr. A. Orr-Ewing's recent visit to Peh-kan, Kiang-si, was a great refreshment and blessing. Miss Carlyle writes: Four candidates were examined and three accepted—an old lady seventy six years of age, Mrs. Pao; and a husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Hu. The latter said on her first visit: "I have come to know about the Saviour who can forgive my sins; for they are very many." We learned afterwards that she had destroyed quite a number of her girls in infancy. It was good to see two other men from Gan-ren out-station also baptized, all about the same age. Miss Carlyle adds: "I cannot tell you my joy at seeing the fruit appearing after many days. I still am holding on to the promise, 'In due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not.'" There is much to encourage in the village work.

Female Welfare.—The annual meeting of the Society for Promoting Female Welfare was held at Grove House, Regent's Park, by kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Greer. Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas presided. Rev. J. F. Bateman read some portions of the report. The past year is stated to have been, on the whole, one of satisfactory work, though of some financial anxiety. The annual united sale was held, as usual, last year in the Arena of the Royal Albert Hall, and was opened by the Vice-President, Lady Portman. The sale for 1897 will be held on May 13 and 14. Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas expressed his pleasure at seeing so many of his Portman Chapel friends present supporting this useful society. Addresses followed by Mr. H. Maynard, Rev. Henry Sharpe, Mr. G. A. King, General Bruce, Mr. R. Holmes White, and Colonel Frobisher.

Rev. J. McNeill in Liverpool.

THE week before last, Mr. McNeill was preaching to about 7000 people daily, but last week, when he went over to the Birkenhead Y.M.C.A. in the evenings, the building, which was of course packed each night, was a good deal smaller than the Circus. Up to the time of writing about 700 cards have been returned, signed by those who have either been helped in their Christian life, restored from backsliding, or definitely brought to Christ for the first time. Numbers more are expected.

At the closing meeting on Friday, Mr. Charles McArthur, ex-President of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, took the chair, and in an appropriate speech expressed his appreciation of the Mission, stating that no other subject but the glorious Gospel could have attracted so many men from day to day at such a busy hour. Rev. Charles Garrett also very heartily testified to the good that had been accomplished from his own personal observation. He was followed by Rev. H. W. Bainbridge (vicar of St. Chrysostom's Church), Rev. A. B. Barkway (Union Presbyterian Church), Rev. J. H. Atkinson (Richmond Baptist Chapel), and Rev. J. K. Nuttall (Great George-street Congregational Church).

These gatherings have certainly been one of the chief features of the mission. Never since that ever-memorable year 1875, when our beloved and honoured brethren Messrs. Moody and Sankey were here, have such meetings been seen; and as Rev. Walter Macfarlane testified on Sunday afternoon, the forcible addresses delivered had been "sending business men to their Bibles." Mr. McNeill's subjects were well chosen, and dealt with in a vigorous, able, and humorous style all his own, while the tone was always deeply spiritual.

The meetings for ladies were much appreciated. These were continued in the afternoons at Hope Hall instead of at the Circus, which is so far out of the way for those living at the south end of the city.

Mr. Henry Lakin has continued the evening meetings at Hengler's Circus with very blessed results. He came from Burton-on-Trent to draw in the Gospel net, and night after night God has honoured his faith by giving him to see fruit of his labour.

The closing meetings at the Circus on Sunday were of course packed long before the advertised time. In the evening it was necessary to begin at 5.45 instead of at 7 o'clock. At the afternoon gathering Canon Rycroft, who has been a Liverpool clergyman for over forty years, said that at first he had come to the meetings with a critical ear, but he now testified that he had heard the Gospel preached in its fulness, reminding him of the late Dean Hugh McNeile. He spoke of the "Scripturalness and soundness" of the teaching, and continued, "I have been helped, strengthened, and encouraged." Rev. Geo. Lord, for thirty-three years minister of the Stanley Congregational Church, declared that Mr. McNeill, like Jonathan, had "strengthened our hands in God." Rev. Walter Macfarlane, twenty years minister of Shaw-street Presbyterian Church, followed, and then Rev. Eli E. Walter, Jubilee Baptist Church, and twenty-five years minister in Liverpool, added his testimony. He had gone through the revival in 1875, and said he had not seen anything like it since.

Mr. McNeill was much encouraged by these spontaneous testimonies, and before commencing his subject for the afternoon, stated that the churches for ten miles round Liverpool had received blessing.

The committee felt that they could not allow the evangelist to take his departure without publicly testifying to what was in everyone's mind, and it was hastily decided to give a farewell breakfast to Mr. McNeill this morning at the Eberle-street Hall, where the business men's meetings had been held. There was a large and representative gathering. After breakfast, Rev. Armstrong Black (Egremont Presbyterian Church) having offered up prayer, the hon. secretary read letters from Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who has followed the mission with great interest. Rev. John Watson, D.D., Sefton Park Church, wrote cordially expressing the pleasure with which he had heard Mr. McNeill. Rev. Charles Garrett, Archdeacon Madden, Canon Honeyburne, Mr. Alexander Guthrie, and many others who found it impossible to attend, wrote most cordially. Reference was made to Mr. Thomas Matheson's labours on behalf of the mission in its earlier stages, and his enforced absence at Algiers owing to ill-health.

Our president, Mr. Charles McArthur, expressed the feelings of all present, and hoped Mr. McNeill would give Liverpool another visit. Canon Rycroft characterised the mission as a manifestation of true Christian union. Rev. A. B. Barkway said the present was like an Evangelical Alliance meeting. The Mayor of Bootle, Mr. Isaac A. Mack, briefly expressed his cordial sympathy. Rev. Griffith Ellis spoke for the Welsh section of the community, who, he said, had supported the mission most heartily. He caused a good deal of amusement by saying that he and his ministerial brethren had stolen a good deal from Mr. McNeill's addresses, which they would often give again in their own tongue, so that none would know from where they had got their points. Canon Burbidge, of Southport, briefly added his testimony, and Rev. T. Ogden Taylor, Wesleyan minister, spoke of what he had seen of the work in Birkenhead during the past week. The Allan Mines Congregational minister followed, and Mr. Robert J. Glasgow having spoken for the Baptists,

Mr. McNeill, who was much moved with his reception, in a few closing words thanked all who had so cordially assisted him, and recommended clergymen and ministers to continue special mission services in their own churches with a view to gathering in the fruit. "God be with you till we meet again" having been feelingly sung, the company separated.

There was a large gathering of friends at the Exchange Station when Mr. McNeill started on his homeward journey in the afternoon, although the hour of departure was not generally known.

One gratifying feature about the mission is that it has paid its own way out of the daily offertories, and the committee hope there may be a small surplus to divide amongst our local missionary societies. How Mr. McNeill has stood the strain has been marvellous, as he seldom speaks under an hour, and one night he preached for an hour and twenty minutes. On Sunday morning he occupied the late Rev. Dr. Lundie's pulpit at the Fairfield Presbyterian Church, where Rev. David Ffyfe is now minister, and preached to an overflowing congregation.

THOS. A. LEIGH.

Liverpool, April 5.

Australian Aborigines.

IN a recent letter from Yanabah, Bellenden Ker Mission, Cairns, North Queensland, Mrs. Gribble writes:—

After four years of praying and teaching, our hearts are gladdened by spiritual success. My son (Rev. E. R. Gribble) has held service with camp blacks, poor old people who can hardly speak a word of English. He asked if one of the young men would say just a few words to his countrymen. Alick, a fine young fellow, got up and spoke most earnestly, partly in the Gro-gan-jee language and partly in broken English. How we thanked God for this the first witness for Jesus to his people. After evening service several of them went down again and spoke of Jesus. We do indeed thank God and take courage.

It is a great struggle to find food and clothing, medicines and all the necessaries for these people, as well as building materials. We have now five married couples in slab huts. Visitors from different tribes come to stay awhile and see what the mission is like. Before we came here they would not dare to venture into the country belonging to another tribe. We require another worker, so that the outlying camps of surrounding tribes may be visited periodically, but, alas, there is no money for the purpose.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—My correspondents in India, mostly missionaries, write most gratefully for the help which has been sent as arriving in a time of urgent need. A letter received from Jabalpur says: "From Allahabad down to the heart of the Central Provinces (about 300 miles), through an area extending far east and west, the most intense distress is found. Hundreds of thousands must have already perished in this area, and living skeletons abound everywhere. In the Jabalpur division alone, from Government statistics it can be deduced that 97,000 died from the famine LAST YEAR;" and, of course, it is far worse now. Again: "After three or four years of failures of crops the spring harvest is again a failure—the harvest will not be one third in these Provinces."

Another writes from the Deccan, which, being a native state (of about eleven millions of inhabitants), has no relief from the British Government, saying: "Bulbs, tubers, wild fruits, flowers, berries, have satisfied the hunger of the people for a long time. But the time before us is very dark. The Government (Nizam's) have exacted every cowrie of rent last October, though the crop was an utter failure in these parts. Many sold their cattle, and distress is now settling down in earnest on the people." "These poor people have no seed for the rains. Everything has been eaten up, sold, or taken away."

It must be remembered there is no provision made by the Government of India for native states, whose population in the distressed area must be ten millions.

I am afraid I must add that the accounts we get show that the Mansion House funds, being distributed often by mixed committees of heathen and Christians, and too often ultimately distributed by heathen, do not reach the famine-stricken in the way the donors would wish. From twelve different places have we heard that peculation goes on by the natives; in fact, the word used—dustoorie, "custom"—shows that it is an almost universal habit.

Meanwhile, letter after letter shows the terrible pressure on missionaries and other Christians at work. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN pray to the Lord to wake up his servants to understand their duties to their brethren in distress, who number almost as many as the population of European Russia. Many poor are giving nobly in self-denial, but many, apparently, have made no serious effort to help the ninety millions, many of whom cannot even get grass to eat, and whose cry remains unheeded by their brethren.

May I add that we seek to help not only missionaries of great societies, but also more lonely workers who have not large societies to help them.—Yours for Christ's sake,

RADSTOCK.

42, Eccleston-place, S.W.

Mission in King's Lynn.

ONE of the special features of the work of the Free Church Councils throughout the country is the attempt to reach those who attend no place of worship, by evangelistic effort, in disseminating Free Church principles, teaching the New Testament doctrine of the Church, and promoting co-operation among the Free Churches in town and country in other ways.

The committee at King's Lynn secured the services of Mr. Charles Inglis to conduct a fortnightly mission. His helpful and suggestive Bible-readings in the afternoons and earnest and powerful addresses in the evenings quickened the spiritual life of Christians, and brought many to decision for Christ. In these respects nearly all the churches have received their share of blessing. Mention should be made of the singing of Miss Inglis, of the contingents of workers from all churches who assisted in various ways, of the crowded audiences (especially on the last evening, when it is computed that 1300 people were within hearing of the preacher's voice). Although the expenses of the mission were very great, the same have been met.

We have heard of homes which have been completely changed for the better. One church is about to form a Christian Endeavour Society for the young people who have confessed Christ during the mission, and testimonies have been received of other results following the mission.

T. PERRY,
President, King's Lynn Free Church Council.

Work among the Santals.

WHEN in India recently, Mr. W. L. Watson, of 105, Pall Mall, S.W., paid a visit to Messrs. Boerresen and Skrefsrud, of the Indian Home Mission to the Santals, and spent Christmas with them at Ebenezer. In a circular letter he describes some of the results of the work carried on:—

"The head station has grown to quite a large settlement, culminating in the large church built a few years ago, which can accommodate about 3000 squatted on the floor, and 2000 more within hearing distance in the verandahs outside—which accommodation is none too large at the general church meetings when the Christians come in from the outstations.

"The Santals were in a very degraded condition thirty years ago, and drunkenness prevailed among them to a frightful extent. Chiefly by the exertions of Mr. Skrefsrud, and with the help of Government, the drink shops have been driven out of the district, and though the heathen still get drunk on their native beer at their religious festivals, a decided reformation has taken place among the whole population, while the Christians are total abstainers.

"In order to avoid overlapping, the Santal country has been, by a friendly arrangement, roughly divided between three missionary societies: the Church Missionary Society, which occupies the North-Eastern district; the Free Church of Scotland, which, with some small individual agencies, occupies the Western district; and the Indian Home Mission (as Messrs. Boerresen and Skrefsrud call their mission), the South-Eastern and Central district. In the last-named there are somewhere about 300 villages, and a population estimated at about 200,000. The evangelistic work of this Mission is now mostly carried on by native pastors and elders, who go about two and two visiting every village in the district, and telling the people in their homes the glad tidings of salvation.

"As the population somewhat pressed on the means of subsistence, a colony was some years ago planted in Western Assam on a grant of land from Government, and there is now in that part a population of about 2000, mostly Christians. Connected with this Mission there are now upwards of 10,000 baptized Christians, and 40,000 to 50,000 belonging to families more or less Christian."

Hostility in Central France.

In addition to the pastoral charge which he holds under the Committee of Evangelisation of the Free Churches of France, M. Samuel Delattre has been endeavouring, during the past few years, to evangelize the surrounding districts of Clermont-Ferrand. As a result conversions have taken place, and groups of Christians have been established in several communes. It was not likely that such success could pass unnoticed; another result is that our brother has drawn upon himself the bitter hatred of the Romish clergy. In the course of a series of Gospel meetings at Lempdes, the "Vicaire," who attended the first, thanked him, asking why he had not held it in the church. But the Curé was of different mind, and rudely abused M. Delattre. Alongside a series of meetings remarkable for the interest they excited, there has developed a system of bitter persecution, accompanied by the grossest libels disseminated against the Protestants. The people have been incited to violence, and M. Delattre has been held up to scorn and contempt.

In a letter describing the proceedings, Pastor D. Lortsch, of the Eglise Libre, Nimes (Gard) says:—"The priests have forbidden any as they value their souls to attend the meetings, and have commanded all who have Bibles and Testaments to bring them to be destroyed. This has had the effect of intimidating the people, and the attendance at the meetings has fallen from about 300 to eighty. The 'Commissaire Central' (the Chief Constable) has ordered M. Delattre to submit to him all books given or sold at the meetings. One knows only too well that it is the clerical power behind the civil authorities that have to be feared, the civil authorities being often but pawns in their hands. Our brother has need, above all, of intercessory prayer and of active sympathy in this persecution, that he may continue the work of proclaiming liberty to the captive in spite of the opposition of the foe. Communications for M. Delattre should be addressed—25, rue Delarbre, Clermont-Ferrand, Puy de Dôme, France."

Kanakas in Queensland.

FOR a number of years a deeply interesting work has been carried on among the Kanakas in Queensland. Coming from the New Hebrides and other islands in Oceana, the Kanakas (i.e., "boys") work in the sugar plantations of the colony. As they number several thousands, and stay for three years, or longer, it has been felt by many that every endeavour should be made for their evangelisation, in the hope, not only of their own salvation being realised, but of their influence in after years, when returned to their native islands, being assured for Christ and the Gospel. The "boys" are of all ages from sixteen upwards, the great majority being full-grown men.

One of the few efforts in aid of the islanders is the Queensland Kanaka Mission, conducted by Mrs. Horace Young and friends, at Bundaberg. In order to make their work more widely known, they have issued a booklet, from several pens, entitled "Not in Vain": What God hath wrought amongst the Kanakas in Queensland. (6d. Morgan & Scott). The pages have a true mission object; they tell us a little of the Kanakas and their ways, and describe the steps taken to bring them to Christ. The missionaries have been helped by various friends, and among the agencies employed have been classes and other meetings, in which Pidgeon-English is the medium of instruction. Periodical visits have been paid to plantations; and the example set by the workers has been followed by more or less systematic efforts by several organised missions.

The work at Bundaberg has been greatly blessed of God. The statement says: "For years the average weekly attendances have been from 1500 to 2000 out of a population of about 3000. This represents about 1300 different 'boys' under instruction; 1089 converts have been baptized; of these eighty are women and 1009 men. As to the reality of the profession thus made, abundant proof is continually being given. It is our earnest desire that only those who have been truly born of God should take this step. Careful teaching is given beforehand, and inquiries made as to whether their lives are consistent. Of the reality of God's work in the hearts of those who remain in Queensland, we could give many proofs. They are very anxious to teach other 'boys' about Jesus, while regular classes are taken by our band of teacher 'boys.'"

Some idea of the speech of the Kanakas may be gathered from the dialogues scattered up and down this booklet. In the course of a brief sermon in Pidgeon-English we read:—"You think suppose you come to school you all right? Suppose you savee about Jesus—that save you? No. Plenty white men savee Jesus along head, that no good—we must believe in Jesus along heart, we must trust in Him, and take Him for our Master. Jesus He good fellow Master. We no strong, but Jesus He plenty strong. He keep us, He no lose us—we belong to Him. He love us plenty, and we love Him. We no see Him now—by-and-by He come again, and then we see Him. Mrs.—— she stop along Sydney. We no see her, but all the same we savee she stop there. By-and-by she come here, we look along face belong her, we very glad. All the same Jesus. We no see face belong Him yet, but we savee all same He stop along Heaven. By-and-by He come, we look along face belong Him, and then we plenty glad!"

As already intimated, the book has been issued in order to assist the Mission; and we trust that in this particular, as well as others it will be eminently successful.

Armenia and Crete.

The "Friends of Armenia" have published a "protest," in which they say: "Whilst this nation, without distinction of party, has shown its abhorence of Turkish misrule, and has demanded that, according to treaty, protection should be accorded to the Christian subjects of the Porte, this demand remains up to the present moment unsatisfied. On the contrary, in Armenia the Sultan is pursuing his policy of rapine and slaughter. In Crete the Turkish soldiery has not yet been withdrawn, and a blockade pressing hardly on Christian women and children has been instituted by the Powers, whose guns so far have been used against the only Power that has ventured by active means to support the cause of the Christian against the Turk. The peace of Europe has, so far, been bought at the cost of humanity and justice, both in Armenia and in Crete."

Letters to the Editor.

RATIONAL BIBLE STUDY.

Dear Sir,—We are told that the Bible is a spiritual book, and that only such as are spiritually-minded can fully understand it. Quite true; but still it appears to me that these statements do not contain all the truth. I desire to point out and emphasize the fact that the Bible is not only a spiritual book but a historical book also; and I maintain that if we disregard the historical element, we miss much of the spiritual meaning as well.

How can a man get a thorough grasp of the Scriptures who reads one day in the Psalms, the next in the Book of Revelation, and the day after in Genesis, and so on? As well might we expect a child to know the history of this country by teaching it to-morrow of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, followed by the story of Julius Cæsar, and then that of Henry VIII. The child would be muddled, and would really know nothing, whereas, had the instructor begun at the beginning and proceeded by regular stages, a sound knowledge of history would be the result.

Many who have spent years in a spasmodic study of Scripture have, after all, only a very slight knowledge; while a year or two given to a rational method gives one a grasp of the purpose and meaning of the Book such as nothing else can. It is not enough to begin at Genesis and go right through the Bible; we must proceed chronologically—according to the times in which the books were written. For the help of some I copy from the Comprehensive Teacher's Bible (Bagsters) the following:—

Chronological order of the books of the Bible:—Gen., Job, Exo., Lev., Num., Deut., Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 Sam., 2 Sam., 1 Chron., Psalms, Song of Solomon, 1 Kings i-xi., 2 Chron. i-xi., Prov., Eccles., 1 Kings xii. to end, Jonah, Joel, Amos, Hosea, Mic., Nah., Isa., Zeph., Hab., 2 Chron. x. to end, 2 Kings, Jer., Lam., Obad., Ezek., Dan., Hag., Zech., Esther, Ezra, Neh., Mal.—Matt., 1 Thess., 2 Thess., Gal., 1 Cor., Rom., 2 Cor., James, 1 Peter, Eph., Philippians, Col., Philemon, Luke, Heb., Acts, 1 Tim., Titus, Mark, 2 Tim., 2 Peter, Jude, Epistles of John, Rev., John's Gospel.—Yours,

A. E. Harrison.

Newcastle.

THE GOSPEL IN THE ARMY.

Dear Sir,—Colonel S. Dewé White will be glad to know that, though his friend has been hindered in preaching to the men in Natal, I have received a letter from the secretary of the S.C.A. at Pietermaritzburg stating that the Y.M.C.A. has succeeded in getting permission to hold meetings in the garrison schoolroom there every Sunday afternoon. The commanding officer at Cape Town has also given permission to hold occasional meetings in the Castle. Whilst the c.o.'s have power to prevent meetings being held, I am glad to say that permission is much more readily given than heretofore to hold meetings in barracks.

A further step is needed, and that is to give official sanction for a place for meetings of a spiritual character, on the lines of the prayer-rooms of India. If a place of meeting were provided in barracks which could form a centre from which the Christian men themselves could work, the Gospel in the Army would make itself felt as never before.—Yours sincerely,

Arthur H. Wheeler.

Portsmouth.

Rev. William Mottram has been seeking careful returns of the number of ministers in the Congregational ministry of England and Wales who are total abstainers. It appears that last year 115 students and others accepted their first pastorates. Of these more than 90 per cent. are total abstainers, and more than one-fifth are life abstainers. This speaks well for the Band of Hope movement, which is so soon to celebrate its jubilee.

The Missions to Seamen.—The accounts of the Missions to Seamen for the year 1896 have just been made up for presentation to the annual meeting at St. Martin's Town Hall on May 5, and the total income for the year is found to be the largest yet attained by that Society, viz., £38,294. The augmentation of receipts, exclusive of legacies, amounted to £3531, half of which sum was derived from the funds given for new mission vessels and mission buildings. The moneys available for the direct maintenance of the Mission staff were insufficient to meet the expenditure on direct Mission work afloat and ashore, which has meanwhile largely increased, and exceeds the contributions devoted to this most important purpose of the Missions to Seamen.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. James Shields, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission at the Wesleyan Chapels, at Spilsby and Old Bolingbroke, Lincs. The services were largely attended, and proved a source of rich blessing. T. W. R.

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted an eight days' mission at the Bristol Y.M.C.A. The meetings were well attended, and much blessing resulted. Mr. Thorne met the workers and those who professed conversion, at tea, before the last meeting, and very cheering were the testimonies given by those who had been brought to Jesus Christ during the mission.

Mr. Chas. Galletly, of the Evangelization Society, has concluded a fortnight's evangelistic work at Lamlash, Arran, in which he was assisted by Mr. A. Brown. Notwithstanding the very stormy weather, the meetings were well attended, the last being the best, when the Free Church was filled. The addresses were blessed by the Divine Spirit, and whilst anxious inquirers professed to receive Christ, not a few believers were edified and stimulated.

D. S.

A week's mission was lately held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, with results that have more than met the expectations of all who have so gladly laboured with the pastor from day to day. By way of preparation, special meetings for prayer were held, in which intense longing for the salvation of souls was very evident. The arduous work of canvassing the district, and visiting some 25,000 to 30,000 homes, was most willingly undertaken by the members of the Young Christians' Association, the Tract Society, and many others. The Sabbath evening congregations were unusually large, and, despite the unfavourable weather on the Monday and Tuesday nights, splendid audiences gathered in the Tabernacle. These increased night by night as the weather improved and the interest deepened, and all through the mission the power of God was upon the preacher and the hearers. Each night, young and old flocked to the inquiry-room, and entered into the peace of God. Not a few remarkable cases of men, arrested and converted after having gone far into sin, have already come to notice. The Word has also been greatly blessed to the families of church-members.

Mr. J. W. Moodie, of the Evangelization Society, has completed his Caithness tour. After conducting meetings for a fortnight in Thurso he visited Pulteneytown, and began a series of meetings which extended from March 14 to 28. This mission was held in the Mission Hall, Pulteneytown, and was well attended throughout. The preacher's addresses were rousing and pithy, and altogether the mission was a very encouraging one.

Mr. Charles Cook has finished four weeks' services in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. The interest created by the Brothers Weaver during the first two months of the year has been well maintained. The gatherings have been large, and much blessing has resulted from the faithful preaching of the Gospel. During the month Mr. Cook gave three lectures illustrated by dissolving view pictures, and one with costumes of the different countries of Europe. He incorporated both temperance and the Gospel into his explanations, and as a consequence many pledges were taken. On Sunday nights the great hall was filled, many standing at the back. The Lord has graciously owned and blessed his Word through Mr. Cook, and the work done in the inquiry-room was most gratifying. Many very interesting cases have been recorded.

Mr. Lancelot Middleton held in March a ten days' mission in George's Hall, Dublin, which was the means of favourably introducing his special work to a large circle of Irish Methodists and others. He preached no new Gospel, and aimed, not at superficial results, but at permanent spiritual work. In this he succeeded, and though the number of outsiders reached was not considerable, the workers of the mission and other Christians were revived, and led to seek fuller consecration for service. The mission preacher took part in open-air services, where his cornet, being a novel addition to ordinary methods, quickly gathered a listening and interested crowd.

Under the auspices of the Free Church Council, Southport has been favoured with the services of Gipsy Smith for an eight days' mission. The services have been held in the Cambridge Hall, and at the first it was manifest that so far as the audience was concerned there was going to be no difficulty, provided the evangelist and his message were right. Some, no doubt, elbowed their way in out of mere curiosity to see a "live gipsy," and hear what sort of "cant" he would talk. But a very few minutes at the feet of the "gipsy boy" convinced the most pharisaic of the audience that "cant" was not a part of his constitution. He had a message, and that message was that Christ "came to seek and save that which was lost." On Saturday evening the hall was crowded to hear the lecture "From the Gipsy's Tent to the Pulpit." On the last night of the mission the Cambridge Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, as well as the Congregational Church, which had to be requisitioned for an overflow meeting. Much blessing has been realised by the bringing together of the members of the various churches in a united effort to bring sinners to Christ.

A good work in the villages of South Dorset is reported by Mr. J. A. Judson, of St. Mary-street, Weymouth.

Pollokshaws, Glasgow (says a correspondent), is the scene of a blessed revival. Rev. J. Bastow Wilson conducted a mission which has touched every part of the district. Nearly two score adults have professed conversion. Mr. and Mrs. A. Harrison are taking up the work, and the movement increases.

In connection with Mr. W. R. Lane's mission at Halstead, Essex, already noted, a farewell gathering was held on Wednesday evening last week, when there was a densely-crowded audience in the new Congregational church. The mission was a united one, and it has been resolved to continue the united prayer meetings once a week. All sections of Nonconformists worked cordially together, and their efforts, by God's blessing on the words of the evangelist, have been crowned with much success.

Miss Haddon, of Clipston, has concluded an eight days' mission at the Old Baptist Chapel, Rushden, and readers are asked to praise God for blessing received. The congregations were good throughout, and night after night anxious inquirers remained for conversation, not a few of whom were privileged to enter the liberty of the Gospel. Twenty of these were present on Friday last at a class started by the pastor with the view of helping them.

Dr. Christie, of St. Paul's Institute, Tarsus, writes, on March 18:—"We are now enjoying the blessings of a religious awakening among the students of the Institute. Short meetings for preaching and prayer are held each morning and evening. We give much time to talking with inquirers, of whom there are now more than thirty, most of them rejoicing in the new hope."

A sixteen-days' mission has been conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth. There were Bible-readings on the weekday afternoons, which were largely attended, and specially helpful. The evening audiences were large from the first, and latterly were greater than the hall could accommodate. That at which the account of the evangelist's conversion from Judaism was given, and that at which the Passover and its lessons were described, excited the deepest interest. The three Sunday evening services were crowded. On the last of them an overflow meeting had to be held outside the building.

A large number of inquirers remained to the second meetings. There were several remarkable cases of conversion. The most striking features of Mrs. Baeyertz's teaching might be summed up in prominence given to (1) the atoning death of Christ, (2) the Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, (3) the meaning of "the heart" in Scripture, that it is not, as is often represented, the affections or emotions as distinguished from the understanding, but the will of the whole man. This was insisted on with much force, both in the Bible-readings and in the Evangelistic addresses.

A mission has been conducted at the Methodist Free Church, High Town, Liversedge, by Mr. Alexander Clark, of the Evangelisation Society. The services deepened in interest, and the clear, practical Gospel addresses of Mr. Clark have been used of God to the awakening and salvation of many.

The result of many months of prayerful preparation issued in a mission under Mr. George Clarke, from March 13 to 29, in Torquay. The meetings, organised by a committee representing all the evangelical churches, were held in the largest halls available and in various places of worship, and from the beginning were very largely attended. Nearly 400 persons gave in their names as professing to receive blessing. There is scarcely a church in Torquay but has its list of professed converts as the direct fruit of this effort, whilst the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the various branches of Y.P.S.C.E., are all gathering new recruits from those who hitherto had held aloof. J. Nisbet Wallace.

The Manse, Torquay.

An eight days' mission has been concluded in the Baptist schoolroom, Ross, Herefordshire. Mr. John Coates, of the Ross Bible Carriage, assisted by friends, did noble service. The power of the Lord was present. Several young men, beside others, openly professed Christ in the services. Mr. Coates also addressed several children's meetings in a most happy and telling way.

"Friedenheim."

The report of the year's work at Friedenheim renders praise to the Lord, who has so graciously guided, strengthened, and supplied the needs during 1896. The Home has been well filled during the year. There were thirty patients in the Home on January 1, and 101 admitted during the year—58 men, 58 women, and 15 children. Of the 101 patients admitted, forty-one have been received from various London hospitals, nine from provincial hospitals, and the remainder from their own homes or lodgings. Some of the cases have been very lingering and painful, but it is a cause of thankfulness that these have been skilfully treated and nursed, so as to alleviate in some degree their sufferings.

"Of the eighty who have died this year, we have cause to hope that most were ready for the great change, having no confidence in themselves, but rejoicing in Christ Jesus, who was with them as they passed through the Valley of the Shadow of Death.

"We have had some interesting cases. One was that of an intelligent man—H., who came to us an agnostic. He was very eager to understand the meaning of what was read and taught, and he listened earnestly to the hymns that were sung, often saying, 'It's not that I am unwilling to believe, but tell me something I can believe.' The Doctor spoke very simply and clearly to him, and one day as he was turning away from his bed, he laid his hand on him and said earnestly, 'God bless you.' H. told us afterwards, it came over him at that moment, 'there must be a God to bless if a man like the Doctor can speak so.' From that time there was a marked change, and H. said he was now able to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world, adding, 'It is just as if a father told his child 'that is a clock,' and the child believed it because of his father's word, without understanding anything of the mechanism whereby it is worked: so I am to believe that Jesus died for me because God my Father says so, without understanding how it is.' He prayed that even if he suffered much, he might live long enough to prove the reality of his faith; and the difference in his whole demeanour showed that it was the work of God's Holy Spirit."

We regret to observe that there is great lack of funds. Surely all will feel that this intensely touching Home of Peace for the dying—who but for it must spend their last days in pain, neglect, and want—should not be allowed to languish for lack of help. Miss Davidson is very anxious to obtain sufficient funds to build an isolated ward for cancer cases. "It is so hard," she says, "to have to refuse the many distressing applications we receive." Her address is Friedenheim, Upper Avenue-road, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

The Y.M.C.A.

A new Association has been formed at Parkstone, near Bournemouth.

Following a successful membership campaign, the Trowbridge Association has held a book campaign, by which 700 volumes have been obtained for the library in three weeks.

The City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. are making arrangements for the opening of their new premises in Sackville Street. The Ladies' Auxiliary have taken in hand the furnishing, and are entreating the mothers and sisters of the Christian homes in the city to help them in their great efforts. £4500 is still needed to complete their undertaking.

The foundation of a building for the Gothenburg Association is being laid, for which funds have been collected to the amount of 150,000kr. (about £8300 sterling). Four different donors have contributed to this fund no less than 15,000kr. each. A splendidly situated plot of ground has been bought from the City Council on exceedingly favourable conditions.

The Alliance des Unions Chrétiennes de Jeunes Gens de France (Comité National) reports that as the results of its efforts several new Associations have been formed; others have been greatly developed. Some of these—Marseilles and Bordeaux, for instance—are now seeking general secretaries. Many conversions of young men are reported in the Paris, Lyons, and Rochefort Associations, and in those of the North of France.

Mr. Christian Phildius, of the Central International Committee, writing of a recent tour says:—"In the town of Teschen, Silesia, I found, to my great astonishment, a Polish Y.M.C.A., of which up to this time no one in the world has suspected the existence. My great joy at this discovery can be imagined. This Association has been in existence three years; its statutes have been approved by the authorities; its meetings are held in its own premises, and it has 100 members."

The twentieth conference of the Southern District Union was held at Portsmouth. The afternoon Conference was held in the Grand Jury Room at the Town Hall by permission of the Mayor. A paper on the Bible, the charter and text-book of our association, was read, and elicited many remarks on its importance. The secretaries in the district gave their experience in regard to the work in their districts. The evening meeting was a great success, and quite an inspiration to incite to more devotedness in all our varied forms of service.

The Spring Conference of the Western District Union was held on April 1, at Yeovil, and passed off very successfully. The business session in the morning was presided over by Rev. H. H. T. Cleife, a devotional meeting at noon was addressed by Rev. J. Stephenson, Mr. J. Poynton Haden (Trowbridge) occupying the chair. In the afternoon the Archdeacon of London gave an address to Christian workers. In the evening, Rev. H. T. Beebe, vicar of Yeovil, presided over a public meeting, which was addressed by the Archdeacon of London, Revs. R. Richard and S. Newnam, and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

The National Council held its usual monthly sittings on Friday under the presidency of Sir George Williams, who was cordially welcomed on his return from Devonshire, where he has spent the winter months. A report was given by Mr. F. L. Porter of a most successful series of demonstrations for men held in North-East London on the subject of intemperance, betting and gambling, and impurity. The series extended over six weeks, and the attendance at the meetings ranged from 800 to 2000. Among the speakers were Revs. J. E. C. Welldon, the Hon. A. Lyttelton, F. B. Meyer, Hugh Price Hughes, Dr. Harry Guinness, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hieb have arrived in Ceylon, and have made a hopeful beginning in their work. Mr. Hieb went out from America to be the general Y.M.C.A. secretary in Ceylon, and to engage in aggressive evangelistic, temperance, anti-opium, and purity work. En route he wrote: "At Jaffna I visited nine Associations, established two Bible-training classes, and prepared the way for others where they did not exist. The most signal approval of God upon our work was at Tillipally Training School, where after our meeting the leader of the Hindu opposition among the students, regarded by the missionary, Rev. T. S. Smith, as an almost hopeless case, came out clearly for Christ. At a special meeting the same evening nine other students took a similar stand; all but one of these came from Sivite homes. Mr. Smith told me later that four others have also decided for Christ."

Rev. Canon Argles, of York, will preach the National Temperance League annual sermon in Westminster Abbey on May 9.

The County Temperance Federation will hold its fifth annual congress at Tunbridge Wells, from Sunday to Wednesday, April 25 to 28.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Plymouth Association and the two branches at Mutley and St. Jude's-road celebrated the annual united festival on the 24th ult.

Mrs. Hubert Peek, of Boscombe, has recently brought to a close a week's mission in connection with the Blandford Y.W.C.A. The attendances were good throughout.

The annual meeting of the Bath Institute was held on the 25th ult., under the chairmanship of Rev. J. Lunt. The report showed that the number of members had been well maintained.

The members of the Yeovil Y.M and Y.W.C.A. met on Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., for their annual soirée. Rev. H. Hardin, Messrs. Tavender, Osborne, and others, representing the Y.M.C.A., and the Misses Staple and Harvey, of the Y.W.C.A., gave short addresses.

The Free Middle Church (Perth) Y.W.C.A. held their annual social meeting in the Hall, Tay-street, on the 16th ult. Miss Jackson presided over a large and attentive audience. The annual report showed that the Institute was in a very flourishing condition, and had been doing excellent work.

There are 235 branches of the Y.W.C.A. in France. In Denmark the work is being carried briskly on, and the Associations there are now about to send missionaries to China and India. There are no Associations in Russia, owing to the aversion of the authorities to associations of any kind. The work in Spain is not a progressive one at present.

The Bishop of Hereford has opened a new building in connection with the Hereford Y.W.C.A. The work has developed of late to a remarkable extent, and on the occasion of the new Home being declared open there was a large and representative gathering of friends and members. The Bishop pleaded eloquently the claims of the institution, and spoke earnestly of that Christian union which was the means, under God, of initiating and carrying on so splendid a work as the Y.W.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Dawlish branch was held at the Shaftesbury Hall on the 22nd ult. Mrs. Foster occupied the chair. The report was a favourable one. A conference of the Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall branches, held in November, had proved most successful. The total number of members was 263, showing a general increase. Various sums had been sent to foreign mission work. The Sunday afternoon Bible-classes had been well attended. The junior branch was also flourishing.

A series of articles is appearing in the St. Andrew's Presbyterian Magazine under the title of "Cape Town Christianity," one of which deals with the Y.W.C.A. in that town. The history of the Institute is an interesting one. Commencing originally under the management of the Cape Town Ladies' Christian Union, with a powerful advocate in Rev. Andrew Murray, this work amongst the young women gradually won its way, and is now a very important Christian agency in that part of the world.

The "Cambridge" Institute and Home, which has been carried on at 463, Holloway-road for fourteen years, under Miss Freeman as hon. secretary, has been removed to more commodious premises next door, Nos. 459 and 461, Holloway-road. The accommodation includes a meeting-room, reading-room, and class-room for institute purposes, bedrooms and cubicles for twenty-eight boarders, for whom sitting and dining-rooms are also provided. The two houses have been purchased, and painted and decorated throughout. Dedication meetings were held on Monday, March 29, when Mr. W. T. Paton, Mrs. Snow, and Rev. A. Ramsay gave addresses. On Wednesday, March 31, Lady Kinnaird opened a sale of work in aid of the funds. The room was crowded. The sale was continued on Thursday, 1st inst., opened by Mrs. Burnett-Smith (Annie Swan).

The House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road.—Rev. J. Wilkinson, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, gave an interesting address last Friday afternoon to a crowded audience. He expounded Isaiah vi. verse by verse, pointing out the spiritual lessons of humility and reverence to be learnt from the passage. He also mentioned several interesting facts connected with the Mildmay Mission, showing that God is signally blessing the work.

Shan-si.—Miss H. J. Rice, of Lu-ch'eng, reports having been cheered in seeing the dealing of the Lord with some of the inquirers—among others, a family in Shen-kia-shan, who were much persecuted last autumn, in having their crops stolen, confessed, on the last visit of the elder, that it was a deserved punishment. They had been doing several things dishonouring to Jesus; not observing the Sabbath, and always growing a little opium to make money, though they did not succeed. After confession, they all felt happy, and the son prayed in public for the first time.

Scottish Notes.

Mr. J. B. Wookey has been addressing meetings in Edinburgh on behalf of the work of Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

The Sustentation Fund of the Free Church is stated to have decreased £3000 during the present year, and efforts are being made to make up the deficiency before the meeting of the Assembly in May.

Rev. Dr. Henderson, U.P. minister, Paisley, has had his pastoral jubilee celebration. For forty-two years he has ministered in Paisley. He was the first ordained minister of the United Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Kane, of Belfast, visited Edinburgh last week, and ably pleaded the cause of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. He declared the state of things in Ireland at present to be extremely hopeful and encouraging.

Rev. Andrew M'Alpine, Free Church minister of Carinish, North Uist, died at his manse there last week, at the early age of thirty-three years. He accepted a call to Carinish four years ago, and has laboured faithfully and diligently there since. He was of a quiet, unassuming character, and was daily growing in the estimation and affection of the people.

To sustain its work during the coming season the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association will need £1200 a month. A good and greatly-needed movement which it carries on during the summer is the "Fresh-Air Fortnight," which sends poor and tired-out people and children to the seaside. The hon. treasurer of the Association is Mr. Mackeith, 19, Howard-street, Glasgow.

At the annual meeting of the Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, last week, a very cheering report of progress was submitted by the senior pastor, Rev. W. Ross. Last year there were 184 additions to the membership. There are five Sabbath-schools, a Christian Association, three Endeavour Societies, three Pioneer Missions, a Mizpah Band, Gospel Choirs, and other agencies regularly in operation.

The third annual convention of the Scottish National Christian Endeavour Union was opened at Greenock on Saturday with a meeting in the Temperance Institute, at which there was a junior rally, conducted by fifty Glasgow juniors. Mr. Alexander M'Keith, Glasgow, introduced the topic; among the speakers were Mrs. M'Phee, Glasgow; Mr. John Stewart, children's evangelist; Rev. J. W. Jackson, and others. On Sunday night a service was held in the Town Hall, when a sermon was preached by Rev. D. F. M'Kenzie, B.D., Langside. Services in connection with the Union were also held in several of the churches during the day. A public welcome was held on Monday evening.

Irish Notes.

In connection with the annual meetings of the Methodist Missionary Society now in progress throughout the country, Monday was observed in Dublin as a missionary day. As a result, a stimulus has been given the cause of missions in the Metropolis.

Several workers in connection with the Belfast Central Mission recently obtained leave from business engagements, and spent a whole week in visiting from house to house with the view of conserving the results of the services lately conducted by Rev. C. H. Yatman.

The anniversary of the London Missionary Society has been held in Belfast. Rev. Dr. MacFarlane told the story of missionary progress in New Guinea; Rev. J. MacGowan that of China; Rev. J. L. Green that of Tahiti; and Rev. A. W. Wilson that of Madagascar. Rev. E. A. Wareham also took part in the proceedings, and as a result a Zenana auxiliary to the Society is likely to be established in the city.

The Duke of Argyll, giving evidence last week before a select committee of the House of Commons on a railway question, referred to the manufacture of whisky, and said that while he was not a teetotaler, he was alive to the evils caused by liquor.

Strangers' Rest.—On Friday evening a meeting for workers and friends was held at 163, St. George's-street. Many sailors of different nationalities were present. Mr. T. Isaacs stated that owing to unforeseen circumstances eighteen of their helpers had been compelled to resign their various positions, and he asked for others to take their places. German and French speakers will find a fruitful sphere of labour at the "Rest." Rev. Jno. Wilson, of Woolwich Tabernacle, gave a soul-stirring address, full of facts from his long and varied experience. Mr. J. Bennett Anderson also spoke.

Obituary.

MR. A. M. STEWART.

To friends of Protestantism in Scotland few names were better known than that of the late editor of The Bulwark, who passed away on March 15, aged fifty-nine. We hope in a few weeks to give Mr. Stewart's portrait, with a sketch of his life and labours.

REV. R. RUSSELL, DUNDEE.

The death occurred at Royal Gardens, Stirling, last week, of Rev. Robert Russell, senior minister of Blairgowrie U.P. Church, and father of Dundee U.P. Presbytery. He was one of the most earnest workers in the district, and a specially strong advocate of the temperance cause. After forty-eight years' service Mr. Russell retired in 1894, and went to reside in Stirling.

MR. JOHN STABB.

This servant of Christ, who for many years was closely associated with the Monthly Tract Society, passed away at a ripe age, on Monday, March 29. The funeral took place on Saturday at Abney Park Cemetery. It will be remembered that some years ago Mr. Stabb retired from the secretaryship of the Monthly Tract Society; since then he has been active in many ways, and most notably in connection with the Maryland Point Mission. A memorial service will be held on Sunday at 6 30 p.m., in Primitive Methodist Chapel, Stoke Newington Common.

MRS. H. M. DYKE, BASUTOLAND.

All who know the long and devoted service which Mr. and Mrs. Dyke have rendered in Basutoland will deeply sympathise with our aged brother in the loss of his dear wife, who fell asleep on March 10 at the ripe age of 83 and after a fortnight's sore illness with acute pains. Mr. Dyke writes from Morija: "The messenger of the Lord has been here in the early morning and called my precious one away. Yes, praised be God, she was taken away in her sleep without any wrestling with 'the last enemy.' Her end was peace, and her fervent prayer was granted."

BISHOP JAMES LA TROBE.

This honoured servant of Christ, and of the Moravian Church, passed to his eternal rest on the morning of April 5, in the 95th year of his age. As a minister of the Word he was eminently successful, not only in bringing home to the unconverted the claims of the Saviour, but also in building up believers. After serving several congregations, he was elected a member of the directing board of his church in the British province, in which office he served for many years. Latterly he lived in retirement owing to physical weakness, but he carried on pastoral work by correspondence. He will be much missed by his own church, and by a large circle of personal friends. As his life here had been beautiful, so also was his departure. He retired to rest on Sunday night in his usual health, and fell into a peaceful sleep, and his spirit awoke in that peace and rest which is eternal.

REV. JAMES TREADWELL, WANGANUI, N.Z.

This well-known Presbyterian minister passed away on Jan. 24. Save that he accepted a charge for some years at Stevenston, Ayrshire, his whole ministerial life has been spent in the Antipodes. He soon took a commanding position among the ministry of New Zealand, and became one of the recognised leaders. For the last two years he had suffered from a painful internal malady. In his farewell letter to his people, dictated on his death-bed, he referred to the infinite honour conferred upon the Gospel preacher—an honour which he had enjoyed for six years in Victoria, nine years in Ayrshire, and now twenty years in New Zealand. The mystery of pain which he had so long endured he could not explain, but said he would understand it very shortly. His concluding words were—"Take Christ Jesus the Lord as your Saviour, your friend, your help, your all in all. What I regret is, that of making so little—so very much too little of Him."

REV. WILLIAM ASHTON, L.M.S.

The death is announced by cablegram from Cape Town of Rev. William Ashton, of Barkley West, Bechuanaland, the oldest missionary in active service in connection with the London Missionary Society. He was one of the oldest surviving students of Airedale College, Yorkshire, and was set apart for mission work in January, 1843, at a service held in York-road Chapel, Walworth, at which Revs. George Clayton, Thomas Binney, James Sherman, and others took part. With Dr. Moffat, to whose daughter Livingstone was married in the following year, he sailed in the Fortitude for Cape Town, but the capital of South Africa was not reached until April, and Kuruman, where he laboured as the colleague of Moffat, not until the following January. In conjunction with Moffat he completed the Sechuana Bible in 1858. The mission at Barkley, on the Vaal River, was commenced in 1876. It has now a membership of nearly 900.

REV. FREDERICK PUGH.

This minister, for the past twenty years pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, Swindon, died suddenly on Sunday evening at Teignmouth, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. Deceased, who was fifty-four years of age, had been suffering for the past month, but was better last week, and had intended returning home this week, and to resume on Sunday next a series of sermons which he had commenced on "Signs preceding the end of the world." He was formerly a minister in London.

MRS. C. WOOLLATON.

A great loss has been sustained in Nutfield, Surrey, by the death of Mrs. Charles Woollaton, a resident for over twenty years, a gracious lady, a kind and sympathising friend, and one who was always working and using her influence for the Master. She worked for the Church Missionary Society as secretary, and largely increased the number of boxes in the village. She was also the means of Christ Church, South Nutfield, being built and placed in the hands of Evangelical trustees. She caught a chill on Sunday, March 21, and fell asleep on the Thursday morning following. At the funeral on Monday, March 29, the church was full of those to whom she had ministered, and many friends from the neighbourhood. EDWARD F. GEDGE.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN.

Lord Plunket, whose illness awakened much anxiety, passed away on Thursday morning at half-past six, at the Palace, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin. His death will be severely felt by all classes in the Church, to whom his Grace was endeared by the simplicity and earnestness of his character, his untiring devotion to the cause of religion and charity, his broad-minded toleration, and his genial kindness. No movement was ever started which promised to confer benefit upon the Church or the country which he loved with the loyal affection of a Christian patriot, without receiving his whole-hearted support, given in a quiet, unobtrusive way, but with a warmth of generous sympathy which made his influence more effective. His portrait appeared, with a sketch of his life, in our pages in 1888.

Born in Dublin, in 1828, he entered the ministry of the Church, and after twenty years' faithful service was elected Bishop of Meath—being chosen largely because of the remarkable service he rendered in re-organising the Irish Church after its disestablishment. In 1884 he was translated to the Archbishopric of Dublin, in which exalted position he played an important part in the work of the Irish Church. He was associated from his earliest years with the Evangelical party in the Church, and his relations with the various dissenting bodies were most cordial. A few years ago he came prominently before the public as the prime mover in the consecration of Señor Cabrera as a bishop for the Reformed Episcopal Church of Spain. This step, which provoked a great amount of criticism both in Ireland and England, was a natural consequence of his general ecclesiastical policy. He had much sympathy for the various Christian bodies on the Continent who have broken loose from the Papal yoke; and he was entirely convinced that by taking up an independent position in his action on behalf of the Spanish Reformers, he was acting in accordance with the best traditions of the Anglican Communion. He was not a man of letters, nor was he a scholar or a learned divine; but he was a prelate of unwearied diligence, who never spared himself in the work of his high office.

The late Archbishop was especially interested in the primary schools of Ireland, and of late years served as one of the Commissioners of National Education. Amongst the memorials of his useful labours in the cause of education which he has left behind him are the Church of Ireland Training College and the Alexandra School, an offshoot of the Alexandra College which was founded under the auspices of Archbishop Trench. He was also instrumental in founding a chair of Pastoral Theology in Trinity College, which is regarded as one of much practical utility. He also established the St. Patrick Home for Nurses, and took an active part in the management of the Meath Industrial School. Coming as he did of Irish parentage on both sides, his family traditions were altogether Irish, and he was always eager to take part in any movement for the welfare of his native land. He was prominent in all philanthropic and patriotic enterprise in Dublin, and his advocacy might always be relied on when charitable work was to be done.

The fourth Biennial Convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to be held in Toronto in October next. The Dominion and Toronto Woman's Christian Temperance Unions are making extensive arrangements in connection with the meetings. The churches, city authorities, temperance and philanthropic organisations are also giving great assistance.

Personalia.

Mr. John R. Mott and his wife have returned to America, after their round-the-world tour in the interests of student volunteer work.

Lord Overtoun, we regret to learn, has been suffering from a severe attack of influenza. He is staying at Biarritz during his convalescence.

Miss Jessie Ackerman is now engaged as an evangelist in Chicago, visiting the saloons and dives and conducting Gospel temperance services.

Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D., is expected to preach on Sunday at Hare-court Chapel, Canonbury, N., and there are hopes that he may occupy the pulpit for some time.

Gipsy Smith, so long engaged in connection with the Manchester and Salford Mission, has been engaged for a year's mission work by the National Free Church Council Federation.

Mr. Rockefeller, the American millionaire, has promised 250,000 dollars to the Baptist Missionary Board of the United States if the churches will contribute an equal amount by July 1.

Mrs. Grimké, of Text Card fame, has been compelled to leave Manchester by reason of ill-health. Her address is now 25, Prince's-square, Bayswater, W., where orders for cards and all communications in connection with her work should be sent.

Mr. Keusseff, pastor of the Baptist Church at Lompalanka, Bulgaria, is at present in this country seeking to interest friends in the work of that church. He is desirous of addressing meetings of Christians throughout the country, and may be addressed care of Baptist Tract and Book Society, 16, Gray's Inn-road, London, W.C.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor has lately had deeply interesting meetings in Hamburg, various parts of Schleswig-Holstein, Kiel, and Berlin. Mr. Sloan, in giving some accounts of these meetings in China's Millions, says: "We have had many tokens of the Lord's presence with us during these days, and we quite believe that results will yet spring from this tour for the furtherance of the Lord's work in China."

Into the Utter Darkness.

The organ of the Bible-women's Mission, Bible Women and Nurses, gives the following illustration of the ignorance sometimes found with regard to the Gospel:—

"It is like taking a candle into the utter darkness," said a lady, speaking of the effect of the Bible-woman's visits, and of the mothers' meeting on a certain very rough woman. "She knew absolutely nothing of Christianity when the Biblewoman found her. As absolutely nothing as if she had lived in a heathen country all her life. This was strange, as generally some sort of early teaching about Christ has found its way into the mind, if not the heart; but this woman's mind was utterly blank on the subject of religion; she knew nothing of the New Testament story, and when the Biblewoman read it to her she would say: 'But did it really happen?' Now she is longing for knowledge, and longing too for a different life. Her home affections, which had either become blunted or remained undeveloped, for she seemed to care little, even for her children, are growing, and she is learning to love her children. Her life is and has been a very hard one, but it is delightful to us to see how the light is beginning to dawn in her soul. These rough beings, if they really do become Christian, and take hold of the Gospel, prove very staunch as well as very kindly in their ways. I can only repeat that in her case, taking the Gospel of Christ to her has been just like taking a candle into the utter darkness."

Appeals.

The Poor Ministers' Clothing Society, whose headquarters are at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, would be glad to receive parcels of new or secondhand clothing for distribution among poor ministers and their families, who are labouring in country districts where the income in many cases does not amount to £50 a year.

(Mrs.) S. Barrett, Hon. Sec.

Lincoln Fair.—The services of Mr. Northcote Willy and Mr. James Neech, have been secured by the Lincoln April Fair Mission, and they purpose to preach the Word, sell the Scriptures, and give away tracts and Gospel literature With the opportunity comes the duty, and the vast crowds which every year gather at Lincoln Fair ought not to be left without efforts to reach and save some of them. Tracts and books are greatly needed. Parcels should be sent not later than Monday, April 19, so as to be in time for the fair. Oliver Vann, Treasurer.

7, St. Giles-avenue, Lincoln.

Seaside Home for the Blind.—The committee of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women have decided to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty, by establishing a branch home at Southend-on-Sea, for change and rest for the blind, the partially blind, and those who work on their behalf. A freehold site, worth £560, has been given. The cost of building and furnishing is estimated at £1200. Of this sum £418 has been secured through the liberality of friends. Rev. H. Bright, 77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, London, N., will give further particulars.

"MAY" MEETINGS, 1897.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.		Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
APRIL
Thurs. 8	3.30	The Bridge of Hope	m	Portman Rooms, W.	Mr. Aug. Birrell, M.P.
"	5 p.m.	Christian Police Association	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. E. Rawlings.
"	7.45	" " "		Do. do.	Mr. W. F. A. Archibald.
Fri. 9	4 p.m.	East End Mothers' Home	m	396, Commercial-road, E.
"	3 p.m.	Theatrical Mission	m	St. Martin's Town Hall	Sir T. G. Carmichael
Mon. 12	3.30	Midnight Meeting Movement	m	Exeter Hall	Capt. Key, R.N.
Tues. 13	3 to 8	Postal and Tel. Christian Asso. (Senior)	m	City Temple
Wed. 14	11.30 to 8	" " " "	m	Do. do.
Thurs. 22	8 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	s	Talbot Tabernacle, W.	Rev. Dr. Gritton.
"	7 p.m.	Baptist Building Fund	m	19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. E. G. Gange.
Fri. 23	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Association	m	Do. do. do.	Mr. F. J. Marnham, J.P.
"	8 p.m.	City of London Tot. Abstinence Union	m	186, Aldersgate-street	Canon Barker.
Mon. 26	2.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions	c	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. Varwell, C.C.
"	3 & 6 p.m.	The Baptist Union	m	Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. T. V. Tymms.
"	6.30 p.m.	Bible Translation Society	m	19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. Chas. Williams.
"	6.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. M. Mordey.
"	3 & 7	Wesley Deaconess Institute	m	Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Miss A. Barlow.
"	7.30	Christian Evidence Society	m	St. Martin's Town-hall, W.C.	Lord Overtoun.
"	7.30	Kilburn Protestant Evang. School	m	Queen's Hall, W.	Rev. C. H. Wainwright.
"	8 p.m.	Sermon-lane Mission	m	The Mission Hall, Islington	Alderman Pound.
Tues. 27	10 a.m.	Lord's Day Observance Society	m	St. James' Hall, W.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
"	10.30 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m	19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Mr. John Town.
"	7 p.m.	" " "	so	Cannon-street Hotel	Sir C. Elliott, K.C.S.I.
"	7 p.m.	Trinitarian Bible Society	m	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. J. E. Mathieson.
"	7 p.m.	Wesleyan Temperance Committee	m	Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. P. F. Wood.
Wed. 28	6.30 p.m.	Barbican Mission to Jews	m	33, Finsbury-square, E.C.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
"	7 p.m.	The Railway Mission	m	Exeter Hall	Lord Overtoun.
"	7.30 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	s	Christ Church, Highbury	Rev. S. L. Dixon.
"	8.45 p.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	b	Holborn Restaurant	Mr. A. Spicer, M.P.
"	12 noon	Baptist Missionary Society	s	Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. Dr. Fairbairn.
"	6.30 p.m.	The Baptist Union	m	Do. do.	President's Address.
"	4 p.m.	Baptist Tract and Book Society	m	19, Furnival-street, E.C.
"	3.30	Baptist Total Abstinence Association	m	The Pastors' College	Alderman G. White.
"	6.45	" " " "	m	Metropolitan Tabernacle	" "
Thurs. 29	10 a.m.	The Baptist Union	m	Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. E. G. Gange.
"	3 p.m.	Mrs. Meredith's Mission and Homes	m	ConferenceHall, 143,Claphm.rd
"	3.30	Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Un.	m	Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
"	6 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m	Exeter Hall	Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.
"	7 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	m	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Major-General Bruce.
"	2.45 p.m.	Reformatory and Refuge Union	m	St. James's Hall, W.	Lord Aberdare.
"	3 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m	Sion College	Dean of Windsor.
"	4 and 7 p.m	Union Hall Mission	m	Carlisle-street, Edgware-road
"	7 p.m.	Infant Orphan Asylum	m	Hotel Metropole	Sir J. B. B. Maple, M.P.
"	2.30, 5, & 8	The Protestant Alliance	m	Queen's Hall, W.
Fri. 30	4 p.m.	Christian Colportage Association	m	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Lord Overtoun.
"	6 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home	m	Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. W. Hazell, M.P.
"	9 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	b	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. W. R. Rickett.
"	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Society	m	Exeter Hall	Judge Bompas.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Archdeacon Howell, vicar of Gresford, has been appointed Dean of St. David's.

Rev. W. Wilkinson, of Bradford, has been appointed vicar of St. Thomas', Leeds.

A new Church Army Labour Home has been opened in Bristol-street, Birmingham.

Good meetings have been held in Leamington by Bishop Tucker and Rev. W. E. Burroughs.

Rev. H. Percy Grubb, of the C.M.S., has been appointed to succeed Rev. E. R. Mason at Oxton.

Rev. F. Hayward Joyce, of Harrow, has been compelled by ill-health to resign, greatly to the regret of his people.

There is a proposal that on Accession Sunday the offertories should this year be devoted to the Clergy Sustentation Fund.

At a meeting of the Sheffield C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union, last week, Bishop Tucker gave an interesting address on work in Uganda.

The ancient parish church of Swinton has been destroyed by fire, the old-fashioned high-backed pews being quickly consumed.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse preached last week at the mid-day services in St. Saviour's, Southwark, and on Sunday evening in Westminster Abbey.

A mission for the deepening of Spiritual Life is being held this week in St. Mary's, Crumpsall, Manchester, by Revs. F. J. Chavasse and A. Pearson.

A meeting was held last week to start an Inns of Court Mission. The Lord Chancellor, Bishop of London, and several Judges supported the proposal.

A new Welsh church and mission buildings in connection therewith, erected in St. Mary's-terrace, Paddington-green, were opened for public worship on Thursday.

Lady Lyttelton, in the absence through illness of the Countess Stamford, held an "At Home" at the Church Army Training Home in Edgware-road on Thursday last. A large number of ladies and gentlemen attended and inspected the Training and Labour Homes, and several very brief addresses were given in illustration of the work carried on by the society amongst the outcast.

Congregational.

A six days' mission has been held at Alfreton.

Mr. J. W. Calvin has been ordained at Tutbury.

Rev. G. Warren has been recognised at Bideford.

Rev. John Peill has been recognised formally at Harehills, Leeds.

Rev. B. W. Jackson has entered on his new charge at Providence, Rochdale.

Rev. W. Legerten has completed a quarter of a century's pastorate at Brentwood.

Rev. J. Chetwode Postans, of Peckham Rye, has celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as pastor.

Mr. H. Gideon Jeffries has been ordained to the pastorate at King-street, Luton; Principal Cave giving the charge.

Raleigh Memorial Chapel, Stoke Newington, has celebrated the twenty-seventh anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. J. Johnston.

Rev. Robert Berry, who, after an interval of nearly thirty-one years, has returned to his first charge at Hallfold, Rochdale, has been welcomed warmly.

The Sheffield Young Women's Missionary Band has undertaken to support a Bible-woman for three years for Mrs. Osborne, of Trevandrum, South India.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has been formally recognised at New Court Chapel, Tollington Park. He enters on his new sphere with hopefulness and the hearty support of the church.

The name of Rev. Dr. Ll. D. Bevan, of Melbourne, who is now on his way to England, is mentioned in connection with the Principalship of the proposed United Theological College of the Welsh Congregationalists.

The Church at Ramsbury, Wilts. (Rev. T. Anthony, pastor), has resolved on the erection of a new Sunday schoolroom and vestry, on account of the dangerous state of the present premises. This village is a purely agricultural one of about 2,000 inhabitants.

The Welsh Union will hold its meetings at Liverpool, June 21-24, commencing with a temperance meeting on Monday. On Tuesday evening, sermons will be preached by Revs. W. James and J. Charles. On Wednesday Rev. R. S. Williams will deliver the presidential address.

Mr. W. Reason has resigned his position as financial secretary at Mansfield House, in Canning Town, where he has been working for the last six years, being compelled to take this step owing to the continued ill-health of his little daughter. His departure will be a great loss to the work of the settlement.

The Manchester and Salford Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society held its meeting last week at Grosvenor-street Chapel. Mr. Harold Lee presided, and stated that the sum contributed during the year by the auxiliary was £5321, which exceeded the amount raised in the preceding year. The secretary, Mr. S. Massey, reported that steps were being taken to organise a large Sunday-school demonstration in Manchester in connection with the society.

Calls.—Rev. G. Watt Smith to Belgrave, Leeds; Rev. D. Macdonald to Castle-street, Reading: Rev. J. G. Patton to Tyne Dock; Mr. B. Uppen to Great Yarmouth; Rev. W. G. Tarbolton to Watton; Rev. R. R. Collett, of Berkeley, to Appledore.

Resignations.—Rev. D. McKinnon, of Wardlaw Church, Glasgow; Rev. M. G. Astbury to Clement-street, Leamington Spa; Rev. H. D. Powis, of Hornsea.

Baptist.

Rev. H. G. Preece has closed his ministry at Maidenhead.

Mr. A. E. Calver has been ordained at Thornaby-on-Tees.

A ten days' mission has been held at Bromley, Kent, by Rev. F. C. Spurr.

A series of special evangelistic services have been held in Chard, Somerset.

Rev. A. W. H. Streuli, of Manchester, has declined the call to Downs Chapel, Clapton.

Rev. J. C. Taylor, formerly of Burslem, began his ministry at Zion Chapel, Bramley, on Sunday.

Professor T. Witton Davies, Principal of the Midland Baptist College, and his family have left for Germany, where they will remain for six months.

Mr. James Clark, who is connected with Upton Chapel, Lambeth, has accepted the seat on the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, vacant through the death of Mr. J. B. Mead, of Brockley.

A special service for men only was held on Sunday, March 28, at the Baptist Chapel, Rochester, when a large number of men assembled to hear an address on "Social Purity" by the pastor, Rev. G. A. Miller.

Rev. William Carey has been transferred from Barisal to Dacca, to take up the work hitherto under the care of Rev. R. Wright Hay, whose ill-health has compelled his return to England. Dacca is a city with 85,000 inhabitants, 7000 of them being students.

Rev. J. R. Cooper, one of Mr. Spurgeon's students, and for ten years pastor at Portland, Victoria, has returned home for family reasons. He will be glad to supply vacant pulpits, and may be addressed, Mr. J. Pomeroy, 5, Higher Bromley-terrace, Teignmouth.

A Baptismal service was held in St. George's-street Chapel, Macclesfield, on Sunday week, when the pastor, Rev. E. A. Hobby, baptized six candidates. Twelve were baptized on Wednesday last week at Cann Hall-road, Leytonstone, by Pastor H. F. Gower.

Beginning in 1891 in a little schoolroom at Pokesdown, Bournemouth, a good work has grown up at Rosebery Park Chapel, under the pastorate of Mr. Lawrence, which now requires enlargement. Earnest efforts are being made to raise £700. The treasurer is Mr. F. Mockbridge, Freemantle, Bournemouth.

The tenth anniversary of the settlement of Dr. Dowen at Wynne-road, Brixton, was celebrated by a public meeting on Wednesday evening, March 31. The chair was taken by Mr. Wm. Olney, and addressed by Rev. John Wilson, Jos. Fletcher, Y. J. Charlesworth, and J. Earn. Mr. W. C. Greenop, secretary, reported that during ten years a new church had been built, costing £5000, and 444 members had been added to the roll.

Farewell services were preached by Rev. Wm. C. Minifie at Lansdowne Chapel, Bournemouth, on Sunday, when large congregations attended, he having accepted a call to Zion Jubilee Chapel, Bradford. On Monday evening a crowded farewell meeting was held in the chapel. Mr. Geo. Pearce presided, supported by Revs. J. Ossian Davies, W. D. Robinson (former pastor). Thomas Evans, C. H. Stanton, C. H. Parratt, and Wm. C. Minifie.

Rev. G. B. Farthing and Miss Foord, who recently left for China, encountered a terrible storm. Mr. Farthing writes:—"The constant breaking over the vessel of huge waves made it seem certain that it was merely a question of time before we should sink, for it appeared impossible that the ship would live amid such fury, and when such immense quantities of water kept pouring in, which was but inadequately baled out. We were saved from fear, and there was nothing like panic. God wrought for us deliverance."

Calls.—Rev. W. Owen, to Queen's Park, Manchester; Mr. E. C. Nobman, to Helston; Mr. T. Reeves, to Tirzah, near Cardiff; Rev. T. S. Morris to St. John's, Runcorn (accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. J. S. Geale, of Queen's-square, Brighton; Rev. W. R. Ponton, of Parker-street, Barnsley; Rev. G. Sage, of East-street, St. Neots.

Methodist.

A fruitful mission has been held at Wigan.

Miss How has had a good mission at Still Cross, Shebbear.

Rev. A. Trengrove has held special meetings in connection with the Sunderland and Brotton Missions.

Rev. W. Middleton Butters has left Wimbledon for a lengthened sea voyage for the benefit of his health.

A united committee of Bible Christians and Primitive Methodists is continuing negotiations with a view to organic union.

At Trinity Chapel, Fernhead-road, Paddington, where 1200 children gather on a Sunday afternoon, seven foundation-stones have been laid for the enlargement of the class-rooms.

It is stated that the members of the Salvation Army at Glazebrook have amalgamated with the Methodist Free Church. The building in which the Army services were held has become the property of the Free Methodists.

The movement to raise, as a Queen's commemoration fund, £10,000 to extend the twenty-eight Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes founded by Wesleyan Methodists in various part of the Empire, is meeting with much success. In addition to the direct donations already in hand, about two hundred purses have been promised by ladies, whose offerings will be received by her Royal Highness the Duchess of Teck on the evening of May 6, at a reception in the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall.

The Wesleyans of Leeds have taken in hand the reconstruction of the largest chapel in the city—that in Oxford-place. Under the ministry of Rev. Samuel Chadwick what was once a deserted building has now become full to overflowing, and the trustees have resolved to spend something like £18,000 in modernising the premises and adapting them to the needs of present day mission work. In addition the new buildings will afford central premises for the whole of the district. The enlargements include a synod hall to hold some 600 persons.

Presbyterian.

The total membership in China is reported as 4946, an increase of 296 for the year.

A purse of gold has been presented to Rev. Robert Stewart by his Gateshead friends on his removal to Benwell.

The Senatus of the University of Glasgow has decided to confer the degree of D.D. upon Rev. W. J. Thomson Johnston, of Worcester.

The Home Mission Committee will recommend the Synod to again set apart five evangelists to labour this year within the Presbytery of Manchester.

The tenth year of the ministry of Rev. J. B. Meharry at Crouch Hill has been celebrated with much enthusiasm. In that period the membership has risen from 282 to 837.

Trinity Church, Manchester, now much built in, has decided to accept an offer of £2000 for their church premises. A new church will probably be erected in Higher Broughton.

Calls.—Rev. W. B. Cooper, of Durham, to Bristol (accepted); Rev. J. R. Macgregor, to Milton Parish, Glasgow; Rev. H. R. Davies, to Ystpytty, Bettws-y-Coed.

Fallen Asleep.

In Battersea, on 28th ult., Mr. John Molineux, C.B aged seventy-four, closely associated with Dr. Rigg in connection with the Training Colleges at Westminster and Battersea, and in Wesleyan affairs generally.—At Altrincham, on 29th ult., Rev. W. T. Radcliffe, a much valued Methodist minister.—At Norbiton, Mr. Peter Bancroft, a generous giver to Christian work.—At Malvern, Mr. Richard Jones, a personal worker and willing giver.—At Westmancote, Bredon, Rev. E. Balmford, aged fifty-three, minister of the Baptist Chapel.—At Hanney, Wantage, Rev. C. A. Foy, for thirty years the devoted curate of the parish.—At Ipswich, on 28th ult., Mrs. Hubbard, aged fifty-one, wife of Rev. W. Hubbard.—At Tunstall, Mr. J. Hammond, a preacher of the Gospel for over fifty years.—At Prudhoe, Mr. W. Thompson, aged ninety, a devoted worker for many year.—At Halifax, Mr. J. W. Rothery, an earnest helper in mission and Sunday-school effort.—At Huddersfield, Mr. Frederick Crosland, aged sixty-four, a deacon and trustee of Highfield Church, one of the founders of the Great Northern-street Mission, which is now a self-supporting church, superintendent of the Sunday-school, president of the Huddersfield Y.M.C.A.—At 9, Amen-court, E.C., on 28th ult., Rev. Dr. W. Sparrow Simpson, aged sixty-nine, rector of St. Vedast, and for thirty-seven years an active member of the Cathedral body at St. Paul's.—At Newcastle, co. Down, on 29th ult., Canon J. H. Seymour, whose faithful ministry, simple, unostentatious piety had endeared him to many.—At Benares, Rev. Brocklesby Davies, C.M.S. missionary since 1859.—At Ashwater, on 30th ult., Rev. J. M. Field, aged eighty-four, the beloved rector of the parish.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada ..	2¼ dols. „ „
Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols. „ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 „ „	4s. „ „
12 „ „	6s. „ „
24 „ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OWING to our lengthened report of the Convention in St. James' Hall, we are obliged to omit this week the fourth article by Dr. Leach on "Is My Bible Really True?"

Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institute, writes to us from Edinburgh :—

A National day of prayer to God should be appointed on behalf of poor India. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that there is a very close connection between this, the most terrible of all the famines that has devastated India in our time, and the God-dishonouring and God-defying opium traffic in which we try to supplement the revenues of India by spreading wholesale destruction among the people of China.

To the devout mind it is very suggestive that in all our Lord's last agony He always felt He had to do with the will of the Father. "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief." His prayer in Gethsemane was: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless not as I will, but as Thou wilt." To Peter, when he attempted a rash and useless rescue of Him from the soldiers, He said: "Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father giveth Me, shall I not drink it?" His cry of intolerable anguish on the cross was wrung from Him by the loss of the presence of God: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" In all this bearing of our load of sin He realised that the burden had been put upon Him by the Divine hand. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." The soul who wants peace with God may find it in thus seeing that Jesus was truly "the Lamb of God who took away the sin of the world." In the wounded Saviour he will find the Father—"God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself."

Although it is true that we are not saved "by works of righteousness which we have done," it is a good sign when a sinner begins to cut off his sins and to live a better life. It manifests a sense of sin which may grow until no rest shall be possible for the soul except in receiving Christ; it shows dissatisfaction with self which can alone be pacified with a vision of Jesus, and the knowledge that God has made Him to become sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. Preaching and teaching should ever aim at disturbing self-satisfied ease. It should put men on doing what they can never achieve, so that they may close with their Saviour. The chief difficulty is with persons who go about seeking to establish their own righteousness, and have a quiet satisfaction that they are succeeding. The exceeding broadness of the Divine law, its minuteness, its inexorableness, must be pressed upon them until they see that they are saved by grace.

With a European war trembling in the balance, it is well for publicists not to use language that will needlessly aggravate the dangers of the crisis. The following comments of The Times, in its issue of Monday, seem to us very fairly to sum up the perilous situation :—

There is reason to believe that the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Crete, already accepted in principle as expedient, would, if immediately carried out, co-operate with the gloomy prospect of Greek enterprises on the Thessalian frontier to induce the Government at Athens to submit to the inevitable. The adoption of any plan for setting up autonomy under international guarantees, in Crete, would appear almost as far off as ever. The European concert will expose itself to ridicule if it allows itself to be reduced to impotence in a matter as to which its will has been publicly declared and supported by conjoint action. The moment is favourable for taking a step towards the attainment of the ends which all the Powers have in view by getting the Sultan to withdraw the Turkish troops. The Greek Government could then be summoned once more to give Colonel Vassos his orders for retirement and to suspend its aggressive demonstrations in Thessaly. But, if the Powers hesitate too long before coming to any conclusion, an opportunity will be lost which is unlikely to present itself again.

The Bishop of Truro is evidently a warm advocate of the union of Church and Stage. At the meeting held last week, he is reported to have said that the theatre not only gave refreshment but "in his opinion imparted a moral antagonism against wrong-doing and suffering." We have tried to get at the meaning of this remarkable dictum, but have failed, and can only conclude that the Bishop's words have been incompletely reported. The theatrical life, added his lordship, was, or might become, a calling of God. The latter assumption may be a tenable one. Robert Pollok in his "Course of Time," made the similar admission that the theatre might be a channel of good, but he added that it never had been. We have to take the theatre as it is, not as it might be; and to say that the theatrical profession, as it exists to-day, is "a calling of God" appears to us an abuse of language.

"The poor ye have always with you"; and for some years to come a large number of the most pitiable as well as most deserving cases will be those who were made by the Liberator crash. Not less than £4000 a year is needed to deal with the cases which are known, and are on the books of the Relief Committee. As many as 2777 cases are on the books, of whom 1460 are widows or lone women. Brave, patient souls, who have kept up the fight for bread and a home as long as they could, have again and again to yield, and come reluctantly upon the Fund. Often is the remark made, "I would gladly give help if I only knew of deserving cases." No one need be at a loss for them so long as we have such an outlet for sympathy. In this year of generous deeds, the Fund ought to be remembered.

Mr. Thomas Barnsley, of Birmingham, gave to a meeting of Wesleyan Methodists on education some facts concerning his own city, which, on the face of them, are of great interest and importance. Thirty years ago the rates of Birmingham were 4s. 4d. in the pound; to-day they are 4s. 6d. At the former period the poor rate was 2s. 10¾d.; to-day it is 1s. 5d.; the School Board rate is just over a shilling. The decrease in the poor rate is more than the amount of the additional education rate. The explanation which forces itself on the mind, and which Mr. Barnsley evidently desired to suggest, is that education has tended to reduce poverty, and that it will reduce it still more. It ought to do so. And even should education cost as much as poverty, it is the better thing of the two. Nevertheless, it would reconcile many persons to the education rate if it could be shown that education was lessening the burdens of the ratepayer. Economy enters quite as largely into the question of education as religion.

The Abstainers' Congress has passed a resolution on the attitude of the Churches towards the drink traffic, which, while rousing the enthusiasm of some, will be hotly resisted by others. Another section in the Churches, and perhaps the largest, will sympathise with the aim of the resolution, but will yet regret that it was passed. It affirmed that "the time had arrived to declare that it is inconsistent for a Christian man to be engaged or financially interested in the drink traffic." If this be so, then it is equally inconsistent for any Christian to use alcoholic drinks under any circumstances. This has not hitherto been the position of the generality of Christian advocates of temperance. They have argued on the ground of expediency, influence, and example. While to them it would be wrong to use intoxicants, they would not judge others. We think this attitude is the most likely to bring Christians out of association with the drink trade in every form.

The recent dispatch of Lord George Hamilton to the Government of India re the health of the troops will no doubt be acted upon in one respect, and, as Major Rasch says in a letter to The Times, more will be hoped for by the advocates of regulating vice. Something has been gained for morality if Lord G. Hamilton's instructions as to warning and instructing young soldiers are carried out, and if henceforth idle hours are filled with healthy occupation. But these instructions will be futile as remedial measures unless also marriage is made a reward of good conduct, and the percentage of married soldiers is largely increased. It is interesting and instructive to see how the C.D. Acts are now reprobated in name, while their principle is admitted and their main provision—compulsory examination — eagerly desired. Major Rasch, M.P., thinks that no one desires them "in their scandalous entirety"; he only wants "compulsory inspection" in the Presidency towns and in the country districts; but he knows, or ought to know, that you cannot have that without registration, licensing, and police surveillance—all "the scandalous entirety."

The new legal portion of Lord Geo. Hamilton's dispatch practically amounts to the classification of specified diseases along with diphtheria and other contagious diseases, and the treatment of both kinds of patients in the same way. A medical officer may be informed of any one suffering from them; he can require the person to attend at the hospital, where he or she may be compulsorily detained until the doctor thinks danger is over; failing to come to the hospital, he or she may be expelled the cantonment within twenty-four hours. The practical result of this will be that women will be advised to go up regularly; that they will be denounced by men falsely; that there will be a system of blackmailing by men and women; and that medical men, under the name "detention," will have practically the power of imprisonment. It is but a step, and a small step, from this point to that of compulsory examination. It seems to be the old system under a somewhat modified form—not so easy to expose, but quite as dangerous to morals and to health.

While this much is to be insisted on, we have freely admitted that the opponents of the old Acts must not merely confine themselves to negative criticism and protest. No Christian man, remembering our Lord's treatment of sinners, can object to the cure of disease in any form, whether the direct product of sin or otherwise. But the great point at which to aim, both in curative and legislative action, is prevention rather than a superficial cure, which will enable a man to sin again with more impunity. "Go and sin no more, lest a worse thing befall thee," is the language of the Master in such a case. As to rational methods of prevention, we direct the attention of our readers to the admirable statement made at the United Service Institution last week by Major Mayne, the substance of which we have reproduced on p. 11.

Christ Crucified.

"He was led as a lamb to the slaughter."
God in human form reflected—
Promised, prayed for, and expected—
Scorned, betrayed, despised, rejected!
When the Lord had finished praying,
Judas came, the priests obeying,
With a kiss his Lord betraying.
Pilate sought some justice by Him,
But the Jews did thus reply him:
"Crucify Him! Crucify Him!"
"King of Jews!" the mockers hailed Him,
Lying witnesses assailed Him,
On the cross, Oh, God! they nailed Him.
Lo! the staring crowd derided,
Till the pangs of death subsided,
And the Temple veil divided!
Bitter cry and anguished groaning,
God his Son in wrath disowning,
Christ, made sin, for sin atoning!
In the Saviour's body broken,
See the Father—God's love-token,
Love that words could not have spoken.
See the soldier's spear a-gleaming—
See the precious life-blood streaming—
Thus, ah! thus, the world redeeming.
Lord, accept our heart's oblation,
Worship, honour, adoration:
All Thy suffering—our salvation!

F. W. Pitt.

Malo-les-Bains, Nord, France.—At this time of the year, when Christian workers are making plans for taking a holiday in which they would like to combine a little work for the Lord, the writer begs to suggest the beautiful place of Malo-les-Bains (not St. Malo), which is about a mile from Dunkerque, and within easy reach of London by steamer. There are steamers also from Goole and from Leith. The spiritual needs of Dunkerque and Malo are very great; anyone who feels drawn to consecrate a few hours every week for evangelistic services would receive every help from the French Protestant pastor and his wife. Address Madame Vessau, Malo-les-Bains, Nord, France.

[310]

The London Convention.

It was a bold experiment to attempt to hold a conference in the heart of London, on the model of that which is so closely associated with the little town among the Cumberland hills. One chief attraction at Keswick is the comparative quiet and stillness of life, the freedom from the pressure and rush of busy city life, the infrequency of the post, the presence of the hills and lakes, with everything that Nature can present calculated to excite and express the holiest emotions. Sometimes when the side curtains are uplifted, and the eye is able to travel from the crowded tent to the far distances of hill and valley, to behold the morning haze and the dying light of sunset, one is carried from things that are seen and temporal to the unseen and eternal, and the vail is rent.

Nothing of this kind was to be expected in St. James's Hall. The audiences must come from the busy scenes of daily occupation and engagement by the familiar omnibus, train, or cab, and, on emerging, would be met by the calls of the newspaper boys, the spring fashions in the shops, and the turmoil of Piccadilly Circus. It was a bold experiment, we say, to attempt a conference on the inner, spiritual life, under such altered conditions.

All fears, however, on this ground were silenced at the first meeting. Whilst the great congregation was gathering, the favourite Keswick hymns were being sung. During the opening praise and prayer there were the same hush, reverence, and intensity, with which every first attender at Keswick is so impressed. During the speaking there was the same eager and rapt listening, and at the close, on many faces, the same expression of tranquillity, light, and strength.

Mr. Robert Wilson makes an admirable chairman, and seemed as unaffected in the strong light cast about him in the heart of London as in his own North-country home. It is remarkable how he contrives to give the tone to a meeting by the Scripture he reads and the brief words of comment. Seven of the Keswick speakers had arranged to take part, Revs. Evan Hopkins, C. A. Fox, G. H. C. Macgregor, F. B. Meyer, E. W. Moore, G. Handley Moule, and Preb. Webb-Peploe. The burden of the financial responsibility was borne by one or two influential friends, who had been for some time sincerely desirous of bringing the message of the spiritual life within hearing of the West-End, and especially of the clergymen and ministers of London.

In the latter of these attempts, the convention has been fairly successful. We could have wished that a larger number of the men of leisure with whom London abounds had made an effort to attend, for the audiences in the morning and afternoon were largely composed of ladies; and whilst many clergymen were present, they were largely those who are known to have general sympathy with the movement, whilst hundreds who might have profited evidently treated it with indifference.

Among the addresses that stand out, the opening statement by Mr. Hopkins, briefly reported in our last issue, was remarkable for its lucidity and aptness. The speaker's clear and discriminating statements served to remove misconception, and reassure any who feared that the Convention might propound theories inconsistent with sound Scripture exegesis, or true Christian experience. Mr. Webb-Peploe has been largely the life and soul of the gatherings, and his influence as the president of the two meetings specially intended for clergymen and ministers, was wisely used for answering objections, allaying doubts, and encouraging his brethren to yield themselves entirely to God. It was a memorable sight on Thursday, when some forty brethren rose to attest their desire to be wholly consecrated. Large numbers expressed their deep appreciation of the addresses of Mr. Macgregor, whose power of clear insight in statement removed many difficulties, and helped large numbers to a definite appropriation of Jesus Christ for power in the overcoming life. Dr. Handley Moule's two addresses, needless to say, were the very finest of the wheat.

It did not seem possible to hold after meetings to any large extent. People have not the same leisure in London, and the distances are great. But there were many opportunities of quiet reflection and decision. The intervals for silent prayer were frequent, and on several occasions there was a call for definite and visible manifestation of the acceptance of the truths advanced by the speakers. We believe that, in many cases, last week will have been the time for entering into new covenant with God, the outcome of which will be quickened service at home, and missionary devotion abroad. It is impossible that such doctrines could have been stated, such impressions made, and much time given to waiting upon God, without leading to results not less permanent and real because the processes are hidden.

The crowning meeting of the Convention was held on Saturday morning, when addresses were delivered by Bishop Tugwell, of Western Equatorial Africa, and Mr. Roscoe, of Uganda. Their statements as to the results of the Keswick movement on foreign missionary work, inciting to consecration, and prayer, and reliance upon the Spirit of God, were extremely impressive. They said that the quality of the candidates offering to missionary societies had been notably raised, and the spirit which pervaded their teachings promoted in the highest degree the devotion of the native converts to the propagation of the religion of Jesus Christ. It was no small matter to have such a practical vindication of the utility of these Conventions.

We have watched with some solicitude the advance of this great movement, and are glad to bear our testimony to its spirituality, its growing consistency with Scripture, and its power in influencing some of the foremost workers of our time. There is a great increase in the scripturalness of the statements advanced. There was little that could be taken exception to in the meetings held last week. On the whole, the trend of every address was to exalt Jesus Christ in the love and life of the believer, and to lead to a closer conformity to his character.

India's Widows and Orphans.

In response to an urgent appeal the committee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission are sending out two new missionaries to India, to join a third already in the field, in taking charge of famine orphans. Some of the lady missionaries of the society are rendering splendid service in distributing relief. Money has also been granted for the support of child-widows in industrial homes. £6000 have been received in response to the appeal issued by the committee, but at least £10,000 is needed to feed the many starving women and children who must be assisted till the Autumn, and to provide for widows and orphans.

The present time may be a spiritual crisis in the history of that dark country. The sufferings from famine and plague have been terrible, and have awakened a sense of sin, and an earnest desire for reconciliation with God in the minds of many of the people. There has been earnest prayer that the present widespread affliction may be overruled for the spiritual awakening of India.

If a Nation Die, Shall it Live Again?

THERE is no bondage so enslaving as the fear of death. There is no deliverance except through death. There is no victory, but in resurrection from the dead. Satan the adversary, the devil, the accuser, has the power of death; God has the power of resurrection The Captain of our salvation partook of flesh and blood, in order that through death He might render powerless him that had the power of death, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because it is the Gospel of God concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who, having been made of the seed of David according to the flesh, was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead.

Our justification and our sanctification both result from his resurrection. We are justified by faith on Him who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead. We were baptized into his death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we also should walk in newness of life (Rom. iv. 24, 25; v. 1; vi. 1-14).

It was characteristic of the legal dispensation that they who lived under it were in bondage through fear of death. But the men of faith overleaped dispensational limitations, and trusted God, and were made free by the truth, accounting, calculating, that He was able to raise even from the dead (Heb. xi.). The early Christians, in the power of the Gospel, feared not them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; because they believed in their risen Lord. That is the power of the Christian still. He counts not his life dear unto him; he counts all things loss, that he may know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death, if by any means he may attain unto the resurrection from the dead. It is this, their union with the crucified and risen Christ, that makes Christians the salt of the earth. As soon as we lose the power of his resurrection, and of our resurrection in Him, the savour of the salt is gone. Then Abraham ceases to be, and Lot becomes, our pattern; and when we speak of coming judgment or of our incorruptible and undefiled inheritance, we seem like them that mock.

Every political crisis is a testing time for the Church of God. All true guidance of public opinion must emanate from her. If she be worldly she will be cowardly, and will counsel cowardice. Instead of a high and noble and self-sacrificing policy, on the side of righteousness, she will justify Satan when he said, "Skin for skin: yea all that a man hath will he give for his life." And she will ignore the words of her Lord, "He that loveth his life shall lose it." It is bad for a nation when the salt loses its savour. Then, if some great crisis happens, the nation is unequal to it, and in whole or in part succumbs.

"Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood,
For the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah,
Offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand,
And the sheep upon the right.
And the choice goes by for ever
'Twixt that darkness and that light.

. . . .

"Careless seems the great Avenger;
History's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness
'Twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth for ever on the scaffold,
Wrong for ever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the Future,
And, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above his own.

"Then to side with Truth is noble,
When we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause bring fame and profit,
And 'tis prosperous to be just;
Then it is the brave man chooses,
While the coward stands aside,
Doubting in his abject spirit,
Till his Lord is crucified,
And the multitude make virtue
Of the faith they had denied."

That sentence, "Once to every man and nation, comes the moment to decide," is an echo of the ancient wisdom to which Elihu gave utterance to Job: "When He giveth quietness (by overthrowing the tyrants) who then can make trouble? and when He hideth his face who then can behold Him? whether it be done against a nation or against a man only." The nation as well as the individual must be ready to face death in the cause of righteousness. The nation that loves its life will lose it. The nation that will give up its life for the Truth's and for righteousness' sake, even though it die shall live again.

It is the constant business of the Church to teach the world this lesson. The Old Testament saints wrote it large in their own blood. They overcame the dragon, the accuser, because of the blood of the Lamb, and, because of the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death. Their children of the New Testament have not unworthily followed them, and from the days when Roman youths and maidens gave up their lives in torture rather than sprinkle incense upon heathen altars, to these days when our English sisters were massacred in China, and heroic lads roasted to death in Uganda, the Church of Christ has had its martyrs, declaring by their works and by their sufferings their faith in God who raises the dead.

But truth is truth, whether it be to a nation or to a man only; and the Church of Christ in England must declare to the English Nation and its Government that if the Nation will adopt the Satanic doctrine, "Skin for skin: yea all that a man hath will he give for his life," then it must accept its doom from Christ, "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it." If Britannia's life consists in Turkish or other bonds, and she is determined to save it, she will certainly lose the nobler life of righteousness which exalteth a nation.

Nations have utterly perished in their own corruption; but no nation ever perished through standing for the right. If such a nation die she shall live again. And it comes to every nation, in the providence of God, to be tested, whether she will resist unto blood, striving against sin. The existence of a nation must be imperilled, rather than oppression and wrong be upheld by it. For under the equal government of God, the same principles come into operation, whether it be a nation or a man only. And the nation must have the same faith as the individual man, accounting, calculating, that God is able to raise even from the dead. The weak point of Mammon-worship is that in its calculations it takes no account of the God of Resurrection. A nation, or a company of nations, condoning massacre for the sake of mammon, is in danger of perishing in its own corruption. And this may happen when the salt of the earth has lost its savour—its knowledge of and its testimony to the power of Christ's resurrection. M.

British Troops in India.

A PAPER was read last week at the Royal United Service Institution, London, by Major C. B. Mayne, R.E., discussing the question how far past legislation had proved effective in securing the health of the British troops in India, and making suggestions as to future legislation. In the course of his remarks, he said that the prevalence of these diseases among our troops in India and its variations were the resultant of many factors, none of which were constant, and each of which had acted more strongly in some years than in others. The least important factor was that of the presence or absence of regulation—that was, of the compulsory lock hospital system in cantonments, with its registration and periodic examination with the view of excluding disease from cantonments. It was, he held, forgetfulness of the social character of immorality and the universal failure of repressive physical machinery to deal with it—a very natural consequence from the very nature of the problem—that had produced a tone of despair as to the solution of the difficulty.

The first principle to guide them in the future was the fact that the problem they wished to solve was a social and moral one at basis, and could only be effectively dealt with by social and moral means. Any legislation providing security beforehand against the consequences of immorality could not but have a debasing and immoral influence. This did not exclude the adoption of remedial measures to provide for a subsequent cure. The second principle was the fact that vice was not a necessity either for health or military efficiency. A third principle was that it was not the duty of Government to take such action as might be held to facilitate vice. Fourthly, it was the duty of Government to make equal regulations and laws for both men and women. Hence, if certain women were to be placed under special laws as a discouragement to vice, then men (civilians as well as soldiers and sailors) must also be subjected to the same laws.

His study of the subject led him to the conclusion that very little could be done by legislation to remove existing evils. In his opinion, the best action that could be taken by Government in the matter was to create for India a special long-service army. Among the means he suggested for improving the morality of the British soldier in India were—(1) the provision of small libraries of selected works in guardrooms for the use of the men waiting their turn for duty; (2) addresses on hygiene by chaplains and medical officers; (3) the provision of church-rooms as well as music-halls in barracks; (4) an Army Purity Society organised on regimental lines, like the Army Temperance Association; (5) the provision of acceptable and agreeable occupation for the men in their spare hours, either in the shape of work or games. He maintained that if all the past efforts to control the consequences of immorality had been spent in promoting morality, they would not now have been face to face with the great evil which confronted them. He thought that much more could be done than was being done in influencing for good the gentlemen cadets at Woolwich and Sandhurst, many of whom entered the service with the most false and vicious ideas of what true manliness meant, even if they had not already destroyed the ideal of true manhood.

Finally, Major Mayne said that we cannot be hygienically right and morally wrong at the same time. Sin and vice are transgressions of law or lawlessness, and we, as a nation, cannot avoid the charge of hypocrisy if we daily acknowledge the Divine Sovereignty in Parliament in the prayers said there and in the Army with our "parade" services, and then deliberately proceed to break his laws and encourage or even tolerate and regulate lawlessness.

The Tokat Massacres in Asia Minor.—The Chronicle says: "The last massacre at Tokat was terrible, over 2000 killed—that is the true number. Within the next four weeks, unless something intervenes, we shall hear of fresh outrages among the poor Armenians, as the Hamidieh Regiment is on the move, believed to be going to Erzeroum, and they are more devil than man. Think of the world looking on while one man is butchering hundreds of defenceless creatures! All along the Syrian coast every mile or two is placed a guard of Turkish soldiers to prevent Armenians escaping. Those in Zeitun are ready to rise, and they are an unruly lot. War seems inevitable."

"Keswick" in London.

THE CONVENTION IN ST. JAMES'S HALL.

THE meetings of the past week have been of the most encouraging character. The Great Hall has been filled, and a quiet, earnest spirit of waiting upon God, and of expectancy, has been manifest throughout. Mr. Robert Wilson has presided at the various meetings. Tuesday morning's meeting was noticed in our last issue. In the afternoon the first address was given on

THE LESSONS OF THE BURNING BUSH

BY REV. E. W. MOORE.

Having read Exod. iii. 2, 3, he said:—What a grand thing to turn aside. Much hinges upon it. What would Moses not have lost had he neglected that sight? Hence we thank God for the opportunity presented by these meetings of turning aside from the cares and burdens of daily life to listen to God. There is no difficulty in getting a crowd to see the latest sight—the last new pictures, a new play or exhibition, boat-race or match; but how few think of turning aside to see God's sight.

What was this sight Moses turned aside to see? A burning bush. What did it typify? There was a great purpose in this vision, given before he entered on his lifework, and to equip him for the tremendous enterprise before him. Nor was it time wasted. As one has said, "That time is not lost which the mower takes to whet his scythe." There have been many interpretations—but on these I do not intend now to enter, desiring rather to draw a few simple lessons for us as servants of our Master.

First we see a picture of the Church in humiliation. The choice of Deity fell not on a stately cedar or lofty palm, but on a humble acacia bush. Brethren, we may think ourselves cedars, but in God's sight we are but thorns and briars. That humble bush bearing no fruit, affording no shade, shows what God would have us to be, that He might reveal his glory in us. He cannot do so until we are willing to take the place which belongs to us, till we are willing to acknowledge ourselves nothing better than thorns and briars.

2. Further, it is not only an emblem of the Church in humiliation, but also a prophecy of her tribulation. Not only is there a bush, but there is also a flame. Have the burning rays of the eastern sun kindled the flame? or has some shepherd lad lighted the fire in sport or by accident? Moses turned aside to see. Whatever the source of the flame, one lesson is unquestionably this, that the Church of Christ from its earliest days to its latest, must not expect to escape the flame of persecution and trial in one form or another. From the days of Israel in Egypt, to those of the three youths walking unscathed in the fiery furnace; to the days when Christians smeared in pitch were used as torches to light Nero's gardens; on to the flames of our own martyrs in Smithfield and Oxford, or later to the martyrs of Madagascar and Uganda, the people of God have had to pass through the flame of bitter persecution, discipline, trials, or sorrows, which beset us here below. "God," as has been said, "has one Son without sin, but He has not one without suffering.

3. But not only have we here a picture of humiliation, a prophecy of tribulation, we have also a pledge of preservation. The bush burned with fire, and yet it was not consumed. This it seems to have been that specially attracted the attention of Moses. What an emblem of the vitality of the Church of Christ? Voltaire spoke of Christianity as in its twilight—yes, but it is twilight of the morning and not of the setting sun. Rousseau said that in fifty years Christianity would have ceased to exist, but fifty years afterwards a branch of the Bible Society was formed in the very room in which he uttered these words. The more the Church is persecuted, the more she multiplies and grows. What is the secret of it all? In spite of all there are more true Christians in the world than ever there were, more Bible in the world than ever before. Christianity has come to stay. Poor, obscure, hunted, despised, yet the bush burns without losing a leaf or twig. How is this? The life of Christ is indestructible, and "because I live ye shall live also." What is the secret? "God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early."

4. One thing more we see in the burning bush—a parable of sanctification. "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." What can make a common bush holy? Do we wait for the answer? What is the secret of a holy life? As General Gordon said, "The secret is God in us." God-possession is the secret of a life that will shine. Sanctity is not the repression of evil—even the heathen can do that—it is the life of God in a man, of which the heathen know nothing. You want to be holy; there is but one way—to let the Holy One live in you. There is but one holy life. Just so far and so long as Christ dwells in you by the Holy Ghost, you are holy men and holy women. The bush is nought in itself; you cannot overrate its worthlessness. So we, in our temperament, talents, and gifts—what are we? But bough and leaf and twig are ablaze; all the bush is on fire. So should we be on fire—not with the strange fire of enthusiasm and self-will; but there is fire, for the symbol of the presence of God is not ice; it is fire.

The fire of the smoking altar, the fire of the cloud that led them through the wilderness, the lamp of fire that moved between the pieces of Abraham's sacrifice—every well-instructed Hebrew knew that such fire was a symbol of the presence of Jehovah. It was the presence of God that made the bush brilliant, and nothing but the fire of God's indwelling will make you and me brilliant. Said one of General Gordon, "We know what a life ruddy with the presence of Christ in God is—we have seen it." What a testimony! The difficulty is to get people's attention to a sermon, but they cannot escape a sermon all the week long. Men see it and begin to believe that "the Life was the light of men." The Lord open our eyes to see the possibilities for the poorest, weakest, and most worthless who trusts in God, if He come into our lives and let his light shine forth to his glory and in blessing to men.

The second address of the afternoon was given on

THE SACRIFICES OF GOD.

BY REV. C. A. FOX.

He led in prayer, and spoke briefly:—Let me ask what we are giving to God, who has given so much to us? What does He expect from us, and is He waiting to receive it or not? It is a simple question, a most blessed transaction. It is a gift which only sinners can give, and only a God could care to receive.

First of all, God wants of us, as we have read in Psa. li. 17: "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit." The first gift any poor soul can offer to God is a broken spirit—a spirit broken, crushed between the justice and mercy of God, so that it can keep God out nowhere. The weakest, the worst, and the most deserted—the one who seems God-forsaken—may bring such a sacrifice. Was it not when Jesus on the cross had to cry, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" that He offered a sacrifice which could not be refused by the Eternal Father? My own persuasion is that the Church of God is suffering to-day from the lack of sacrifices of a broken spirit. My brethren, may I ask you to come to the lowest depth, to lie in the dust before God; not with a consciousness of humbling ourseleves, but with the full conviction that it is only our proper place. There let us abide till the touch of Jesus shall raise us from the dust of death, and lift us into newness of life.

But there is another offering we ought to give before we leave this room: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." First the sacrifice of the broken heart, then the sacrifice of the presented body. I beseech you by the mercies of Christ—by the sufferings of Christ, by the mystery of Calvary, by the resurrection of Jesus, by the ascension of our Lord, by the crowned King, present your bodies a living sacrifice. Have you given that to Him? Have you definitely presented to Jesus your whole body and all that is yours? When the fire had touched the prophet's lips his purged heart was ready to say, "Here am I, send me." So will it be with us when we learn to present our bodies, to yield, to surrender our all to our Divine Master.

And then in Heb. xiii. 15 there is a third sacrifice: "By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually." The sacrifice of praise, that is what God is looking for. Do you know why there is so little praise in the Church? Because so few offer the sacrifices of a broken spirit; it is a broken spirit which breaks into irresistible praise. As an army, banded together by the Holy Ghost, let us move forward rank by rank, each one in his place, fearless, true, faithful, onward-moving, upward-rising, till the dawn shall break and our Lord Jesus shall have come to take his people home to Himself. There is such power in Jesus that any soul which carries Him within becomes a temple of God; and men, even in busy London, need never want a place to pray in, being themselves temples of the Holy Ghost. What songs of joy, what bright light, what kind words, what tender, gracious condescension towards the brotherhood possesses the life when Christ is King within! "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

But how shall we offer these sacrifices? It is the simplest thing in the world. We have to go outside the camp. It is not pleasant work going out there, but it is to Jesus, and you will not mind it. It is not going from church to church. It is going outside of self, of sin, into the company of Jesus. Going to Him and abiding with Him, wherever it may be, bearing his reproach. But many of us do not bear his reproach. We want the cultivated world, we love society, to be among gifted men, to be reckoned learned, eminent, to be with pleasant, wealthy men. But we will not find Jesus there—we must be ready to bear his reproach, to go out to Him, outside the camp.

How are we to do this? "By Him." We offer to Him, by Him. When we give anything it is what we receive. As the child asks some trifle from its father and straightway presents it to its mother, so what I give to Jesus is simply what I have from Him. What I have belongs to Him, and I cannot rest until I put it in his pierced hands.

As I close, I notice that in the next verse (Heb. xiii. 16) there is a fourth sacrifice, "To do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." Do not make little of doing good. It is pleasing to God. It may be the least thing: common courtesy (not so common as it should be), tenderness one to another, speaking kindly, not disrespectfully one of another, going out to a brother who has been put aside, as Jesus found the man who was cast out—with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Moreover, we are privileged to give service and substance to bring glory to our Master. We will gain little profit from these gatherings if our hearts are not on fire with the Holy Ghost and with love to Jesus, so that we may do good and communicate, giving glory to God and profit to our fellow-men.

By the addresses in the evening the large audience that assembled was led to consider the imperative necessity of giving place to the will of God, if life is to be fruitful and blessed. In opening the meeting Mr. Wilson read 2 Cor. vi. 11 to end, and remarked upon the privilege of being dwelling-places of God.

WILLING AND WORKING.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

This was an address on Phil. ii. 12, 13: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure." Having spoken of salvation in its two termini, first when the soul receives forgiveness of sin and God's gift of life, and second when, at the resurrection, the body shall be changed into the image of Christ's glorious body, Mr. Meyer dwelt upon the intervening process of salvation, whereby we are being delivered by the Holy Spirit's indwelling from the power of sin, which is the power of self.

There are three symptoms of God's working in a person: (a) the working is against the self-life, hence humiliating to self; (b) it glorifies Jesus; and (c) it is consistent with Holy Scripture. The working is, generally speaking, very gradual and silent, always definite. We should cast all anxiety as to the process of our sanctification on God, and see that we are diligent in working out what He works in. This brings us to a scrutiny of our friendships, our habits, our entire lives, in order that our inmost impressions may be transformed into possessions. There is nothing in the way of saintliness to which any regenerate soul may not attain if only he is willing to obey the heavenly vision and work out what God works in.

You say you are not willing. But God works in us to will. Take your infirm will to God, and say you are willing to be made willing. Moreover, God works not only to will, but also to work. When He gives us to will a thing, He supplies us with the power to do it. Let us not waste God's work in our hearts; but, attending to Eph. ii. 10 (his workmanship—his poem), let God's thought be married to our obedience in the power of the Holy Ghost. Jesus desires to make of us something fair and beautiful and useful; and He asks us to yield to his will and do his will. But we are prone to refuse, we strive with Him. When we yield to Him, we receive power to do his will, and are enabled to work out that which He works in.

THE WILL OF GOD.

BY REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

Following a cognate train of thought, Mr. Webb-Peploe took for his text 1 Pet. iv. 1, 2: "Forasmuch then as Christ suffered in the flesh, arm ye yourselves with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that ye no longer should live the rest of your time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God." He maintained at length that God means men to live beautiful lives, and is prepared to enable them to do so. There is a distinct contrast between the life of the flesh and the life of the Spirit, between the lusts of men and the will of God. As Christ suffered for sin, so by the exercise of faith in his death we are free from the penalty of sin. Did He, as St. Paul says, "become sin" and die, so as to have done with sin? Then it was for us, in order that we also might have done with sin, that we might "reckon ourselves to be dead unto sin, and alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The new life commences, as to its source, in the death of Christ Jesus. The life to which Christ woke at his resurrection, is not a life of the flesh. There is flesh, but it is spiritualised. We claim that resurrection life; we have crucified the flesh and its affections, put it on the cross; still, it is very active, with its appetites, desires, ambitions. Though we cannot be perfected while living in a mortal body, yet we can be grown-up men and women, and, by the power of God, be willing to live according to the will of God.

The speaker proceeded to refer to several passages on the will of God, as follows: Matt. xviii. 14, that all men should be saved; Rom. xii. 2, that we should be "transformed by the renewing of our mind"; 2 Cor. viii. 5, that we should give ourselves wholly to the Lord and to his work; Gal. i. 4, that we should be separated and drawn out from the world; Eph. vi. 6, single-hearted, whole-souled; Col. iv. 12, "perfect and complete"; 1 Thess. iv. 3, that the body should be wholly given to purity and spiritual ends; 1 Pet. ii. 15, "able to put to silence ignorant and foolish men"; 1 Pet. iii. 17, "willing to suffer"; and, in addition to the passage quoted from chap. iv., there is verse 19: "Let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator."

In some closing remarks, Mr. Webb-Peploe said that for two years he strove to know what it was to be "dead unto sin," but at length, by the mercy of God, he woke to realise that there is another side to the shield, and that is, "alive unto God through Christ Jesus our Lord"; and as we live to God, we shall die to sin. While engaged upon temporal things, we are not to be absorbed by them, but, on the contrary, we must give place, first and last, to the will of God. In this, Christ, who taught us to pray "Thy will be done," is our Pattern and our Power.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7.

The three gatherings of Wednesday were well attended and full of living interest. At the forenoon meeting a Bible reading was given by Rev. C. A. Fox on broken communion, what it is and how it may be restored. He took up the story of the lapse of the Israelites into idolatry, while Moses was with God in the Mount, and deduced from it many points of practical import in the life of the Christian. We give full notes of the earlier half of the address in another part of this issue. As an applied exposition of Scripture it was full of freshness and helpfulness.

In the afternoon there was a very large assemblage, and two addresses were given. The first address was by who said it was important not to lose sight of the great purpose and aim of the gatherings—the spiritual uplifting of the practical life of Christians. If the Spirit takes possession of us, there will be rest instead of worry; ease instead of strain; triumph instead of defeat; gladness instead of gloom; plenty instead of scarcity. We may hold these things as doctrines, but we want to know them experimentally. Many Christians are living far below the Bible standard. It is a deeply interesting fact that a tide of renewing grace has been flowing steadily and surely throughout the churches of this and other lands for the past twenty-five years. The Church has been shaking herself, putting on her beautiful garments, and preparing for the return of her Lord.

REV. E. H. HOPKINS,

In the early days of the movement, it was objected that a phrase often used "the higher Christian life" was unscriptural, and we recognise the truth of the objection. What we desire to set forth is the Christian life—or rather the Christ-life. Nevertheless we find in practical experience that there is a lower life that is lived by many professed Christians, and we wish by these meetings to bring believers to face the possibilities of grace and truth within their reach. We seek to emphasise the truths that have been neglected in the past.

What is the cause of the low practical standard in many Christians? First of all lack of knowledge. We must know the extent of our resources (read Eph. i. 3, 2; Pet. i. 3). We need to have the eyes of our heart opened to see the fulness of provision that is ours in Christ. Lack of thoroughness is another cause of failure. Our hearts are not whole towards God. Lack of faith and personal appropriation is still another cause.

PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE

spoke from the words of the Psalmist: "Thou hast delivered my soul from death; wilt thou not deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before the Lord in the light of the living" (Psa. lvi. 13). What God has done for his children in the past is a pledge of what He will go on to do. It takes some believers years to learn that they must ever approach God with some of his own facts. The death from which the Psalmist says God had delivered him, must not be taken to mean the penalty of death, nor the death that lies before the doomed when they have passed away from this mortal flesh. No doubt it means deliverance from the penalty of death spiritually, but it means far more. It means the bestowal of a righteousness in Christ Jesus which a man could never work out for himself, so that the man receives justification and spiritual life in all its power. It means also death to sin, so that we may live no longer therein, but are alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

We must be able to know and testify of this deliverance of the soul before we can expect that the Lord will go on to keep our feet from falling and enable us to walk before Him in the light of the living. Unless we are on the foundation of assurance, we cannot claim the privileges and powers of the holy life. A man cannot live out what has not been put in. It is the redemptive purpose of God that He should take possession of every part of a man's being from the moment that the soul commits itself to Him. He then becomes the power by which they are kept, in proportion to the faith, the trust, and the faithfulness of the believer. If we are men of faith God cannot say too much to us for us to appropriate as ours. Trust carries us a great deal further. Faith takes from God, while trust gives and commits to God. Then He takes that which is committed to Him and uses it according to the measure of our faithfulness. Let us never forget that our life is to be a walking before God. As we realise this we are delivered from the desires and pleasures that belong to the world, and we are enabled to be witnesses for God in the presence of the living men and women around us. "I have set the Lord always before my face; He is at my right hand, and, therefore, I shall not be moved." He is ours for protection, for provision, for power, and for judgment. If we would judge ourselves we shall not hereafter be judged; let God judge us by his holy word. If we walk before God, and are true to our colours, we may forestall heaven now. If we are real and true before Him, He must keep our feet from falling. They that trust in Him shall never fall or fail.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

JACOB'S TRIAL AND TRIUMPH.

BY REV. E. W. MOORE.

The opening address in the evening was from Gen. xxxii. 24, "Jacob was left alone, and there wrestled a man with him till the breaking of the day." It was a crisis, an epoch, in Jacob's history. It left a mark never to be effaced. Bethel is not Penuel. We know what Bethel speaks of—pardon, life, the way to heaven open. Do we know what Penuel means? It speaks of life more abundant, of power. How are we to learn of Penuel? Look at the time of this memorable crisis. It was by God's express command that Jacob was coming home. Sin had exiled him for twenty years, and he had not been in the place of rest and privilege. Now God had said, "Return to thy father's house, and I will be with thee." Happy day, when the prodigals come back to the great Father's house, that they may possess the promises of God. Angels met Jacob on the way home. They take the deepest interest, not only in the salvation of the lost, but in the full salvation of the saved. In your lonely hours, child of God, count the angels among your friends. You are even now in the majority.

It was with Jacob a time of obedience, but also of deep distress and difficulty. When your face is turned to God, all hell will seek to hinder you. In Jacob's past there was the dark memory of a family feud never put right, and sin never dealt with, all these twenty years. What about the duplicity that had robbed Esau of birthright and blessing? When the wanderer returns to God such a spectre from the past will start up—something between me and my Saviour. It may be carnal self, which like another Esau comes to meet us.

Further, it was with Jacob a time of solitude—he was left alone. He had shown his crafty nature and sent his presents on in front, so as to appease and bribe his offended brother. Yet he knew that these devices would not prosper. We may try to get round the issue and escape from it, but at the last we must come face to face with God Himself. There will be no abiding change in us through this Convention unless it brings us to God Himself. Nothing less will meet our case. We can be alone with Him in a crowd, if we are honest of heart. Only then can God deal with us. Many could testify to this.

What was the manner of this strange encounter? It was mysterious. Who was this man who wrestled with Jacob; was he human or divine? When God draws near to us we do not need to ask the question. Jacob knew it was the Son of Man and the Son of God. He came in answer to prayer. Are we willing that God should answer our prayers for help in his own way? This encounter was intense. They wrestled, hand to hand, foot to foot. Away with languor and cold desire if we would receive a blessing from God; God only satisfies the hungry and thirsty soul.

Moreover, this struggle was protracted. It is not a question merely of Jacob wrestling with the angel, but the angel with Jacob. Before his prayer could be answered he himself must be dealt with. Sometimes men will not yield, and the struggle has to be prolonged. It need not have been. And it was to be decisive. God touched the centre of Jacob's strength, and his powers of resistance were gone. God does not want to cripple us, but He loves us well enough to do it. It may be money, intellect, reputation, or some secret sin—till the hindrance is broken the blessing will not come.

What were the results? The first was trust. A broken man can only cling, and God takes away our strength and self-sufficiency, that we may cling to Him and live by faith on the Son of God. Another result was triumph—even in the moment when Jacob's strength was gone. A third result was transformation. Jacob's name before was "supplanter"; deceiver, sinner, that is our name. Now it was Israel—a Prince with God. Would we enter the overcoming and princely life? We must take the place of death if we would gain the place of power. What a morning for Jacob! What a morning when the sun of righteousness rises on the soul. A fourth and last result was trial. He halted on his thigh; he was a broken man. Let us be content to be nothing that God's life may be all in all. We are here that we may have a Penuel—a transaction with God. May He lead all into that lonely place out of which comes the life of victory for all his saints.

PRESENT SALVATION.

BY REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

The speaker said he wanted to dwell on the thought of present salvation. The Revised Version of 1 Cor. i. 18 is, "Unto you who are being saved it [the Gospel] is the power of God." The word "salvation" in the Scripture may mean a great redemptive act once for all completed; or it may mean a process which still awaits a manifested completion; or, again, it is regarded as a process now going on from hour to hour and day to day.

Consider first the need of this present salvation. Most of those here are already "saved," so far as we are in Christ; and yet we need saving. Who of us can measure the amount of sin that yet remains in his life? Can any of us speak of perfection? What do we need to be saved from? The list will be long and awful.

First of all a lack of truthfulness—showing itself in exaggeration, in scandal, prevarication, equivocation, injustice, disregard of the feelings of others, discourtesy, unreasonableness, ingratitude, unthankfulness, and in many other ways. What of our ignorance, our foolishness, our levity; our lack of love as shown in envy, spite, unwillingness to forgive, or to apologise to those we have injured? What about our lack of zeal, our sloth, lethargy, selfishness; our lack of self-control, indulgence in the pleasures of the table, gluttony, sensuality, even in those who are called Christians? Then look at our avarice, our ambition, our love of dress, our miserable pride, and so forth.

What of our neglect of the Bible in favour of the newspaper or the novel? Think of our feebleness in prayer, our cowardice before the world, our want of joy in God. Is it not manifest that we need saving? Sin abounds, and we need to cry, "God be merciful to us sinners." May God convict us of sin, for his glory will not break over us till we are in the dust, broken before Him.

Do we not want to be saved? Surely we do not want to be envious or proud, or ill-tempered. Thanks be to God we may get this present salvation, if we will only get into contact with the living Christ.

What is the source of this present salvation? Do not look for it to come as an intellectual process. We may know it intellectually, and yet be thoroughly unsanctified. I do not deprecate sound Scriptural ideas on the subject, but these will not actually save us. Nor will deliverance come as the result of stirring emotions. Neither agony nor rapture will bring it. We shall not get it as an effort of will. Many attempt to get it in this way; and I do not deny that wonderful progress has been made along this line. But the life of continual victory and exultation is not reached in this fashion. If we would know full salvation here and now from passion, or temper, or worry, we must look to Christ alone. We must be brought to self-despair, and to know that nothing but the possession of our heart by God Himself will avail us. No speaker or book can give it. When we realise the impossibility of our being holy in ourselves, we see that what is impossible with men is possible with God. Christ must and will do it if we put ourselves into his hands.

What, then, is the method of deliverance? Christ does it by the communication to us of his own life and power. The woman with an issue of blood could not heal herself, but she drew the healing from Christ by a touch. So it must be with us. The power of the Risen Christ by his Spirit will flow into us when we surrender ourselves to Him. His joy, peace, meekness, humility, heavenly-mindedness, and strength will come into us and expel our failure. The weaker we are the more we may glory in our infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest on us. Cling to Him, touch Him, and draw all the grace we need. If this is to be done, we must commit ourselves absolutely into his arms.

Oh touch the hem of his garment,
And thou, too, shalt be free;
His saving power this very hour
Shall give new life to thee.

An after-meeting was held, conducted by Mr. Hopkins. It was a time of testing and of opportunity; God only can tell who in the great company put forth the hand of faith that secured the healing touch of the Master.

THURSDAY MORNING.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A HOLY LIFE.

The meeting began with a hymn on the overcoming life—"Lord Jesus, thou dost keep thy child," which was vigorously sung by an audience that well filled the body of the hall. Prayer having been offered by Dr. Pierson, and another hymn sung ("Walking with thee, my God"), a Bible reading was given by who expounded and applied St. Peter's exhortation in 2 Pet. i. 1-11, reading the passage substantially as in the R.V. Having insisted upon character being distinguished from conduct, and shown that the latter is a fruit of the former, he maintained that alike in the garden of Eden and in subsequent history man has proved himself unable to please God. In this passage the Holy Ghost traces the whole scheme of salvation with its powers and prospects.

PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE,

The Apostle presents the righteousness of God (verse 1) as the foundation of all; that righteousness is the absolute creation of God in Christ Jesus for the salvation of man. Being utterly bereft of "all things that pertain unto life and godliness" (verse 3) man must receive these from God, and sin lies at the door of the soul that refuses the blessing. God's objective creation is ready; his subjective desire is towards us, and upon each of us lies the glorious and awful responsibility of taking what God is pleased to give.

Thus, the preliminaries of a holy life are the provision of righteousness, the gift of all things pertaining to life and godliness, and a fleeing from the corruption which is in the world (verses 1-4). Some poor saint, who has got righteousness and life, but not godliness, hesitates to flee, and says: "Let me not go to the mountain, lest I die." Thus people shrink from God's claim to-day, and with Lot of old they say, "Let us go to Zoar; let us have a little bit of the world." No, we must be done with it, leave the world with its errors and delusions. We must look into our hearts, and see what lust is lurking there—what is the desire, the yearning of the faculties which we call the heart.

Before taking in order the features of the holy life, the speaker dealt with the expression "through the knowledge of Him" (v. 3), comparing it with other similar expressions in the Epistle. God gives eternal life in the knowledge of Himself and Jesus Christ the Lord. Is it any wonder that people live such low lives, when they have so little knowledge of that which makes eternal life? St. Paul counted all things but dung "for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus"; and prayed "that I may know Him," also that the Ephesians "might know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge." This is heaven, glory, life eternal. It costs us much to ripen for heaven, but the process repays a thousandfold. To know God is heaven upon earth; and to know Him eternally, with all the ripening power of a great geometrical progression, will be an infinite blessing. St. Peter, who speaks of the preciousness of Christ, and the blood, and writes to those of precious faith, also says that "the trial of that faith is precious." Do we wince at the trial? We should not be cowards before God, but take the grace that enables us to receive more grace.

Expounding verses 5 to 7, the speaker showed that four of the seven graces mentioned are essential characteristics or features of a holy life; and the other three distinctive, one of them in reference to God, one to the Church, and one to the world at large. "Minister in your faith virtue, and in your virtue knowledge, and in your knowledge temperance, and in your temperance patience." Virtue (or courage), knowledge, temperance (or self-control), and patience: these are essential. If we have faith the very first thing that should be ours ought to be courage. Next comes knowledge, which should engage our study and energies. Then self-control in tongue and action. Emphasizing the need for this, Mr. Webb-Peploe said that, when marrying a couple that very morning he warned them to be careful in the event of any difference arising between them;

(Continued on page 21.)

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 18.

"The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old."—Prov. viii. 22.

THIS wisdom is not an abstract attribute or quality, but a Person. Whether the ancient writer of these glowing paragraphs realised fully what deep things he was saying when he so depicted her—as one who was brought up with the Father before the world was—as rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth with the children of men—we cannot positively determine; but we at least may lift the curtain, and see here Christ who is the Power and Wisdom of God. Was He not called the Word of God?

There, in that divine Man, in his gentle love, in his deep and weighty words, in his power to give them that find Him life, we have the highest embodiment of the wisdom of God, which was before all worlds, and yet stoops to each lowly and obedient heart. It is not enough then for us to seek knowledge and get understanding apart from Jesus, but to seek Him diligently and early, as we are bidden in ver. 17, sure that when we win Him, we shall possess all the wealth of truth and knowledge that we require for this life and the next. He is the Truth and the Life. Truth apart from Him neither nourishes nor inspires. But all truth, as it is in Jesus, is the food of souls.

Would you know the wisdom of God, then be still in heart, wait before God, quieting all your soul before Him; remember that Jesus is near, waiting, longing to impart Himself. His delight is with the sons of men, and to give Himself to our faith is the pearl of great price for which He sold all.

MONDAY, April 19.

"Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither."—Prov. ix. 4 and 16.

Twice over this invitation is given, first by wisdom, and secondly by the foolish woman. There are always the two voices saying the same thing, but in what different tones, and with what a different purpose! The true shepherd pleads and the hireling; the true bride and the apostate church; that which makes against the flesh, and that which takes its side. Let us turn willing and obedient ears to the one, whilst we are deaf to the other.

In the appeal of wisdom to eat of her bread and drink of her wine, we detect the voice of Jesus, saying, "Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man, ye have no life in you; he that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life." Have we learnt this lesson? Do we know how to appropriate? Can we feed on Him who not only provides the banquet, but is the banquet of all who will come to Him?

In the early morning we should sit down in wisdom's house and feast: not only praying to God, but appropriating Him: not only speaking to Him, but letting him speak. If you have only fifteen minutes, let ten minutes be given to waiting quietly on God till he shall communicate of his fulness. Always say to yourself, God is near, God is here, God is love, God wants to give me Himself, God does impart Himself to those who offer Him hungry and yearning hearts.

TUESDAY, April 20.

"He is in the way of life that heedeth correction."—Prov. x. 17.

It is a wise prayer, "Correct me, O Lord, but with judgment." Happy is the man whom God correcteth; for whom the Lord loveth He correcteth, and chasteneth every son whom He receiveth.

Sometimes God corrects us with rebukes, making our beauty to consume away as a moth before the stroke of illness or physical weakness. At other times we are corrected by the faithful rebuke of a friend, or the question of a little child. And yet again, correction comes to us through the sore discipline of having to reap the results of our sins. Some heed correction, others resist and refuse it. And the way in which we bear ourselves shows whether or not we are in the way of life. If the Life of God is really and truly within us, we will meekly accept correction from whatever source it comes.

Do not be weary of God's correction, my chastened friend. He does not expose you to the searching trial for his pleasure, but for your profit, and that you may be a partaker of his holiness. But let us all heed more carefully his Holy Word, which is profitable for correction, as well as for teaching, reproof, and instruction. How often might we have been spared the searching correction of trouble if we had allowed our lives to be armoured by God's Word.

WEDNESDAY, April 21.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth."—Prov. xi. 24.

This scattering is a conception borrowed from the husbandman. From out his barns he takes the precious seed, and scatters it broadcast. The child of the city might wonder at his prodigality, little weening that each of the scattered seeds may live in a hundred more, and perpetuate itself for successive autumns.

We are bidden to measure our life by its losses rather than by its gains; by the blood poured out, rather than by its storage in the arteries of life; by our sacrifices, rather than its self-preservation; by its gifts, rather than its accumulations. He is the richest man in the esteem of the world who has gotten most; he is the richest in the esteem of heaven who has given most.

And it is so ordered that as we give we get. If we miserly hoard the grain, it is eaten by weevils; if we cast it away it returns to us multiplied. Stagnant water is covered with scum, flowing water is fresh and living. He who gives his five barley loaves and two small fishes into the hands of Jesus sees the people fed and gets twelve baskets over. Tell out all you know, and you will have enough for another meal, and yet another. Set no limit to your gifts of money, time, energy; in the act of giving the whole that you have expended will return to you, and more also. Freely ye have received, freely give. There is no limit to your supplies in Jesus.

THURSDAY, April 22.

"The righteous is a guide to his neighbour."—Prov. xii. 26.

Directly a man gets a reputation for goodness his responsibility is immensely increased, for others begin to watch and quote him. You may be sure that they will exaggerate your defects and inconsistencies, and minimise your excellencies. Therefore, though all things may be lawful to you, all things will not be expedient, because all things will not edify others, and you dare not for your pleasure to destroy God's work in one soul for whom Jesus died.

Oh that we might all live so near to Jesus, that we might be able to say with the apostle, "Be ye imitators together of me; in all things I gave you an example." We that are strong must bear the infirmities of the weak, and not please ourselves, but seek to please our neighbours for that which is good, and unto their edifying. Often we must refrain from doing things and taking paths which would be innocent enough if we only were concerned, but we hear others coming behind, of weaker faith, who cry, "Take the safe path." We need to guide them to Jesus. No other goal will really help them. Jesus is the only Shepherd and Bishop of souls, in whom they can be safe and blessed. We need to know Him for ourselves, and then guide others to Him, by our life as well as by our word.

FRIDAY, April 23.

"He that guardeth his mouth, keepeth his life."—Prov. xiii. 3.

What we say influences others, but it has a strong influence on ourselves. When we speak unadvisedly and impurely, we sow seeds of ill harvests not in others only, but in ourselves, and the very utterance injures us. When, on the other hand, we refuse to give expression to a wrong or unkind thought, we choke and strangle it.

Will each reader and hearer of these words carefully bear this in mind. If you express what is uncharitable or wrong, you gratify the evil nature that is in you, and you strengthen it. If, on the contrary, you refuse to express it, you strike a death-blow at the cursed thing itself. When you guard your mouth you keep your life, because you weaken that which is gnawing insidiously at the root of your life. If there is fire in a room, be sure not to open door or window, for air is its fuel and food. And if a fire is burning within you, be sure not to give it vent. What goes forth from you defiles you. Would you see good days? Refrain your lips from evil.

Perhaps you find yourself unable to guard your mouth. Be sure, then, to hand it over to Jesus, saying, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." The Saviour can govern and curb that most unruly member, the tongue. Hand it over to Him, and He will fill it with loving messages for Himself.

> Take my lips, and let them be > Filled with messages for Thee.

SATURDAY, April 24.

"A tranquil heart."—Prov. xiv. 30 (R.V. marg).

Wouldest thou have a tranquil heart, mind not high things, do not be ambitious to get a name and reputation among men, or to exert wide influence, or amass a large accumulation of money. To seek any of these things is to have an untranquil life.

Live for God alone, to obtain his smile of approval, his "well-done." When the eye is single the whole body is full of light; and the heart sings to itself:

> Methinks I hear Hope sweetly singing,
> Singing in an undertone,
> Singing as though God had taught her,
> It is better farther on.

"In God's will," Dante said, "is our peace." When the government is on his shoulder, of its increase and of our peace there need be no end. Rest in the Lord, be silent to Him; fret not thyself; turn away from the things that are seen and temporal; set thy face on those that are unseen and eternal. Live in the secret place of the Most High, and hide under the shadow of the Almighty; say of the Lord that He is thy fortress and high tower. How tranquil the lake is which is sheltered by the hills from the winds of heaven! So thy heart shall be tranquil if thou art embosomed in God. On the surface of the tranquil heart heaven is mirrored, and the birds of peace brood.

The School for Christian Workers at Springfield, Mass., is to be known hereafter as the Bible Normal College. The special work is the preparation of unordained Christian workers by thorough instruction in the Bible, and the best methods for effective religous work. The physical department is to be discontinued, and the Sunday-school and missionary departments are to be developed more fully.

Agra Medical Mission.—Dr. Valentine writes with respect to the efforts made at Agra to cope with the famine:—"We have opened a dispensary for the treatment of the people who come for food, twice a week. On a recent Sabbath morning 1750 poor people received assistance. We have at the dispensary an average daily attendance of 150. On all occasions the giving of food and medical relief is accompanied by the preaching of the Gospel affectionately and faithfully."

Broken Communion.

NOTES OF BIBLE READING AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

By Rev. C. A. FOX.

I PURPOSE putting before you, from Exodus xxxii. and onwards, some deep lessons on (1) what it is that breaks off communion with God; (2) what is the broken communion with God; and (3) how the broken communion is to be restored.

This question of broken communion with God is a very solemn one, which must appeal to every Christian heart and touch every conscience. In the opening verse of Exodus xxxii. we read:—

When the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, they gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses we wot not what is become of him.

It is idolatry which breaks off communion with God. It is the turning aside to other masters and other attractions; the being fascinated by the world, the flesh, or the devil—it may be in angelic guise. Any idol will do. It may be fair, or it may be foul; but fair or foul, if it attract you away from Jesus, you will be left stranded, without God in this evil world.

Remember what Aaron afterwards said: "Thou knowest how the people are always getting into mischief." That was the very word he used, and it sounds so modern. So we read that Aaron, actually being persuaded by the people, himself made an idol, and the people gave towards it. People will always give to idols. They will not give to Christ very often, or to the true, but they will give to the false. We think so much of a few rings being put into the plate, when Christian people devote themselves more wholly to the Lord; or of a little being left, when a man cannot keep it any longer, to some church or society for doing the work of Jesus. The heathen will do the same for their idols; rings can be broken off and wealth given freely and ungrudgingly.

All the people brake off the golden earrings which were in their ears, and brought them to Aaron. And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf: and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt (verses 3 and 4).

It was a molten god that Aaron, to his sorrowful shame, formed for the people to worship. And it is the very same idol that is now being worshipped in this great metropolis, in the nineteenth century of Christianity. The idol of gold is worshipped in this City of London to-day more than any other god. It is a molten god, of course; because we form our own god, made according to our own fancy in these days. Every philosophy, and every new species of thought, creates its own god. We crave the Christ to save us, and then create the Christ by whom we shall be saved. In all directions we find that men have fashioned and moulded their gods according to their own views—one which shall not cross their purposes or contradict their opinions. We have never been into eternity, and yet we know what is there. We make a blind god, that shall change with all the circumstances of life, and be at our own disposal, which we shall worship as we please, and neglect as often as we like. We hear men from China and India and Africa tell us of the idols of the heathen, and we pity the poor heathen from our hearts. And yet they might pity us as well, for we worship our molten gods, which our own hands have created and our own brains have formed.

And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and made a proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the Lord (v. 5).

We must have an altar, though it is only to a molten god. Look at the altars raised up all through London to the gods of the city. "A feast to the Lord"—of all things in the world! The very same thing is being re-enacted in our own time. Day after day these Old Testament truths, which seem to us almost dead symbols, are becoming terrible, living realities. People are falling down and worshipping the very things that their own thoughts and hands have created.

Another thing that breaks communion with the Lord is the ignoring of the unseen. "As for this Moses, we wot not what is become of him." We read in the New Testament that "the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal." According to the modern version, the things that are seen are eternal, and the things that are not seen are temporal—of no value. This walking by sight and not by faith is the ruin of the Church to-day. What we see we follow; the unseen we abandon.

A third thing that breaks off communion with God is self-satisfaction.

The people rose up early on the morrow, and offered burnt offerings, and brought peace offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

That is just what is going on here and throughout the Christian world to a great extent. We must all worship something. That is the attitude of the soul. We must also proclaim a feast unto the Lord. I do not know whether there are many here who have heard of what is going on in Paris to-day, as one of the latest developments of the nineteenth century—devil-worship. There is said to be an altar, and before this personified evil one the people bow down and give themselves and their offerings. We are told also that there is before this altar a parody of the truths and teachings of the blessed Jesus. I know not whether it has reached London yet, but I have read of it several times in the world's newspapers as a fact to-day. Such is the awful time in which we live.

"They rose up early on the morrow." Some of us cannot very easily attend an early meeting for Christ, but these people rose up early for the golden calf's sake. They offered burnt offerings and peace offerings. It might have been a kind of sacrament of a false and fearful kind. Then they "rose up to play." We know from the apostles commentary on this that it was the utmost profanation, that which provoked the anger of God as a thing to avoid—this rising up without benediction from the Master, and without recognition of the Lord. I have often said you might go into places of worship to-day, and it would be more true, instead of saying "Let us pray," to say "Let us play." I do not think such a remark is at all too severe.

Let us look now at what broken communion is. "The Lord said unto Moses, Depart, and go up hence" (chap. xxxiii. 1). It is separation from the Lord. When the Master came, he said, "Come unto Me," never "Depart." It was always "Come," up to the Cross. After the Resurrection it was "Go," but it was "Go, because I am with you." It was "Go in my company and under my protection." This word "Depart" means that their companionship of the Lord and Master was over for the time being. Have we ever been in such a condition as this, when the Lord has said to us, "Depart"?

Unto a land flowing with milk and honey: for I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiffnecked people; lest I consume thee in the way. (Verse 3.)

The conscious sweet companionship of Jesus for the moment was gone. That is what so many Christians are failing, and what darkens the Church to-day. We are Christians, it may be, and yet the Lord has turned his face from us. There is something between us. We could not use it as a hymn, but ought we not to have a piece of poetry with these solemn words, "Something between," instead of the beautiful words "Nothing between"? It is that "something" which is taking the power out of the Christian worker, and spoiling the Church to-day. You say you want to know the deeper truth. It is not deeper truth you need, but deeper sincerity and deeper reality. You know the truth, but you are playing with it, and it becomes to you a cloud between you and God.

What else is this broken communion? It is a deep, solemn state of bereavement and mourning.

When the people heard these evil tidings they mourned and no man put on his ornaments (verse 4).

The people held a solemn Lenten fast unto the Lord, and mourned for their sin. There was no sparkle, no bright light, in the eye; no brisk prayer in the soul; no sweet response from heaven. I know nothing of you who hear me, but you must know something of all this. I judge you by myself. It is an awful condition to be in; and the worst of all is, God knows and sees it. David saw it and prayed—"Restore to me the joy [the ornaments] of thy salvation." Do you know what ornaments the blessed Master loves his people to wear? "The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is in the sight of God of great price."

I will come into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee (verse 5).

People say nothing can be done in a moment in such gatherings as this. It would be a strange thing if it were so, for then nothing could be done at all. Everything is bound to be done in some moment.

Therefore, put off thy ornaments from thee that I may know what to do with thee (verse 5).

Here is another mark of broken communion—an awful suspense. We must put off our ornaments, and abase ourselves in the dust before God, that He may know what to do with us. He Himself is in a great suspense; what must be the suspense of the poor stricken soul? "I would ye were either cold or hot." God would rather have us cold than lukewarm; because we are lukewarm He has to spue us out of his mouth. What is to become of lukewarm Christians and a lukewarm Church? Is not this the point where so many fail?—that they are not decisive on the Lord's side. They are not only for Jesus but for the world. They serve two gods—God and mammon. They worship politics as well as Deity. They worship some molten god that they have formed for themselves, according to the theosophy or philosophy or neosophy which they have recently embraced.

"That I may know what to do with thee." You have actually brought God to a standstill; He does not know what to do with you. You will not go on, and you will not go back. But it is impossible to stand still in life; it is eternal life, everlasting growth.

And Moses took the tabernacle and pitched it without the camp, and called it the tabernacle of the congregation (verse 7).

You have driven God out of the camp, out of your company. I must not dwell on this, but we see that it is a symbol of that wonderful sacrifice of Jesus on Calvary, when He died outside the city and without the camp; when He went there to mediate between God and man. How broken communion drives God out of our society! It is not polite to speak of God in "good society" even to-day. I wonder if God will speak of us in his society.

It came to pass that everyone that sought the Lord went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation which was without the camp (verse 7).

You have to do it; you cannot reach Jesus without going outside the camp; because you have alienated Him by your sin, your selfishness, your idolatry.

As Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moses; and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent door.

They saw one true man, faithful to the Lord, going in to worship while all the people had revolted into idolatry. Child of God, you may be solitary, with no one to speak to who is of your mind; you may be looked upon as pharisaic, as setting yourself up as a separatist, as making much of your religion, which ought to be in the heart, they say. "The Lord spake to Moses face to face as a man speaketh to his friend." Child of God, you can be to-day actually as Moses was. You can have this blessed and awful communion—so blessed that it is no longer awful. You can speak face to face with your God, and He will speak face to face with you.

(To be concluded.)

Mrs. Montague,

FOUNDER OF THE BRIXTON ORPHANAGE.

AT this time, when the public rejoicings of the year turn the mind to retrospective comparisons, nothing is more striking than the gowth in all branches of philanthropic work during the past sixty years. The Christian conscience has become so much more sensitive and keen, and benevolent impulse more active and practical. Especially is this the case in regard to agencies which have for their object the relief and maintenance of suffering or destitute children. Bishop Taylor has quaintly observed that "no music is so pleasing to God as the thanksgiving songs of relieved widows and of supported orphans, and that of such music one cannot hear too much." Among the many noble men and women whose labours have drawn forth such songs of thanksgiving, Mrs. MONTAGUE, the founder of the Brixton Orphanage for Fatherless Girls, holds an honoured place.

She was born at Southwark in 1839, but removed with her parents, when very young, to Brixton. There, until her marriage, she resided in a house which to-day forms one of the Institution buildings. Though enjoying little of that distinctly spiritual home-training which is a child's best provision for the future, and which it is Mrs. Montague's endeavour to give to each member of her own overflowing family, she was at an early age deeply convinced of sin, and led definitely to give herself to her Saviour.

Her marriage, in 1857, to Mr. T. Howard Montague, of the Seals Department of the Principal Registry of H.M. Court of Probate, was a happy one, for with her Christian hopes and aspirations he was entirely in accord, and gave generously both of his time and means in furtherance of all charitable work she undertook.

Far from allowing herself to be absorbed in the cares of her own home, marriage strengthened Mrs. Montague's desires to work for those beyond its limits. For some time she pondered over the question—in what way she could best serve her Master, and make a needy world the better for her life. She did not, however, sit down awaiting a special revelation before attempting some practical work. She had joined the Baptist Church, and was a member of the Metropolitan Tabernacle; in unison with some of her fellow-members there, she laboured in mothers' missions, maternity societies, and district visiting. She also visited the homes of the poor in Brixton and Walworth, and the wretchedness thus brought to her notice gradually crystallised her early desires for a definite work.

She felt that God had specially arranged her life so that it should be possible for her to devote herself to the training and maintenance of orphans. She was extremely fond of children, but had none of her own, and this denial surely meant that, for her, motherhood was to have a wider and more general meaning. "Denial" was to be interpreted as "freedom to serve."

Mrs. Montague's idea at first was to take only girls who had lost both parents, but this resolution gave way before the peculiar hardships accruing to widows who were left with large families to support. The institution now admits "fatherless" girls, who, however, return to their homes should their mothers remarry.

The orphanage was opened with four children in Barrington-road, Brixton, in 1876. In a very short time the house taken was outgrown, and, in answer to prayer and faith, such help came that two other houses were added. By the year 1884 the institution had achieved such proportions that Mrs. Montague and her trustees felt justified in erecting upon the garden of the founder's old home, and in the rear of the three houses, a large and commodious building, with dining-hall, kitchens, and dormitories adapted for the work.

This year the orphanage reaches its majority, and its rapid growth during the twenty-one years of its existence is indeed a source of joy to the founder. Eight hundred and twenty orphans have participated in its benefits, and a number of these have been placed, suitably equipped, in positions of domestic service. The education given to the girls is sound and plain, as befits the future career for which they are prepared. Communication is kept up with old scholars, and those who have conducted themselves well in service may be temporarily received back in the event of their being out of a situation. The letters received from old girls, full of touching and sincere expressions of affection for their Home and gratitude to their benefactress, are an evidence of the permanent blessings received by them.

(From photograph by Mr. F. C. Burnham, 421, Brixton-road.)

Mrs. Montague has always conducted the institution on strictly unsectarian lines, and ministers of all evangelical churches have been ready to give their sympathy and practical help in the spiritual training of the children. Since the institution became known, helpers have not been wanting, but for a long time Mrs. Montague worked very arduously, and uphill work it was at times.

Though now compelled on account of her health to give some duties into the hands of others, Mrs. Montague is still an indefatigable worker. She possesses that enviable love of work which makes the day only too short for all she would like to achieve. The enthusiastic devotion of those most intimately connected with Mrs. Montague in her work, is abundant testimony that her life no less than her labours, "make for good." With them we may hope that many years of life and work are yet before her.

[COPYRIGHT.]

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER NINTH.

THE EASIEST AND BEST WAY OF LEARNING THE CONJUGATIONS OF A FOREIGN LANGUAGE.

THERE is a close connection between learning conjugations and learning declensions. He who can easily do the one ought to be able to do the other easily also.

Conjugations, like declensions, can be learnt by association and combination in less than half the time required to learn them by repetition.

There are two classes of conjugations.

1. Those where the different persons of the singular are more like the corresponding persons of the plural than they are like each other. The Latin verb esse, to be, affords a good illustration of this class:—

Singular, sum, es, est.

Plural, sumus, estis, sunt.

2. Those where the different persons of the singular are more like each other than they are like the corresponding persons of the plural.

The German verb sein, to be, affords a good illustration of this class:—

Singular: bin, bist, ist.

Plural: sind, seid, sind.

Different methods ought to be adopted with the different classes.

With those belonging to the first class, learn the different persons of the singular by an adaptation of one of the methods used for learning declensions. Having done this, you will find it very easy to learn the different persons of the plural by comparing them with these.

With those belonging to the second class, learn the first person of the singular and the first person of the plural, and then learn the others by comparison with these.

Take the two cases given and apply these methods, and you will be surprised at the ease with which the mind grasps them, and the pleasure it has in learning them.

But this is not all. By learning them thus you have united them in your consciousness, and they will recall each other. Besides, each conjugation learnt thus will tend to make every other conjugation the easier to learn.

Sometimes nearly all the conjugations can be associated with the first. When this is the case, they can almost all be learnt in as brief a time as it took to learn the first.

How different the results on the mind of learning conjugations thus than the results of learning them by repetition!

The remarks here made respecting the advantages of learning conjugations by the application of the law of association apply with equal force to declensions.

In some cases, and in some languages, the conjugations can be best learnt, not by comparison of the whole, but by combination of the beginnings or the endings.

Take, for instance, the Arabic aorist:—

a-ktib, 1 pers. mas. and fem.

te-ktib, 2 pers. mas.

te-ktibi, 2 pers. fem.

i-ktib, 3 pers. mas.
te-ktib, 3 pers. fem.

There is no difficulty in combining the distinctive beginnings into the two words atete ite. Nor is there any difficulty in remembering them.

But if they are remembered there will be no difficulty in remembering, nor in recalling, the whole conjugation as far as the singular is concerned, for there is only one other slight difference, that of the "i" to the second person singular, and there is no likelihood of this difference being forgotten, for it is the usual feminine termination.

The plural is still easier to combine and to remember:—

ni-ktib, 1 pers., mas. and fem.
te-ktibu, 2 pers., mas. and fem.
i-ktibu, 3 pers., mas. and fem.

Let nitei suffice for the whole.

As an illustration of the combination of the endings, take the preterite of the same verb:—

katab-t, 1 pers. mas. and fem.
katab-t, 2 pers. mas.
katab-ti, 2 pers. fem.
katab, 3 pers. mas.
katab-it, 3 pers. fem.

Observe that itti, it, recalls the whole. Take the plural:—

katab'na, 1 pers. mas. and fem.
katab'tum, 2 pers. mas. and fem.
katab-u, 3 pers. mas. and fem.

This is still easier to combine and recall. Natumu is all that is required.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

The Christ-like Life.

Text for Sunday.—"Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him."—Rev. iii. 20.

Hymns.—Songs and Solos, 19; Christian Choir, 68.

In the second week of last month our subject was our coming to Christ; this week I want you to think of the other side of the question, Christ coming to us. We all know the glorious Gospel that Christ has come to Earth that we might live in Heaven, how He was made the Son of Man, that we might have power to be called the sons of God, but it is another coming of Christ of which I am speaking to-day.

Christ has indeed come to us, but has He come into us? Have you opened your heart's door to Him, or does He still knock outside? That is the question before us to-day.

* * * *

"But the door is hard to open,
And the weeds and ivy vine,
With their dark and clinging tendrils,
Ever round its hinges twine."

A clever painter has painted a wonderful picture of this door. It stands there fast barred, with rusty hinges, all overgrown with twining plants. There, too, is Jesus, standing with a lantern in his hand, knocking, and waiting to be let in. Is the door of your heart fastened against the Lord Jesus? What are the bolts and bars which keep Him out? There is another hymn which says:—

"The Spirit came in childhood,
And pleaded, 'Let me in';
But ah! the door was bolted
By heedlessness and sin."

Heedlessness, carelessness, thoughtlessness! These are often the bars which keep the Saviour out. There is so much noisy merriment going on inside the little heart that the still small voice of Jesus cannot be heard. Stop a moment! Let all be quiet, and you will hear his knock, and then, I think, you will want to open the door to Him. Yet, even if you have drawn back the bolts of thoughtlessness, there are clinging tendrils and climbing plants to pull down—every cross word which you have spoken; every angry blow you have given; every act of disobedience; every thought of pride and selfishness has made the door harder to open. These are the things which keep the door of the heart shut. Ask Jesus to clear them all away.

The longer you leave them there the more difficult will it be to break those clinging vines. A young shoot of ivy is easily broken, but if the ivy plant is left to grow for years its stem becomes thick and tough, and is hard to break. Now, while you are young, it will be easier for you to break off your bad habits than if you leave them until you are grown up. Remember that the door of your heart is in your own keeping; you can open it or not, as you please. If you do not open it the Lord Jesus will not force it open. He will only knock and wait.

Grace Winter.

"The Bairns' Bit."

It is my custom to have a "bit for the bairns" in the Sunday morning service, and this, one Sunday in January last, was the following story:—

WHAT THE "BIT" WAS.

You often try to be good, and you find it very hard work, do you not? It's hard work for us grown-up people, and I'm sure it must be hard for you. Now, there is another way, so different from this way of hard and tiresome "trying to be good," and so easy, that I want to tell you the secret of it. It is only this: Let Jesus into the heart, and then trust Him to make and keep you as He would have you; it is then so easy to be good.

I once heard of a man who had a very sad, sore heart. He wasn't good, and he knew it. He had tried ever so hard, only to fail, and to feel how bad he was. He was thinking, and thinking what could he do to be a better man, when he fell asleep and dreamed.

He thought he was sitting at home in his house, and heard a knocking at his front door, and he knew at once it was the Saviour knocking. Then, as in a flash, his eyes were opened to see how dirty everything was—how mean and shabby, and what dust and cobwebs everywhere!

"He can't come in here," he said; "it's not fit for Him." And with that he began to sweep the room with furious energy. But he only made more dust, and all the while the knock, knock, knocking at the door continued. "What shall I do? What shall I do?" he cried at last in sheer wretchedness and despair. And then, after a pause, he added, slowly:—

"I wonder if He'd mind coming in to it just as it is? I'll ask Him." He did, and what an answer he got; so quick, and glad, and gracious! The Lord stepped into the room, and lo, in a moment, all was clean; and they sat down face to face, in restful confidence, to talk together with open hearts.

When the man awoke from that dream, he knew that God had been speaking to him in it, showing him he had nothing to do but to receive Jesus, and to trust Him to do all for Him. This he did at once, and so entered into a glad and beautiful life. Henceforth he gave up "trying;" he trusted, and that made all the difference.

WHAT CAME OF IT.

About two days after I had given this address, a child who had heard it, and who will not be seven years old till next summer, said to her father:—

"If that sermon didn't do anybody else any good, it did me a lot of good."

"What do you mean, dear? Do you mean that story about the man who let Jesus into his heart?"

"Yes."

"And do you mean that you have let Jesus into your heart?"

"Yes, I did on Sunday night. So you see, if that sermon did nobody else any good, it did me a lot of good. Two things made me do it. One was hearing about the death of that boy (a boy of 12-13 years, brother of her brother's schoolfellow, had died suddenly at the close of the Christmas holidays), and the other was the sermon."

Some weeks have now passed since then, but every day and every hour tells of the wonderful power of Jesus to beautify and keep the heart that trusts Him wholly. When she was only "trying to be good," selfishness, obstinacy, and wilful passion often gained the mastery.

Since that Sunday night she has been remarkable for sunny, loving obedience, and glad unselfishness. If for a moment she forgets and transgresses, she takes rebuke humbly, confesses her fault at once, believes in her forgiveness, and goes on her happy way as merry and childlike as a child could be.

J. P. Clark.

Bible Searcher (No. 67).

☞ Rules sent on receipt of a penny stamp.

All answers to be from Ephesians unless otherwise directed. Children under ten do the first three; under thirteen the first seven.

1. What is the first commandment with promise? (ch. vi.) Quote it from Exodus.
2. Give a list of "the whole armour of God." (ch. vi.)
3. Write out the sense of the last verse of ch. iv., as a resolution on your part, beginning "By God's help I will be," etc.
4. In what does Paul say that God is rich, and how?
5. How can we walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called?
6. Quote two verses from ch. v. showing with what things we are to have no fellowship, and what it is a shame to do about them.
7. With what are we commanded to be filled?
8. What did Paul have special grace given him to do? (ch. iii.)
9. Of what does Christ make us Gentiles fellow heirs and partakers with the Jews?
10. What did Christ come to preach? From what Old Testament book is this answer quoted? Do you know who are referred to as "nigh" and "afar off"? Explain this.

Bible Searcher No. 65 having been for competition, no key is published at present.

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S SEARCHER (No. 65).

1.—Gen. xxiv. 12 and 42.	6.—Gen. xxviii. 23.
2.— " xxiv. 26, 27.	7.— " xxxi. 49.
3.— " xxiv. 31.	8.— " xxxii. 26 and 29.
4.— " xxvi. 5.	9.— " xxxii. and xxxiii.
5.— " xxvii.

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 57. Maria H. Lister. No. 58. Maria H. Lister, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 63. Olive van Millengen (Cyprus). Nos. 63, 64. Edith Meuter (Malta). Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58, 59. W. B. Henderson, Nos. 58, 59. Alice Henderson. No. 61. Jean Scott, A. and H. Baillie D. H. Marshall.

No. 66.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Daisy Bligh*, M. Campbell, Eleanor Chance*, Md. Cleal*, H.* and W. Cheesman, H. R.* and F. Compton, Annie Cooper*, A., M. and E. Cole, M. Dalzell, D. and R. Daintree, Margt. Davison, V. Dickinson, Ivy and V. Donaldson-Selby, G. Dodington*, May Fooks*, Daisy Groves*, Thos. Harris, Ted Lawrence, Ruth Lane*, Geo. McDonald, Reg. Mayes, Kath. McClure, M. and Gracie* Marston, Geo. O'Beirne, H. H. Palmer, J. E. Pearce*, K. Pell*, M. E. Plumb, M. L. Rickards, F. Roden*, Margy. Smart*, Ada Spencer*, Hilda Skinner*, Betty Stocks*, Frank Thompson, Pringle Wilson, H. J.* and Q.* Williams, Noel*, Phillis*, and Cecile Wright*.

Personal.

Dorothy P. Grove.—Your letter interested me very much. Thank you for the enclosure. Margery Smart.—Many thanks for your letter. I am sorry you found the questions so difficult. Ruth Harrison.—I hope by this time the cards have reached you. Harold Stevenson.—Hope your hand will soon be well. Your answer to No. 3 was unfortunately wrong. George O'Beirne.—You need not wait until you are "a man." Why not begin at once? Try not to write so backhanded, as your writing is very difficult to read. Fan Trotter.—Your letter about the pedlar was very interesting.

Uncle Ted.

Donation List.

Indian Famine Children (Mrs. Bruere).—M. G., £2; For His Sake, 10s.; C. R. B., 5s.; Miss C. B., Sea Point, £3 7s.; E. H. M., £1; A Widow's Mite, 2s.; total £7 4s.

Indian Famine.—Nursery Sale, I. M., M., and K. C., 15s.; R. G. M. N., 1s.; C., G., and D. G., 10s.; C. A., 2s. 6d.; Wallace, 3s. 9d.; Wallace's Mother, £1; W. A., 2s.; L. T., 2s. 6d.; A. and R. K., 4s.; Children's Pennies, 6s.; D. P. G., 2s. 6d.; J. M. H., 5s.; J. H., 2s. 6d.; Theodora, 4s.; Mrs. H., £1; total £5 0s. 9d.

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—B. S., 2s.; L. T., 2s. 6d.; H. E. P., 2s.; Mr. and Mrs. H. and Theodora, 3s.; M. E. P., 1s.; M. S., 1s.; total 11s. 6d.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. H. Hankinson, Cinderford, April 22; Gloucester, April 23; Newport, April 24-May 4; Upton Bishop, May 5; Ross, May 5-6; Hereford, May 7. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Kemp Town, April 20; Lewes, April 27; Kemp Town, April 28; Hayward's Heath, April 29; Southboro', April 30. Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, Horsham to April 15; Croydon, April 17-19. Mr. Geo. Goodman, Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 24-May 2. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Shrewsbury Hall, Redhill to April 20. Mr. Sidney Spiers, Anerley, April 21. Mr. Reginald Callender, Blackheath, April 22; Plumstead, April 27. Mr. H. S. Lidstone at New Malden.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week:

S.	Mark	xvi. 1-20.	Th.	Psalms	lxiii. 1-11.
M.	Hosea	vi. 1-7.	F.	"	lxiv. 1-10.
Tu.	"	xi. 1-12.	Sat.	"	lxv. 1-13.
W.	"	xiv. 1-9.

Easter Holiday Services will be held by Mr. Josiah Spiers in the Denning Hall, Denning-road, Hampstead, near Hampstead Heath Station, from Monday, April 26, to Friday, 30, inclusive, at eleven and seven o'clock each day. Specially arranged for young people home from boarding-schools and for ladies to bring their children.

Homeless and Destitute Children.—The committee of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, feeling that there is considerable danger that the many commemorative schemes now on foot may seriously impair the funds of the Society, have determined upon an effort to secure, if possible, some participation in the sums given to celebrate Her Majesty's long and unique reign. The executive have, therefore, launched their "Sixty Commemoration Fund," and trust that many helpers of the Society will contribute some special gift in addition to their ordinary contribution. Such gifts towards our "Sixty Fund," or articles for the grand bazaar to be held June 15 and 16, may be sent to Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, the secretary, or Henry G. Copeland, Finance and Deputation Secretary.

164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C.

With the "Midnight Sun."

VI.*

WE travelled back from Damascus to Beyrout through wind and rain and hail and snow. On arrival we went during a long-continued thunderstorm to visit some of our friends there. In company with Madame von Fischer, my father called upon Miss Thompson at the British Syrian Schools, and on Miss Taylor among her Moslem girls; both of these are engaged in the patient sowing of good seed, and their work and labour of love will not be forgotten.

I went further on to the Syrian Protestant College, an imposing institution, erected on a bluff overlooking the Mediterranean, which was made brilliant by the lightning, as it played in vigorous and fantastic fashion in the darkness of the night.

The college, over which Rev. Dr. Bliss presides, was founded in 1864, and exists for the purpose of educating and training young men for professional and commercial careers, coupled with the paramount purpose of bringing them to a knowledge of the Gospel. There are at present 304 students in residence, and of those who have passed through the course a large number are now occupying important positions in Syria and adjacent countries as teachers, preachers, physicians, or in other responsible walks of life. Dr. Bliss to Western countries, believing that there is ample scope for them nearer home, where educated Christian men are sorely needed. He is aided by a large and efficient staff of professors, and the appointments of the college make provision for the study of almost every branch of practical science.

DISCOURAGES THEIR EMIGRATION

We embarked while the storm was still in force, en route for Haifa, where we arrived in the morning after an uncomfortable night. Here some of us had our first experience of the Arab surf-boats, the sea being just about as rough as it would be safe to land in. The skill of the boatmen was an interesting study as they dodged the breakers to the tune of a wailing prayer, and finally brought us alongside a small wooden jetty, on to which we were pulled, pushed, or hoisted, one by one, as the boat rose on the crest of each successive wave. On shore we met some of our fellow-travellers, who, having landed here a few days previously (while we were at Damascus) with the intention of "camping" through to Jerusalem, had had such trying experiences of rain and marsh that they returned to proceed by the ship to Jaffa, and thence to Jerusalem by rail. As the rest of their party had faced the elements to the bitter end, we decided to follow suit, and in half-an-hour our cavalcade set forth. Happily for us, we had only three storms that day, and then the weather changed for the better.

These "camping-tours" are very well managed, and it is wonderful to what extent comfort can be imported into them. Of course due precautions must be taken in view of the trying and varying climatic conditions, and tent life anywhere has its risks and inconvenience. But, given fine weather and good nerves, it is a most enjoyable, and indeed the only, way of seeing the Holy Land. Three routes were taken by the several camping parties, one of which started from Damascus and two from Haifa, all finally meeting in Jerusalem, while a fourth section made a short trip for two days from Jerusalem to Jericho, the Dead Sea, and the Jordan.

The passage through Galilee, Samaria, and Judæa could not fail to bring to mind innumerable as we saw the River Kishon, the plain of Esdraelon, Nazareth and Shunem, Dothan and Shechem, Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, Jacob's Well, Bethel, and many other spots connected with Bible life and history.

SCENES OF NEVER-DYING INTEREST

But what a change has passed over the land since both Old and New Testament times. So far as the works of man are concerned, the stately ruins of the ancient city of Samaria are practically the only tangible relics of either period that we saw, except in and around Jerusalem. Insignificant and filthy collections of mud huts, inhabited by a wretchedly poor peasantry, are all that mark the sites of Nain, Jezreel, and other towns which once had been the scenes of activity and teemed with life. As one recalls the days of the Kings of Israel and Judah, and those of our Lord's life on earth, how complete is the desolation, and what a melancholy contrast is presented now! The oppression of the Turk is seen and felt on every hand. The fellahin have no inducement to cultivate the fields more than is sufficient to keep body and soul together, because of the rapacity of an officialdom which grinds them down. Every tree is taxed whether it bear fruit or no, nor is the owner allowed to cut down that which is barren. His oliveyard or vineyard is assessed at ten times its yielding value, and he must pay his tax accordingly. His interest therefore is to minimise rather than increase its worth.

We passed many a mud hovel of a single chamber which the whole family shared with the camel or ass and fowls to boot; and of the poor pittance called a living which remains at their disposal the best portion has to be placed aside for the officials or soldiers who pass that way. How one longed to hear the voice of the Master calling as of old to these burdened ones, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden," and to see Him binding up the broken-hearted and letting the oppressed go free!

Yet the land itself was beautiful far beyond our expectations, rich and fertile, if only its myriads of stones could be gathered and removed.

ITS POSSIBILITIES ARE BOUNDLESS,

given only a righteous government and an adequate population. Flowers in abundance strewed the way, and the song of birds filled the air with music.

Missionaries working at various points bade us Godspeed upon our way, and we hope we contributed a little cheer to them. At Nablous (Shechem) 2000 or 3000 Christians live, not knowing what an hour may bring forth; their Moslem neighbours, ten to one in numbers, keep them in chronic uncertainty by threats of massacre. Yet they possess their souls in peace, fearing not them that kill the body but after that have no more that they can do. It was an inspiration to spend a quiet hour with the venerable Rev. W. El-Karey, who has lived there for more than thirty years, and to hear of the faithful few who heroically suffer persecution for the sake of the Gospel in that fanatical town. While we were there the Moslems were declaring their intention of massacring the Christians, should the Powers of Europe act contrary to Turkish interests in the matter of Greece and Crete.

It was refreshing to camp on a hot day by the side of the Brook Cherith, and later on to bathe in Elisha's fountain, the scene of the prophet's healing of the waters. It has been recently gathered into a reservoir. Never before had we realised the significance of "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," or "a shadow from the heat," as when making our way across country when the sun was at its height. These and many other Biblical phrases found illustration during our journey. With feelings of thankfulness we joined our fellow passengers again, having travelled for six days, riding six, eight, and ten hours a day, over indescribable roads, marshes, and rocky steeps without accident, and with a new appreciation of the land in which our Lord lived, died, and rose again.

G. E. Morgan.

Unfortunately the sea was so rough that it was impossible for us who proceeded by sea to to land on Saturday afternoon, and we were obliged to wait until Sunday morning.

JAFFA

It was very undesirable that the journey to Jerusalem should be performed on the Lord's Day, but it would have been even more disturbing to the inhabitants of Jaffa, and to the tourists, to have tried to find immediate accommodation for more than a hundred people for whom no preparation had been made.

It is felt keenly by the missionaries that their work is hindered and discredited in the eyes of the natives, when professedly Christian travellers make no difference between the Lord's Day and other days. There are cases in which it is difficult, if not impossible, to arrange otherwise, on account of wind and waves. But assuredly all unnecessary travelling and all mere sight-seeing should be avoided by Christian tourists. The present party is a representative one, including more than twenty "ministers of religion," and a still larger number of prominent Christians, and, therefore, it was specially unfortunate that this should have occurred. Yet evidently no previous arrangement could be made which would secure a vessel from the uncertainty attending a dangerous and harbourless port like Jaffa.

In company with a fellow-traveller, Mr. A. Page, of Clifton, who also tarried here until Monday, I attended the church service of the London Jews' Society, and heard an excellent discourse from its representative, Rev. J. E. Hanauer, a Christian Israelite, to a too small congregation. He is a good and able man, highly esteemed at home and abroad, doing useful work among the ancient people. Over 2000 persons attended the L.J.S. book depôt during the past nine months, most of whom were inquirers, and all of whom took away some literature, purchased or given.

We visited Miss Walker-Arnot's school (thirty-six boarders and about 100 day pupils). We went with her to hear Dr. Handley Moule, who preached on the words, "We have" (Heb. viii. 1; Eph. i. 7, iii. 12; Rom. viii. 23). It was a most useful discourse on one aspect of what Mr. Meyer has called "the present tenses of the blessed life." One of many remarks worth remembering was that there are three words, beginning with the same letter, which must be kept in their proper order: fact, faith, feeling. Reverse this order and all goes wrong. Fact is the rock beneath my feet; not what I feel, but what is in Christ for me. If we would get enjoyment of the fact we must go on to the next word—faith. Faith is simply taking God at his word, believing his assurances and promises. The third word, feeling, will follow in due course. In learning how to use the Lord's promises, the joy of Christian life consists. The new-born soul, as well as the saint of half-a-century, possesses every spiritual blessing with which God has blessed us in Christ Jesus, but the enjoyment, the feeling, comes through learning how to use that which is ours in our Lord.

We returned and spent the evening with Miss Arnot, and talked to her boarders at evening worship. It was pleasant in the afternoon to observe how interestedly they had listened to Dr. Moule's most suitable discourse.

The next morning we went to the Hospital founded by Miss Mangan in 1878, formerly one of the branches of Mildmay work, now conducted by Miss Constance Adelaide Newton and her helpers. The hospital wards are gradually filled from the patients attending the Medical Mission. There were 87 in-patients, of whom twenty were men. The number admitted last year was 442, of whom 319 were Moslems, 15 Jews, 108 nominal Christians, including 6 Armenians and 19 Protestants. The amount expended was £865, of which the large proportion of £203 was contributed by the workers, and £67 was in payments from patients. On the morning of our visit about ninety attended the usual daily service. About 10,000 are treated during the year. From the verandah of the hospital, on a clear day, Mount Carmel and the still more distant Hermon are visible.

We also visited Rev. T. F. and Mrs. Wolters, of the C.M.S., and saw the schools (with about 300 children), which, as elsewhere, are efficiently conducted, sufficiently supplied, with exemplary results.

R. Cope Morgan.

The following is in reference to my letter from Athens, in The Christian of March 17. I confess I am unable to think respectfully of the Sultan as the sovereign of a friendly state. It is true that the powers that be are ordained of God. But He said, when He committed the sword of civil government to man, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Few murderers so richly deserve execution as this sovereign; this is the judgment of not a few of his subjects:—

* The five previous instalments of these letters appeared in our issues of March 11 and onwards.

Sir,—In reading Mr. Morgan's letter in The Christian, I was struck with his allusion to the shells being thrown among the Christians. I suppose he meant the Cretans. Might I ask what Mr. Morgan's definition of a Christian is? Men of the type that were scattered abroad after the martyrdom of Stephen, and who followed Christ fully—if I read correctly—were found, some of them, at Antioch, and called Christians first there. If they are not of that class, but armed up to the teeth, the allusion is rather misleading. The remark would have passed unnoticed by me in any other paper but yours.

There are Christians and Christians. There was a meeting in Trafalgar-square on Sunday last of some of them, denouncing in the most violent language a sovereign of a friendly State—I may say almost under the nose of his ambassador. What must the Turk think of our Christianity? The Sultan's troops have been frequently requisitioned to prevent the Greek and Roman Christians from flying at each others' throats. The powers that be, we read, are ordained of God. The six in evidence seem held by omnipotence, unable to move until the time appointed, but not by man, and the Turk will remain where he is.

There are not seventy-five per cent. of them in their hospitals through drink, neither do they spend £88,000,000 per annum for liquor, as the poor working man in England is credited with. The Sultan is not an idolater; saints, pictures, and relics have no charm for him. When I compare notes with him, and the Emperor of Russia and the poor Stundists, the brutality in Cuba, the persecution in Madagascar and elsewhere of the Romish Church, the state of Christian Ireland under Mr. Gladstone's Government, some of us ought to take the beam out of our own eyes before, etc. We seem to be making ourselves busybodies; the outlook appears anything but hopeful, but we have this satisfaction, The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.—Ever faithfully yours,

Jno. Hoyland.

St. Kitts, Teddington, March 17.

The letter from Dr. Kalopothàkes to Archdeacon Wilson inclosing acknowledgments of the contributions of our passengers, although now out of date, may be interesting as a statement of the views of a Greek Evangelical Christian minister on the political situation:—

Rev. and Dear Sir,—Your kind note of March 1, with its enclosed cheque for the Cretan refugees, was duly received, and I have passed the amount to Mdme. Kephalà, president of the committee of ladies, whose receipt I enclose. I wish to express to you, and through you to your fellow-passengers of the Midnight Sun, my own personal gratitude for the sympathy shown and this assistance rendered to our suffering brothers.

You are doubtless aware of the communication of the Powers, and the answer given by Greece. Every one here feels that the projected autonomy, with a Turkish military force remaining on the island, will only prolong the struggle.

It is said that such an arrangement will be temporary, but the beginning of the new order of things is the critical time, and with the ages of distrust and hatred engendered by oppression, the Christian population can hardly be expected to look kindly to any administration sustained by Turkish power. The Turk, too, nominally master, and long accustomed to the rôle of ruler de facto, will consider himself that still, and will conduct himself accordingly.

Order can never be restored by any such arrangement. The only way in which the autonomy might become a success would be the employment of the Greek army to secure and maintain order. If the Powers act in good faith, the Greeks will respond by true service there.

It is not the desire for increase of territory which prompts Greece to resist the scheme now proposed, but the conviction of its entire inadequacy to attain the end desired—the real freedom of the island from Turkish rule.

May God guide in all deliberations, both here and in all the Cabinets of Europe, and may He put a check on the deliberate misrepresentations of those who have personal interests in the maintenance of the existing order of things! It is through such influences that the representatives of the Foreign Powers in Cretan waters have pursued such a blundering course.

I hope that a way may be found for a peaceable solution. War is a terrible thing anywhere, and for our little kingdom it is appalling; but we must help our Cretan brothers, whose families we are supporting, and we must protect our frontiers.

Hoping that you may have a pleasant journey, and a safe return home, I am, dear Sir, with sentiments of high respect, very truly yours,

M. D. Kalopothàkes.

[320]

The Open-Air Mission.

THE forty-fourth annual meetings of this Mission were held on Wednesday week at Exeter Hall. In the afternoon Mr. W. H. Seagram presided. The report, of which Mr. Cockrem read a brief summary, showed 1099 members engaged in a wide range of work, and reported many cheering incidents in the way of conversion. The O.A.M. Male Choir had held forty-three services, while 843 special gatherings, such as races, fairs, regattas, and so on, had been visited; God had been pleased to bless marvellously these special aggressive operations in crowded haunts of men. Amongst the developments mention was made of missionary efforts in connection with the Sunday League excursions in towns and resorts suffering from these unwelcome invasions. Altogether, 1900 services had been held, and 487 towns and villages visited; while the income for the year was only £1523.

The Chairman rejoiced in the great things which God had been pleased to do by this Mission, not only in London, but all over the country, directly or indirectly. In speaking of the appalling state of things among our people, he referred to one district in North London, in which the population is about 128,000, of whom only about one per cent. attend any place of worship. The churches and chapels are not overtaking the growth of London. To reach these outsiders we must go after them to the street corner and the resorts of pleasure or business.

Rev. T. Longstaff, vicar of St. Stephen's, Cinderford, Forest of Dean, gave a pleasing account of what the Open-Air Mission can do to help a country clergyman. The villages and towns might be small, as compared with great cities, but there are the sinful and careless; and nothing wins them like the Gospel sung and preached in the open-air. Illustrations of the value of such efforts under the blue sky were given from various parishes in which the speaker had laboured. Whole nests of evil had been swept away and many souls had been led to the Saviour. In his present parish, to which he has recently gone, the work is in its infancy. No open-air preaching had been heard of before, and its introduction has been a great success. A very animated description followed of outdoor services in the Forest of Dean—sometimes with scarcely a single person in sight, but plenty of hearers for all that; at other times hundreds of rough foresters may be seen listening to the Gospel. These meetings at the back of the hill had resulted in great and marvellous blessing, and he wondered how other clergymen could do without such an evangelistic agency.

Col. J. F. Morton gave an account of the Mildmay auxiliary and the open-air work carried on around the famous Conference Hall. He had heard of opposition and even mud-throwing elsewhere, but at Mildmay they found a welcome everywhere, ready listeners, and real conversions. The roving band goes out summer and winter from street to street, while regular services are held at Lea Bridge and other central points. The speaker also read a list of missionaries to various parts of the world, besides city missionaries, Y.M.C.A. secretaries, colporteurs, clergymen, and pastors who have gone out from the Mildmay centre.

Mr. R. Barry Wake spoke on "The Open-Air Mission on the Racecourse." He had had forty years' experience in open-air work, but his experience on the racecourse was comparatively recent. Nothing could exceed the kindness and forethought given by "the Queen of Epsom," Miss Alexander, in providing welcome and home for the preachers. Mr. Wake went on to describe in realistic terms the loaded trains bringing out tens of thousands of the very worst classes in London, and in the kingdom. One who looks for the first time on these shouting, noisy masses may well ask, What can we do? Nevertheless God has been with his servants, and hopeless as the task may have seemed, a hearing is somehow gained. The Word of the Lord has been with power, even amidst the lawless and uproarious mobs. The speaker claimed that the O.A.M., in sending qualified men to set forth the Gospel at Epsom and other races, ought to be supported tenfold more liberally than it is now.

Mr. Cockrem followed with a short account of two visits to Berlin, organising open-air work, and speaking here and there, with Mr. Kirkham's old Dutch picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way."

Easter Poems.

He is not here, but is risen.—Luke xxiv.

Not here! not here!
No more the grave retaineth
Its royal guest.
Not here! not here! yet ever more remaineth
The fragrance blest.

Henceforth, to live is Christ, to die is gain,
Nor need we fear to lie where He has lain,
For, since He rose, we too shall rise again.
The saints of God to quiet sleep lie down,
Each white brow wreathed with amaranthine crown.

Lucy A. Bennett.

We believe that Jesus died and rose again.—1 Thess. iv. 14.

Day was sealed in darkness,
Light was laid to rest,
Birds like moving shadows
Hastened to their nest.

While within the silence
Of that lonely tomb,
Lay the world's Redeemer
Wrapt in dismal gloom.

Satan watch was keeping,
Fires were burning dim,
Morning was approaching—
Hark, the angels' hymn!

Lightening down the stairway
From the Father's throne,
Shone the white-robed seraph
Rolling back the stone.

Christ the Lord has risen,
Empty is the grave,
For the crown is given
To the Strong to save.

Easter glory shineth
From the sky above:
May we add the brightness
Of a fervent love.

Howard T. N. Ussher.

The Lord is risen indeed (Luke xxiv. 34). Our Saviour Jesus Christ . . . hath abolished death (2 Tim. i. 10).

Herald ye abroad the tidings,
Far and near with joyous speed,
Tell ye forth, with exultation,
That the Lord is risen indeed.
He hath conquered! He hath conquered!
Tell it forth o'er land and sea;
Death is vanquished! Death is vanquished!
Christ hath gained the victory.

Sing aloud, with voice of gladness,
How He triumphed in the strife;
Sing how death hath been abolished
By the glorious Prince of Life.
Sing his triumph! Sing his triumph!
Sound it forth o'er land and sea;
By his death and resurrection
Christ hath gained the victory!

Well may all his blood-bought people
Joyfully the news proclaim;
And with rapture join in singing
Praises to his worthy Name.
He hath bought us! He hath bought us!
His alone by right are we;
Now rejoicingly we tell it,
Christ hath gained the victory.

S. E. Jeffers.

Mission Women.—The annual meeting of the London Women's Union in connection with the Church of England Temperance Society was held on Thursday, at the St. George's Institute. During the past year some useful work has been done by the organisation in reclaiming drunkards and adjusting domestic differences due to drink. The mission women paid 12,316 visits to cases charged at the courts; 305 pledges were taken; forty-three situations were found for women; and eighty-seven women and girls were placed in homes. Altogether 1825 cases were handed over to the mission women by the police-court missionaries, and of these cases 199 were doing well. The work of reclamation is encouraging in other respects. Several ladies who are associated with the Union spoke upon various aspects of the work. To Mrs. Creighton was assigned "Temperance Work Among Women"; to Mrs. Temple, "The Women's Shelter Home"; to Mrs. Scharlieb, "The Medical Aspect"; and to Mrs. Paynter, "The Work of the Six Mission Women."

Keswick in London.

(Continued from page 14.)

and in a playful manner advised that should there ever be a sign of difference the aggrieved one should take a glass of water and keep the mouth full for five minutes! He was glad to observe that the couple agreed to adopt the suggestion. What says the world, our child, our servant, of our daily life on the point of self-control and patience? Proceeding, Mr. Webb-Peploe said: It is a costly thing to hold your tongue. Once when I was talking very severely to a lady I noticed a stream of blood on her chin. She had so bitten her lip under the provocation that the teeth entered the flesh and the blood poured down. She is now a devoted missionary in the foreign field.

Of the other three graces, godliness is toward God, brotherly-kindness toward fellow-believers, regardless of particular differences of view; and love is toward all men, on the lines of the love of God, who "so loved the world" that He gave His Son to die for it. If these things be in us and abound (verses 8 to 11), and by the power of God they may be, we shall not be barren or unfruitful; in fact, "we shall never fail, and so an entrance shall be ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

MR. MACGREGOR ON BEING KEPT SAFE.

In the course of the devotional exercises, Mr. Wilson read a portion of John xiv. The address was by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, and based on Rom. v. 10, as rendered by Dr. Moule in his valuable commentary:—"If when we were enemies we were reconciled to our God through the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be kept safe in his life." Confining himself to the last clause of the verse, the speaker dwelt first upon the fact of the Divine keeping, and then upon the sphere of the Divine keeping.

First: "We shall be kept safe." What immense joy and peace would come into our lives if we received this truth! Too often those to whom God has revealed Himself as a present Saviour, and into whose life He has come with mighty power, think that Christ has placed them in a position of victory, and that now they must watch and keep themselves. They think that by throwing themselves into Christian work, and by being jealously watchful, they will be able to avoid backsliding, and secure a continuance of the life of blessing. A noble and beautiful resolve, that leads, however, to bitter disappointment; for the old temper, or a former evil habit, or a worldly gratification comes along, and after repeated failure brings on feelings of despair, and a belief that a life of fellowship with God is impossible, with results that are disastrous to the spiritual life.

In contrast to the thought that backsliding and falling away are inevitable, Mr. Macgregor set the Divine keeping declared in his text. "We shall be kept safe." As you laid hold of the reconciling power of Jesus Christ for yourself, lay hold of the keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ for yourself. Going into social life, into business life, away from home and kindred into heathendom, "we shall be kept safe"! God is able to do this. The power of Christ is adequate to meet all our need. He comes as Deliverer, to remain in the life as Keeper; and we should not simply learn what it is to be saved, but also what it is to be kept safe.

How is this to come about? The text tells us, by indicating the sphere of keeping—namely, the life of the Keeper. "If...we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved in his life." Not "by his life" merely, but "in his life"; it is only because we are "in Christ" that the continuous salvation is possible for us. The perfection of our salvation lies, not in the fact merely that we have a living Saviour, and one who is ready at any moment to come to our succour, but in this, that we are one with that living Christ—as Dr. Moule says, "we are livingly knit to the Living One," we are within the circle of the life of Jesus Christ, and saved, not by, but in, his life. In the parable of the vine and the branches our Lord teaches us that our life is branch life; in no sense is our life independent—"because He lives we shall live also." By regeneration the Holy Ghost has given us the life of Christ, and we must maintain unbroken fellowship in order that the Divine life may flow through.

You say, how am I to keep the connection unbroken? In one sense it is not our business to keep that connection unbroken. In a glorious sense, that is the work of the blessed Spirit of God. Learn to trust the Holy Ghost who dwells within your heart. The Spirit which planted you in Christ will keep you there. It is for you to lean, lean hard, lean ever on the Holy Ghost, and He will keep you abiding, and as you abide, you will be "kept safe." Then you will learn the meaning of the words "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

REV. F. B. MEYER ON THE SELF LIFE.

The great antagonist of God, and the source of all our pain and anguish, is the self-life, which has become enthroned in the shrine which God meant for his own indwelling. This shows itself in the passionate life of the unregenerate, in the strivings of the inquirer to justify himself with God, and in our efforts after sanctification. And the more we know of ourselves as Christians the more bitterly we have to lament that the shadow of the self-life casts its poisonous influence over everything. We cannot stand and sing a hymn without thinking of the voice with which we sing; we cannot utter a prayer without wondering what other people think of it; we cannot do a single stroke of Christian work without being filled with consciousness of doing it well or doing it ill. Any height that we scale, or depth of experience that we descend, comes back to us as a thing of which we can make capital, and of which we are proud, and which we take as an evidence of our own growth in grace.

Our attitude towards all other things must be that of a decisive identification of ourselves with the crucified Christ. There comes a moment in our lives when we identify ourselves, unite ourselves, with the crucified Christ, and by an act of volition choose that the death of Christ should evermore stand between us and ourselves. But the mere choice of this is not enough; we have next to turn to the Eternal Spirit, by whom Jesus offered Himself without spot to God, and ask Him to work out ever deeper down in our nature this death of the self-life. Must we then be always watching the death of our self-life, as if watching a corpse as it rots piecemeal? Must we be ever watching the work of the Holy Spirit as He ever more deeply deals with our self-life? No; that would be a miserable life to lead.

At one and the same moment in which the Holy Spirit is undertaking the work of antagonizing the self-life, the flesh, He is revealing to the spirit the life of the glorious Christ, and we are so taken up with the radiance of his light and life that we hardly stay to notice the other side of the operation, the dealing with our flesh or self. If our Master comes not first, there will come a moment when we shall pass the portal of death; and we hope that then we shall have such a vision of Christ's face that we shall be oblivious of the process of death, and only know that we have passed into the presence of Christ. What we hope will be our experience one day, may be our experience always. The Holy Spirit will so reveal to us, not only the blessed Christ in glory, but Christ in the heart, that we shall be lured always nearer and nearer to the ecstasy of his embrace, as the self-life drops away from us.

The speaker commented on Gal. i. 16—"It pleased God to reveal his Son in Me"; John xiv. 20, "I am in the Father, and ye in Me, and I in you"; and John xvi. 23, 26, "In that day ye shall ask Me no question"; "In that day ye shall ask in My Name." If we get Jesus revealed in our souls, we have God's answer to every question. We must not go on for ever feeling our pulse to ascertain the heart-throbbings of Christ. Jesus who is in us will work through us, only we must not crowd Him out. If we will give Him an opportunity, He will make us a channel of blessing and service, and we shall one day be overpowered with a consciousness that Christ really lives and dominates within us.

THURSDAY EVENING.

DR. MOULE ON ADMITTING CHRIST.

In the evening the chairman read Mark xiii. 26 to end. Dr. H. C. G. Moule addressed some weighty words to a large audience on the promise of Christ to the Laodicean Church: Rev. iii. 20: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and sup with him, and he with me." In some opening remarks he spoke of the grace of Christ in speaking to, among others, the Laodicean, in his decline, in his chill, in his falling away and going off, in his miserable disease of self-complacency—in the whole condition in which he stood when the Lord Jesus, in the strongest possible terms, expressed disgust at his servant's condition. It is to such a Christian that he is speaking, and in the grand inclusiveness of his words he says: "If you will open the door, I will come in and sup with you and you with me."

Whenever our Lord gives us, in the light of Himself, a fresh sight of ourselves, it is to bring us to say, "I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." The Laodicean promise sets before us this astonishing thought, this fact, the yearning love of our Lord Jesus Christ, who cannot be content with distance, even when we have so richly deserved that He should keep distance with us. Though all the disciples had forsaken him and fled, in his hour of darkness, yet He could not rest in his resurrection triumph without being close to them again. He must be close to the disciple in the Garden, also with the two disciples on the road to Emmaus; and, again, He must be in their midst in evening when the door was shut. Jesus Christ is never contented with distance between us and Him, however we, with our sin and forgetfulness and love of self, may be content.

There is the unworthy Laodicean disciple, and the unfaithful angel of the church, but Jesus Christ yearns for nearness, intimacy, companionship, closeness of deepest intercourse. Here is a message for any who are conscious of new discoveries of self, and who are humbled to the dust at what they have found. Apart from any feeling with regard to themselves, such should remember that the unalterable Saviour not only compassionates but desires, not only regrets but yearns, not only reproves but knocks, because He wants to be inside—"I will come in to him."

Then note the imagery used by our Lord in reference to the communion offered to the Laodicean. First—"I will come in to him." We will not only be near to one another, but shut in together; not merely like two people in a crowd, but like two together in an inner room; and there it shall not only be converse, but companionship sealed with feasting. I will take his invitation, sit down at his table, and be his delighted guest at the entertainment of my host. Thou shalt invite thy Lord, and He shall accept, and shall be made glad by what thou shalt set before Him. On the other side, says the Master, I will be his entertainer. I will spread the banquet, I will feast him with the bread of life—myself; and with the water of life—my Spirit; by Him he shall possess Me in his inmost being.

The arrow of the Laodicean epistle is very sharp, and has a long point. It goes to the soul and spirit, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The barb, however, is steeped, not in poison, but in love. Let it sink in deep, let it go quite through; let nothing be hid from the fiery light thereof. "If any man (anyone) hear my voice." In that glorious inclusiveness we forget particular cases and circumstances. "Anyone"—no matter whether he has been earnest up to now, whether seeking or not; no matter whether naturally religious in mind, or just the opposite. Does he want the company of the Son of God? If so, let him open the door. The great Petitioner for admission will ask no question as to past experience or present temperament; he will enter without hesitation and without reproaches for such treatment as He has hitherto received.

In some further remarks Dr. Moule said that during his recent voyage and journey in the East of the Mediterranean, visiting Bible lands and scenes, he conversed with a friend who had lost conscious enjoyment and rest in the Lord. Later, one morning, the friend greeted him with an expression altogether changed, and informed him how absolutely different all things had become with him. Asked how the change came about, the friend said it was through the Lord's own word as given in Rev. iii. 20, "If any man hear my voice." Faith rested where it is alone safe to rest, on Christ in his word; and springtime displaced autumn, and morning the gloomy afternoon. Christ loves to be held to his promise. Lord, Thou hast said, not if I am worthy, or spiritual, and have always been consistent, but if I am "any man" (anyone), and will open the door, that Thou wilt come in to me and feast with me, and I with Thee. There will then be difference within and difference around. Thou wilt shine from the windows of the house where Thou dwellest, and even from me there will be something at thy feet in the way of witness, and life, and spirit, and word, as Thou pleasest, to the praise and the glory of thy grace.

REV. EVAN HOPKINS ON CONSECRATION.

Rev. C. A. Fox having led in prayer, Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke on the words of the Apostle Paul in Rom. xii. 1, 2. He pointed out that the appeal "present your bodies a living sacrifice...be ye transformed in the renewing of your mind," was addressed to believers. The truth enforced is as urgent to-day as then, and needs to be brought home with power to the hearts of Christian people. The power of consecration is given as "by the mercies of God," by the attractiveness of God's boundless love; the nature of consecration is expressed by presenting or yielding; the offering is the whole man, but here the specific appeal is for the body, which, perhaps, is the last thing a Christian gives to God. The body has been redeemed as well as the spirit and soul, and should be committed to the keeping power of the Lord Jesus Christ. Then, the result of surrender, that we may "prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God?" Mr. Hopkins followed with searching questions to the audience, and offered prayer on behalf of those who sought to present themselves to the Lord, spirit, soul, and body.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

There was a goodly muster at the missionary meeting on Saturday morning. The venerable Chairman appeared with a strong platform precisely on the minute, and two verses of the hymn, "Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking," were sung with much heartiness. Lord Kinnaird having led in praise and prayer, the Chairman read John xii. 20-28. The first address was by of Western Equatorial Africa, who began by referring to John ii. 5, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." He bore testimony to the value of the Conventions, on the ground that they had promoted a truer conception of the obligation of the Church of Christ to convey the Gospel to the heathen. Surrender to Christ for justification, sanctification, power, joy, and peace, has led to surrender for service; and some of the most useful workers who have in recent years gone into the foreign field have come under the influence of the Conventions at Keswick and elsewhere. Speaking of his own sphere of labour, he pleaded the needs of Yoruba and the Niger country; in many centres human sacrifices are still offered for the propitiation of demons and false gods.

BISHOP TUGWELL,

There are immense populations practically untouched. The Hausa country with its fifteen millions of people has been thrown open, and the slave-raiding chiefs brought into subjection. The speaker pleaded for a clergyman of experience to minister among the Europeans, who are becoming very numerous in the colony, and to carry forward Christian work generally. Sad to say, the environment greatly injures the young men who arrive in such large numbers, and they soon die, not of the climate, but of habits of vice and drunkenness. The Hausas have a literature of their own, and a civilisation. They can read and write, and work among them is full of promise. The Bishop expressed himself as convinced that God has a great future for the people, who are progressive and strong. It is proposed to establish centres without delay, making a chain of stations working to meet the outposts of Bishop Tucker's mission which is spreading out from Uganda.

Recalling his visit to Keswick in 1893, the speaker said that he then heard the late (martyred) R. W. Stewart, of China, quote John xx. 19-27, and maintain that it was when pointing to the nail prints in his hands and the wound in his side, that our Lord said, "As my Father sent me, even so send I you." The Lord thereby intended to imply that the duty of going forth would involve suffering and sacrifice, even as He also left the glory of heaven to come to earth and the death of the cross. In conclusion, the Bishop pointed out that the marching orders of the Church are for foreign service; there is no need for waiting for a special call, for opportunity is a distinct call to all who have it.

While the collection was being taken, in aid of the Keswick Mission, the hymn, "Tell it out among the heathen" was sung. About £100 was given or promised. The second speaker, of Uganda, showed that the mission there is in the midst of ten millions of people. There are twenty missionaries and five ladies; but the cry is for more teachers, the people begging with tears in their eyes for help in the study of God's Word. At present there is need for a hundred more missionaries. It is hoped that means will before long be forthcoming for sending out of native Christians, who are ready to carry the Gospel into the Central Soudan with its dark millions. Describing the convention at Uganda three years and a half ago, the speaker praised God for the great revival which followed. God changed the hearts of the people, chiefs (earls) among them; and one of these worthies, who has since proved the genuineness of the change, has been a tower of strength to the work, giving liberally of his wealth and ever without ostentation.

REV. JOHN ROSCOE,

Whereas three years ago there were three churches, now there are three hundred, built by the people themselves. The converts are ready and eager for work, and eight hundred teachers have gone forth! The chiefs have been enrolled as teachers, and their religious zeal has been such that the political activity of the country was at one time brought to a standstill. Thereupon the Prime Minister objected to the chiefs neglecting their duties, and a law was passed forbidding nobles from leaving for distant places as teachers! Since then the chiefs have, in individual cases, secured leave of absence for a year or so, while others have engaged in active work near home. The people take the words of Christ and the promises of the Gospels as literally true, and they lose no time in claiming them. The Buganda Church is only twenty years old, but it is sending out 200 communicants every year as teachers, the proportion being ten out of every hundred. The Mohammedans and Roman Catholics are surprised at the change in the lives of the people, and they say that the secret is to be found in the books of the missionaries—the Gospels.

Already the native workers have gone out in all directions, and are not many miles from the Congo-Balolo mission. The people come forward with urgent requests for baptism, and the tribes around say, "The Baganda have a God!" Whereas in the years gone by Mr. Roscoe used to say how much he would like to visit Keswick, now, while in England, his desire is to be back to Uganda, among the people who are yielding so implicitly to the power of God and showing the reality of their life in Christ. When he came away recently to see his wife and children, after an absence of five years, it was in the midst of regrets on the part of the people, who begged him soon to return to help them,—for were they not also his children? In conclusion, Mr. Roscoe appealed for workers for Uganda.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe followed with a brief address, in the course of which he appealed to parents not to stand in the way of their children if the Holy Spirit should lead them forth to work in the regions beyond.

Throughout the convention excellent arrangements were made for the seating and ordering of the great concourse of people which, three times a day, poured into the Hall. Mr. Hughman has been a painstaking and successful secretary and organiser, and credit is due to him. The choir also are to be congratulated on leading the singing of the meetings and making familiar the somewhat plaintive tunes. The aptness of the selection of the hymns, which, we are told, was prepared months in advance of the Convention, was extremely noticeable.

[Our report of the addresses on Friday will appear in future issues.]

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

The anniversary of this Mission was held in the Hall on Thursday evening. Mr. J. Wood, of Woking, presided. Lieut.-Col. St. Quintin, treasurer, read the annual report. A heavy cloud, he said, hung over the mission when the last report was issued, owing to the death of General Anderson. With the aid of the Evangelisation Society the mission was doing good work. Mrs. Lowrie's help and influence are increasingly valuable among the 150 members of the mothers' meeting. The Bible-woman, Mrs. Dossett, records many interesting conversions, while in the street campaigns valuable assistance had been offered by members of the London Open-Air Mission. To celebrate the sixtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, it is proposed to erect a "Home of Rest" at Billericay in connection with the mission.

The Chairman remarked upon the satisfactory character of the Report, but regretted a small deficit. The mission has accomplished a great work. Mr. A. Baynes, secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, made reference to the late General Anderson, the memory of whose Christian work in the neighbourhood could not but strengthen all present to renewed effort. Such missions are the instruments of bringing thousands to the knowledge of Christ. It is by little acts of kindness that Christian knowledge is best brought home to the hearts of unbelievers. Rev. H. C. Wisdom, curate of St. James's, Plumstead, spoke on the necessity of seeking to reach sceptics and atheists.

Evangelistic Notes.

Miss Bonnycastle has concluded an eight days' mission at the Lowesmoor Chapel, Worcester. The presence of the Holy Spirit was felt at all the meetings, and several decided for Christ. Miss Bonnycastle was ably assisted by Miss H. E. Tisbett.

A very helpful and encouraging nine days' mission has been held at Shepherd's Bush Tabernacle by Mr. John Burnham, of the Pastors' College. Rev. G. W. Pope, pastor, was absent on account of ill-health, but special meetings for prayer were held beforehand, and all possible means adopted by the Christian workers of the church to secure the best results. Many, it was felt, were on the verge of the kingdom, and only needed this special effort to bring them into the fold. An earnest spirit of inquiry soon became manifest, and some have sought a personal interview with the evangelist, whilst many others have asked for the prayers of God's people for deliverance from sin, and grace to lead a better life. At the closing meeting on Monday, many who were Christians testified to the stimulus and help they had received. Mrs. Burnham also conducted two afternoon meetings for women only, which proved to be times of power and blessing. A. W. M.

We have been thankful to welcome back two old friends who have helped us in times past at St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, Rev. Thos. L. Johnson, from Bournemouth, and Mr. Thomas Payne, from Manchester. They each held a fortnight's meetings during March; the services were so much appreciated—the hall, seating 1200, was not large enough on some nights to accommodate the numbers who crowded to hear Mr. Johnson, whose simple earnest words touched all hearts. Mr. Payne followed on, when the power of God was mightily felt, constraining many to yield to the gracious influence so manifestly working in our midst. E. R. Hingston.

Mr. William Hill, the evangelist, whose work amongst Europeans and natives of South Africa has occasionally been reported in the columns of The Christian, recently paid a visit, with very blessed results, to the Wesleyan Mission Station of Tshingana, situated amongst the Bacas in the East Griqualand. Services were held twice a day for a week at the central church, where conversions had not been numerous during the past two or three years; but after two days the working of God's Spirit became manifest, and by the end of the week many had professed to receive Christ for the first time, while others who had been heart backsliders yielded themselves anew to God. Now the native preachers and class leaders are going out preaching at the kraals all around, seeking to spread the work amongst those who did not come in to the services. Mr. Hill has gone to visit Emfundisweni and other stations in Eastern Pondoland.

A remarkable religious awakening is at present in progress at the mining village of Drumlemble, about four miles from Campbeltown. The missioner is Mr. Alexander Fraser, at present assistant at the Lorn-street Free Church in Campbeltown. Night after night there are numerous cases of conversion. The work is spreading. Mr. Fraser's style is cultured and fervid.

A mission was conducted in the Holyrood Baptist Church, Chard, Somerset, the last week in March, by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Maindee, Newport, Mon. Mr. Jones spoke nineteen times during the seven days. A large number professed to find peace in believing, and the workers were greatly encouraged.

A most successful twelve days' mission has been conducted at Stoke Newington, N., by Mr. E. P. Telford. The meetings were held in Devonshire-square Baptist Church (Rev. G. P. McKay). Night after night the inquiry rooms were crowded after Mr. Telford's powerful addresses, and upwards of 200 adults professed decision for Christ. In connection with the mission, Mr. William Olney, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, conducted an evening for children. He, in simple, earnest language, told the story of his own spiritual life. The attention of the young people was remarkable; and as a result, some fifty lads and maidens rose at the after-meeting to give their hearts to Jesus. The entire mission was used by the Holy Spirit as a means of blessing to Christians, as well as to those who for long had been halting between two opinions.

Mr. S. W. Clegg has held a mission at the Wesleyan Church, Polruan, Cornwall. The meetings at first were arranged for a fortnight, but on account of the work going on it was extended to a month. There were crowded congregations, and many making a decision for Christ. The church has been also greatly quickened.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting a mission at Mount Pleasant Chapel, Tunbridge Wells (Rev. S. Cowper-Smith pastor). The services have been well attended, and fraught with blessing to many.

Many important missions have been organised in years gone by in Sunderland by the committee of the Y.M.C.A., but a distinct mission to men has never been attempted until that which has just been held by Mr. W. R. Lane. The week-night meetings were held in the Y.M.C.A. hall, and the Sunday gathering in the Assembly Hall. Mr. Lane was obliged to keep indoors on the opening Sunday, having contracted a cold on the way from London, but excellent substitutes were found in Rev. J. Wilson and Pastor Marsh. The attendance of men was satisfactory, on the last Sunday especially, nearly 1000 being present in the afternoon to hear an address on "Impurity." Solos were sung by Mr. Chris. Cobb, from America, who possesses a fine baritone voice and pleasing manner. Several cases of professed conversion were met with, and some backsliders were reclaimed. The mission was preceded by special meetings conducted by Mr. R. F. Drury (Durham University), Dr. Miller (Travelling Secretary of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union), and Mr. De Roussy (Durham College of Science).

A sixteen days' mission to young people, conducted by Mr. S. J. Hewlett, of the C.S.S.M., has been concluded in Stowmarket. God blessed the preaching of his Word amongst old and young, and many professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour. The noonday prayer-meetings were well attended, and a means of deepening the spiritual life of believers. At the praise meeting many parents gave thanks to God for the conversion of their children.

A mission to young people has been held at Battersea Park Tabernacle by Mr. Albinson. Many children from the Sunday-school were spiritually impressed. The teachers are rejoicing over answered prayers.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

During the four weeks ending April 10 Rev. W. J. Mayers has conducted forty-one services and meetings in the interests of Dr. Barnardo's work amongst waifs and strays. In the City of Bristol, in parts of Somersetshire, Wilts, and Herts, and at Blackheath and Chelsea large audiences have assembled to testify to unfailing interest in labours of love among God's little lambs. Among the chairmen at Mr. Mayers's meetings were Canon Fleming, Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, and Sir William Willis; and clergymen of the Church of England and ministers of various Free Churches have heartily promoted the local arrangements. A party of Dr. Barnardo's musical boys assisted at many of the meetings, and by their skill in playing as well as by their general deportment gave evidence of the good results of Dr. Barnardo's training.

The limelight pictures exhibited were so arranged that under each letter of the alphabet some aspect of the work of the Homes was illustrated and its value enforced. The financial results of the meetings have been encouraging, and show what a deep hold on the sympathies of the people generally the beneficent institutions of Dr. Barnardo still maintain.

Mr. Howard Williams, chairman of the committee of these institutions, writes from the head offices in Stepney Causeway, E., directing attention to the serious fact that, owing to the natural prominence given to the claims of the Indian Famine Fund, the Queen's Jubilee Nursing Fund, and Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund, many well-known charities have suffered so considerable a shrinkage of income that unless the importance of the subject is speedily recognised their useful work may be paralysed. The case of Dr. Barnardo's Homes is especially to the point. During the first three months of this year the income has shrunk by no less than £5300 as compared with the first three months of 1896 and 1895. The institutions are now, therefore, in the most urgent and pressing need.

Rev. W. H. Aitken.

This well-known mission-preacher has been conducting a very encouraging mission in the northern town of Goole. It is a place of recent growth. There are people still in middle life who can remember it only a small village, and now it has a population of nearly 20,000. The interest in the mission has steadily increased from day to day until the town has been stirred as perhaps never before in its history.

One of the most interesting features of the mission has been the hearty goodwill and sympathy displayed by all denominations in this Gospel effort. Church distinctions have been to a great extent lost sight of in a deep and general sympathy in the work of God, and the ministers of other denominations have been almost as regular in their attendance at the services as the clergy of the Church of England. Considerable numbers of persons have professed to turn to the Lord, and it has also been a time of much blessing to Christian people, who have found Mr. Aitken's addresses on the spiritual life most helpful and refreshing.

The thanksgiving service on Monday night last will long be remembered as a time of true spiritual rejoicing. The sermon, which was perhaps the most striking of the series, founded on the words, "A workman that needeth not to be ashamed," was followed by a distribution of memorial cards, each recipient coming to the front and having a few words of conference with Mr. Aitken, or his helper, Mr. Abrahall, of Randalstown, in Ireland. The latter gentleman has been much encouraged in his work amongst the children and young people, and it is hoped that many a young heart has been won for Christ. Mrs. Crouch has also had a very satisfactory series of meetings at St. Paul's Church, which is a Chapel of Ease to the parish church.

Mr. Aitken is at present conducting a series of services at St. John's, Oxford-road, Kilburn, where he preaches three times a day till Good Friday. On that day he will conduct a protracted service from 12 to 3, and will also preach in the afternoon. He will continue his work there till Easter Tuesday.

Village Missions.

An all-day conference on village work, especially in connection with the Bucks Evangelistic Village Mission, was held at Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., on Monday. At the noon hour of prayer, Pastor Fuller Gooch made special reference to the work. Mr. J. E. Taylor told how he was led thirty-five years ago to start work in the dark villages of Bucks, and, he said, they are darker now, for in many places where then there were godly clergymen, there are now men who teach what can scarce be distinguished from the doctrines of Rome. Appalling instances of this class of teaching were given by the speaker. Meanwhile, this Mission continues to carry the Gospel to these benighted towns and villages, and God has given great blessing.

Messrs. H. W. Maynard and Mandeville added a few vigorous words on the needs of the villages; and the remainder of the hour was given to earnest prayer for continued blessing.

Next week we hope to give some account of the afternoon and evening meetings.

Police Orphanage, Redhill.—The annual meeting of the Provincial Police Orphanage was held at Redhill on Tuesday, April 6. Mr. J. Heywood Johnstone, M.P., presiding. The Home now supports thirty-two children and three more have been accepted; many of them have lost both parents. The police themselves are doing a great deal towards the maintenance of the orphan children of their comrades. The space being insufficient, a Building and Extension Fund has been opened; £6000 is required. The hon. secretary is Miss C. Gurney, Prov. Police Orphanage, Redhill, Surrey.

Sailors' Welcome Home.—The presence of Mr. M. S. Bromet, of Surinam, West Indies, and his cheering words at the last monthly meeting, made the muster peculiarly interesting. The text for the month, "Be still, and know that I am God," formed his subject. He dwelt on God as Creator, Provider, and Saviour. Mr. Bromet is called "the Dutch Sankey," and has translated some 400 hymns of Mr. Sankey's collection for Dutch-speaking people. His address was followed by words from several friends. Cheering accounts were given by Miss Child and others of the crew's doings during the past month.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 25.

Peter Delivered from Prison.—Acts xii. 5-17.

Golden Text.—Psa. xxxiv. 7.

THERE will be no difficulty in keeping the interest of the scholars while dealing with this lesson. It will be well to tell the story, and to weave into it the instruction and the lessons. It may help the memory to speak of the

PERSECUTOR; PRISONER;
PRAYER MEETING.

I.—Distinguish between this Herod and others of the same name. He was the nephew of Herod Antipas, who murdered John the Baptist; and the grandson of Herod the Great, who sought to destroy the infant Saviour by murdering the innocents in Bethlehem. He belonged, therefore, to an evil family, and had been early trained to deeds of cruelty.

He is here called "the king" (1). The Emperor Claudius had first appointed him king over a portion, and ultimately over the whole of the region formerly included in the kingdom of Herod the Great. History teaches us that it was only during the last three years of his life that he reigned as king in Jerusalem. It was not long before his death (23) that this incident took place. How little was his exaltation worth while his character was so vile. Enforce the lesson that it is not his rank but himself, that determines a man's true worth.

The reason why he persecuted the Church is very contemptible (3). He had no principle; he was not even moved by any special antipathy towards Christians. Probably he would have chosen to ignore them, but since to persecute them would "please the Jews," he was ready to be their persecutor. Guard against the peril of living with no other idea than that of pleasing others for our own sake. Our actions have a moral character, and upon this moral character our future depends. What other men wrecked their own lives through desiring to please men? (Recall Saul the King and Pilate.)

II.—The Prisoner was Peter; but he was not the first victim (1, 2). James needs to be distinguished from the brother of our Lord, who became pastor of the Jerusalem Church, and who wrote the Epistle of James. It was the brother of John who had the distinction of being the first apostle martyr. That Peter was delivered and James was not does not prove Peter to have been more faithful than James, but illustrates the different ways in which God deals with his people. Even when they are martyred their death glorifies God (Jno. xxi. 19).

Look at the prisoner. He is committed to the four quaternions of soldiers. Possibly one quaternion—i.e., four soldiers—were on guard at a time. He is possibly in some part of the tower of Antonia. The great iron gates, besides the other doors of the prison, and the two soldiers to whom he was chained, seemed to leave no possible chance of escape. Yet "Peter was sleeping" (6). Outward peril caused him no inward alarm. In quiet confidence in God he could sleep. Jesus was fulfilling his word "My peace give I unto you."

But look again—another is in the prison cell (7), who lights up its gloom. Prison bars and armed soldiers cannot exclude God's angels; nor can they confine those whom God's angels are sent to deliver. Tell the whole story (7-11), and note especially the time when the deliverance took place. During the whole of the Passover Peter was a prisoner, and just before the day in which he was to be put to death the deliverance came (6). Why not earlier? How much anxiety and fear might have been kept from the Church if he had been delivered the first night! Yes, but how much less glorious would the deliverance have been; how much of valuable training concerning the life of faith the Church would have missed! God always times his deliverances with infinite wisdom.

III.—The Prayer Meeting is the important fact of the whole story. The only weapon the Church could oppose to the power of the persecutor was prayer. Read verse 5 with special emphasis on the word "but." To combine their strength for an attack upon the fortress of Antonia would have been madness. The promises of Jesus concerning prayer encourage them to ask of God. We have the same promises; let us learn to make the same use of them.

They prayed earnestly and constantly. Delay did not silence them, but rather added fervour to their supplications. It is not every kind of prayer that brings deliverance. There is a half-hearted praying that gets, because it only expects, nothing.

Were they not praying in faith? They were astonished, not at the fact that God had answered but at the manner in which the answer had been given. Peter himself was like one that dreamed (9); what wonder if they should be affected in the same way?

How does the story finish? Let one of the scholars read verse 24. In the light of that statement how impotent all opposition to God appears!

The Y.M.C.A.

ISLINGTON AND HIGHBURY BRANCH.

The Jubilee anniversary of the Priory Association, Islington, was celebrated, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, at Barnsbury Hall, on April 6. The proceedings were of a deeply interesting character, and were opened by Mr. J. J. Drysdale, Dr. Keele, and Mr. Stephen Pewtress, all of whom had been identified with the work for upwards of thirty years. Dr. Keele had joined in 1857, while Mr. Pewtress's membership ticket dated as far back as 1847. Each bore testimony to the immense benefit he himself had derived from the Association, and to the great good that had accrued from it to young men living in Islington and neighbourhood during the long period of its existence. The report, which dwelt briefly upon the work of the half-century, showed that upwards of twenty members had gone forth into the foreign mission field, ten had become prominent as leaders in home missions, ten had been ordained as clergymen, while five others had entered the ministry, two as Congregationalists, two as Baptists, and one as a Wesleyan. The home of the Association at the Priory has recently undergone renovation and redecoration, and it is hoped that its increased attractiveness will further contribute to the usefulness of the work done. The cash statement showed that all expenses had been met. An excellent address was given by the Archdeacon of London, who spoke of the great stimulus and encouragement he had derived personally in visiting Y.M.C.A.'s up and down the country, and of the thankfulness with which he was able to bear testimony to their fidelity to Christian principle and the blessing with which God was manifestly sealing their labours. Rev. H. Norwell also bore testimony to the great good he had personally derived in earlier years from his connection with the Y.M.C.A., which he said had been a most valuable training school for him for the work of the ministry.

BRIEF NOTES.

The retirement is announced of Mr. James Chambers, secretary of the Cork Association, where he has been engaged for two years.

The fifth annual meeting of the Walthamstow Association was held on Thursday, the 8th. The report was very satisfactory. Addresses were delivered by Mr. W. McCall (chairman), Revs. C. Wickham and H. A. Allpass and others.

The half-yearly conference of Associations in the North Metropolitan District was held at the new rooms of the Finsbury Park Association in the Stroud Green-road, on the evening of the 8th inst. Mr. W. Hind Smith, who attended as a deputation from the National Council, presented a paper upon the raison d'être of district organisation, which gave rise to a practical discussion.

The last "At Home" of the Coventry Association was crowded out, which necessitated two rooms for the programme. Mr. J. K. Starley presided, and spoke encouragingly of the progress of the Association, commenting on the fact that over 240 members were now enrolled. The general secretary had been working hard, and wanted to see 300 before September. Mr. W. L. Robinson had generously provided, and other gentlemen had promised to do the same later on.

The half-yearly conference of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. district has been held in the Blackburn Town Hall, when the chair was taken by Mr. Watson, who gave an address of welcome to the delegates, which was responded to by Mr. F. Wadsworth. The following subjects induced full and interesting discussion: "The Y.M.C.A. in Relation to the Churches," introduced by Mr. S. Yates Ormerod, of Southport, and "The Y.M.C.A. in Relation to Clubs," by Mr. W. H. Newett.

Soldiers in Glasgow.—An excellent report of work was submitted at the annual meeting last week of the Glasgow Soldiers' Home. One of the speakers suggested that the friends of the soldier in Glasgow should celebrate the Queen's Diamond Jubilee by clearing off the £1000 debt on the institution.

Camberwell Ragged School.—The annual meeting of this mission was held on Monday night in the hall of the mission, Toulon-street, Avenue-road, Camberwell. The attendance was very large. The chair was taken by Mr. Edward Rawlings. Mr. John Kirk said that during the past year the operations had been extended, there being now fifty-six meetings held every week. A number of situations had been found for scholars. In connection with this the Travers-Buxton Memorial Fund had been very useful in providing outfits. The chairman expressed great sympathy with the work of the school and mission. The meeting was addressed by Mr. W. A. Dowie, Mr. Hums, Rev. Walter Horne, and others.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Ampthill Y.W.C.A. have been holding special meetings in connection with the Gospel Temperance Crusade.

The annual meeting of the Cardiff branch was lately held, when Col. Turbervill presided over a representative attendance. Interesting addresses were given by Hon. E. Kinnaird and Miss Reynolds. The number of members is 140.

The Teignmouth Y.W.C.A. has succeeded in securing for its own use a good-sized flat, consisting of three rooms, which are now thrown open for the exclusive use of the members. It is hoped much good will result from the new privilege now accorded to them.

Morning prayer-meetings (7.30 p.m.) were held at the Central Institute, 26, George-street, Hanover-square, W.), during the week of the London Convention, and were the means of blessing and refreshment to many of the members who attended. Unsolicited and definite testimony to that effect was given at the last meeting on Friday morning.

The annual report of the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch is very encouraging. A new Home has been secured, and the work of the institute considerably extended. Suitable boarding accommodation for young women engaged in the City has yet to be provided. Miss Harbord, the hon. secretary, has tendered her resignation owing to failing health.

The annual social meeting of the Derby Institute was recently held. Mrs. Ogle, who presided, expressed a hope that before the end of the year the Association would possess a room of its own. Miss M. Peake Brown, a member, and now accepted as a missionary by the S. Africa General Mission, spoke of the call she had received to work among the heathen. Meetings in connection with the Association have been held by Mrs. Penn Lewis.

Irish Notes.

The first Military and Naval Convention in Ireland has been held in Stephen's Green Methodist Church, Dublin, Rev. Dr. McMullen presiding. Addresses were delivered by several officers, ministers, and others.

The Belfast branch of the Christian Police Association is doing a good work. Under its auspices a weekly prayer meeting for policemen is held in the Soldiers' Home, and efforts are being made to influence the men for good.

Under the auspices of the Church Workers' Association a Sunday-school conference has been held in Cork. The Archdeacon of Limerick read an able paper, and useful addresses were delivered by Revs. T. Abbot, W. Filewitt, and Miss Tobin.

Miss Trench, of Calcutta, and Miss Tobin, of East Africa, both missionaries under the Church Missionary Society, have been addressing missionary meetings in the South of Ireland with excellent effect; while Miss Lowe, a Methodist missionary from Ceylon, has been doing the same in Belfast and the North.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—The Lord Mayor presided at the annual meeting held at the Mansion House, when the Archdeacon of London, the Rector of Bethnal Green and others advocated the cause. The report prepared by Mr. G. F. Hilcken, librarian, showed that the year 1896 had been one of the most prosperous in the history of the institution. A chief event of the year was the founding of a new lending department. The chief want is now a larger building on a more commanding site, and that may possibly be provided as a memorial of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee.

Theatrical Mission and Institute.—The annual meeting of this mission was held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, last week. Sir Thomas Gibson Carmichael, M.P., who presided, said the work of the institute seemed to be appreciated by the persons for whose benefit it was founded. At Macready-house, Covent Garden, the young professional could rest and enjoy the benefits of a social club and boarding-house. The accommodation was greatly strained. Some thirty girls constantly resided there, and many applications for rooms had to be refused. Mr. A. B. Harding, director, gave a résumé of the work accomplished during the year, from which it appeared that the number of boarders who had resided at Macready House during the year for longer or shorter periods was 160, and the total number of visits paid by members to the house was about 15,000. A mortgage debt of £2600 remains on Macready House, and to clear off this and other indebtedness an appeal was made for £5000. The institution aims at benefiting its members by means of simple services, lectures, classes, and by correspondence with lady friends.

Obituary.

GEN. SIR GEO. MALCOLM.

This veteran Indian officer, who had seen much active service, but was one of the most gentle and tender-hearted of men, passed away last week at Leamington, at the age of 79. He was an earnest supporter of Christian missions and many philanthropic efforts. He was a member of the Council of the Evangelical Alliance.

REV. ANDREW M'ALPINE.

The Free Church minister of Carinish, North Uist, has died at the Manse there, at the early age of thirty-three years. His death was very unexpected, and has cast quite a gloom over the community. He was seized with influenza, which is very prevalent in the island. This brought on pneumonia, which soon terminated fatally. The deceased gentleman was a native of Kintyre, where his parents still reside. He accepted a call to Carinish four years ago in succession to Rev. Donald Maclean, and has laboured faithfully and diligently there since. He was of a quiet, unassuming character, and was daily growing in the estimation and affection of the people.

MR. DUNCAN FORBES, CULLODEN.

The Culloden family has for many years been well known and widely esteemed in the town of Inverness, near which the ancestral domain is situated. Of late years the family have passed through many unwelcome vicissitudes. The young son and heir died in 1873, the only daughter of the house died five years later, and the laird, Mr. Arthur Forbes, in a few months followed his daughter into the unseen world. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Duncan Forbes, who died last week; the wife of the previous proprietor had predeceased him four months ago. The valuable estates now fall into the possession of the son of a third brother. Mr. Duncan Forbes, like his eldest brother Arthur, was an elder in the Free High Church, Inverness, and a helper of all good causes. Both were much respected as landlords. It is said that they would never entertain the idea of suing tenant farmers for arrears of rent.

DR. JOSEPH BROWN, GLASGOW.

The death of Rev. Dr. Joseph Brown, of Kent-road United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, took place last Sunday morning. For some time past, Dr. Brown—who had reached his eighty-sixth year—had been in failing health, and his last appearance in the pulpit was at the autumn Communion six months ago. Three weeks since he was laid down with influenza, and it was to this attack that he succumbed. Dr. Brown was educated at Glasgow University and the Hall of the Secession Church. In 1834, he was called to the first Secession Church, Dalkeith, where he ministered for twenty-nine years, and in 1863 he was called to the charge in Glasgow in which he has since remained. He had thus been sixty-three years in the ministry, and was the "father" of the United Presbyterian Church. In early life, Dr. Brown took a prominent part in the temperance movement, and was well-known throughout Scotland as one of the most eloquent and enthusiastic advocates of the cause.

REV. HENRY E. BROOKE.

This much esteemed Christian minister was called to his eternal rest last week, at his residence at Beckenham, Kent. The immediate cause of death was failure of the heart's action. He had suffered much of late, but the end came suddenly. To the last his mind was clear and full of peace and joy in believing.

Regular readers of The Christian, a few years back, will recollect the frequent expository contributions from his pen. He was deeply taught in the Scriptures, and his commentaries were marked by much insight and well-balanced judgment. Our columns contained a series of most helpful papers he prepared, on the changes made in the Revised Version of the Scriptures. At one of the meetings of the Convention last week in St. James's Hall, Rev. C. A. Fox announced Mr. Brooke's death, and earnestly thanked God in prayer for the services he had rendered to the Church of Christ in unfolding the deeper meanings of revelation. The funeral was at Elmer's End, near the Crystal Palace, on Friday, and was attended by many friends who had profited by his writings. In an early issue we hope to provide a portrait and sketch of Mr. Brooke's life work.

Pastor Frank White writes:—For nearly thirty years it has been my privilege to possess his close friendship. If gentle graciousness, combined with deep humility of mind and heart, go to make up true greatness, then our dear friend was great indeed. He was not a "man of war," and his tender, sensitive nature shrank intensely from controversy for controversy's sake. Yet when the truth of God was involved he proved himself, alike by pen and voice, as well as by much personal sacrifice, a very Valiant for Truth. A fairer and more courteous antagonist never drew sword. Beyond most, he had learned the secret of both speaking and acting "the truth in love." Indeed, his whole life and testimony furnish a beautiful example of Christian candour and patient considerateness for others. How blameless and irreproachable his daily walk and conversation; how kind of heart; how full of true brotherly feeling; how Christlike in his practical sympathy for the tried and straitened among his brethren! He must always take high rank among sound scholarly evangelicals of this or any other day. Many live to praise God for his blessed ministry at Wimbledon, Mildmay, Chelsea, Notting Hill, Bromley, etc. Earnestly do I commend to the prayerful sympathies of your readers the beloved wife, her two sons, and widowed daughter, as they mourn the loss of the tenderest of husbands and the best of fathers.

Personalia.

Mr. H. E. Allon, a musical composer of great promise, and son of the Rev. Dr. Henry Allon, has died at the early age of thirty-two.

Mr. Sankey has been addressing large meetings at the Y.M.C.A., San Francisco, and reaching the hearts of the people by his sacred songs.

Dean MacDonnell, canon of Peterborough Cathedral, and author of the recently-published Life of Archbishop Magee, is lying in a critical condition at the Minster Precincts, Peterborough.

Mr. J. C. Sharpe, the well-known London banker, has presented to the Missions to Seamen an excellent teak-built mission steamer. The vessel, which is name the Satellite, has been assigned to the port of Rotterdam, to replace a smaller worn-out steam launch, which has been condemned.

Rev. David Baron is leaving England to-day (Thursday) on another mission journey in Eastern Europe. He will be joined again by Mr. Philip Gordon, Sweedish missionary to the Jews in Budapest, and for part of the time he hopes to have the companionship of Rabbi Lichtenstein.

Mr. D. C. Joseph is at present holding meetings in Dundee and Glasgow. He will be returning to London at the beginning of May, when he will be glad to address meetings on behalf of his Mission to Israel. Communications should be addressed care of Mr. F. Newth, Oakleigh, Grove-road, Sutton, Surrey.

Dr. David Gregg, of Brooklyn, with his wife, sailed for Naples in the end of March. He expects to be absent about six months. He will visit Egypt and Palestine. The church at Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, received 103 persons to membership, 73 of them on confession, the Sunday previous to his departure.

Miss Meredith Brown, daughter of Principal David Brown, of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, has been interesting large audiences in Pittsburg on her work in London. In Baltimore Miss Brown addressed a large audience of ladies. She then went to Chicago, where the prospect is encouraging. An urgent invitation has reached her from Boston.

Principal Miller, the Free Church Moderator, was expected to sail from Madras on the 10th inst., but the news received by wire is to the effect that he is "not so well," and that it is desirable someone should accompany him on the voyage. It is probable that a Madras colleague will come part of the way, and that his brother, Rev. Alexander Miller, of Buckie, will meet him in Egypt.

Mrs. Amanda Smith is hoping to speak at camp meetings in various parts of the States during the approaching summer. In the past winter she has been troubled with rheumatism and la grippe, and is consequently not feeling strong. She is still actively working for her projected Orphan Home, and she still needs 3,000 dols. to open it free of debt. Her address is 225, Sixth-street, Washington, D.C.

Mr. and Mrs. Man Sukh Lal recently returned to mission work in India. They are labouring in connection with the American Methodist Episcopal Mission in Gujarat. In a recent letter Mr. Lal says: "We have lately baptized about thirty men and women, every one of whom was an idol worshipper until a few weeks before baptism. Most of these converts are from the poorest classes. The famine and the plague still claim their victims. God help India."

Professor Gustaf Dalman, the eminent scholar from Leipzig University, is on a brief visit to London. He gave a series of six addresses on the life of our Lord at the Jews' Mission House in Whitechapel, which were well attended and greatly appreciated. Professor Dalman has for several years edited the Berith Am, a valuable paper for Yiddish-speaking Jews, and wholly a labour of love on his part. Though a Gentile by birth, he writes this Jewish jargon, and as for Hebrew, there are very few Rabbis who are his equal.

Rev. F. B. Meyer's Jubilee.—On Thursday, April 8, a very interesting meeting was held in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, to celebrate the jubilee birthday of Rev. F. B. Meyer. The lecture hall was crowded with friends from all parts. Dr. Pierson conveyed the congratulations of American Christians. An address from the church was presented, with a cheque for £400, which had been subscribed by the church, congregation, and friends from various parts of the country. There were over 1000 subscribers. Several other gifts were made, and a very hearty feeling prevailed.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant.—A considerable crowd assembled at Charing Cross, London, last week, to witness the departure for Athens of Mrs. Chant and staff of nurses who are going to Athens to offer their services to the Greek Government in case of an outbreak of hostilities. The nurses who accompanied her were Miss Farnsworth, Miss Fawkes, Miss Flanagan, Miss Warriner, Sister Lees, and Miss Emma Curtis. Mrs. Chant told an interviewer before leaving that war or no war they hoped to find some work of kindness and mercy, so that their journey would not be an idle one. She reports that any messages or stores which may be sent to her in connection with her work should be forwarded through the British Consul at Athens.

Rev. K. Behesnilian.—During the past four weeks this Armenian pastor has been endeavouring to arouse sympathy in Glasgow. His lectures on "Armenia and its People," as well as the work of evangelization in Cilicia, which were delivered with limelight illustrations, were heartily appreciated. In response to his booklet, "For Christ's Sake," containing the portraits and life-stories of fatherless Armenian girls in the Orphanage at Marash, in addition to smaller sums Mr. Behesnilian has received encouraging replies from several sympathisers in Great Britain, who have sent £10 each, so that several of the girls have now friends in this country who are defraying the cost of their support. Letters addressed to Exeter Hall, Strand, London, W.C., will reach Mr. Behesnilian.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

At Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon the annual meeting of this organisation was held under the chairmanship of Captain Key, R.N. The report showed that the work had been carried on with great perseverance during the year; many meetings had been held, not only at midnight, but in the afternoon and early in the evening, with tangible results. The committee employed a man and his wife as missioners, and voluntary helpers cheerfully rendered assistance. The Society's agents sought to impress both sexes for good.

The Chairman said the income ought to be double what it was in order to cope in any adequate manner with the wickedness of the London streets. The work of the Society is threefold — viz., checking vice, encouraging morality, and rescuing from perdition. Twenty-four years ago he commenced to take an active part in the mission at Portsmouth, and it was still flourishing in that great military and naval centre. He quite sympathised with the noble enterprise of foreign missions, but there was great need for rescue work at home, especially as a large proportion of the women they strove to aid had been brought up under Christian influences. Rev. A. J. Poynder moved a resolution approving of the operations of the Society. This was seconded by Rev. J. P. Gledstone, supported by Dr. Thornton, and agreed to.

Christian Endeavour.—The annual convention of the Scottish Christian Endeavour Mission took place at Greenock last week. The various meetings were largely attended, and helpful addresses were delivered on different aspects of Endeavour work. At the closing session simultaneous meetings had to be held in the Town Hall and the mid-parish Church, in order to acco mmodate the crowds attending.

Requests for Prayer.—For the services of the Gospel Tent Mission at Barry Dock; that many souls may be saved, and believers sanctified.—For the work of the Stratford Mizpah Band in the open air, commencing for the season on Good Friday.—For an intelligent working man, fond of reading, and goes to an adult school, but not willing to give up self-pleasing for Christ's sake.—For blessing on an appeal sent to 12,000 incumbents in England, pointing out the needs of India.

The Hants Village Mission.—This Protestant Mission is doing a truly good work in the Southern Counties, sowing the good seed broadcast, and bringing the light of the Gospel into many dark districts. This work has been much owned of God in past years. The practical fellowship of Christians is at this time greatly needed that no retrenchment may be compulsory, but rather advancement. The superintendent is Mr. J. Haseel Charlton, The Depôt, Fareham, Hants.

National Prohibition Convention.

This Convention, held last week in Newcastle, was attended by 1100 delegates, thoroughly representative of the United Kingdom, and including most of the leading temperance reformers. About 100 district meetings were held during the previous week. Largely-attended demonstrations were held on Saturday and Sunday, and temperance sermons were preached in many local churches. On Monday evening a reception was given by the Mayor and Mayoress at Olympia, 4000 persons being present.

The Convention proper opened on Tuesday, two sittings being held daily, with a demonstration at Olympia in the evening. The morning meeting was presided over by Mr. John Wilson, M.P. Mr. Malins read a paper on "Temperance Legislative Progress," while a paper was read by Dr. Lees on "The Last Decade of Temperance, and the Duty of the Coming One." Other speakers were Canon Hicks, on "Prohibition Areas in this Country," Mr. Caine, Mr. Hilton, and Mr. Fielden Thorp. At the afternoon meeting, presided over by Mr. Caine, a paper communicated by Neal Dow on "State Prohibition" was read, other papers also dealing with prohibition abroad. Ex-Bailie Lewis strongly condemned the Gothenburg system. A great demonstration was held in the evening.

Wednesday was devoted to municipal action in regard to the drink trade. Many important papers were contributed by specialists in this department. Mr. T. Dick, of Glasgow, stated that "the Corporation of Glasgow, as city improvement trustees, were the owners of property in which were thirty-three public-houses. By a resolution of the City Council every one of the licences of those houses had been allowed to lapse, and not a penny of compensation was due or paid to anyone. That municipal prohibition was accomplished by electing the right men.

On Thursday, "Sunday closing" occupied attention at the morning sitting, a strong manifesto being made for its general enforcement. The afternoon was devoted to the "Churches and the Drink Traffic," Dean Kitchin and Revs. J. C. Street, G. A. Bennetts and Canon Barker urging eloquently the need for a great united movement on the part of Christian people against this curse of our land.

The Convention concluded its deliberations on Friday. Mr. James Whyte, of the United Kingdom Alliance, said it was an error to suppose that the hostility of a section of the Liberal party to the veto dated from the general election. It began long before the general election, and arose on the part of those interested in the liquor traffic. It was not true that the veto caused the Liberal defeat. Ex-Bailie Selkirk, of Glasgow, claimed precedence for Scotland in future veto legislation. The Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, and other ladies took part in the afternoon sitting, at which women were urged to use their personal influence at home and elsewhere against drinking habits.

Barisal, India.—Rev. Robert Spurgeon, the missionary in charge of the Baptist Mission Churches for this district, is now in Great Britain endeavouring to raise a fund for the erection of a native chapel at Bagdah, a village in the Barisal district. There are 226 adherents, with a church-membership of 102, who are very poor. Out of their poverty, however, they have pledged themselves to contribute half the 350 rupees required for the chapel; and Mr. Spurgeon is anxious to secure the remainder from friends in Great Britain. Mrs. Spurgeon has written a small collection of poems on the Divine titles compounded with the name "Jehovah," the proceeds of which will be devoted to this fund. Copies of this booklet (post free, 4d.) and further particulars may be had from Rev. Robert Spurgeon, "Boscombe," Hainault-road, Leytonstone, N.E.

"Bridge of Hope" Mission.—A drawing-room meeting on behalf of Miss Steer's "Bridge of Hope" Mission, St. George's-in-the-East, was held on Thursday afternoon at the Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W. Mr. Birrell, Q.C., M.P., presided. A number of little girls from the mission homes were present. Canon Girdlestone moved a resolution expressing gratification at the success of the mission, and especially at the development of the cottage homes for children, of which there are now nine in existence. Lady Jeune urged the claims of the Mission upon the public, and said that those who were able to do so should personally visit the homes in order to appreciate the good work that was carried on. Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. Hazell, M.P., Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., and the chairman also advocated the claims of the work, urging upon all friends of the Mission the necessity of obtaining help from a large circle of subscribers. The chairman, in responding to a vote of thanks, said that he did not think the Mission ought to suffer financially during the year, notwithstanding the fact that numerous appeals were being made to the public in view of the present epoch in the Queen's reign.

Anti-Slavery in Africa.

The abolition of the legal status of slavery in Zanzibar, accomplished by decree of the Sultan last week, places the crown after many years on the anti-slave-trade policy of Her Majesty's Government in those regions. With the exception of the very small amount of seaborne traffic to Arabian ports, it may now be fairly said that the export of African slaves which has disgraced modern civilisation for so many centuries has come to an end. The last over-sea market is abolished. The slave trade will for the future be confined wholly to the African mainland, and even there the beginning of the end is apparent in the vigorous anti-slave-trade policy pursued under British auspices in Nyassaland, and in the abolition of the legal status of slavery lately proclaimed, to take effect from the day of the celebration of Her Majesty's diamond jubilee in the territories of the Royal Niger Company.

Her Majesty came to the throne amid the rejoicings of the newly enfranchised slave populations of the British possessions. The abolition of the legal status of slavery in India took place a few years later in 1843. Throughout the course of a long reign the blessings of freedom have been realised under the British flag in many lands. It is therefore especially appropriate that the Queen should be enabled to celebrate her diamond jubilee with the happy consciousness that, in consequence of the measures initiated this year, the seas which it is England's proud boast to command will henceforth be freed from the horrors of an iniquitous traffic. — The Times.

International Bible Reading Association.

The annual meeting was held on Tuesday, April 6, in the lecture hall of the Sunday School Union, Old Bailey. In the afternoon branch secretaries and district secretaries from different parts of the country met in conference, reporting progress of the work or giving testimonies concerning its usefulness.

The public meeting in the evening was well attended, Rev. C. H. Kelly (chairman) urged the importance of getting young people to study the Bible. Rev. W. J. Mills addressed the young people present, and exhorted them to keep up their daily reading, and to meditate upon it in order to gain strength for spiritual life and service. Mr. M. T. Carroll, of Banbury, also spoke.

The report read by Mr. C. Waters stated that 606,000 members had been enrolled, and that the cards of membership were printed in twenty languages, while the members were to be found in sixty different countries. The members also supported Rev. R. Burges as Sunday School missionary in India.

Blackgang Mission.

The latest report of this Isle of Wight Mission tells of revival services in the early part of last year, conducted by Miss Irene Groves, from Bristol. It pleased God greatly to bless her labour, a number professing conversion (or restoration) during the brief three weeks of her mission. So many of these were young people that a necessity seemed to arise for some special effort on their behalf, and a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour was inaugurated. This is working very efficiently, having an active membership of nearly 50. The only cloud that overshadowed the work was the sudden death, on September 10, of Mr. Scott, of Corve Farm, Chale; the Mission mourned the loss of a kind and ready Christian friend and helper.

Eight were baptized during the year, six were admitted into Church membership, and four were added to the Lord after the revival services. The young Christians, with few exceptions, are walking steadfastly. The Band of Hope is doing well, and monthly lectures on tobacco have borne fruit to the glory of God. Encouragement attended the special services early this year in Blackgang, which were again conducted by Miss Groves, from Bristol.

Copies of the report may be had from Mrs. Christopher Smith, 4, Cliff-terrace, Blackgang, I.W.

The Power of Prayer.—The other day a greatly blessed London pastorate closed. For thirty years converts had been added to the church, month after month without exception. How had this been effected? A Saturday night prayer meeting of nigh one thousand prepared the way for the Sabbath service. An early Sunday morning prayer meeting continued the pleading, and prayer in the vestry and thrice on the platform preceded each sermon. Then prayer at the close, and a Sunday night prayer meeting, followed by another monster gathering for prayer on the Monday, hedged the Sunday meetings in on the other side. This honoured pastor had learned from Christ the power of prayer, and the whole world has felt the result.

Latimer Road Mission.—This mission is situated in an extremely poor neighbourhood, in the north-west portion of Notting Hill; it has been in progress among laundresses and day labourers for over thirty years, and numbers among its agencies evening shelters for boys and girls, Sunday-schools, a mothers' meeting, a crèche, various savings banks, temperance work, and Sunday services, besides a soup kitchen during the winter months. The receipts for the past year have fallen far below the average, and we are nearly £100 in debt. We plead for the men and women who are physically and spiritually destitute in our midst.

(Miss) F. M. Gladstone, Hon. Sec.
Blechynden Street, Notting Hill.

"MAY" MEETINGS, 1897.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
APRIL
Thurs. 22	8 p.m.	Mr. Thorne's Evang. Missions	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Sir George Williams.
,,	8 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	s Talbot Tabernacle, W.	Rev. Dr. Gritton.
,,	7 p.m.	Baptist Building Fund	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. E. G. Gange.
Fri. 23	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Association	m Do. do. do.	Mr. F. J. Marnham, J.P.
,,	8 p.m.	City of London Tot. Abstinence Union	m 186, Aldersgate-street	Canon Barker.
Mon. 26	2.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions..	c Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. Varwell, C.C.
,,	3 & 6 p.m.	The Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. T. V. Tymms, D.D.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Bible Translation Society	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. Chas. Williams.
,,	6.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions..	m Exeter Hall	Mr. M. Mordey.
,,	3 & 7	Wesley Deaconess Institute	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Miss A. Barlow.
,,	7.30	Christian Evidence Society	m St. Martin's Town-hall, W.C.	Lord Overtoun.
,,	7.30	Kilburn Protestant Evang. School	m Queen's Hall, W.	Rev. C. H. Wainwright.
,,	8 p.m.	Sermon-lane Mission	m The Mission Hall, Islington	Alderman Pound.
Tues. 27	10 a.m.	Lord's Day Observance Society	m St. James' Hall, W.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
,,	3 p.m.	British Syrian Mission Schools	m 25, George-street, Hanover-sq.	Col. McNeile.
,,	10.30 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Mr. John Town.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	so Cannon-street Hotel	Sir C. Elliott, K.C.S.I.
,,	7 p.m.	Trinitarian Bible Society	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. J. E. Mathieson.
,,	7 p.m.	Wesleyan Temperance Committee	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. P. F. Wood.
Wed. 28	3 p.m.	Zenana Bible and Medical Mission	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Lord Kinnaird.
,,	8 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m Do. do.	Mr. T. Cheney Garfit.
,,	6.30 p.m.	Barbican Mission to Jews	m 33, Finsbury-square, E.C.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
,,	7 p.m.	The Railway Mission	m Exeter Hall	Lord Overtoun.
,,	7.30 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	s Christ Church, Highbury	Rev. S. L. Dixon.
,,	8.45 p.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	b Holborn Restaurant	Mr. A. Spicer, M.P.
,,	12 noon	Baptist Missionary Society	s Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. Dr. Fairbairn.
,,	6.30 p.m.	The Baptist Union	m Do. do.	President's Address.
,,	4 p.m.	Baptist Tract and Book Society	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.
,,	3.30	Baptist Total Abstinence Association	m The Pastors' College	Alderman G. White.
,,	6.45	,, ,, ,,	m Metropolitan Tabernacle	,, ,,
Thurs. 29	10 a.m.	The Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. E. G. Gange.
,,	3 p.m.	Mrs. Meredith's Mission and Homes	m ConferenceHall, 143,Clapham.rd
,,	3.30	Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Un.	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
,,	6 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.
,,	7 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Major-General Bruce.
,,	2.45 p.m.	Reformatory and Refuge Union	m St. James's Hall, W.	Lord Aberdare.
,,	3 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m Sion College	Dean of Windsor.
,,	4 and 7 p.m.	Union Hall Mission	m Carlisle-street, Edgware-road..
,,	7 p.m.	Infant Orphan Asylum	m Hotel Metropole	Sir J. B. B. Maple, M.P.
Fri. 30	2.30, 5, & 8	The Protestant Alliance	m Queen's Hall, W.
,,	3.30	Female Education in East	m 118, Westbourne Park-terrace..	Mr. Victor Buxton.
,,	4 p.m.	Christian Colportage Association	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Lord Overtoun.
,,	6 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. W. Hazell, M.P.
,,	9 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	b Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. W. R. Rickett.
,,	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Judge Bompas.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. J. Harford-Battersby has been instituted to Mossley Hill Church.

A lady has made a Jubilee offering of £500 for the Clerical Sustentation Fund.

The Bishop of South Tokyo, who is now staying at Exeter, is making progress toward recovery.

Rev. F. H. Joyce has resigned the vicarage of Harrow, which he has held for thirty-five years.

Rev. F. Trevelyan Snow is conducting this week a mission at St. James's, Holloway, each evening at 8 p.m.

Mrs. Matthew Gray has undertaken to build a new church at West Hartlepool at a cost of £10,000 as a memorial of her late husband.

Rev. H. P. Thornton, vicar of Normanton, has decided to resign his charge in order that he may be free to enter upon voluntary mission work.

The supporters of the C.P.A.S. will learn with regret that the Society's total income for the year ending March 31 is below that of last year by £4725.

The Archdeacon of London, on Friday week, and Canon Barker, on Friday last, delivered at St. Alphage, London Wall, the last two of a series of Lent lectures, which have aroused much interest.

Rev. Harry Jones, Prebendary of St. Paul's, and minister of St. Philip's, Regent-street, has been appointed to the rectory of St. Vedast, Foster-lane, vacant by the death of Rev. Dr. Sparrow Simpson.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has signified his approval of the "Sunbeam Mission," a Mission which is entirely self-supporting, and which is benefiting many poor and suffering children every month. The central branch is at Weston-super-Mare.

An influential meeting was held on Thursday, at Sheffield, to consider the proposal of the Archbishop of York to create a new diocese for South Yorkshire, with Sheffield as its centre. Contrary to expectation, the resolution expressing approval of the scheme was carried without a dissentient, although several clergymen did not vote for it. The Archbishop of York has volunteered to surrender a thousand a year from his own income towards the stipend of the new Bishop.

Congregational.

Rev. B. C. Barnard has been ordained at Luddendenfoot.

A new chapel is being built at Radnor Park, Folkestone.

Rev. A. C. Grant has been recognised as pastor at Whittlesea.

The church at Russell-street, Dover, has celebrated its "Diamond Jubilee."

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson and Mr. W. Crossfield have left Queensland for New Guinea.

The annual meetings of the Yorkshire Union and Home Missionary Society were held last week at Hull.

The Salop Association held its annual assembly last week at Owestry, entering upon its second centenary.

The second anniversary of Rev. H. Towle's pastorate at Stroud has been celebrated with much encouragement.

Services in connection with Carr's-lane, Birmingham, will be held in the Town Hall during alterations in the chapel.

Mr. E. W. Franks, of Mansfield College, Oxford, son of Rev. W. J. Franks, has been accepted for foreign service by the L.M.S.

Rev. E. Griffith Jones, of Stroud Green, sailed last week for Canada, intending to make a short tour in the Eastern States of America.

Dr. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the United States Senate, will during the summer occupy the pulpit at Queen's Park Chapel.

Mr. George Spicer, of Enfield, has been appointed president for this year of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association, in succession to Mr. W. S. Caine.

The spring meetings of the North Bucks Union were held at Brackley, attended by a goodly number of pastors and delegates from the several churches. Mr. H. Gunn, of Aylesbury, was re-elected chairman for 1898.

The first party of emigrants to leave England this season, under the auspices of the Self Help Emigration Society, started for Canada on Wednesday week. Among the number were forty men from Modland Hall, who, having been tested, have been considered suitable for work on the land in the Dominion.

An unusually interesting service was held at Finsbury Park Chapel on April 4, the evening being devoted to a special communion service, at which 113 new members received the right hand of fellowship on profession of faith. These, with about forty who will be welcomed next month, represent part of the fruits of the recent mission conducted by Mr. George Clarke.

Calls.—Rev. H. Cubbon, of Banbury, to Gallowtree Gate, Leicester (accepted); Rev. G. Hall, of Newport, to Green Gate Plaistow (accepted); Rev. James Jones to Bethlehem, Cardiff; Rev. D. H. Wigley, of Peniel Green, to Maindee, Newport (accepted); Rev. A. O. Lochore, of Newport, to Whitehaven (accepted); Rev. E. J. Hammond, of Guildford, to Cowley-road, Oxford.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Blackshaw, of Boston; Rev. D. Thomas, of Llandgynidr (after forty years' pastorate); Rev. J. Lucas, of Egham Hill.

Baptist.

Rev. W. L. and Mrs. Forfeitt have arrived home from the Congo.

A special mission has been held at Hanham Tabernacle, Bristol, with many tokens of blessing.

Rev. C. Ingrem, of Wimbledon, issues a cheering report of progress and fruit at Queen's-road Chapel.

Interesting farewell meetings have been held at Maidenhead in connection with the departure of Rev. H. J. Preece.

The spring meeting of the northern district of the Southern Baptist Association was held last week at Romsey.

Mr. George Müller preached on Sunday week at Kensington, Bristol, in connection with the ninth anniversary of the chapel.

Rev. R. Richard has completed his tenth year as pastor at Cotham-grove, Bristol. The anniversary services have produced many tokens of good results.

Manor Park Tabernacle was destroyed by fire on Tuesday. Rev. J. J. Nelson writes:—"Although insurance covers the building and part of the contents, we shall be losers largely unless friends touched by our trouble come and help us."

Two years ago a Baptist cause was started at Buckhurst Hill, and has been not only sustained but prospered. It is proposed to build an iron chapel, and the inclusive cost would be approximately £200. Seeing that there is no other Baptist cause here, financial aid is earnestly asked. The treasurer is Mr. C. Bond, 94, London-wall, E.C.

At Honor Oak the fifth anniversary meetings were held on Tuesday week. Rev. W. R. Skerry (president of London Baptist Association) preached in the afternoon. At the evening meeting, Rev. R. Wright Hay (late of Dacca, India) presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. J. Avery, E. Henderson, and M. Cumming.

The church at Uxbridge-road Tabernacle (pastor, F. B. Monti) are starting to build the schoolroom of a future chapel. For the present this is to be used for public services. The step has become unavoidable, unless the work is to be abandoned. The estimated cost is £2000, of which about £1000 is in hand or promised. Help is urgently needed at this juncture. The treasurer is Mr. J. F. Carlile, 3, Coulter-road, Hammersmith, W.

The seventeenth anniversary of Rev. Philip Reynolds' pastorate at Highbury-place was marked by the presence of the first pastor of the church, Rev. John Glaskin, a hale octogenarian. He gave an interesting address on "All the Days," and was followed by Rev. John Box, on "All these worketh the self-same Spirit." About 250 sat down to tea, and at the public meeting there was a very large gathering. The pastor, who presided, reported that all the institutions connected with the church were prosperous. Twenty-eight persons had joined the church during the year. The evening meeting was addressed by Revs. Beecher, Chilvers, Green, Guy, Monti, Mutimer, and Wileman.

Calls.—Rev. W. Owen, of Swansea, to Queen's Park, Manchester (accepted); Rev. C. R. Stone, of Middlesborough, to Luton (accepted); Rev. T. Idwal Jones, of Llanelly, to Fishguard.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Turner, of Bedford; Mr. J. Hines, of Pembroke-street, Devonport; Rev. J. C. Barton, of Corn Exchange, Gloucester; Rev. J. Trotman, of Union-street, Stonehouse.

Methodist.

A mission held at Stafford Chapel has resulted in many additions to the church.

An Endeavour Society has been started under auspicious circumstances at Bratton (Northlew).

During the winter the Bible Christian Bands of Hope and Temperance Societies have done excellent work.

At Coombe-bow, the latest extension in Northlew Circuit, special services have been held by Rev. S. Pascoe.

The reports of the Bible Christian quarterly meetings show many tokens of advance and satisfactory results.

New chapels have been opened at Doncaster-road, Barnsley; Measborough Dyke; Heeley; and Henrietta-street, Swansea.

Rev. John Wenn, of Long Eaton, is slowly recovering from a serious illness, and intends to seek superannuation after a distinguished ministry of forty-three years.

Rev. J. W. Thompson, who was taken ill during a tour in Palestine, and has been in hospital at Marseilles, is rapidly recovering, and hopes to resume his ministry at Morecambe at Easter.

Rev. N. W. Stafford, of Shrewsbury, one of the oldest ministers of the Primitive Connexion, is confined to his bed with a sharp attack of influenza and bronchitis, and has been compelled to cancel all his public engagements.

Rev. H. W. Horwill has been lecturing on the Eastern Question in the chapels at Torrington, Barnstaple, and Bideford. Considerable enthusiasm was evoked, and resolutions were passed in strong condemnation of the use of British forces to support the Turkish rule.

Rev. W. E. Soothill, writing from Wenchow, China, states the membership at 750, and anticipates that when the yearly returns are made up there will be 700 probationers. Congregations are large, and it is estimated that the 3000 persons who are attending are bringing influence to bear upon another 10,000, from whose ranks many may be won in the future.

Presbyterian.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wales have arrived home from China.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost reached New York safely after a pleasant passage.

The committee of the Marylebone congregation have decided to call Prof. G. A. Smith, of Glasgow.

Lord Kinnaird will lay the memorial-stone of the new church for the Putney congregation on May 8.

Rev. Dr. Barrows, of Chicago, has left India on his homeward journey by way of Japan and the Pacific Coast.

The Gaelic sermon in Crown Court Church was preached, on Sunday afternoon, by Rev. Dr. R. Blair, of Edinburgh.

A legacy of £3000 has been left to Professor Ramsay, well known as the author of "St. Paul, the Traveller and Roman Citizen," and other important works.

Rev. J. Head Thomson, of Blackheath, has been appointed clerk of the South London Presbytery, in succession to the late Rev. William Ballantyne.

Some striking statistics were quoted by Rev. P. Carmichael at Park Church, Highbury, when recently addressing the children from the text, "Æneas, Christ Jesus maketh the whole." Speaking of the blessing of sound health, he stated that one in every 1700 people is deaf, one in every 1000 is blind, and one in every 400 is lunatic or imbecile.

Calls.—Rev. C. Moinet, D.D., of St. John's, Kensington, to Bromley, Kent; Rev. N. Wright, of Kilmarnock, to Ancroft Moor; Rev. R. S. Anderson, of Tayport, to Sherwood, Paisley; Rev. E. Joseph, of Lime Springs, America, to Garn Dolbenmaen, Carn (accepted); Rev. D. J. Martin, of Stornoway, to Argyle-square, Oban.

Society of Friends.

Miss Anna Mary Hodgkin, of Reigate, has been giving some extremely interesting and telling Bible readings weekly in Devonshire House, based on the teaching of the prophet Ezekiel.

At the "meetings for sufferings," held on the 2nd inst., "The Committee on Armenian Relief" reported the receipt of £14,600, and that over £13,000 had been disbursed. The flow of subscriptions has been stayed, though more money is needed.

At the same meeting Rufus Garratt, of Iowa, U.S.A., was present, on his way to Bolivia, South America, as a missionary. The clerk referred touchingly to the death of the venerable Isaac Sharp, in his ninety-first year.

Frederick Sessions, of Gloucester, has been visiting the Friends' Mission Station at Ramallah, eight miles north of Jerusalem. He says:—"They kept me preaching, talking, telling parables and stories with morals, to the school children and others, all day long, from nine in the morning till nine at night, with, of course, intervals for meals."

Among many Friends recently deceased, the name of Rachel W. Marriage deserves a place of special recognition. Of English birth, she lived many years, and did splendid work in America. She and her husband helped in the education of the Freedmen. After the American war, and after his death, she travelled much as a minister of the Word in America and in Mexico, where one of her surviving daughters is now settled as a missionary.

The Society of Friends, the cause of temperance, and many causes of benevolence and social and political reform have lost a warm and generous friend by the death, on the 30th ult., of Lady Fry, in her fifty-ninth year. A daughter of John Pease, of Darlington, she was trained in an atmosphere of unselfishness and Christian kindliness, far above many, and early threw herself into the Sabbath-school and other religious and philanthropic works carried on by Darlington Friends. She was specially and intimately associated with the Hopetown Hall Mission commenced in 1870 by her husband, now Sir Theodore Fry, Baronet, and other Friends, and was the founder and early helper of the mothers' meeting there. She also took the most lively interest in friendless girls with much energy and manifold opportunities of usefulness. We cannot doubt that great blessing has resulted from her earnest life and work, ended so unexpectedly in Biarritz, South of France. The funeral, on the 3rd inst., was large and solemn. The whole town was in mourning, and the Mayor and corporation of Darlington attended, together with representatives of all the public bodies and many others. At the graveside Arthur Pease, M.P., spoke briefly, and within the large and crowded meeting-house a number of Friends spoke earnest and loving messages from the Lord. The Church on earth is poorer for the loss of Lady Fry, and a large family and larger circle of Friends mourn their loss.

Fallen Asleep.

At Birkenhead, Mr. Joseph Craven, J.P., a leading Christian worker and giver, one of whose daughters is now a missionary in Madagascar.—At Highbury-grove, N., on 3rd inst., Mr. H. E. Allon, the only surviving son of the late Dr. Henry Allon, who had distinguished himself as a musician.—At Hobart, Tasmania, on Feb. 15., Mr. F. H. Newth, a son of Rev. Prof. Newth, of New College.—At Barnsbury, aged eighty-five, Mr. Moss, a devoted worker at Arundel-square, and in former years in the village of Holway. — At Colchester, Rev. R. P. Durnant, who only last year retired from active work as a Methodist minister.—At Southport, Mr. Councillor Mart, aged fifty-six, a well-known leader in Methodist movements in Leeds. At Coventry, Mr. T. C. Snape, an active worker for many years at Well-street Chapel. — At Malpas, Mr. John Fletcher, for thirty-one years a devoted worker.—At Llandilo, Mrs. May Davies, aged seventy-nine, sister of the late Prof. Morgan and widow of Rev Thomas Davies. —At Gorey, co. Wexford, Rev. Henry J. Giles, Methodist minister, aged eighty-three years.—At Belturbet, Rev. Jas. Thomson, Presbyterian minister, aged sixty-five years.—At Clontibret, co. Monaghan, Rev. Andrew Molyneux, Presbyterian minister.—At Birmingham General Hospital, April 2, James Watson, of Witton, Droitwich, aged sixty-two, for forty years agent of the Country Towns' Mission.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, April 12, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

	£	s.	d.
Famine in India—English Friend, Dresden, 10s.; M. M., Belfast, 5s.; S. P., 5s.; A. W. W., £10; A. L. F., 10s.; M. S. of H., £1 10s.; A. B., 10s.; R. B., 10s.; India for Christ, £1; F. W., Leicester, 10s.; Inasmuch, 5s.; S. M., £1; Will, £5; B. P., £1; E. A. N., 5s.; E. P., Worthing, 10s.; Pupils at Glenview House, 6s. 5d.; E. and L. M., £1	24	16	5
Zenana Bible and Medical Mission (Indian Famine)—A. W., 3s.; Mentone, £1 10s.; C. W. S., 5s.; An Old I.N. Officer, £1; Wood, Lausanne, £5 0s. 6d.	7	18	6
Mansion House Indian Famine Fund—D.	1	0	0
Bishop Thoburn's Indian Famine Fund (Children)—M. G.	2	0	0
Christian Succour to India—A Widow's Mite, 5s.; Wishaw Y.M.C.A., 15s. 7d; Miss P., 10s.; A. I. C., £3; R.B., 2s.; T. S., 5s.; W. G., 3s.; For His Sake, 10s.; H. W., 10s.; Y. A. H., £20; Misses T. M., £2; G. C. F., £1; A. and H. M. G., £5; M. S. G., 7s.	34	7	7
Indian Famine, Children, Poona (Mrs. Bruere) (see page 19	7	4	0
Indian Famine—See page 18.	5	0	0
Mission to Lepers of India (Miss Reed)—Southsea	0	5	0
China Inland Mission—S. N., £10; An Old I. N. Officer, £1; Mrs. B. 5s.	11	5	0
North Africa Mission (Metropolitan Tabernacle)—A. W. W.	5	0	0
British and Foreign Bible Society—M. D., 10s; M. E. L., £2; Will, £10	12	10	0
Women's Armenian Relief Fund—M. G.	1	0	0
Armenian Sufferers' Relief—Mentone, £1; A Widow's Mite, 5s.; R. B., 10s.; H. H. H., 1s.; Inasmuch, 5s.; An Old I. N. Officer, £1; G. C. F., £1	4	1	0
Armenian Massacre Relief (Bible Lands Mission)—A. and H. M. G.	1	0	0
Cretan Refugees—Mentone	1	0	0
Armenian Refugees (Rev. F. B. Meyer)—For His Sake	0	10	0
Tarsus Evangelistic Society (Rev. K. Behesnilian)—Lord O., £10; Misses H., £5; Evangelistic Institute, Rutherglen, £3; East Free Church, Rutherglen, £1 5s. 9d.; Rev. J. M. W., £1; Baptist S. S., Glasgow, £1; Congregational Church, Stone, £1 13s. 3d.; Rev. J. McN., £1; (Marash Orphanage) Mrs. R. A. H., £10; F. L., £10; T. A., £5; Mrs. L. M., £1 1s.; S. Y., 3s.	50	3	0
Church Missionary Society—M. D., 10s.; A. F., £1; M. E. L., £2	3	10	0
Dr. Saiki, Maternity Hospital, Kioto—Per Miss McL.	3	0	0
South American Missionary Society—A. I. C.	2	0	0
Tibetan Pioneer Mission (Miss Taylor)—A. S. and Friend, 2s.; Bervie Y.W.C.A., 16s. 6d.	0	18	6

(Continued on page 28.)

DONATIONS—Continued from page 27.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Chas. Cook's Work (Foreign Prisons)—Inasmuch, £1; (Scriptures) L. B. R., 10s.; E. H. G., 10s.	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Innes Wright's Work, Nepaul—Motherwell Foreign Missionary Society	0	10	0
London Missionary Society—T. S.	0	2	6
Poor Jews, Jerusalem—Rom. xv. 27	0	2	0
Baptist Missionary Society—C. E. Soc., Cork, 1s. 5d.; (Indian Famine) C. E. Soc., Cork, 12s. 3d.	0	13	8
Dr. J. G. Paton's Mission, New Hebrides—C. E. Soc., Cork	0	3	0
Qua Iboe Mission—C. E. Soc., Cork	0	2	0
Moravian Missions—Y. A. H.	5	0	0
Waldensian Church Missions—Y. A. H.	5	0	0
Congo Balolo Mission—Mrs. B.	0	5	0
Zenana Medical Mission (Dr. Griffith)—H. M. A. S.,	0	10	0
Persecuted Russian Stundists—M. A.	0	2	6
Society Relief Persecuted Jews—An Old I. N. Officer	0	10	0
Mildmay Mission to Jews—P. W., £2; M. E. L., £1 5s.; Major-General C. J. G., £2	5	5	0
Distressed Irish Ladies—C. G.	1	0	0
Robin Dinners—C. W. S.	0	5	0
Destitute Children's Dinner Society—C. W. S., 5s.; Mrs. B., 5s.	0	10	0
Liberator Sufferers' Relief—A. B., 10s.; C. S. J., £2; Y. A. H., £10	12	10	0
Surgical Appliance Society—M. S.	1	1	0
Y.W.C.A., Finsbury-square—M. S.	0	10	6
Mr. Fegan's Homes—R. B., £1; M. E. L., £1; Inasmuch, 2s. 6d.	2	2	6
Home For The Fatherless (Mr. Toye)—M. E. L., £1; Y. A. H., £10; Mrs. B., 5s.	11	5	0
Friendless and Fallen—M. E. L., £1; An Old I. N. Officer, 6s. 8d.	1	6	8
Mrs. Meredith's Mission (Prison)—M. E. L.	1	0	0
Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth—M. E. L., £1; Mrs. B., 5s.	1	5	0
Missions to Seamen—M. E. L.	1	0	0
Dr. Barnardo's Homes—Inasmuch, 2s. 6d.; R. B., 1s.; Will, £10; Fanny, 2s. 6d.; Eggs Sold, £1; Mrs. B., £2	13	6	0
St. Giles Christian Mission—Inasmuch, 2s. 6d.; W. E. C., £1; Y. A. H., £10; E. H. G., 10s.; Mrs. B., 5s.	11	17	6
Miss Sharman's Orphan Homes—Inasmuch, 2s. 6d.; (Jubilee Fund) Grannie, £1	1	2	6
Gratuitous Circulation of The Christian—M. A. B.	0	2	6
Salvation Army—(Rescue Work) C. S. J., £1; (Piccadilly Rescue Home)—M., £2	3	0	0
Dock Labourers' Mission—W. P.	0	10	0
London Convention for Advancement of Spiritual Life—M. S.	5	0	0
Newsvendors' Benevolent Institution—M. S.	1	1	0
Church Association (Van Work)—L. B. R.	0	5	0
Irish Evangelisation Society—L. B. R.	0	5	0
Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society—Y. A. H.	10	0	0
Late Mrs. Hilton's Crèche—Y. A. H.	10	0	0
Bridge of Hope (Miss Steer)—Y. A. H.	10	0	0
Bristol Orphan Houses—Y. A. H., £10; Mrs. B., 5s.	10	5	0
Scripture Readers' Society, Ireland—Y. A. H.	5	0	0
Trinitarian Bible Society—Y. A. H.	5	0	0
Royal National Mission Deep Sea Fishermen—H. M. A. S., 10s.; (Widows) An Old I. N. Officer, 10s.; (Labrador, Doctors Willway and Robinson) Dowager Lady S., £5	6	0	0
Late Miss Daniell's Work—Mrs. B	0	5	0
National Temperance League—Mrs. B.	0	5	0
Miss Weston's Work, Royal Navy—Mrs. B.	0	5	0
London Bible and Domestic Mission—Mrs. B.	0	5	0
Thames Church Mission—Mrs. B.	0	5	0
Prince of Wales' Hospital Fund—A. and H. M. G.	2	0	0
Queen's Jubilee Nursing Sisters—A. and H. M. G.	1	0	0
National Nurses Pension Fund—A. and H. M. G.	1	0	0
London Medical Mission—H. M. A. S.	0	10	0
Bible and Colportage Society, Ireland—H. M. A. S.	1	0	0
Rev. D. Baron's Work, Jews—S. A.	0	10	0
London City Mission—B. S.	1	0	0
Walworth Crèche—B. S.	0	10	0
St. Luke's Gospel Medical Mission—M. S.	1	1	0
Surgical Aid Society—M. S.	1	1	0
Seamen's Christian Friend Society—M. S.	2	2	0
Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend—See page 18	0	11	6
Total	£338	16	1

[ADVERTISEMENTS.]

St. Giles's Christian Mission.—A. J. W., 10s.

Bethnal Green Free Library, E.—J. W. S. T., £1.

The London Samaritan Society and Homerton Mission (Beach Rocks Convalescent Home and Hospital, Sandgate, Kent).—F. R. M., £5; F. R. M., 5s.; A. Widow's Mite, 2s. 6d.; R. G. B., 5s.; E. E., £1 1s.; R., 2s.

Notices.

C. B. B., of Tai Ho, China, desires to thank the kind but unknown friend who constantly sends him the much-valued paper The Christian.

Applicants for Tracts.—Miss E. Roberts, Walmley House, near Erdington, Birmingham (some temperance); F. J. Scroggie, 30, Burlington Gardens, Acton, W.; Miss F. Evans, 18, Stour-street, Ladywood, Birmingham; J. C. Crawley, 71, Eastbourne-road, West Ham; Miss E. Loftus, 179, High-street, Lewisham, S.E.; J. M. Scott, 67, Gorgie-road, Edinburgh; Maud Edge, c.o. Mrs. Field, 182, Guilford-street, Birmingham; Mrs. S. Corby, 145, Claremont-road, Forest Gate, E.; Fredk. Jellyman, 17, Moorelands-road, Farwig-lane, Bromley, Kent.

Communications Received with Thanks.—C.F.G.C. E.R. J.R.T. G.J.W. W.C. J.P. H.G.C. B.F.B. E.M.W. J.J. A.J.T. R.N. W.W. A.P. E.H.G. M.H.F. L.A.B. J.K.W. C.V. A.M. S.H. H.J.P. T.L.C. J.H. E.G.J. A.W.M. W.P. C.W. J.B. G.H. F.W.B. E.K.H. F.W.P. S.E.J. E.L.D. J.N. H.M. A.R.C. G.J. J.J.D. G.M.F. W.W. W.S. J.P.H. W.R.B. R.N. C.S. F.B. R.F. J.C. J.P. J.K. J.B.A. F.H.W. J.F.T.H. H.T.R. W.T.E. D.B. J.H.R. S S.M. H.K. A.J. G.M. J.A. J.N.R. C.B.S. C.B. W.L. H.H.W. T.D. E.C. C.G. M.H. M.P. H.S. A.B. J.J.N. K.R.G.A.

Thanksgiving Hall.—There is great need for a mission hall in which to hold Gospel and temperance meetings for the sailors of our merchant service who frequent the docks in the neighbourhood of Miss Child's Welcome Home, in Barking-road, E. Additional premises have been secured, and a piece of ground on which a hall could be put up. Donations marked "Thanksgiving Hall" gladly received by Miss R. Child, Welcome Home, Barking-road, E.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.—Prison Mission.

Established 32 Years

FOR

DISCHARGED FEMALE PRISONERS

OBJECTS.

To enable women discharged from Prison to regain their character and get an honest living.

To bring those bound with the chains of sin to freedom.

MEANS USED.

By Work in Steam Laundry, and the Manufacture of Felt Slippers.

By proclaiming the simple Gospel Message, Liberty through the Blood of Jesus Christ.

Felt Slippers: Children's, 1/6 to 2/-; Ladies', 2/- to 2/9; Gentlemen's, 2/9 to 3/6; Infants', in white felt, 1/6 to 2/-.

MADE WITH HEELS, 3d. EXTRA.

The Prison Mission and the General Fund (which provides for all Evangelical Agencies) are in great need of money.

Cheques and P.O.'s. should be made payable to Mrs. MEREDITH, and crossed "Stockwell Branch, London and South Western Bank."

The Queen's "Diamond" Jubilee.

NEW GOSPEL HALL AND BIBLE-CLASS ROOM.

MISS WESTON will gratefully accept Gifts. Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport.

Funds Urgently Needed

To aid in sending Free Grants of Tracts to poor Missions, and for sending Tracts by post as letters to private persons. Cheques or Postal Orders made payable to F. A. BEVAN, Esq., Treasurer, or to J. R. MACKENZIE, Secretary,

MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY (Estab. 1837),

181, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., or to the Office of The Christian.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

Special effort to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee.

£1,800 urgently required for present needs, and £4,500 to reinstate the Reserve Fund, now nearly exhausted.

The Committee earnestly appeal for Contributions to all interested in the moral and spiritual welfare of the London poor.

130 trained Lay Evangelists are successfully labouring in parishes aggregating over a million souls.

Subscriptions already promised:—

Colonel Raymond Paley	£300	F. A. Hamilton, Esq.	£100
Sir Mark W. Collet, Bart.	100	Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.	10
Edmund S. Hanbury, Esq.	100	A. Stirling, Esq.	10
E. M. Denny, Esq.	100

Donations and Subscriptions will be thankfully received by the treasurer, E. S. Hanbury, Esq., 20, Princes-gardens, S.W., or by the Lay Secretary, at the Society's Offices, 56, Haymarket, S.W.

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.

President and Treasurer: Rev. J. A. SPURGEON, D.D.

A HOME AND SCHOOL

FOR

500 FATHERLESS CHILDREN,

AND

A MEMORIAL OF THE BELOVED FOUNDER, C. H. SPURGEON.

No Votes required. The most needy and deserving cases are selected by the Committee of Management.

The Managers require TEN THOUSAND POUNDS A YEAR in Voluntary Contributions.

All Moneys should be sent to the President, addressed to the care of the Secretary, Mr. F. G. Ladds, Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, London, S.W.

NOTICE TO INTENDING BENEFACTORS.—Our last Annual Report, containing a Legal Form of Bequest, will be gladly sent on application to the Secretary.

Wesleyan East-End Mission,

2, PORTLAND ST., COMMERCIAL ROAD, E.

Six Centres at Whitechapel, St. George's in the East, Wapping, Shadwell, Stepney, and Mile End, where Evangelistic, Social and Medical Relief Work is carried on among the poorest.

Funds are urgently needed for the maintenance of the work. PETER THOMPSON, Superintendent.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION

SUPPORTED ENTIRELY BY VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.

THIS MISSION HAS

PROVIDED 300,000 FREE BREAKFASTS

TO

DISCHARGED PRISONERS,

AND IS CONSTANTLY

ASSISTING THE INNOCENT BUT SUFFERING WIVES AND CHILDREN

OF THOSE UNDERGOING SENTENCE.

DESERVING APPLICANTS still APPEALING for FOOD, FIRING, CLOTHING, and WORK.

SHALL THEY APPEAL IN VAIN?

Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Superintendent: WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letter relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for The Christian should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d. per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d. „ „
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of Herald of Mercy	2¼ dols. „ „ 2½ dols. „ „

Subscriptions for The Herald of Mercy.

4 Copies monthly	2s. per annum.
8 „ „	4s. „ „
12 „ „	6s. „ „
24 „ „	12s. „ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN this issue we give the customary letter of invitation to the Mildmay Conference, sent out by the trustees and superintendent. We hail with much satisfaction the decision of those in authority to give this year's conference a missionary complexion, and cannot doubt that the arrangement is a wise one. As the framers of the invitation remark, "the tremendous urgency of the missionary question, and the appalling needs of the vast majority of the human race," call loudly for combined action on the part of the Churches of Christ in these realms. Every reader will pray that the proceedings of the Conference may definitely further "the evangelisation of our generation." It will be noticed that the dates of the gatherings are fixed a week earlier in June than usual, owing to the national celebration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee.

The dreaded result of the Eastern imbroglio has come to pass, and Greece and Turkey are in deadly conflict on the Macedonian frontier. It seems a deplorable commentary on the so-called "concert" of the six great European Powers, that the outcome of their action—or inaction—has been the very thing against which they have professed to be working. It is impossible for an outsider to penetrate the hidden schemings of diplomacy, and accurately to apportion the blame that may rest on the Powers for not facilitating such a settlement in Crete as would have prevented the outbreak of hostilities. We give our own Government every possible credit for an honest desire to advance the cause of freedom, and to restrict the evil power of the incurable Turk. But we confess we are deeply disappointed that Lord Salisbury has not been able to exercise such an influence, towards this end, in the councils of Europe, as the past history and present convictions of the British nation would have warranted and even demanded.

The views of Mr. John Burns, M.P., on some subjects are not ours, but we are thankful for the courage and honesty with which he speaks out on the subject of gambling. He has truly pointed out the effects of the love of gambling as it is now practised upon our national temper and conduct. He warns us that the gambling spirit, which used to have its home in the sporting world, now permeates national interests. He intends to do his best in the House of Commons to prevent the sending of betting telegrams, which have proved a curse to many Post Office employés.

A correspondent of The Methodist Recorder calls attention to the increased facilities there will be this summer for open-air preaching in Hyde Park, as the new rules will prevent unseemly so-called plays and players and similar persons from taking up the ground near the Marble Arch. Some "adversaries" will thus be taken out of the way, but others remain and are very active. The National Secular Society is sending forth some of its most active members, who get the hearing of a large number of young men and women. On a fine Sunday thousands of hearers will assemble around the various speakers, Christian and secularist. But it is not everyone who is fitted to speak to the audiences that will gather; for many are intelligent and need the truth presented to them in such wise as to convince their judgments as well as to impress their hearts. It should never be forgotten that the great open-air preachers of England—Latimer, Wesley, and Whitefield—were well-fitted mentally, as well as physically and spiritually, for what they had to do. We are not depreciating speakers of much inferior gifts, only let them be intelligent and earnest.

At a most instructive meeting of the London Methodist Council, held recently, the subject of "the new responsibilities of Methodism arising from the great increase during recent years of the artisan class in London" was discussed. The responsibility of Methodism is the responsibility also of every other church in this respect. Its greatness is indicated by one fact alone, viz., that in metropolitan Essex the population has increased since the beginning of the Queen's reign from forty thousand to five hundred and sixteen thousand. Such sudden and enormous increase means a great change in the conditions and habits of life of the people. Sunday travelling is so general that nearly as many men are employed on the railway on Sunday as on any other day; vehicular traffic, cycling, working men's clubs, late rising on Sunday morning and pleasure-seeking on Sunday evening combine to lower the whole tone of living. To which we would add the cheap newspaper of every day, with its sporting and gambling news. Hence churches in the midst of a teeming population are half empty. Even continuous visitation in Stratford has had little effect.

The question of the artisan population is complicated further when you are told by Mr. J. Scott Lidgett, of the Bermondsey Settlement, that the working classes are little alive in some directions, not only to what is religious, but even to what is human—e.g., politics, both local and imperial.

In some districts their trained and trusted leaders are almost in despair at their apathy.

The coldness, the isolation, and the selfishness of a great city are, even apart from particular causes, among the great forces which work for evil. One labour unionist testified that many unions selected their leaders from those who are or had been churchgoers, and yet that the artisans have an ingrained belief that nobody cares for their souls. Here seems to be an opening. They must be convinced, through such means as the churches have at their disposal, that someone does care for them, that both men and God care for them. But to do this, the churches will have to exert and to deny themselves as never before.

There is something very saddening in the statement, made on what appears to be good authority, that out of every pound earned by the industrial classes four shillings is spent upon drink — one-fifth of the total wages earned is misspent. Here is the explanation of many a problem. There must be, with such waste, pinching in other and necessary things, and absolute want when times of sickness and trial come. There can also be no fitness for the reception of the Gospel in the case of thousands who are sunk in animalism; they do not want it, and take good care not to come near its influence. There can be no self-respect among men who throw away their little means, and from among them come those who betray and degrade their own class. They have neither the moral stamina nor the confidence of the community which would enable them to fight a battle of righteousness. It is not good for employers to have men who are no better than slaves, neither is it good for the community of which they form so large a part. If only we could close the houses in which they are tempted and ruined!

Some employers of labour in Paisley are doing an excellent work in the way of arresting intemperance. Apprentices have premiums given them for not entering public-houses, and thus they are kept steady from the beginning. If a workman gets subjected to "arrestment" of wages for drink, he is discharged. These are useful illustrations of the way in which private and perfectly legitimate influence may be used to diminish one of our worst curses. We know not how far these methods may extend in the northern town, but if they were general throughout the country they would soon produce a great effect upon habits of life, and consequently upon trade. While action by means of reformed legislation tarries, the nation may still do great things for itself without law.

When so many revelations of commercial unsoundness are given us, it is reassuring to hear the Lord Mayor of London say that there "must be a great deal of high commercial honour on the Stock Exchange." He says that the pivot of commercial life in the City is confidence and fair dealing between man and man. He speaks out strongly in favour of honesty for its own sake, and also because it pays. The drawback to the rogue, who nevertheless has succeeded from a worldly point of view, is that he has remorse and anxiety. Our only difficulty is as to deciding on what is honest, for there is so much evidence that men will do in the way of business things that are undoubtedly wrong, and yet go on without either anxiety or remorse. The standard wants altering; the balance and weights of the sanctuary should have a place by the side of the common standard of the world.

What to do with a backward child is a problem, even under the kind and flexible discipline of home, much more under the rigid and general discipline of a school. However, the Education Department has taken pity on all such in the elementary schools and has issued a circular requiring that they be treated separately. One of our great head masters of a public school used to say that a slow child was as good as a quick one, that he had as useful a place in the economy of the world, and that it was our duty to be as careful and faithful in training him as the other. It is well to remember that some of the best minds open late, and ripen slowly; that solidity is as useful as brilliance; and that only as we get the most out of the slow children shall we get all that the world ought to have. Clever children are sure to get their share of attention and to do well. If it be a painful task to teach the dull, there will be all the more credit to him who succeeds. In any case, it is better that they should not hinder the quick scholar, and be themselves neglected.

The seizure by the French Government of the College, the Normal School, and the Girls' Central School in the capital of Madagascar—buildings which were reared for missionary purposes by money subscribed at home—has caused a painful feeling. The London Missionary Society has given workers and money to Madagascar for a generation in the most generous way, simply for the evangelisation of the people; it is not too much to say that they alone made the island valuable enough for the French to take it; they vanquished all the early difficulties, and turned thousands of the native savages into peaceable, industrious Christians. And now their schools and hospitals and churches are being appropriated with a total disregard to justice; for the so-called "compensation" which is offered is wholly inadequate, and indeed in one case—the churches built in memory of the martyrs—the property does not belong to the French to give. We have no wish to screen missionaries from the risks of their work among heathen people, but it is a totally different thing when a neighbour and an ally of our country steps in and seizes the results of their labours.

From a series of articles by Mr. W. Morris, appearing in The Rock, on "South America, Past and Present," it seems that the emancipation of that continent from the power of Rome is advancing rapidly and surely; in some cases violently, in others quietly and silently. From every part of the continent comes the protest—

We will no longer be oppressed by ignorance and superstition and priestcraft; we will no longer be the slaves of Rome; we will be free.

In all the republics the people welcome the colporteur and the missionary. In several countries national systems of education have been established, and civil registry offices have been instituted. Some governments now admit consignments of Bibles free of customs duties, and in other ways encourage the work of evangelisation. Even Ecuador, which has always been regarded as a stronghold of Romanism, lately established a new government, which declares that it will help forward all educational and evangelistic efforts.

Among Indian Lepers.

The need for the work done by the Mission to Lepers is strikingly shown by the following extract from a letter by Rev. G. M. Bulloch, of Almora.

"Last Sunday afternoon I found two lads waiting at the chapel door to seek admission to the asylum. The sight was a heart-breaking one. They were brothers, one about seventeen and the other about fourteen years old. Their tattered and filthy rags were insufficient to hide their nakedness, to say nothing of their dreadful sores. To look upon their poor deformed young faces, and mutilated hands and feet, and to listen to their pitiful pleadings for mercy and kindness, was touching in the extreme. They were literally hungry and naked, and full of sores, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot. Need I say there was no hesitation in admitting and clothing them, and providing them with food?"

The sum of £12 per annum would suffice for the maintenance of these two sheltered outcasts in the haven they have found.

The hon. sec. for London is Mr. J. Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

A Plea for Armenia.*

CAN you hear the martyrs weeping from away beyond the sea?
And their wailing ceaseth never, for they dwell in misery.

Even the flowers have ceased to blossom, all the homes are desolate,
By the power of black injustice, by the Great Assassin's hate.

Fields are bare and roses withered, and the voice forgets its song,
For the cots are all dismantled, and the winter days are long.

There are sobs of bitter heartbreak, there are tears of cruel pain,
For the reign of night is o'er the land—will dawn e'er come again?

Can you hear the little children, with their hungry thrilling cry,
"We are homeless! We are homeless! and no help nor hope comes nigh"?

Can you hear the groan of manhood—manhood trampled in the dust,
"No! we do not want your pity. No! we want you to be just"?

Can you hear the feeble voices of the men and women old,
Who have given a life-long labour to heap the Tyrant's gold?

Can you hear a sobbing echo from the exiles 'cross the deep,
Who will never see the country where their dear forefathers sleep?

O women of old England, with your calm and placid lives,
Have you none to spare of pity for these starving widowed wives?

As you watch your treasured darlings in their happy childish play,
Have you none to spare of pity for the babes not blessed as they?

And you, ye men of England, strength of present and of past,
Won't you give your brothers justice? Won't you give them right at last?

"He comes to break oppression," it was sung in days of old;
Let the tyrant's rod be broken, let the same old tale be told.

Let the streams of love and mercy wash away the bitter brine!
Let the sun of God's own pity on the broken-hearted shine.

Sow the fields and plant the rose trees, give the homeless ones a home,
Bring them back again from exile, bid them never more to roam.

Let the mothers see their children grow around them pure and true,
Forasmuch as you will give them, 'twill be given unto you.

Oh! our brothers, husbands, fathers, flash this message o'er the sea—
"We come to break oppression and to set the captives free."

Florence M. Fulton.

* Written on behalf of the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, of which Mrs. Hickson, 32, Fopstone-road, S.W., is the Honorary Secretary.

A Completed Christianity.

GOD in his boundless ineffable love has, by the gift of his beloved Son, saved us by his sufferings for us, in his death. By the gift of his Spirit He makes that work efficacious in our souls. He is in the believer throughout his earthly career, confirming his faith, establishing him in Christ, enlarging his desires, keeping him to its close. When the Samaritans believed and were baptized (Acts viii. 5, 8), what was wanting to them was the crowning of the blessing, the end to their conversion, the possessing of the Holy Ghost. When Peter, defending his evangelistic work amongst the Gentiles (Acts x.), stated that the Holy Ghost fell upon those who received the Gospel, it is clear that he regarded that as a sufficient vindication of his action, and the complement of their Christianity, not that they were converted, but that they had received the Holy Ghost even as we.

Paul also argues with the Galatians about their deliverance from the law in that they had received the Spirit by the hearing of faith (Gal. iii. 2); and in asking the converts at Ephesus, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed," it is evident that their belief was not the full completeness of the Christian state.

Not to raise any questions of controversy, but to apply the truth to the present defective state of modern Christianity, why is it that the majority of believers in our day are like what the disciples were before the day of Pentecost, rather than what they became after the coming of the Holy Ghost? It is not enough to repeat "I believe in the Holy Ghost," but to understand the marked place He occupies in the present dispensation, and to yield ourselves up to his teaching and his making the word of the Spirit a power in our hearts, not so much for us to have more of the Spirit as for the Spirit to have more of us. Let us repent of our indifference and insensibility, and be alive to the solemn glorious truth that believers are the temples of the Holy Ghost, that He is come to reveal to us the glory of the risen Lord, and his gracious presence with those who are carrying his precious Gospel to those who know it not. G. P.

A Visit to Lovedale.

Sir James Low, of Dundee, has written to the Free Church Monthly an interesting account of the visit he paid to the Lovedale Mission in the spring of 1896. After giving a brief history of the Mission, the educational and industrial training it imparts, and the various handicrafts taught by practical tradesmen, he says—"We have still to mention one important feature of the work done at Lovedale—that of preparing native young men and women to be Christian preachers and teachers to their kindred in many parts of the African Continent. Every year considerable numbers of highly-educated native men and women are sent forth to carry on the great work of Christianising and civilising the respective tribes to which they belong. On the occasion of our visit a large number of intelligent and earnest young men were preparing for the ministry in various theological classes, and an excellent library well stocked with theological works, as well as with general literature, has been provided for their use. During their stay at Lovedale these native divinity students (as well as the white missionaries) hold services every Sunday in the Kafir tongue in the hamlets of kraals in various outlying districts, and thus carry the light of the Gospel to the homes of the people."

Whitefield Tabernacle, Leonard-street, City-road, E.C., carries on the work begun by George Whitefield in Moorfields in 1753. The Tabernacle is the home and centre of a host of activities, under the direction of Rev. Isaac Pugh. Through a compulsory reconstruction of the drainage system and needful repairs to the structure, the work is suffering from financial hindrance and embarrassment. Mr. Pugh's address is 5, Wiesbaden-road, London, N.

LOVE.

"Let us love one another."—1 John iv. 7.
"Let us do good unto all men."—Gal. vi. 10.

THE great need of the world is love. He who, up to the measure of the Divine requirement, loves God and loves man, has fulfilled the law; for, as our Lord Jesus Christ pointed out, the one great commandment, "Thou shalt love," includes all (Matt. xxii. 37-40).

A very shallow degree of self-knowledge is sufficient to prove to us that justification on any such ground is utterly hopeless.

"You Christians demand too much," was the complaint of a dear friend who, notwithstanding extraordinary powers of mind and a generous disposition, had failed at that time to grasp the simple plan of salvation. She continued with energy: "Now I believe that God gives us grace to keep the Ten Commandments; and that is what I do. He expects no more of us."

"You really believe you keep the Ten Commandments?"

"Certainly I do."

"How about the first one?" was her companion's quiet inquiry.

She paused, and her tone changed as she admitted: "Ah! I forgot the first one."

Only those who, similarly, forget the magnitude of this first step can hope to climb to heaven by means of the holy law. Instead of loving God with all our heart and all our strength and soul and mind, we have sorrowfully to confess, in the simple language of the poet—

> Lord, it is my chief complaint
> That my love is weak and faint.

And of our love to one another, what can we say but this, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother," if we measure our unready and ungenerous response to the Lord's requirements against those far-reaching words, "as thyself."

The serious and solemn consideration of our inability, naturally, to render due obedience to this double law should be enough in itself to send us to Him, who alone can recreate us and give us "hearts of flesh"—hearts in which He has written his own perfect law of love.

Even then, we need continually to heed the trumpet-call by which the Apostle of love summons us to the exercise of the God-given affections, "Let us love one another."

Amongst the many reasons for so doing of which He reminds us, two are of supreme importance: first and chiefly, the remembrance of God's love to us; and secondly, the too much forgotten argument, "By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John xiii. 35).

Here is a prescription for the world's evangelisation which has never yet been fairly tried. The lack of love amongst Christians is one of the greatest and gravest stumbling-blocks to the world: and it is a reproach which each one of us who bear the name of Christ should make it our endeavour to wipe out.

> "O, ye who taste that love is sweet.
> Set way-marks for all doubtful feet
> That stumble on in search of it.
>
> "Sing notes of love, that some who hear,
> Far off, inert, may lend an ear,
> Rise up and wonder, and draw near.
>
> "Lead life of love, that others who
> Behold your life, may kindle too
> With love, and cast their lot with you."

Let us each make it a point of honour not so grossly to misrepresent our Lord as a loveless Christian (if indeed there be such!) must ever do.

It is by loving our Lord more, and especially by thinking more of his love to us, that our sympathies and affections will be quickened. It is not that we can lay up a store of love in our hearts upon which we may draw at any time, but rather by a prayerful and watchful keeping open of the channel of love ever pouring itself from his heart to ours. The love of God "shed abroad in our hearts" is the only power truly effectual for loving each other as we should.

To Him, as the centre of love, we come, and the nearer we draw to that centre, the more closely shall we draw to each other. The lines converge as we come closer to Jesus.

There is so much about us naturally which is not lovable, that nothing less than the stupendous love of Christ will meet the daily demands upon it.

Love is, however, increased by loving. Of this art, too, it is true that "practice makes perfect." There is sober truth as well as beauty in Archbishop Trench's lines.

> Dig channels for the streams of love.
> Where they may broadly run;
> And love has overflowing streams
> To fill them every one.
> But if at any time thou cease
> Such channels to provide,
> The very springs of love for thee
> Will soon be parched and dried.
> For we must share, if we would keep,
> That good thing from above,
> Ceasing to give, we cease to have:
> Such is the law of love.

It is by love to the brethren that we prove the reality of our love to God. He Himself has made it a test of this. "If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." (1 John iv. 20).

Love, too, is, as one has truly said, "its own motive. Participation in the Divine nature is its only source. Communion with God Himself alone sustains it through all the difficulties it has to surmount in its path. This love is the opposite of selfishness and of self-seeking, and shuts it out, seeking the good of others, even (as to its principle) as God has sought us in grace...Love never changes. One finds nothing but love where it is real, for circumstances are but an occasion for it to act and show itself."

Love is eminently practical. It is not a mere emotion; it must show itself in action. "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth," urges the Apostle. And this leads us on to the consideration briefly of that other trumpet-call, "Let us do good unto all men." Love, if it be true, must spend itself in doing and in giving. "God so loved . . . that He gave . . ." The woman who, much forgiven, loved much, could not withhold the precious spikenard. "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren"—even our lives, if necessary.

It may seem as if our opportunities are small; it may seem as if the aim "Let us do good unto all men" were hopelessly removed from our poor powers; but if our hearts are indeed set to do the will of God we shall surely find, even in the narrowest circumstances,

> Room to deny ourselves, a road
> To bring us daily nearer God.

And who shall estimate aright the value in God's sight of those daily denials which love, when it is genuine, is so eager to disguise and disallow?

> "When the heart says, sighing to be approved,
> 'Oh, could I love!' and stops, God writeth 'loved.'"

LUCY A. BENNETT.

The Minister of Railways in Belgium has issued instructions for the free distribution to all employés of hygienic beverages, whose preparation the departmental chiefs are requested to supervise.

Doing God's Will.

TO be the instruments or the agents of God's will is no doubt the sincere desire and the strongest volition of many Christian hearts. But, commonly, doing the will of God is thought of as simply suffering our own will to be crossed and thwarted; and there is a narrowness in our conception, limited to giving up, to petty sacrifice, to endurance, to a very small view of all that is contained in that glorious phrase "the will of God." All that we have spoken of is contained in that will.

But much more is comprehended in God's will, which is the widest thing in the universe. It also means that our nature may be so broadened and enlarged that we may become the means of carrying out designs of ever increasing scope—the channels for those great changes upon earth that shall answer the prayer "Thy will be done," in a world where at some coming time every act and event, every impulse and every fruition, shall be the consummating of that will. How shall the grandeur of God's ideal be made visible in the world, except as some men become mighty and wonderful workers of the will of God? Must we not for this purpose allow ourselves to be taken possession of by the Spirit of God? His vast designs will be brought to perfection by men who are completely surrendered, not only to suffer his will, but also to engage with their whole being to do his will. But this requires the whole being to be completely attuned to God, and means not only self-surrender to the Spirit, but occupancy by the Spirit.

M. E. G

Matters in Formosa.

DEAR SIR,—A Christian Chinese gentleman has given me important news, which I pass on to you. He comes from the city of Taiwanhu, Formosa. He states that the Japanese have not yet succeeded in arranging civilised control of the natives; the people are not allowed to protect themselves by means of firearms, whereas armed robbers are left free to plunder. Nothing so bad was ever known as is at present taking place.

It is specially felt that the Christians are marked by good behaviour, and the influence of missionaries is on the side of peace and goodwill. Thus, multitudes are drawn to hear the Gospel. They are slow to follow the Lord fully, but surely in time the triumphs of grace must be manifest. In the meantime, these many hearers are on our side.

Our friend told of two students who are going from Formosa to the Anglo-Chinese college in Fuchow, where he himself formerly studied. The influence of the college, not only through the learning imparted, but through the warm-heartedness of American Methodism, is very marked. Let us be thankful for all influences of improvement. So far as I can learn, the civilised aborigines become Christians. As for the savages, it would seem that they are only brought under by force or worldly interest.

Amoy, Feb. 16. J. SADLER.

The Christian's Hope.

Mine eyes shall behold, and not another.—Job xix., 27.

HOPE, fair and sweet, that on some bright tomorrow
We shall behold Him! He has promised this!
How then will fade each clinging sin and sorrow;
We shall be like Him, and see Him as He is!
We shall see Jesus! Living Hope victorious
O'er sin and fear and terrors of the night;
Our eyes shall see the King in beauty glorious,
Our eyes shall see that far-off land of light!
Not having seen, we love Him; still believing
They, too, are blest who love Him without sight!
Faith's promised end with fullest joy receiving,
When we shall waken on that morning bright!

Amherst, Mass. (MRS.) MERRILL E. GATES.

Paul, a Servant of Jesus Christ.

THE FIRST PAGES OF A GREAT LIFE.

(Phil. iii. 1-11.)

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

NOT far from the easternmost bay of the Mediterranean, in the midst of a rich and luxuriant plain, stood Tarsus, "no mean city," as one of its greatest sons tells us, but at the time of which we write, a very different place from the Mohammedan town of to-day. On the edge of the wretched plain, to the north, rose the mighty Taurus mountains, with their peaks of eternal snow, feeding with perpetual freshness and fulness the river Cydnus, which, after pouring over a cataract of considerable size, passed through the midst of the town, and so to the sea. During the last part of its course it was navigable by the largest vessels, which brought the treasures of East and West to the wharves that lined either bank. Here were piled merchandise and commodities of every kind, brought to exchange for the cloth of goats' hair for which the town was famous, and which was furnished by the flocks of goats tended by the hardy mountaineers. Tarsus also received the trade which poured through the Cilician gates—a famous mountain pass, leading upward from the coast into the heart of Asia Minor.

In the Jew quarter of this thriving city at the beginning of this era, and whilst Jesus was still an infant in his mother's arms at Nazareth, a child was born, who by his life and words was destined to make it famous in all after time, and to give a new impulse to men's religious convictions. Jesus was nurtured in a highland village, and avoiding towns, loved to teach on the hillside, and cull his illustrations from the field of nature. Paul was reared amid the busy streets and crowded bazaars of Tarsus, thronged with merchants, students, and sailors from all parts of the world. Unconsciously, as the lad grew he was being prepared to understand human life under every aspect, and to become habituated to the thoughts and habits of the store, the camp, the arena, the temple. He became a man to whom nothing which touched human life was foreign. He loved the stir of city life, and drew his metaphors from its keen interests.

Paul came of pure Hebrew stock. "A Hebrew of the Hebrews." On both sides his genealogy was pure. There was no Gentile admixture in his blood, no bar sinister in his descent. His father, though living away from Palestine, was not a Hellenist Jew; but as distinctly Hebrew as any that dwelt in the Holy City herself. This probably arose from the fact that he had but recently come to Tarsus for purposes of trade and commerce; and the full tide of Hebrew patriotism was flowing strongly through his heart. The mother, too, though we have no precise knowledge of her, must have been imbued with those lofty ideas of which we catch trace in the mothers of Samuel, John the Baptist, and Jesus. Perhaps she died in his early childhood, or her son would not in after years have so lovingly turned to the mother of Rufus for motherhood (Rom. xvi. 13).

The Hebrew tongue was probably the ordinary speech of that home. This may in a measure account for the Apostle's intimate acquaintance with the Hebrew Scriptures which he so often quotes. It was in Hebrew that Jesus spoke to him on the road to Damascus, and in Hebrew that he addressed the crowds from the steps of the castle. To him Jerusalem was more than Athens or Rome; and Abraham, David, Isaiah, than the heroes of the Iliad. He counted it no small thing to have as ancestors those holy patriarchs and prophets, who had followed God from Ur, wrestled with the Angel at the Jabbok, and spoken to Him at Horeb, face to face. His pulse beat quick as he remembered that he belonged to the chosen race, God's first-born, whose were the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises. However much birth and wealth flaunted before his eyes, he held himself to have been born of a nobler ancestry, to belong to a higher aristocracy.

His early education was very religious. "He was a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee." In our day, the word Pharisee is a synonym for religious pride and hypocrisy; but we must never forget that in those old Jewish days, the Pharisee represented some of the noblest traditions of the Hebrew people Amid the prevailing indifference, the Pharisees stood for a strict religious life. As against the scepticism of the Sadducees, who believed in neither spirit or unseen world, the Pharisees held to the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come. Amid the lax morals of the time, which infected Jerusalem almost as much as Rome, the Pharisee was austere in his ideals, and holy in life. The texts on his phylacteries at least evidenced his devotion to Scripture; the tithing of mint, cummin, and anise, at least proved the scrupulosity of his obedience to the law; his prayers might be ostentatious, but they were conspicuous evidence of his belief in the unseen.

Such was the father of the future apostle. His early home was dominated by these austere and strong religious conceptions, and the boy imbibed them. According to the straitest sect of his religion, he lived a Pharisee. He was proud that a the earliest possible moment he had been initiated into the rites and privileges of his religion, being "circumcised the eighth day." As he heard of proselytes entering the covenant of his fathers in mature life, he congratulated himself that as a child he had been admitted into covenant relationship with God. As touching the righteousness which is of the law, so far as outward observance went, he was blameless. There was no precept in the moral or ceremonial law which he did not set himself to obey; and though the rabbis had built upon the law of Moses an immense superstructure of casuistical details and minute observances, he bravely set himself to master them.

The ardent soul of the young Pharisee had set itself on standing in the front rank of holy ones. Early in life he had made up his mind to win the prize of God's favour. In his esteem nothing could be compared to this. When, therefore, in answer to his inquiry of those who were the recognised teachers of the ways of God, he learnt that absolute obedience was the only method of achieving the object on which his heart was set, he determined with unremitting devotion to scale the perilous heights, and to tread the glacier slopes. But not without disappointment. The seventh chapter of Romans indicates that though his conduct may have been outwardly pure, his soul was rent by mortal strife: often he saw the better and did the worse; often he lamented over the infirmity of his motives, and the failure of his best endeavours. He was conscious of shortcomings which were discerned by no other eyes; and often a sad sense of failure stole in upon him. Did not the cry, "O wretched man that I am!" originate in his earnest struggles to realise in practice those spiritual conceptions, the holy and good law of God, which were higher than he could attain?

His nature was very fervid. The zeal which in after years led him to persecute the Church was already stirring in his heart. He did not hold the truth indolently or superficially, or as a necessity of his education and up-bringing, but as a principle which had saturated and dyed the deepest affections of his intense nature. His was a very tender and sensitive soul. The tears that flowed at Miletus, the heart which was nearly broken on his last journey to Jerusalem, the pathetic appeals and allusions of his epistles, were not the growth of mature years, but were present in his nature in those early days at Tarsus. Capable of strong and warm attachments, with the deep fountain of affection, he could love and did love, and at first his passion flowed in the channel of devotion to the God of his fathers. "I am a Jew," said he, "born in Tarsus of Cilicia, instructed according to the strict manner of the law of our fathers, being zealous for God." There was a sense in which he could apply to himself some older words and say, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." May there not also have been an undefined hope that zeal might cover some of those defects of which he was painfully conscious, and commend him to God?

. . . . .

Across a gulf of fifty years from the confinemen of a Roman prison, Paul had time to review these things which he had before counted gain. To the earnest gaze which he directed towards them, the receding shores of his early life came near again; and as he counted up their treasures he wrote across them—loss, dross: "the things that were gain to me, these I counted loss for Christ. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

It was not a small thing to have come of noble and godly parentage, to be a child of Abraham, and heir of the promises made to his seed. But he counted it loss.

It was not a small thing to have built up by constant obedience and scrupulous care, a fabric of blameless reputation. But he counted it loss.

It was not a small thing to be conscious of the throbbing of a fervent spirit which would brook no indolence or lethargy, and which transformed duty to delight. But he counted it dross.

There was calm deliberation in his tone. Youth may be impassioned and hasty, but the man who speaks thus is not a youth; his brow is girt with mature wisdom, and his heart stored with the experience of several lives crowded into one. He has spent long years in prison, where there has been plenty of time for reflection, and ample opportunity of weighing the past against the present; but notwithstanding all, and that the difficulties of the past are always minimised while those of the present are magnified, he twice over speaks of the advantages and achievements, which had been the pride of his early manhood, as loss and worse.

But withal there was reverence in his allusions to the rites of the venerable system in which he had been nurtured. For long years Judaism had been the only interpreter to him of the Divine, the only nourishment of his religious instincts. The grounds of trust which he now deemed insufficient had at least been the landing-places on the stairway of his upward ascent. He could not forget that God Himself had been the Architect of the House in which his soul had found a shelter and home; that His voice had spoken in the Prophets, that His thoughts had inspired them, that His purposes had been fulfilled. No thoughtful man will talk contemptuously of his horn-book, or of his first teachers. In these probably lay the rudiments of all he has afterwards learnt. But, notwithstanding the noble reverence of the Apostle's soul, he could not but affirm that what he had counted gain was loss.

. . . . .

The grounds for this verdict are probably to be found in two directions. On the one hand, he discovered that the sacrifices of Judaism, as was obvious from their constant repetition, might bring sins to remembrance, but they could not remove them; he discovered that outward rites, however punctiliously observed, did not avail to cleanse the conscience; he discovered that in Judaism there was no power unto salvation, nothing to reinforce and renew the flagging energies of the soul. On the other hand, he had found something better.

The young artist leaves his village home, inflated with pride at his achievements. Nothing like them has ever been seen by the simple neighbours. They count him a prodigy, and he is only too glad to accept their estimate. In his secret judgment he counts himself able to step forth into the arena of the world as a successful competitor for its prizes. So he fares forth—to Paris—to Milan—to Rome. Each month weakens his self-confidence, and gives him a lower estimate of his powers. Presently he becomes the pupil of some master-artist, and when, at the expiration of several years, he returns again to his home and opens the portfolio filled with the early studies, he closes it immediately with disgust. He wonders how he could ever have dared to count them art. What things were gain to him, those in the light of all that he has seen and learnt he now counts loss.

So Paul had seen Jesus. Before the glory of that heavenly vision all other objects of attraction had paled. He counted all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord. In comparison with His finished work, all his own efforts were futile. It was a relief to turn from his own righteousness, which was of the law, and to avail himself of God's method of righteousness which was through faith in Christ. So long as he anticipated having to meet the demands of God's infinite holiness by his own endeavours he was haunted with the dread that there might be some fatal flaw; but directly he learnt that by renouncing all he might gain Christ; that by forsaking his own efforts and simply trusting Christ he might be found in Him, possessed of the flawless righteousness which had been wrought by his obedience unto death; that by confessing himself unable to do the good he would, and identifying himself with the death of Christ, he might come to know the power of his resurrection, and attain day by day to something of its likeness—then with great thankfulness he abandoned his own strivings and efforts, and counted all his former gains but dross and dung that he might win Christ and all that Christ could be and do.

It is an awful experience, when the soul first awakes to find that he has been making a mistake in the most important of matters, and has nearly missed the deepest meaning of life; when it discovers that the rules it has made for itself, and the structure of character it has laboriously built up, are but wood, hay, and stubble; when it learns that it has been building on an insecure foundation, and that every brick must be taken down. Ah me! it is a discovery which, when it comes in early manhood, for the moment at least, paralyses—we fall to the ground, and spend three days and nights stunned and dazed; when it comes at the end of life, is full of infinite regret; when it comes in the other world, is black with the darkness of unutterable despair. The worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

There is one test only which can really show whether we are right or wrong: it is our attitude to Jesus Christ. If our religious life revolves around anything less than Himself—though it be the doctrines of Christianity, work for Him, the rules of a holy life—it will inevitably disappoint and fail us. But if He is Alpha and Omega; if our faith, however feebly, looks up to Him; if we press on to know Him, the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings; if we count all things but loss for the excellency of his knowledge—we may possess ourselves in peace amid the mysteries of life, and the lofty requirements of the Great White Throne

Literature for the People.—Dear Sir,—With the advent of spring our need of Gospel literature for distribution among the masses becomes acute. The agents of the Mission, who labour at races, fairs and fêtes need large supplies of choice and attractive publications, fitted to catch the eyes and win the hearts of the careless and ungodly. We shall be grateful if your readers will send us gifts of books, tracts or cards (not old or soiled), or donations towards their purchase. Last year 72 kind donors or societies sent us a total of 764,528 publications, and our new report gives many instances of blessing on their distribution.—Yours faithfully,

Frank Cockrem, Secretary, Open-Air Mission.
11, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

The Hand of God in Burma.

By Dr. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

AVA is no more. The old royal city of Upper Burma, which Judson took six weeks to reach, sailing slowly up the great Irawaddy river, is now a ruin buried in the jungle. In its place, a few miles distant, has risen the city of Mandalay, with a population of nearly 200,000 souls. From where I sit I can see the golden pinnacles of its pagodas glittering in the sun. Twenty hours' travelling by rail from Rangoon brought me here. What changes since Judson's time! The Burma that he knew is now a thing of the past. And yet it was only in 1813 that he first came to this country. The proud kingdom which, in its isolation, looked with suspicion and supreme contempt upon the rest of the world, has been subdued and amalgamated with India, and is governed by English rulers.

God has used the strong arm of England to open Burma to modern civilisation, and America to send to it the light of the Gospel. The spectacle is most impressive. I hardly know anything quite equal to it in modern times. A few years ago Burma threw the solitary pioneer missionary into the dark prison house, and loaded his limbs with galling fetters. Now God has brought Burma itself out of its prison, and has struck the fetters from its limbs. Judson came here in 1813. In 1825 the first war between Burma and England took place, which ended with the annexation of Arrakan and Tenasserim, or of the entire Burmese coast line with the exception of the delta of the Irawaddy. Availing themselves of the opening then created, Judson's mission moved to Moulmein, on the Salwan river, and established stations on the coast at Akyab, Ramree, and Sandoway. Some of these were afterwards abandoned on account of fever, and a station opened at Tavoy by Boardman, father of George Dana Boardman, of Philadelphia.

The second war with Burma, in 1852, resulted in the further extension of British territory, which was made to reach to twenty degrees north of the equator. Half Burma was then opened up. The American Baptist Mission now founded stations at Rangoon, Bassein, Henzada, Prome, Shwegyin, and Toungoo. Both Burmese and Karens were reached from these centres, the latter being found in considerable numbers in the so-called jungle, or country districts around. In the third war of 1885, brought on by King Theebaw's atrocious misgovernment and abominable cruelties, England took all the rest of Burma, or northern Burma up to Assam on the west, and Yunnan on the east, the borders of India and China. This led to mission stations being opened at Mandalay, Sagaing, Thibaw, Myingyan, and Thayetmyo. The American Baptist Mission has now over 600 churches in Burma, with a membership of 35,000 baptized believers. Most of these are Karens.

What is there in missionary history more interesting than the story of these people, who seem to have been specially preserved and prepared to receive the Gospel? I stood to-day on the banks of the Irawaddy. I visited the famous Arrakan pagoda, and the 450 pagodas of the sacred books of Buddhism. The whole of the latter are in one enclosure, and under each of the 450 pagodas is a large upright slab of stone engraved on both sides with a portion of the Buddhist law. I visited also King Theebaw's palace, which occupies the centre of the city, and is surrounded by a broad moat, each side a mile in length. The palace is thus four miles round, and is fortified by high walls, an interior moat, and guard houses.

Here a British regiment is stationed, and the place seems as though it had been designed by Providence for the powers that now occupy it, and use it as a centre for the government of Upper Burma. I saw the gilded throne room of King Theebaw's queen, now used as a sort of officers' reading room, and salon for their wives; and also the spot where King Theebaw was taken. A brass plate in the wall of the gay pleasure house records the capture of the cruel king. Both king and queen were objects of worship to their subjects, who adored Buddha, the Buddhist law, the priesthood, and the reigning monarch, but knew nothing of the worship of the living and true God. Not a voice had ever been lifted up to protest against the universal idolatry, not a voice to witness to the being and glory of God. Burma barred out the Gospel. Gigantic leogryphs stood dragon-like beside the golden gates of its pagodas, and the frowning fortresses of its citadel. Imprisonment, bonds, tortures, and death awaited those who should attempt to penetrate its interior as the messengers of a foreign religion and a purer faith.

Where are the restrictions now? On the banks of the Irawaddy at Mandalay, four hundred miles from the ocean, I watched this morning the mighty flood roll seaward, and thought of the changes God has wrought. Behind me stood the gilded statue of Buddha in his famed pagoda, and King Theebaw's palace beyond it, now in British hands. The steamboat lay peacefully moored in the river, and the sound of the whistle of the railway engine came through the morning air. I hear it still while I write. Yes, Burma is open! Her gates of brass are broken and levelled with the ground, and the Gospel, prepared before to do its work, by messengers divinely trained and commissioned, has come like a liberating angel into this realm of heathen darkness, superstition, and cruelty, bearing healing and salvation in its hands. Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord.

A Missionary Library.

AN important outcome of the International Students' Missionary Conference, held at Liverpool in January of last year, is a movement to obtain a good missionary library and reading-room for the University of Cambridge. Missionary interest, and especially a desire for study, both with a view to preparation and to intelligent prayer, have been increasing lately with great rapidity, so that it was felt after the Conference that some more satisfactory means of fostering this was needed than at present exists. It was also felt to be a unique opportunity for drawing together the various missionary associations in the University.

These two needs are now to be at once supplied. It is proposed to raise a sum of money, and with it to pay off the mortgage on the already existing "Henry Martyn Memorial Hall," the upper part of which is at present a centre of Evangelical interest in the University. The trustees of the Hall have undertaken, when this is done, to let the lower room at a nominal rent to the library. This will be fitted up comfortably and supplied with the best books. A nucleus already exists in the shape of small libraries belonging to several of the societies, which have been placed at the disposal of the committee.

The contents and fittings of the library will be vested in a trust composed of six members, two of whom shall be resident graduates. The following gentlemen have kindly consented to act as trustees:—The Bishop of Durham, Rev. H. C. G. Moule, D.D., Professor Macalister, Rev. H. E. Fox (sec. C.M.S.), Rev. A. M. Johnson (sec. L.M.S.), Rev. W. T. A. Barber (sec. W.M.S.). The library is to be open free to all members of the University, and will be supplied with the various missionary magazines. In this way it will enable the supporters of the various societies to meet one another, to study one another's periodicals as well as their own, and to become thoroughly conversant both with the classics and the latest news of missionary work.

In this era of missionary information every University should have a library of missionary books, well supplied and attractive, as a witness that God's work is as well worth study as any work of man's, and as an inspiration to those who come after. "If the world is to be evangelised we must have a praying Church, and a praying Church must be a reading Church." H. H. W.

With the "Midnight Sun."

VII.

On leaving Jaffa we were accompanied by Miss Nicholson, an excellent and courageous missionary whom some friends of our party had invited to spend a few days with them at Jerusalem. Miss Nicholson lives at Abood, near Timnath-Serah, seven hours ride from Jaffa. Here she works among the Moslems. With another lady, Miss Bell, whom we met at Miss Walker-Arnott's, and a youth to take care of their donkeys, she had gone over Jordan, to the dismay of some who feared a rough reception for them among the people of Moab. But they encountered no serious difficulty, were generally kindly received, and were able to sow good seed in virgin soil. Wild, uncivilised people generally receive kindly unarmed and defenceless visitors.

At Ramleh, Miss Roberts and Miss Cooke, of the C.M.S., are reaching not only the poor, but the Effendi. Rev. T. F. Wolters pays them a monthly visit from Jaffa. Here we took up Dr. and Mrs. Handley Moule, who had driven out with Mr. and Mrs. Wolters to see the ladies and their work.

JERUSALEM.

Here I fell in with Mr. and Mrs. Hussey, of Portland, Maine, and found that we had met at Mr. Moody's Convention at Northfield. They are spending a year at the Friends' Mission at Ramallah, a few hours from Jerusalem. We should have gone there had time permitted. Such unexpected meetings with former friends are among the unconsidered events which add to the pleasure and interest of travel.

This mission was formerly carried on jointly by English and American Friends, but it was agreed that as the English were at Brumana, in the Lebanon, the mission at Ramallah should be worked by the American Friends. I regretted not having been able, when at Beyrout, to visit Brumana, where I spent some pleasant and profitable days six years ago. We exchanged greetings through Dr. Manasseh and his brother, who came to meet Mr. and Mrs. Joel Cadbury, and take them to Brumana, while the remainder of the party went to Baalbec and Damascus, or to Haifa, Nazareth, Tiberias, and Sychar to Jerusalem.

The interest found in Christian work, and in seeing the ways of God through his servants, is of quite another and deeper character than that of site-seeing even in the Holy Land. The movements of the risen Christ, by his Spirit, are more instructive and more influential, more evident and more palpable, than our tracings in imagination of his walks and talks, his works and ways, when here on earth, even though the Sea of Galilee lie sparkling beneath our eyes, or Jerusalem, the city that is compact together, be seen from the spot on Olivet where Jesus beheld it and wept over it on his last journey thither.

For we know not Christ, the Son of the living God, except He be revealed to us, as to Simon Bar-jona, not by flesh and blood, but by His and our Father who is in heaven. Then, as He gave to Simon the surname Peter, He gives us to eat of the hidden manna, and gives us a white stone, and in the stone a new name is written, which no one knows but he that receiveth it. Therefore, there are those who never saw the bare hills of Palestine or the blue mountains of Moab, the plain of Esdraelon or the wilderness of Judea, Elisha's fountain or the Pools of Solomon, the Dead Sea or the river Jordan, the brook Cherith or the valley of the Kedron—who yet may know more of the real life of Jesus Christ of Nazareth than others who are intimately acquainted with every physical feature of the promised but (for the present) forfeited Land—the land where He went about doing good, where He suffered death and rose from the dead, whence He ascended and whither He will return

Not that we under-estimate the value of a visit to the Lord's land; especially if sufficient time be given in each locality to receive and feel the influence of its sacred memories, and the spirit be preserved undesecrated by the incongruous impertinences of its desecrated "holy places," whether they be imaginary or real. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, falsely so called as I believe, is an abomination of imposture and fraud, of nominal Christian antagonism kept in abeyance by the interposition of the Moslem sword. The Garden of Gethsemane—whether it be the true site, which may well be questioned, or otherwise—is turned into an unroofed Roman Catholic chapel, with its fourteen stations of the Cross. The Church of the Nativity at Bethlehem, most probably erected over the place where the Lord was born, reeks with incense, and resounds perpetually with the monotonous prayer-reading of Armenian priests, while they and the Romish priests are kept from occasionally flying at each others' throats by the inevitable Turkish guard. Yet a friend told me he was quite overcome by the sight of what was once the manger of Jesus' birth. It is evident that some are able more than others to look through the accretions of superstition and to imagine the scenes of those ancient and divine events.

The mount beyond the Damascus gate is more than probably the ancient Golgotha, the green hill of Calvary outside the city wall. It is the hill of stoning, the place of execution; and as such places were generally public and visible, this stands open to the view of nearly the whole city. It is the only hill in the vicinity that answers to the shape of a skull. And there are other reasons for its probable identification, as the spot where the Son of God laid down his life for us,—where Jews and Gentiles were gathered together to kill the Prince of life.

The tomb beneath this hill does not, in the opinion of many, possess as valid claims to be regarded as the rich man's sepulchre, in which the Lord lay. It seems unlikely that under the hill of execution, a man of wealth and position would choose his tomb. There are other possible places not yet uncovered, near enough to Golgotha, to meet the conditions of the description given in the Gospels. So that the evidence does not exist which would prove this to be the authentic site.

But is it desirable that that grave should be identified? If God for wise reasons so ordered it that no man should know the sepulchre of Moses, lest it should become a place of pilgrimage or idolatry, is it not probable that He would throw a veil over that of the Prophet greater than Moses, his beloved Son? How offensive to the Father must be the idolatry of the Church hitherto claiming to be "the Holy Sepulchre." And is it not wonderful that the grave of the Saviour of men should ever have been lost sight of, unless it were that it was divinely hidden from the eyes of men? The grave of Moses, Paul's thorn in the flesh, the sepulchre of the Lord of life, are all illustrations of the fact that there are things which it is better for us not to know.

Moslem, Russian, French, and German buildings meet the eye, and the influence of all these powers is much more in evidence than that of Britain, in the Holy Land; and yet the last is not less influential than all the rest. Not indeed politically, but religiously. Christians win the hearts of the people, and there are more Christians holding forth the Word of Life, of British than of any other nationality.

THE FIRST MEDICAL MISSION

in the world was that of the London Jews Society, instituted in Jerusalem in 1824. In 1838 a house was taken and adapted for a hospital, and its influence has been marvellous. The annual average of prescriptions made up during the last ten years has been 32,000. Last year 45,575 were made up, besides 11,000 dressings. The founder and first superintendent was Dr. Chaplin, who gave his life and means to the work. Seven or eight years ago he was succeeded by Dr. Wheeler, an enthusiastic Christian and lover of the Jews, who gave up bright professional prospects in order to devote himself to this work of faith and labour of love, the zeal of which is eating him up. He took us from room to room, where almost every bed was occupied by a patient of different nationality from the rest, and at the entrance of which, as of every Jewish living room, was a mezuzah parchment, showing the name El Shaddai—God Almighty—in a little glass tube inserted into the side-post of the door of every room. Without this they would not enter. I illustrates a couplet which summarises the character and condition of Judaism.

Letter held by, spirit scanted,
Saw the synagogue supplanted.

This hospital of the London Society has provoked the richer Jews to jealousy, and while, by unwearied effort, Dr. Wheeler has succeeded in raising £12,000 and building a new hospital outside the city, half a mile beyond the Jaffa gate, the Jews themselves are building and endowing one at a cost of £70,000, with seventy beds and seven doctors, some of whom are Christians. The new hospital of the L.J.S. will cost £3000 more than the £12,000 already raised, which it is hoped will soon be contributed by British people who love Israel.

The rabbis and wealthy Jews who are opposed to this work, do not fear anything so much as love. "Love a Jew," said Dr. Wheeler, "and you completely upset him." They have been hated for ages by the Gentiles, and from the time of our Lord the poor of the flock have suffered from the contempt of the Pharisees, who said then, "This people who knoweth not the law are cursed." Just as in Ezekiel's day they were evil pastors who destroyed and scattered the Lord's flock. Dr. Wheeler has been cursed by men whose children have afterwards been received into the hospital.

Dr. Wheeler wants to find some ladies who, for very love, will come and minister to these sick children of Abraham. A most devoted nurse, Sister Margery, whose health has suffered from several years in the noisome smells of Jerusalem, is just returning home. The new hospital is in no such fetid position, but in a beautiful situation, and in a pure atmosphere. Will any ladies devote their lives to this Christly work—to win the souls of these children of the ancient covenant, through their diseased and suffering bodies? Will any young Christian doctors avail themselves of a career which may not indeed bring them a revenue of gold and silver, but which will give them the opportunity of laying up for themselves a good foundation against the time to come?

Mrs. Symes-Thompson, 33, Cavendish-square, W., is collecting for a bed in the hospital (annual cost £21). Perhaps some of our readers may like to assist her. Will they also help us to maintain one? £5 have been contributed towards it.

R. Cope Morgan.

The Outlook in India.

In a recent letter, a teacher in a Christian training institution in India, who is a convert from Hinduism, says:—

The outlook all over India was, to my mind, never so cheering as to-day. We seem to be approaching a great religious revolution. The Vivakananda bubble must first burst, however. Educated Hindus are building great hopes on his mission in England and America. But it is an open sceret that they are not satisfied with their own creed, and crave for something that will meet the inward longings of their heart. Oh, that they would soon come to see the Christ, as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life!"

The lionising of Vivakananda by the people of America and the oratorical effusions of Mrs. Annie Besant have produced among the educated Hindus out here a good deal of unrest, and also engendered in their minds a spirit of hostility towards Christianity. But this will, after all, prove to be only a passing wave. God overrules everything for good.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 25.

"The Prayer of the upright is his Delight."—Prov. xv. 8.

We too seldom consider the pleasure that the prayer of his people gives to God. Often we go to Him with no other thought than to find relief from the pressure of anxiety or sin. We hardly realise that He is looking for our coming because He loves us. Thus nothing delights Him more than the time we consecrate for heart-felt fellowship with him. Think, O child of God, when next the hour of prayer comes round, that God is waiting for you. Would you cause him disappointment by curtailing it, and by passing cursorily through a form, when He looks for the fellowship of the soul?

The prayer which gives God delight is one which is characterised thus:—(1) It must be an identification with the prayer of the Lord Jesus. In Him alone can the Father take delight, and in us as far as we are in the Beloved, and He in us. (2) We must come in full assurance of faith, our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our lives rid of all inconsistency and impurity. (3) We must give time for God to speak to us. Rev. Andrew Murray says, "Bow quietly before Him in humble faith and adoration. God is. God is near. God is love, longing to communicate Himself. God the Almighty One, who worketh all in all, waits to make himself known." (4) Lie very low before God. Sink down before Him in the lowest dust of self-abasement, reckoning yourself to be nothing. (5) Present yourself to God that he may fulfil through you his own loving purposes.

MONDAY, April 26.

"Roll thy works unto the Lord, and thy purposes shall be established."—Prov. xvi. 3 (R.V. marg.).

There are four matters which we are to roll upon God—ourselves, as the Messiah in Psa. xxii., our burden, our way, and here our works. The genesis of Christian work is on this wise. We are conscious of the uprising of a noble purpose. We are not sure at first whether it is of God or not, till we have taken time to subject it to the winnowing fan of his good Spirit. Let it be subjected to the fire of his criticism before it takes shape. Even then, however, all is not done. We must submit our plans before they are executed, our works by which they are being executed, and the results of the execution, to the infinite wisdom of our Heavenly Father.

What a comfort it is to roll our works upon God! That servant of God who is carrying the responsibilities of a vast missionary enterprise! That preacher with his church and organisations! That promoter of philanthropic and ameliorative agencies! Let them roll their works upon God, and be content to take the subordinate place of acting as his agents and executors. The heart will be light, and the hands free, if only we can learn the blessed secret of imposing the responsibility and anxiety of our efficiency, finance, and success on Jehovah. Roll thy works, and see they do not roll back again. Put on the arrest of faith to make them keep their position. Reckon that God takes what you give, and when you have let your works go, be sure to cast yourself after them on his patient carefulness. Remember that He desires to work in us to will and to work of his good pleasure.

TUESDAY, April 27.

"He that spareth his words hath knowledge."—Prov. xvii. 27.

The R.V. marg. suggests a better rendering, "He that hath knowledge spareth his words." It is a wise thing to say as little as possible to man, and as much to God. The ultimate test of friendship has always seemed to me to be in the ability of true friends to be silent in each other's presence. In silence we best may open the heart to receive the infillings of the Divine Spirit. When people are always talking to one another, even though they talk about God, they are liable to lose the first fresh sense of God's presence.

Ordinary conversation greatly weakens character. It is like the perpetual running of a tap which inevitably empties the cistern. It seems to me disastrous when the whole of a summer holiday is spent in contact with friends, however dear, who leave no time for the communing of a soul with itself, nature, and God. We cannot be perpetually in society, speaking to the nearest and dearest, without saying things which will afterwards cause us regret. Either we have spoken too much of ourselves, or too little of Christ, or too much about others, or we have allowed the things of the world and sense to bulk too largely. Besides, it is only in silence and thought that our deepest life matures, or the impressions of eternity are realised. If we are always talking we give no opportunity for the ripening of the soul. Who would pick a crop of fruit when first it began to appear on the trees. Live deep. Speak as little as you may. Let God speak to you. Slow to speak, and swift to hear.

WEDNESDAY, April 28.

"He that pleadeth his cause first seemeth just; but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him out."—Prov. xviii. 17.

It is easy to boast of what we are or are not, but the real question is as to what others think of us. A Christian lady told me that a little time ago she went to a meeting where one after another arose to say how long they had been without sin; and when an opportunity was given she asked simply if they might be allowed to hear something from those who had lived with the persons that had been so loudly expressing themselves; because she said that she had observed that the opinions of those who shared the same room or home as Christian professors were apt to vary greatly from those of the professors themselves.

It is a grave question for us all,—what do our neighbours and associates think of us? Would they credit us with the highest attainments in Christian living? Would they concede the reality and beauty of our characters? After all, may not we be mistaking our ideals for our attainments, and judging ourselves by a lower standard than we apply to others? Might not our wives and sisters, our husbands and brothers, search us? It is so much easier to plead our own cause in a meeting than to stand clear in the searching scrutiny of the home.

And if our neighbours search us, what does God think of us as the fierce light of his eyes scans us and reads our deepest secrets? What should we do were it not for the blood? I used to hesitate once to call myself a miserable sinner; but as I know myself better, I begin to feel that it is a reasonable designation. That is what we are by nature, though kept by God's power.

THURSDAY, April 29.

"He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord; and his good deed will He pay him again."—Prov. xix. 17.

What a revolution would be wrought among us if we really believed this! We are glad to lend to our friends in a temporary strait, especially when we know that our money is safe and will come back to us with a substantial increase. To have an I O U is quite sufficient. But in the light of this text we are taught to look on God as the great Borrower. He comes to us, asking that we will lend to Him. In every needy one who deserves our aid the request of the Almighty may be heard asking a loan. And what God borrows He always repays at heaven's rate of interest, which is good measure, pressed down and running over.

What mistakes we make! We think we keep what we hold and invest well. But we really keep what we give away. The best investments are the heavenly shares and stocks, which are found in the needs and sorrows of the poor. Will you not, my reader, resolve that you will begin to lend to the Lord in the person of those who need your help, whether for their personal necessities or the work in which they are interested? You belong to heaven; lay up your treasures there. You are called to be a steward of God's free gifts to you. You must be ready, as his almoner, to deal out his wealth. He will pay you for doing it, but He expects, in the first place, that you should be faithful, acting for Him and counting all to be his.

FRIDAY, April 30.

"The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord."—Prov. xx. 27.

What an inspiring conception, to think that our spirits, which are like so many unlighted candles, may be touched by the Spirit of God and made to flame and burn. We are all familiar with the process. There are the candles, each in a splendid holder, but the holders and candles are alike useless because the spark of fire is lacking. But, lo, a taper comes, bringing fire with it, and as it touches one after another of those candles they begin to glow. Oh, that each of us might be a lighted candle, not put under a bushel, but upon it, and giving light to all in the house. And there is even a superior ambition, to be a spiritual taper, and go through the world lighting up dark lives. Do you want this? It may be yours if you are content to waste as quickly as a taper does. Let us ask for the fire of the Spirit of the Lord to kindle on us. All we need is capacity for catching and burning.

Therefore, O Lord, I will not fail nor falter,
Nay but I ask it, nay but I desire;
Lay on my lips thine embers of the altar,
Seal with the sting, and furnish with the fire.

Quick in a moment, infinite for ever,
Send an arousal better than I pray;
Give me a grace upon the faint endeavour,
Souls for my hire, and Pentecost to-day.

SATURDAY, May 1.

"The heart . . . as the watercourses."—Prov. xxi. 1.

Madame Guyon says that there are three classes of souls that may be compared to rivers flowing towards God as their ocean.

1. Some move on sluggishly and feebly. These are often discouraged, dwell much in the outer and emotional, and fail to seek God with their whole strength.

2. Some proceed decidedly and rapidly. These have large hearts, and are quick in their responses to God's Spirit.

3. Some press on in headlong impetuosity.

This comparison of our hearts to watercourses filled with torrents from the hills is a very beautiful one, and is capable of great expansion.

Watercourses need fresh supplies of water from the hills, and our hearts are in constant need of freshets from the everlasting fountain of God's nature.

Watercourses must fulfil their ministry in all weathers, and we must continue patiently in faith and well-doing, whatever be our circumstances or emotions. If we fail, the whole land will be smitten with drought.

Watercourses end in merging their waters with the ocean tides. So God will one day be all in all.

Will you let God lead your heart whither He will? Just as a husbandman will cut watercourses in different directions to conduct the flow of the water, so will you not let God lead your life? You can be a watercourse: He must give the water. Let Him have his will in the direction of your life.

Wiggan's Evangelistic Mission.—The report of this Mission shows earnest and sustained effort in Queen's Park and Kensal Town. The various agencies among old and young have been vigorously pushed, while real soul-saving work is reported in the mission services, and last season in the tent services. Mr. Henry Wiggan's address is now 191, Ashmore-road, St Peter's Park, W.

A Swiss Uprising.

FROM letters written in Switzerland and Belgium by Mrs. Josephine Butler, we learn of a remarkable uprising on the part of women in the Canton de Vaud. It appears that in Switzerland a new Federal Code, which is to unify the laws for the whole of the country, is being prepared. During a stay at Lausanne, where she was slowly recovering from a recent illness, Mrs. Butler came into contact with a number of her sisters in more or less humble positions in life, and learned from them sad stories of misery and wrong suffered by them through the dreadful state of the social laws of the Canton de Vaud. The fact of the enactment of a new code came to the knowledge of these women, and, in conjunction with Mrs. Butler, they looked into the question to see how it bore on themselves. They discovered one provision against which their hearts revolted, and which is thus explained by Mrs. Butler :—

A young girl is only protected from seduction till the age of fourteen—an age at which they are often mere silly children. The law forbids any unmarried girl who may become a mother from applying to the father of the child for any help. In the eye of the law, the father has no existence. If a man who has so led a girl astray wishes to make amends by marrying her, this same law forbids him to do so till after two years. It is illogical, as well as unjust.

In conversation with some of these sisters, Mrs. Butler, in answer to their questions as to what they could do, suggested that they should get up a petition from working women in Lausanne against the proposed law. The proposal was taken up with great heartiness and zeal. Though such a step on their part was altogether a new thing, they resolved to do it for the love of justice and of their fellow women. They have acted on it in such a way, says Mrs. Butler, "that now not only Lausanne, but the whole Canton de Vaud and other parts of Switzerland, are more or less moved. The newspapers are having quite a war about it, and the agitation increases every day." A case of a poor and orphaned young woman, ruined and forsaken by one who had promised to marry her, and who in delirium one day cast her child into a pool, was reported in the papers, and this fanned the flame of agitation. The child was picked up, and is alive and well, but the mother was condemned to ten years' imprisonment with hard labour; while the man was not allowed to be mentioned!

As to the subsequent events, we quote from Mrs. Butler's correspondence :—

"The two or three men now chiefly occupied with the code, are sensible of the immense charge they have in hand, and are keeping their eyes and ears open on all sides to hear and test the different tides of opinion among the people of the several Cantons. They will no doubt be to some extent guided by these currents of opinion. From this point of view, you can see how important it is that the wrongs, wishes, and prayers of the women of the country should come strongly before the authors of the new code. It seems to me quite providential that the woman's voice should have begun to be raised just now, on the eve of the issuing of a great new code.

"M. Louis Bridel, of Geneva, on hearing of the presentation of our Lausanne petition from women to the Grand Conseil of the Canton de Vaud, wrote on February 9: 'I consider that what has happened at Lausanne is an event of the first importance for the cause of women in Switzerland. It is the advent of woman into a sphere from which she has been too long excluded, and from which many women believe themselves to be excluded by the very "nature of things." We have been exceedingly surprised by the dignified and courteous attitude of the Grand Conseil of Vaud. We are not accustomed to that at Geneva! It is a famous lesson, of which I hope the full significance will be understood. The greatest publicity should be given to the whole affair. What has now happened at Lausanne, less than a year after the infamous March 22 at Geneva, is the most splendid encouragement for us here. It is like an answer to our unfruitful efforts in our own city; the harvest is not wanting; it is reaped elsewhere. How this ought to teach us that never is any effort on behalf of justice lost, in spite of the most contrary appearances!'

"I must not fail to tell you of the invaluable help given by this clear-headed and generous man, to the movement in Vaud, as well as continually to the cause of justice and of women. Mr. Bergner had the good inspiration to invite him to come and hold a meeting in the Town Hall of Lausanne just at the moment when the petition work was going on, and when the newspapers were all wrangling about the case of poor Anias Tschopp, and the Gazette de Lausanne was writing cynical articles against the claims of women, and the Nouvelliste, a humble paper, was bravely taking the part of women. His lecture made a great impression, and quite converted the chief of the prison committee and a grand conseiller, whom M. Bergner had arranged to get to act as chairman.

"In three weeks the petition reached 6000 signatures. This is more than two-thirds of the adult female population of Lausanne. I told you in a former letter of the zeal, alacrity, and intelligence with which the working women of all grades hastened to sign it, and how many working men wished to sign it, too, or to sign a similar petition. I never felt more affectionately drawn to any population of women. The Vaudois laws are very bad towards women; they have long suffered under them like 'dumb, driven cattle,' and did not know they might or could protest. They were so pleased to find they could.

"We arranged that the petition should be taken to the castle where the Grand Conseil sits by a deputation of working women. They went to the castle and I waited their return. In about an hour they came back to my room. I never saw such radiant faces. They all wanted to speak together to tell me what had passed. A few ordinary petitions were being read while the councillors chatted and fidgeted; but the moment the president opened and began to read the petition of the women there was complete silence, and the president read it slowly, aloud, all through. Some discussion followed. It was declared to be of great importance, seeing that it was signed by such a number, and asked serious reforms. It was proposed to appoint a commission that very day, to consider it and report to the Conseil d'Etat (the executive). The president spoke rather sympathetically, and when he asked those who were in favour of a commission to hold up their hands, they all did so. The poor Lausanne women were almost frightened to see what a noise their action had made. At table d'hôte at my hotel the next day there were some jurists from other parts of Switzerland dining, and I heard them say it was 'an historic event,' quite new in their country. Then came wrangling in the Grand Conseil. Three days afterwards a very hot debate began. A witness of one of the debates told me it was furious. Deputies shook their fists and shouted, and became very personal indeed. However, justice is preached, even though in strife and bitterness.

"Before I left Lausanne a second act of this little drama was begun, in the form of a great petition from the women of the whole Canton. Now that our group of friends at Lausanne have seen how the matter is started, they will get on well. They are finding suitable women in all the smaller towns—Vevey, Montreux, Aigle, Château d'Oex, Yverdon, Orbe, Morges, Rolle, Nyon, etc., and among the Jura villages to give out sheets and collect them again. I was all ready to leave Lausanne when I got urgent letters from Geneva to stay a day or two longer, as some friends of the movement were coming to see me, and they asked me to call a small conference; so I stayed and took a salon, as my room was too small. We had a good conference, and light fell upon all the difficult places. Then they all said good-bye to me, rather tearfully, but in good heart and hope, and I left for Berne, Bâle, and the North.'"

COPYRIGHT.]

There'll be no Dark Valley.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley.—Psalm xxiii. 4.

W. O. Cushing. Ira D. Sankey.

1. There'll be no dark val - ley when Je - sus comes, There'll be
2. There'll be no more sor - row when Je - sus comes, There'll be
3. There'll be no more weep-ing when Je - sus comes, There'll be
4. There'll be songs of greet-ing when Je - sus comes, There'll be
1. no dark val - ley when Je - sus comes, There'll be no dark val - ley when
2. no more sor - row when Je - sus comes; But a glo - rious mor-row when
3. no more weep-ing when Je - sus comes; But a bles - sed reap-ing when
4. songs of greet-ing when Je - sus comes; And a joy - ful meet-ing when Refrain.
Je - sus comes To gath - er His loved ones home. To gath - er His loved ones home,..... To gath - er His loved ones home;..... There'll be safe home, safe home;
no dark val - ley when Je - sus comes To gath - er His loved ones home.

From "Sacred Song Series," No. 1. By Ira D. Sankey.

The Willesden Licensing Bench has refused to license a public-house to be built at Kensal-green, which it was intended to call "The Longest Reign."

Rev. Dr. Colin Valentine.

AGRA MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THIS week we give a portrait of one who has done important medical mission work in our great Indian Dependency, on lines which fully entitle him to be classed among the pioneers of Christian enterprise. While, during recent years, medical missionaries have been qualifying for work and going forth to their spheres, Dr. Valentine has looked ahead, and inquired concerning the future and its demands in our million-peopled empire of the East. He has seen the importance of raising a ministry of healing and evangelisation among the native Christians; and his name is now a synonym for a well-considered scheme, admirably realised, for the training of young men of India for medical and Gospel work among their own people.

A Scotchman by birth and education, the subject of our sketch added medicine to his other studies preparatory to proceeding to India as a missionary. Fully qualified, he went out in the winter of 1861, and after a six weeks' journey in a bullock cart, arrived at Beawar in Rajputana, on December 31. The inhabitants of that part of India were a simple aboriginal people, without any systematised form of religion or worship, until these were introduced among them by a British officer, who built temples for the Hindus, and stocked them with idols, also mosques for the Mohammedans—all this at the expense of the East India Company!

Those were days in which the medical missionary was not so well understood in India as he is to-day. Accordingly, measures which would hardly succeed now were taken to prejudice the work in the eyes of the people. Brahmins had been imported into the district to play upon the popular ignorance; and they declared that the foreign doctor intermixed with his medicines the bones, flesh, and blood of cows and pigs, in order thereby to break the caste of those who might become his patients. This outrageous falsehood was readily believed by many, and for a time, in spite of all the doctor's efforts to do them good, the people concealed their ailments rather than consenting to take the dreaded medicaments. A short time after Dr. Valentine's arrival, one of the periodical cholera epidemics visited Nya Nugger, and thereupon the prospect entirely changed. By the blessing of God, the first case proved a cure: and the damaging rumours and suspicions were overcome by proofs of warm sympathy and unselfish exertion for the good of the people on the part of the foreign doctor. During this time Dr. Valentine held important public appointments, and devoted the emoluments to the development of his mission. He also cared for orphan children, and taught them agriculture and other useful arts.

Dr. Valentine did not confine his labours to the dispensary, but in the spirit of Christ he went after those who did not come to him, and on these errands of mercy he visited neighbouring villages, and occasionally remoter places. In those days medical missionaries were few and far between. In fact, in all India, forty years ago, there were only about seven missionaries; whereas to-day there are a hundred and forty, nearly one-half of whom are ladies. In all his labours Dr. Valentine was a preacher of the Gospel, and in this work he was neither discouraged by reason of the indifference of the times, nor hindered by the influences which were occasionally exerted with the object of securing the eclipse of the religious by the medical side of the mission.

After several years of unremitting toil, and under the strain of a great sorrow, Dr. Valentine's health completely broke down, and he was advised to take rest in the cool and bracing air of the Himalaya Mountains. On his way he passed "the Marble City of Jeypore," where he had an interview with the enlightened Maharajah, whose acquaintance he had made a few years previously. In the course of that interview, the doctor learned that one of the queens was sick, and had been "given up" by the native doctors and the English medical attendant. Asked to see the royal patient, he prescribed for her case, and with the blessing of God she recovered. Greatly pleased with the result, the Maharajah requested Dr. Valentine to become his private physician; and after much prayer and thought the doctor accepted the appointment, thereby opening up to the Gospel an idolatrous kingdom of three and a-half million inhabitants. Schools were thereupon opened, and a shop rented, in the most frequented bazaar in the city, for the sale of Bibles and Christian books. Out of the handsome salary which he received from the Maharajah, Dr. Valentine supported teachers, catechists, and several important institutions. From time to time pressure was applied to induce him to stop the definitely religious work. So acute did this become at length, that the doctor went straight to the Maharajah, and said: "Your Highness can, of course, command me to close my schools and book-shop, also to desist from bazaar-preaching, but the day your Highness does so, I must leave Jeypore!"

(From photograph by Mr. J. Moffatt, 125, Princes-street, Edinburgh.)

Work done in this spirit of Christian devotion might be expected to enjoy the Divine blessing. Hence, the late Bishop of Lahore, Dr. French, was able to write:—

Dr. Valentine's work and its results are alike a precious memorial for the Church of God, and the wise and skilled working by which his never-failing providence ordereth all things, and a signal instance of the hold which a medical missionary may obtain on a heathen prince and people. Having twice preached at Jeypore in former years, and having had my spirit stirred within me by seeing the city wholly given to idolatry, I have marvelled the more at the way in which God has made an entrance for the Gospel, and given his servant a key to the hearts of some of the most bigoted adherents of idolatry.

In 1874 Dr. Valentine came home to enjoy his first holiday, after thirteen years' residence in India. Not much rest did he take, however. A great purpose engaged his mind—the founding of a Medical Missionary College in the East. Travelling all over Great Britain, delivering lantern lectures and soliciting aid, he raised £3000, wherewith, in 1881, he founded the well-known Medical Missionary Training Institute in the City of Agra, in the North-West Provinces. Four years later, this enterprise was affiliated to the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. The object of the Institute is to impart to native Christian young men a systematic knowledge of Divine truth, and to prepare them for the work of medical missionaries.

The principles which lie at the base of the scheme commend themselves at once to thoughtful people. The native agent is in his own country, and it is highly desirable to train him there rather than in the West. Moreover, on all grounds it is important to promote to the utmost the raising of a native ministry, both for preaching the Gospel, and healing the sick. The Institute course extends over four years, and a native student is housed, fed, supplied with books, and educated for the small sum of £10 per annum. Almost all the missionary societies working in Northern India are indebted to the Institute for workers there trained for careers of useful service. As the outcome of a custom to help the poor of the city every Sabbath morning, a Beggars' Church was founded about eight years ago. On an average there is an attendance of 160, who are people of the poorest grades, including old and lame, infirm and blind, also lepers far advanced in disease. To these the Gospel is preached, and material assistance given. Of late, during the famine, the attendance has largely increased. The Institute students help in the work, which has its encouragements as well as its difficulties.

In 1876 Dr. Valentine was honoured with the degree of LL.D. from Edinburgh University. He is again among friends and kindred in Scotland, having come home some months ago, run down in health, and greatly needing rest. We are glad to learn that he is slowly recovering strength. During his illness the progress of the Famine Fund has been a source of much interest to him, for he well knows the meaning of an Indian famine. He has opened a dispensary for the famine-stricken people, on whose behalf he has also been influencing help from the benevolent in Great Britain. But he will not be altogether happy until he has resumed work in his much-loved sphere, and is seeing further evidences of the power of the Gospel and further manifestations of Christian beneficence in India. While staying in Scotland, Dr. Valentine may be addressed 77, Morningside-park, Edinburgh.

Doing and Being.—What we do declares what we are. In every phase of action, in the whole territory of conduct, it is intended that doing shall disclose and affirm the quality of being.—Dr. C. C. Hall.

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

IV.

THE THREE OLDEST BIBLES IN THE WORLD.

I NOW take you to Rome, to St. Petersburg, and to London, to see three of the most remarkable old Bibles known.

THE VATICAN MANUSCRIPT.

I want you to come with me first to the ancient City of Rome, that city which has played such a remarkable part in the civil and religious history of the world. If we had time it would be interesting whilst at Rome to visit the Colisseum, the Palace of the Cæsars, and the house of Nero. We might see the building into which Christians were rather than part with their sacred books, or dishonour their Lord and Saviour. But we must go at once to the Vatican Library.

FLUNG TO THE WILD BEASTS

You will notice that this MS. is in book form, having more than 700 pages, under 12in. square. Each page contains three columns, and the writing is all in capital letters. It is almost a complete copy of the whole Bible. It has lost Gen. chaps. i. to xlvi., Psalms cv. to cxxxvii., and all that follows Heb. ix. 14.

As you look at this book you may conclude that you gaze at the oldest Greek Bible known to the world. I say known to the world, because there may be other precious treasures, older even than this, of some of the convents and other places, some day to be brought to light, as was the Sinaitic manuscript, about which I am to tell you the story directly. But this is the oldest we know. It carries us back probably to the beginning of the fourth century. For 1500 years this manuscript has been in the world, and it is a standing proof that if our Bible is an invention, it must have been forged before the fourth century, when this manuscript was written.

HID AWAY AMONG THE RUBBISH

THE SINAITIC MANUSCRIPT.

From Rome, in Italy, I must take you to St. Petersburg in Russia. As we travel from the west to the east, from the centre of the Latin to the headquarters of the Greek Church, I may tell you that we are going to see the famous Sinaitic manuscript (Codex Aleph).

This is also in book form; each page contains four columns. It is believed to be almost, if not quite, as ancient as the Vatican MS. But its story is most remarkable. For generations, perhaps even for centuries, it was lost among the books and rubbish of a convent, and was only discovered by an accident.

There was a famous German scholar named Dr. Tischendorf, who devoted nearly the whole of his life to studying and hunting ancient manuscripts of the Bible. He has laid all who love the Bible under lasting obligations by his discoveries and investigations. It seems that he travelled almost all parts of the East searching the old libraries into which he could get. About the year 1844 he was paying a visit to

ST. CATHERINE'S CONVENT

at the foot of Mount Sinai, when he made a happy find. In the hall of the convent there stood a basket filled with parchment ready for the fire, and he was told two similar basketfuls had been burned.

On examining the contents of the basket he was surprised to find a number of parchment leaves of the most ancient Septuagint copy of the Greek Old Testament he had ever seen. He was unable to conceal his joy, and was allowed to take away about forty sheets. Though the lot was destined for the fire, his joy at his discovery roused the suspicions of the monks, and led them to think that perhaps they were valuable, and so they would not give him any more.

But in the year 1859, or about fifteen years after his dip into the basket, he was again at the convent, armed with a commission from the Russian Emperor. But his visit seemed quite a failure, and he was about to leave without having made any fresh discovery, when again he was

THE SUBJECT OF A LUCKY ACCIDENT.

The evening before he was to leave, he was walking in the grounds with the steward of the convent, who asked him into his cell to take some refreshment. As they conversed, the monk produced a bundle wrapped in red cloth. To his great delight Tischendorf found not only some of the fragments which he had seen before, but other parts of the Old Testament, and the New Testament complete, and some other writings besides.

After a while, through the influence of the Emperor, the manuscript was obtained from the convent and brought to the Imperial library at St. Petersburg, in which we now see it, and it has become the most precious treasure in the possession of the Greek Church.

Any of my readers who may not be able to in person, may see a facsimile of this valuable manuscript in the British Museum.

VISIT ST. PETERSBURG

If the contents of that one basket have so enriched us, what a treasure we might have had if the contents of those two other baskets had been saved from the fire! What other priceless documents are yet to be brought to light, we cannot tell.

THE ALEXANDRIAN MANUSCRIPT.

I want to take you now to the British Museum. Passing in at the main entrance and turning to the right we shall soon find ourselves in the Manuscript Room. There are many cases full of all sorts of ancient looking books, written on parchment of different kinds and ages. Quite a number of them are copies of the Bible, and some are lives of saints and other subjects.

Our concern now, however, is not with any of these. We are going to see the Alexandrian Manuscript—which happily belongs to England, and is not likely to be lightly parted with. If you speak to the Curator, he will tell you that large numbers of visitors come to see this famous old Bible.

THE THIRD OLDEST BIBLE IN THE WORLD,

You will notice that it, too, is bound up in book form, and has two columns on a page. You will remember that the Vatican Bible has three columns on a page, and the Sinaitic Bible four columns on a page. This manuscript was probably written about the middle of the fifth century. It is written on very thin vellum, and has been in the possession of England nearly 270 years. It was presented to King Charles I. in 1628 by Cyril Lucar, Patriarch of Constantinople.

It will thus be seen that it is the youngest of the three old Bibles we have noticed, but perhaps it is the most interesting to us as it belongs to England.

It contains both the Old and New Testaments, though it is not quite perfect. It is marvellous to find a written document of such great age so perfect as this is. The New Testament seems to have suffered more than the Old. Only from the Old Testament, but I am sorry that the New has lost more. Twenty-five leaves have gone from the Gospel by Matthew, two from the Gospel by John, and three from 2 Corinthians.

TEN LEAVES ARE MISSING

We have now seen these three remarkable manuscripts, all written say 1500 years ago. It is not possible to estimate their value to Bible students. They carry us back at once to remote ages, and help very considerably in showing us where our Bible came from. As we look at them we are at once put in touch with men who lived at the beginning of the fourth century. Though in our study of ancient versions of the Scriptures we shall get much nearer to the Apostles and to our Lord than these three old Greek manuscripts carry us, we still have in them a rich boon. They link us with the Christian fathers of the early centuries, and clearly show that their Scriptures and ours are the same.

It is quite worthy of note that the scholarly men who in the reign of King James made our Authorised English Bible had no access to these three valuable old documents. The Vatican manuscript was at Rome, and the Pope of that day was not the man to let Protestants have the use of the book. The Sinaitic manuscript was at Sinai, and its existence was not known to scholars. And our Alexandrian manuscript came to England about seventeen years after the authorised revisers had done their work. The scholars who have prepared our excellent Revised Bible were more fortunate. All these three old manuscripts were at their disposal.

BURIED IN THE CONVENT

Though we have only examined three of these ancient manuscripts, there are large numbers of others beside.

The conclusion to which the examination of these old Bibles brings us is, that at least our Bible was in existence when these books were written. Our New Testament, therefore, must have come from some earlier source. Let us take our next step.

Among the Santals.

We thank God for all his goodness during our itinerating in the Ranga, Hijla, and "Hot-spring" districts this last cold season. Thousands of tracts and Gospels were distributed, and some sold. I am glad to say, we did not find any torn up and thrown away as last year. We preached and sang the Gospel news with the help of a small band of Santal preachers. Lantern services were given in the open air, and one to about 200 students and parents in the school at Dumkah, the headquarters of the Santal country.

Bethlehem school is going on steadily. A number of heathen as well as Christian boys attend. They can sing and repeat many of our hymns, and also read the Bible in Bengali and Santali. The medical work is also going on daily by the help of my wife, and a Christian Santal, chiefly among the poor and helpless. W. Barlow.

"Bethlehem," Bethel Santal Mission, India.

Sir,—I write on behalf of this Mission, whose director is Pastor A. Haegert, to ask for funds to help Christians and others who suffer from the famine. The Mission, not belonging to any society, does not share in any public help now sent out to India, nor has it received any grant from Government. The large tanks are dried up, and Mr. Haegert requires 500 rupees to employ the poor and needy. His funds are exhausted, consequently 150 or 200 hands had to be dismissed.

This is a large work, having five stations besides schools, consequently much money is needed to meet the daily general expenses.—Yours truly,

Bethel, viâ Jamtara. M. J. Pilditch.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

About God's Flowers.

Text for Sunday:—"Why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin...Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field..shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Matt. vi. 28-30.

Hymns:—Songs and Solos, 12; Christian Choir, 27.

A Violet's Story.

I AM but a small insignificant flower, you will say, nothing compared to the stately lilies, the lovely roses, and the many other flowers that grow. So I myself once thought, but I have found out that even a small violet may do some good in this busy world of ours. The earliest home I can remember was a sheltered hollow in a small wood, what part of England I cannot say, for violets did not learn geography in those days. I remember that winter had been exceptionally severe, and for a long time it was no good for myself and my brothers and sisters to try to grow. But one morning we awoke and found the sun shining, the birds singing, and all traces of winter gone.

My brothers and sisters joined in the general rejoicing, but I would have nothing to do with them. I was ambitious in those days, and I wanted to be educated and go into society (flower society), and because I could not, but had to remain at home, I sulked, and altogether gave my parents a good deal of trouble, I fancy. Things went on like this for what seemed to us a long time, and I was becoming quite thin and pale, for I would eat nothing, but sat all day in my corner, speaking to no one.

Early one morning a lovely little dewdrop came down on my head, and whispered to me that it was naughty of me to sulk like this just because I could not have my own way. He pointed out to me how much happier my lot was than that of some people—his, for instance, who lived only for an hour or two in the morning and then vanished he knew not whither. He said I was making myself and everyone else quite miserable. I tried to shake him off, but he would not go, and while he was still talking to me, I heard another voice (such a pretty one) exclaim:—

"Oh, mother, look! Edith, do look at these violets. Aren't they perfectly lovely?" and the next minute a little girl of about ten years of age bounded down the opposite bank, followed by another of about fifteen, and a lady. The little girl (who I afterwards found was called Queenie) was a pretty child with beautiful dark-brown eyes.

"Aren't they lovely?" she again exclaimed, and then, after a moment's pause, she added:

"Look! I think this one is the prettiest. How sweet it looks with the dewdrop sparkling on it," and, lifting my head, I saw she was pointing at me. I am sure I blushed when I heard that, not only with pleasure at the praise, but also with shame, for then I saw how unreasonable I had been in sulking because of being a violet instead of a lily or some other aristocratic flower.

Then the elder girl broke in upon my meditations by saying:

"Might we not pick some of these and send them to London to the children in the hospital?"

"A very good plan, Edith, dear," said her mother, "Shall we begin at once? Mind you pick them with long stalks, for they will be tied up in bunches."

For some time there was silence, broken only by exclamations of delight when one happened to come across a flower more beautiful than the rest. When they had picked enough they carried us a little way, and then took us into a large place called a house, and packed us in boxes, sprinkling water over us before fastening down the lids. Then began the most anxious time I have ever spent in my life; from the moment we were put into the box till we reached the hospital table I was in constant terror. We were first taken to the station, and put into a sort of house on wheels. All this time we were nearly suffocated, and I thought each breath I drew would be my last. I fancy I must have fainted, for I remember nothing until I heard a voice say:—

"Poor little violets, how faded they look!"

So we had a delicious supper of cold water, and, after that, soon went to sleep. Next morning I felt better, and we were tied into bunches and taken to a large house, larger than I ever imagined a house could be. There the bunch in which I and some of my brothers were was given to a little girl lying sick in bed, who was ever so grateful.

"I do love violets!" she said; "I like them better than lilies or any of those grand flowers."

That made me very happy too, for now I knew what it meant to give pleasure, and I have learned that even a violet has its work to do, and has no right to sulk. Have you? D. D.

What Lilies May Teach.

MANY of you probably have a little garden all your own. How carefully you put the seed in the ground and watch it spring up and grow into a beautiful plant. How eagerly, too, we look for the flowers! I am sure we all love flowers, do we not? I fancy I see you picking some beautiful lilies, for instance. You pick as many as you can hold, but only the beautiful blooms, you do not seem to see the damaged ones. That is just what we want to do in our lives, always, to look for and pick only the beautiful things; to choose those that are good and pure to think or talk about, and our lives will be so much happier than if we thought about things which are disagreeable or sinful.

Before we could get those beautiful lilies, the gardener had to put an ugly brown looking root into the ground. If you had been watching him, perhaps you would have said, "I wonder what he is doing. He surely does not think he will get any pretty flowers from that! It does not look worth much." Do you know, some of us think our lives are not worth much, we shall never be able to do any good in the world, but what we want is just to be rooted and built up in Christ—to grow day by day in his strength; then we shall bring forth beautiful flowers in our lives, just as wonderful as that those lovely lilies came from that ugly root.

Something more is necessary for growth besides a good root. Plants need rain, or they will die; sunshine to bring the flowers out, and air, or they would wither; they must have also good soil. We too want everything that will help us to grow and become strong in the Lord. Let us pray that God will show us by his Holy Spirit, how we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Let us lay aside every weight or hindrance, and choose only those things that will help us to grow strong—good books, good companions, above all the best of all books, the Bible; and the best of all companions, the Lord Jesus Christ, a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

Look how white and pure the lilies are; they speak to us of innocence and purity. What a beautiful shape; how exquisite the scent; how beautiful! Have they not brightened our lives and made us happier in having them? Then let our lives be also beautiful with "the beauty of holiness," that all whom we meet may feel better and happier for having been with us.

Jesus bids his children lay aside anxious care for themselves, and trust in Him as their Father. The lilies tell us not only of his care, but of the wisdom of Him whose hand created them in beauty; and of his bounty in gracing the earth with things so fair. Do we not want to be as fair as the lilies? Let us ask God, who has made the lilies so fair, to clothe us with humility and fill us with the graces of the Spirit, made pure within as a lily.

The lily, like all flowers, will soon fade and die. We, too, must fade and die. Man "cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down!" Shall we not seek while we have life and health to do all the good we can. "The night cometh when no man can work."

Now, dear children, will you try and remember what the lily has taught us? How to pick only the beautiful flowers in life. How, if we plant the root and give it all that it needs to make it grow, lovely flowers will spring from what looks worthless. How simply by being beautiful and fragrant it has brought joy to many. How God clothes the lily and gives it all things necessary for life. How a Christian may be compared to a lily. How the lily, like all things, must fade and die, but our souls will live "for ever with the Lord," if we will let Him take them now. Mary Fletcher.

Heaton Mersey.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, Manchester, May 13; Liverpool, May 14; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Lewes, April 27; Kemp Town, April 28; Hayward's Heath, April 29; Southboro', April 30; Brighton, May 1-5. Mr. Reginald Callender, Blackheath, April 22; Plumstead, April 27; Wandsworth, May 3. Mr. H. Hankinson, Cinderford, April 22; Gloucester, April 23; Newport, April 24-May 4; Upton Bishop, May 5; Ross, May 5-6; Hereford, May 7. Mr. Geo. Goodman, Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 24-May 2; Bromley, May 8-16. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Broughton Park, Manchester, April 24-May 3. Mr. Lidstone, New Malden, May 9-12. Mr. E. Hughes, Woolwich, May 2-7; Balham Grove, May 3; Castle Yard, Holland-street, May 7; Baker-street, May 15; Notting Hill Gate, May 17. Mr. Phillips Welch, Hanover-square, May 4.

Easter Holiday Services will be held by Mr. Josiah Spiers in the Denning Hall, Denning-road, Hampstead, near Hampstead Heath Station, from Monday, April 26, to Friday, April 30, inclusive, at 11 and 7 o'clock each day, specially arranged for young people home from boarding schools, and for ladies to bring their children.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S. Psalms	lxvi. 1-20.	Th. Ruth	ii. 13-23.
M. Ruth	i. 1-10.	F. ,,	iv. 1-17.
Tu. ,,	i. 14-22.	Sat. Psalms	lxvii. 1-7.
W. ,,	ii. 1-12.

Bible Searcher No. (68).

☞ Rules sent on receipt of a penny stamp.

1. Quote the description of spring (three verses), given in Solomon's Song (Ch. ii.)
2. Quote a promise from Hosea xiv. referring to a flower.
3. Quote a promise from Is. xxxv. referring to flowers.
4. Quote a promise for faithful sowers from Is. xxxii.
5. What flowers were represented on the great vase or molten sea made by Solomon for the temple?
6. Quote two verses from Job's fourth speech, in which a flower is used as an illustration (xii.-xiv.)
7. When this illustration is used again in Psalm ciii., what is given by contrast as everlasting?
8. When the same illustration is used in Is. xl., what reason is given for the fate of the flowers, and what is given by contrast as standing for ever?
9. When the same illustration is used by James, what are specially likened to flowers?
10. When the same illustration is used by Peter, quote the verse explaining what by contrast "endureth for ever."

Children under ten do 1, 2, 3; under thirteen, 1 and 6 to 10.

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 67.)

1. Ephes. vi. 2.	8. Eph. iii. 8.
Ex. xx. 12.	9. ,, ii. 6.
2. Eph. vi. 14-17.	10. Eph. ii, 17.
3. ,, iv. 32.	Gentiles "afar off."
4. ,, ii. 4.	Israelites "nigh,"
5. Eph. iv. 2, 3.	because the "chosen
6. ,, v, 11-12.	people."
7. ,, v. 18.

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 60. W. B. and Alice Henderson (Jamaica). No. 61. W. B. and Alice Henderson. No. 62. Henry and Annie Baillie, Jean C. Scott*, D. H. Marshall (Canada). No. 63. Vera and Frank Sjöström (New York). No. 64. Frank Sjöström.

No. 66.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

C. and G. Andrews, W. T. Aldous, D. G. Arbuthnot, M. Adams, Wm. Aston*, Clara Barnes, E. B.* and J. C.* Black, Geo. Brand, Arnold Baker, J. Baring, G. Bartlett, D. A. Bennie, Emily Bridgewater*, R. G. Browne, N. and G. Brookfield, Hy. Butler, Eva Bergen*, J. C. Bell, Lavinia Barnes, Archibald Bearsby, Herbert Berry*, Louis Berthe*, Walter and Maggie Carter, Lettie Carter*, Wm. E. Clarke*, Dorothy J. Clarke, Lily Clarke, Jack Clarke, C. M. and M. M. Craven Marjorie Collins, E. F. Corrie, Nina Coote, S. Cumbers, C. M. Chapman, Bessie Cheale, S. Crowley, Elsie Cowley*, Dorothy Cooper*, Wm. Cuthbert, Wm.* and Mary* Charles, My. E. Clarke*, Lily Coles*, W. and E. Cockrem, Arthur M. Cole, Nellie*, Arthur, Hy. and Annie* Couch, May Dring*, A. and C. K. Dodd, E. and R. Dunn, Dorothy M. Dyke, Eva L. Edmundson, M. G. and J. I. Freegard, Wm. A., Ernest and Reg.* Findlay, F. A. and A. E. Figgis, Ay. Fosten, Lee Gardner, Rose Hamilton, F. E. E. Harris, A. F.* and Elsie* Hersey, Ada Heap, J. and M. Handasyde, Emily and Edith Hearn, Theodora Hill, Violet Holford*, Tom M. Hunter, Chas., Mena*, and Edith L.* Hunter, Nellie Horsford, E. P., L. M., and C. M. Herivel, Victor Henry, E. C. S., and Marjorie R. Hogge, L.* and Archie* Jacob, Robt. Jones, N. Q. Johns*, Robt. and H. Keable, Ey. and Mn. Kelk, Hubert Kirkpatrick, T. A. Kirkpatrick, Thos., Isa, Agnes*, Willie*, and Alex. Kay, Gertrude Kingerlee, Mary Law, S. R. and Doke Lewis, Murray and Graham* Lloyd, Guinefred Leigh, Hannah Lovell, A. G. Macnair, May McCallum*, B. and Hy. Malaher, Bella*, Thos., Abraham*, and Nellie Mack, John*, Ag., and Mag. Menzies, Lewis Morice, Helen Mickelburgh, Dora Muir, Tita Mackenzie, Hilda Medill, E. L. Moir, Frances L. Munce, Bessie H. Millar, Eva Monti; Amy and Maud Nottage, Gwen., Ogilvy*, L. and H. Orr, My. Palmer, Frank Perkins, Dthy. Piper, I. W.* and G. M.* Phipps, Susabel Pim*, L. M. and W. S. Porter, Margaret*, Jessie, and Lilian* Pook, E. V. Proctor*, Willie* and J. C.* Palmer, Alf. Penny,* Ed. T. Peters, L. and N. Peachey, A. B. and D. W. Ramsay, Ed. Rainey, Muriel Reeves-Palmer*, Mabel Redwood*, Chas. Romanes, Jenny Rule, Jeanie Robertson, Jessie D. Roe, O. Robertson, C. and A. Rouse, Nellie Stalker*, M. Dthy. Stalker, Muriel Shaw, F. A. Shadbolt, Dthy. N. Shaw, R. Sherwin, Ernest Stevens, Florrie Smith*, Ethel Snowball, Ey.* and Nellie* Stuart, Bessie Symes*, M. E. Spiganovicz, N. Skinner, Fl. Simmons*, Sidney Smith, Olive Tritton,* M. McM. Thomson, Mgt. A. Frances H. and Fred A. Trotter, Dorothy Vickers*, Wm., J., and Bertie Ward, My. E. Walton, Ronald Watson, A. and F. Waring, I. F. and J. E.* Watson, C. H. Washington, Gladys Weir, E. M. White*, Hotty Wodson, Wm. Wheeler, Edith Wheadon, Evelyn H. Wood, Ibla and Allan Woodman, Gertie M. Wood, Cecil Yerbury.

Donation List.

Indian Famine Children (Mrs. Bruere).—Teachers and Scholars, St. Paul's, Hyson Green, 7s. 6d.; An Irishwoman, 5s.; Rev. J. McR., Aberchirder, £2; H. T. W., 2s. 6d.; total, £2 15s.

Indian Famine.—Children, per F. E. M., 3s.; Willie, Reggie, and Ernie, 6s.; N. R., 1s. 1id.; G. E. B., 1s. 6d.; Nannie, 2s. 6d.; Philip and Gertrude, 6s.; Mabel Arnott, 5s. 6d.; total, £1 6s. 5d.

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—D. L. and S. R. L., 1s.; L. G., 1s.; F. S., 1s.; V. H., 1s.; B. S., 1s.; Nannie, 2s. 6d.; D. C., 6d.; Margery, 1s.; B. C., 1s.; I. W. and G. M. P., 1s.; D. and E. H., 2s.; Madge, 6d.; total, 13s. 6d.

Kilburn Hall.

Probably none of the Easter Monday Conferences which have been held for so many years past at Kilburn Hall exceeded in numbers or interest that which commenced at 4 p.m. on Monday last, when representatives of many churches and missions assembled for prayer, addresses, and social intercourse. Many well-known speakers attended—far more than could take part in the engagements of the day. The meeting was opened by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, and addresses were given by Messrs. Sprunt, Smith, Wright, and Whytock.

In the evening there was an address by Dr. A. T. Pierson of much forcefulness and power, on the four precepts in Matthew vi.: "Enter into thy closet," "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," "No man can serve two masters," and "Seek first the Kingdom of God."

Missionary Prayer Union.—The quarterly meetings were held in the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Sunday, April 11. Pastor Geo. Wainwright gave a brief address at the morning service, and presided over the meeting in the afternoon. The secretary's report told of the steady continuance of the work, the membership in the Union remaining about the same, and the financial result for the quarter being £25 11s. 6d. A very interesting letter was read from Mr. Hale, the missionary supported by the Prayer Union, who told of encouraging results from the work in Palwal, and from the work of itineration in the towns and districts around.

"Keswick" in London.

BROKEN COMMUNION.

Notes of Bible-reading by Rev. C. A. Fox.

(Concluded.)

I MUST now take up a further point—how to restore communion.

The children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the Mount Horeb (Ex. xxxiii. 6).

We must come humbly to God without an ornament left. "Just as I am," wrote Miss Charlotte Elliot, out of her own experience, and under the teaching of that dear and holy man of God, Dr. Cæsar Malan. He had spoken to her in the drawing-room, and she had answered that she did not know how to come to the Lord; surely she could not come there in the drawing-room. He said: "Come just as you are." That made such an impression on her that she wrote—

Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou biddest me come to Thee—
O Lamb of God, I come.

Without a plea; without an ornament; without a word of defence; without the slightest attempt at vindication, we must come right up to the Lord, and bow at his holy feet.

In order to the restoring of communion there must be a going into the very inmost presence of the Lord. Notice that marvellous passage in the preceding chapter:—

Moses returned unto the Lord and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin—and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written (Ex. xxxii. 31).

There are only two men in Scripture besides the holy Lord Himself who have ever spoken, as recorded, such words as these—Moses and Paul: Paul the Moses of the New Testament, and Moses the Paul of the Old. "I and my people are one," said Moses, "we cannot be separated." It was as if the Lord said: "I am going to blot Myself out in the blood of Calvary, but thou hast anticipated Me. Thou art so near my heart; thou doest it as the redeemer of thy people." And so Paul also said: "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." Oh, for this love of souls, and for the patriotism that it indicates! Oh, that this Diamond Jubilee year might be a year of such patriotic spiritual desire and ambition and enterprise, that the whole people should be as one man, under the encouragement of this righteous reign of our beloved sovereign, in going out to bring in the outcasts, whether at home or abroad, with something of the Moses heart and the heart of Paul the Apostle.

Now therefore, I pray Thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me thy way (xxxiii. 13).

This is what we need to pray: "Show me thy way." We want to have done with our own way. Let us give up all that is of self, and go into the interior presence that the Lord may show us his way. We have done this sometimes, when our way has been broken down or hedged up, but we need to come every day and say, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

And the Lord said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest (ver. 14).

Oh, blessed word—"I will give thee rest." It was Jesus, surely, who said: "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." God's presence before them, behind them, between them and the Egyptians; above them the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night—such was the Presence that was to go with them on their pilgrimage.

The Lord said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name (ver. 17).

It is one of the most beautiful testimonies in Holy Scripture, to a man who knew so little, for he had no Bible but the law. But the law was love. "Thou shalt love, Moses"—that is God's law. Notice that the Lord says, "I will do these things because thou hast asked Me." Do you not think that we ought to ask God far more than we do for what we want, and to believe that the Lord will do what we ask?

I beseech Thee, show me thy glory (ver. 18).

There were two prayers that Moses made in the sacred presence of the Lord. The first was "Show me thy way." Humble obedience was the primal necessity. Then he prayed, "Show me thy glory." That was a higher petition. It was losing himself in God—if it be to God's glory I care not for aught else. I love the Lord for his answer to Moses:—

I will make all my goodness pass before thee (ver. 19).

God's glory is his goodness. Calvary is the glory of Jesus. When he was clouded and eclipsed, then his glory shone out the most.

Restored communion, then, is renewed interviews with God. It is restored guidance—we have had that—"My presence shall go with thee." It is also restored separation from the world.

So shall we be separated, I, and thy people, from all people that are on the face of the earth (ver. 16).

It is a very solemn thing in these days that the Church has become as the world. The world is saying, "We are as good as the Church; indeed, we are the Church; we are all the Church." It is very important to observe the words of Moses in verse 16, "Wherein shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? is it not in that Thou goest with us? so shall we be separated, I and they, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth." It is a solemn thing that it is the presence of the Lord that will separate you. It is not that you should go apart yourself; that you should join this body or the other body. That will not separate you; it may exalt you and turn you into an idolater yourself. It is the presence of the Lord in your heart and in your life that will separate you from all that is upon the face of the earth, save those who follow the Lord.

One last thought: Restored communion is a revelation of God. (Read verses 20-23.) God thought it worth while to pass before one solitary man in all his glory.

In chap. xxxiv. 1 we see the Lord's command to Moses to bring up the tables of the law to be re-written. So there must be a re-consecration to the Lord. Some people do not like re-consecration; but if the first was good I think it must be very nice to have another. At any rate it is God's way. "Be ready in the morning and come up unto Mount Sinai and present thyself there to Me." "I beseech you therefore, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies." "To Me on the top of the mount." You must be hid in the secret place of the Most High. It must be a personal and individual dedication. "The Lord descended in the cloud" (ver. 5). What a condescending Lord He is! He stood there with his servant, quite unattended, and proclaimed his own name. It was not as in some great house, where the servant asks your name and proclaims it to the company. The Lord is his own servant. What is his Name? "The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth," and so on. In verse 8 we read that Moses made haste and bowed his head toward the earth and worshipped. Ah, Moses knew his place. The Lord had not made revelations to him in vain. He sank into the dust, because the glory of the Lord had risen upon him.

In verse 10 we have the covenant renewed—promises of deliverance which God was going to fulfil. Then we have a warning (verse 12): "Take heed to thyself, lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither thou goest." And, again: "Thou shalt worship no other God: for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God" (v. 14). Do not let us forget that that is his name.

You know the end; we have it in verse 29. It is the illumination of God the Holy Ghost upon his solitary servant. "Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him." When you are re-consecrated, and the commandments of God are re-written on your heart by the finger of God, then the whole man becomes luminous with the glory of the Lord.

Then we read that Moses talked with the children of Israel. He is not above his brethren, because he is more illuminated than they. He covered his face with a vail, because he was so illumined with the Holy Ghost. Is it not strange that in that Old Testament dispensation there should be needed a vail, and that in the New Testament dispensation no vail should be needed: that no one has ever said that we are too full of the glory of the Lord. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, whose face was as the face of an angel, is the only one I can think of. If we were more whole-hearted in our witness for Jesus, more true and faithful to Him, perhaps then He would so illuminate us that people might say: "It is too much; you are too like your Lord." Let us give ourselves unto such a Lord at this very moment.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The hall was filled on Friday evening. Prayer having been offered by Rev. G. C. Grubb, and praise having been given in the words of choice hymns, the Chairman read John xvii. 21 to end, remarking upon the need for unity of heart and mind among followers of Christ.

The first address was by

REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

It was based on Acts iv. 31 and Eph. v. 18: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost"; "Be filled with the Spirit." In the course of his address, the speaker said: We feel that, if our lives were altogether under the power of the Holy Ghost we should be delivered from the power of sin, and we should bring forth the fruit of the Spirit to the glory of God. Let us deal with the intensely practical question—How may I receive the fulness of the Holy Ghost?

First of all, if you would be filled with the Spirit, look up to God and say, "O God, there is such a blessing as the fulness of the Holy Ghost." This blessing is not regeneration; a man may be regenerate and not know about it. The fulness of the Spirit is one of the marks of spiritual manhood.

Next, say—"O God, this blessing is one I have not got." First, we confessed a fact; now we confess a failure. Some of the negative criteria are shown in 1 Cor. iii.—envy and strife, jealousy and division. Some of the positive criteria are given in Gal. v. 22—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance. Are we conscious of a perpetual, deep, sweet love of God, which is the answer of the love of God poured into our hearts by the Holy Ghost? Where have we "the best time"—in the ballroom, or at the Lord's table? Again, is our joy in the world? Have we a peace which cures us of worry? When provoked, have we long-suffering and patience?

The fulness of the Holy Ghost is not a luxury for the few, but a necessity for all; and it is our sin that we have it not. Therefore, the third step is this confession—"It is my sin, O God, that I have not this blessing." Then we must proceed to admit that we cannot secure the blessing by any effort of our own; and in despair we must look away from ourselves to the Christ of God, and say—"Thou art able and willing to bestow this blessing upon me." Do we believe this? The last step is—"O Jesus Christ, I give myself to Thee, and wait that Thou mayst fill me with the Holy Ghost." It does not follow that the blessing will be bestowed immediately; but with surrender it will assuredly be received and enjoyed.

Long my yearning heart was striving
To obtain this precious rest;
But, when all my struggles ended,
Simply trusting, I was blest.

Take us, Lord, oh take us truly,
Mind and soul, and heart and will;
Empty us and cleanse us throughly,
Then with all thy fulness fill.

At the close of the address, a considerable number of persons indicated their desire to possess the Spirit's fulness. Some verses of the hymn, "Holy Father, Thou hast spoken," having been sung, an address was delivered by on the boundless stores of God's goodness and grace. He said: You first become acquainted with God at the Cross of Calvary, but you go forward to the blessed Pentecost. From this we find that God, through the offering up of his Son, has purchased his people, that He takes possession of them, inhabits, inspires, cleanses them, that He recreates them after the image of Christ Jesus. They are no longer mere creatures, mere instruments of earthly power; they have become witnesses full of God the Holy Ghost.

REV. C. A. FOX,

If you have been deeply impressed with the truths of God, let there be without delay a dealing with Him in this matter; with bowed head and broken heart, in your solitary chamber, meet with God. There you will conquer the sin that doth so easily beset you; the enemy that is evermore besieging you; the old habits and ways. You will break with the past, and become a new man, in the secret place of the Most High. We can be so taken possession of by the Holy Ghost that our whole being shall be changed. Have you surrendered yourself to Him, asked Him in, allowed Him to fulfil his great purposes of grace and mercy in your heart and life?

Considering the opening verses (especially 3-5) of Psa. ciii., in reference to the spiritual life, Mr. Fox spoke of it as (a) the forgiven life; (b) the healed life; (c) the redeemed life; (d) the crowned life; and (e) the satisfied life. The study was evidently helpful to those who had been brought to feel soul hunger and desire.

Springtime.

WHEN the first signs of budding Spring
Break softly o'er the lea,
And yellow primrose buds unfold
In every bank and brae.

Rejoicing in their fresh supplies
The birds, long silent, sing,
And voice of blackbird, thrush, and jay,
Make copse and woodland ring.

There is a springtime in the soul,
Which calls my hopes to rise,
To where an everlasting day
Is breaking in the skies.

There is a springtime in my heart,
The work of grace begun,
Which, sweeping back the mists of doubt,
Is letting in the sun.

And on the flow of heavenly light
The gathered clouds are borne,
And the long time of wintry night
Is breaking into morn.

There is a springtime drawing nigh,
When, at the trump of God,
The living Church shall meet the saints
Who lie beneath the sod.

And in the presence of her Lord
The risen Bride shall see
The glory of a newborn life
Which flows, O Christ, from Thee.

O Saviour, come, and let thy light
Bring in eternal day,
When, in the dawn of endless spring,
The shadows flee away.

C. BUTLER-STONEY.

The Houses of Rest.—A friend of these admirable institutions at 10, Finchley-road, N.W., and at Eastbourne, having given a thankoffering donation to mark the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, Miss Mason proposes to form "a special purposes fund," which would be devoted to keeping the Homes in proper repair. The suggestion is one that will commend itself we trust to many friends of Miss Mason's good work on behalf of the weary and aged workers. The only proviso is that donations to this object should not be allowed to interfere with the regular support of the Homes.

Mildmay Conference, 1897.

JUNE 15, 16, AND 17.

DEAR FRIEND,—The celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the accession to the throne of our beloved sovereign Her Gracious Majesty the Queen, falls to be observed in the week usually chosen for the Mildmay Conference; it has, therefore, been decided to hold the meetings a week earlier this year, if the Lord permit, and we invite you to join with us for worship and meditation on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 15, 16, and 17. It is to be hoped that the close proximity of this great national thanksgiving will draw forth much response at the Conference, both in thanksgiving for so many years of national blessings, and earnest prayer that the closing years of Her Majesty's long and happy reign may be more than ever illuminated by the teaching of the Holy Spirit of God.

Notes of surprise and regret have from time to time found utterance, that at the various conferences in this and other lands so little time should have been allotted to consideration of the great work of the Church of Christ, the Evangelisation of the World. The subject which we now submit to you has been chosen in view of the tremendous urgency of the Missionary question, and the appalling needs of the vast majority of the human race, who are still lying in ignorance of the true God and of eternal life through his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Before his first coming, it is said, there was a general expectation in the Roman world of the speedy occurrence of some marvellous events, or the advent of some wonderful person. Is it not true that to-day there is widespread anticipation that we are on the eve of far-reaching upheavals, whilst among believers there is marked increase of the blessed hope that our Lord is at hand? If this be so, and the time to witness of his death and resurrection and ascension be so brief, shall we not try to hasten his return by humble waiting upon God for a mighty revival of the slumbering Church; for the manifested presence and power of the Holy Ghost in all home ministry; that the Lord of the harvest may Himself thrust forth labourers into the harvest field, so that in all the dark places of the earth men and women of God's own choice may proclaim "the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow them"? (1 Pet. i. 11, R.V.).

And when we thus gather, let it be with deep humility in the retrospect of past unfaithfulness to our Lord's commands, and with earnest purpose to pray and labour more diligently in the days to come.—Yours affectionately in his service,

POLWARTH,
Chairman of the Conference.
JAMES E. MATHIESON,
HARRY C. NISBET,
A. R. PENNEFATHER,
J. H. TRITTON,
E. TROTTER,
R. C. HART DYKE,
W. H. DAWSON,
Trustees Conference Hall.

J. F. MORTON,
Superintendent of Conference Hall.

The Evangelization of our Generation.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15.

11 a.m., The Character of Those who are to Undertake this Work; 7 p.m., The Jewish Mission; the Home Mission.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16.

11 a.m., The Results of Undertaking this Work; 7 p.m., Missions to Corrupt Christendom; Missions to Mohammedans.

THURSDAY, JUNE 17.

11 a.m., The Motives for Undertaking this Work; 7 p.m., Missions to the Heathen.

In addition to these there will be three afternoon Bible-readings:—

First Day—Bible Motives for Evangelisation.
Second Day—Bible Methods of Evangelisation.
Third Day—The Duty of Evangelising our own Generation.

Work in Russia.

RUSSIA is not yet overrun with evangelists. There is room for the grand old Gospel in all parts of the big Empire. If persecuted in one city God's servants would flee to another, witnessing as they go. Sowing precious seed they would find open doors and open hearts throughout the vast dominions of Russia. It is yet virgin soil, and the various one-sided and superficial opinions of Nihilists, Tolstoyists, Dukobortzis, and such like, are a proof that there are searchers for the way of salvation who need to be told the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

The permit for the prisons has been renewed to me for two years longer; this is a great opportunity for sowing precious seed. It grows and bears fruit, man knoweth not how (Mark iv. 26, 27). Here in Reval I found a prisoner who had made his escape from East Siberia, and who now is condemned to be transported to Saghalian for his life time. He recognised me, having seen me in 1891 in the Siberian mines. The Word of God is being disseminated, and God is gathering out from all lands and peoples his own people, in spite of all hindrances and oppositions.

Our brethren the Stundists are still persecuted and banished. There is no change, nor is there any hope of a change as long as the present ruling powers are headed by Pobiedonotzeff, whose one aim is to hold church and state in one inseparable body. A Russian subject dissenting from the orthodox church is considered an alien; loses his right of citizenship, and is banished to far remote parts of the Empire. Lord, how long?

Riga, April 1.—I arrived here on March 31. Preparation had been made for three public addresses in the Guildhall of this ancient city; the subjects: Sin, Law, Grace. The first of these was well attended, the hall being crowded by a very attentive audience. Public meetings are under strict control, but if they are permitted and announced in the newspapers, they are almost sure to draw large audiences of people who would not attend ordinary meetings in churches and chapels. Although there are regulations to be observed, not to make these addresses resemble a meeting for worship, yet the Word of God may be proclaimed pure and simple, and many cases of true conversion have been seen as the fruit of my former visits to Riga.

There is a blessed work carried on amongst the Lettish people in this city, the neighbourhood, and in these provinces. A Christian brother in Reval is labouring as a zealous evangelist amongst the Esthonian people, and several brethren do the work of evangelists in Livonia and Kourland. But there is room for many more. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He send forth more labourers into the harvest.

After a few days yet in this city, I hope once more to recross the Russian frontier. My address will then be—Care of Miss von Blücher, 81, Hohenstaufen-strasse, Berlin, W. From Berlin, I hope to visit Prague and Vienna. Pray for me!

F. W. BAEDEKER.

Theatrical Employes.

For the eighteenth year Sir George and Lady Williams invited the employés of the theatres in the East-end to a social repast on Good Friday afternoon, at the Shoreditch Town Hall. About 800 accepted the invitation. The committee of the Religious Tract Society presented a handsome volume to each of the guests, and the Flower Scripture Mission a bouquet, with a suitable text. The Shoreditch Town Hall choir and stringed band led the singing, Sir Geo. Williams, in a bright address, spoke of the glorious future of all who now decided for Christ. Rev. H. W. Davis, rector of Spitalfields, dwelt on the power of sympathy, and urged the importance of a life of unselfishness and purity. Rev. Dr. Gritton, Miss Dashwood, Mr. Charles Cox, Rev. T. C. Udall, Mr. Ehrlich, and Mr. Goodenough also addressed the meeting.

The meeting was arranged under the auspices of the Special Religious Services Committee, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C., which holds services in theatres, music-halls, and mission-rooms in the metropolis, conducted by ministers and laymen belonging to the Evangelical churches.

[2431]

Behind Closed Doors.

CLIMB, climb, climb, till I was breathless and spent. But I reached my destination only when the topmost storey of the high lodging-house was reached, and I sat down in a corner of the tiny room into which I was asked by the girl who answered my knock. The winter wind howled down the chimney and shook the casement, while we both raised our voices before we could make them heard above the uproar of the elements on that bleak March morning.

The girl who stood before me was pallid and worn, but reckoning her years she should have been in the prime of girlhood. Alas! for many years she had borne a weary load of care and grief sufficient to have crushed a less courageous spirit. But one guessed how toil and racking anxieties had drained all physical strength and nerve power from the poor child. The black rings round the dark eyes, the white lips and the ready tears told the unmistakable tale.

The father had been in his grave for many years, and the girl had come to the front, and with a younger sister kept a roof over the head of the family, at what cost to herself has been suggested. But love and toil had not availed to save the idolised mother (who had been a semi invalid) from death, and the heart-broken girl told amidst her tears of the desolation of the home, of the wayward brother, and the half-starving children. Father and mother were consistent members of a Christian church. So was she, and her sister also, and they had never quite starved, but they were weak for want of proper food. What about bed covering? They had a sheet or so, but, yes, they did want blankets. Boots? Yes, she must admit it was almost impossible to keep the children shod.

I climbed down the dreary staircase, the wind piercing me through and through; but what did that matter, for I was going home to fire and comfort, while that brave girl who was doing her best to fill a mother's place in the orphaned home had but a few embers in the miserable grate, and was clad in the poorest of apparel.

This is not an exceptional case. Do not let us lay that false comfort to our troubled minds. Would that I had room and time to tell of a score of similar stories of equally pressing need and equally worthy of help. In every Christian church, if our brothers and sisters would search for themselves, they could find heroic men and women who are fighting the battle of life with barely a crust to keep body and soul together, hoping, longing, looking for the help that does not come unsought.

To us the worst of need is that which with Christian courage and reticence closes its doors, and holds up appealing hands only to the Lord and Father of us all, till in some moment of desperation, when the worst comes to the worst, the secret of blanched faces, of hunger-stricken forms is sometimes whispered to one from whom help may possibly be forthcoming.

We are at all times thankful when such stories are brought by some friend, or told direct to us. At least, we can sympathise, sometimes we can help, but how seldom can we help adequately. That is our sore trouble, and why we come before you now, when the need of homeless and tortured Armenians and of the famine-stricken millions of India is nearly breaking our hearts. We must tell the truth, and say that while some of the saddest cases we have ever had are at our doors, we have no funds in hand even partially to relieve their misery and destitution. Annie F. Perram.

90, Darenth-road, Stamford-hill, N.

Village Work in South India.—Around the city of Madras is a very large number of villages, most of which are occupied by no Protestant denomination. There are nearly a dozen missions working within the municipal limits of the city, and there are many churches, chapels, and mission colleges. I am stationed at Kodambakam, which is situated six miles away from Madras, in the Chingleput district, and I work in four villages. The people inhabiting them are Sudras, Pariahs, and Mohamadans. We have now three night-schools, where over seventy young men receive both secular and religious instruction. We have four well-attended Sunday-schools, where 200 heathen children are taught. Help on behalf of our work will be thankfully received, and we shall also be glad of any amount of tracts, magazines, and leaflets for free distribution in the villages. (Rev.) K. R. Gopalah Aiyar.

M.E. Mission, Kodambakam, Madras, South India.

[344]

The "Welcome Mission."

THE annual report of this Mission among sailors and ex-service men, which grew out of Miss Robinson's work at Portsmouth, is once more before us. Mr. Hogben has many tokens of blessing to relate. Owing to the additions to the Navy, and the numbers of young seamen from all parts of the land sent to Portsmouth for training, increasing efforts are demanded for their well-being.

"The health, happiness, and future of these lads depend upon their moral and spiritual state. We are trying to save them; and that our labours in the Lord are not in vain is shown by our register of one hundred and sixty persons who have during the past year professed saving faith in Christ—forty-four of whom are sailors and soldiers. Most of these have now left Portsmouth for foreign service.

"Our workers are well received by the men in their visits to the ships, and we have been able to distribute many hundred portions of the Holy Scripture and tracts setting forth saving truth. Hospital visits are especially appreciated. My helper, Mrs. Edge, has in her motherly way succeeded in leading many a sick and lonely lad, far away from parents and friends, to the Saviour of sinners."

The report gives many extracts from letters from sailors on foreign service, telling what God had done for them.

"The wives and families of men on foreign service, as well as ex-service men, receive help so far as our limited means will admit. Social work with us is absolutely necessary, but whether it be in feeding the hungry, nursing the sick, or caring for the dying, our one aim is to lead them to a personal knowledge of the Son of God as their Saviour, and our experience proves to us conclusively that the surest and best way to raise the fallen is to bring them to Jesus, and some who a few months ago were among the most degraded drunkards in our town, are now among the brightest and most earnest helpers in our Mission."

Details follow of various branches, as well as of conventions held at the Mission, while many cheering instances of conversion are given. The "One by One Working Band" has been a help to many. By definite prayer and consecrated effort, Christian men can best help their shipmates, and some whom we know during the past year have had much joy in this service.

This Mission deserves sympathy and aid. The director is Mr. T. B. Hogben, Edinburgh-road, Portsmouth.

On Learning Languages.

THAT remarkable traveller the late Sir Richard Burton, whose mastery of Oriental languages, and especially of Arabic, is well known, says: "Learning foreign languages, as a child learns its own, is mostly a work of pure memory. My system of learning a language in two months was purely my own invention, and thoroughly suited myself. I got a simple grammar and vocabulary, marked out the forms and words which I knew were absolutely necessary, and learnt them by heart by carrying them in my pocket, and looking over them at spare moments during the day. I never worked more than a quarter of an hour at a time, for after that the brain lost its freshness.

"After learning some three hundred words, easily done in a week, I stumbled through some easy book-work (one of the Gospels is the most come-at-able), and underlined every word that I wished to recollect, in order to read over my pencillings at least once a day. Having finished my volume, I then carefully worked up the grammar minutiæ, and I then chose some other book whose subject most interested me. The neck of the language was now broken, and progress was rapid. If I came across a new sound like the Arabic 'ghayn,' I trained my tongue to it by repeating it so many thousand times a day. When I read, I invariably read out loud, so that the ear might aid memory.

"I was delighted with the most difficult characters, Chinese and cuneiform, because I felt that they impressed themselves more strongly upon the eye than the eternal Roman letters. This, by-and-by, made me resolutely stand aloof from the hundred schemes for transliterating Eastern languages, such as Arabic, Sanscrit, Hebrew, and Syriac, into Latin letters; and whenever I conversed with anybody in a language that I was learning I took the trouble to repeat their words inaudibly after them, and so to learn the trick of pronunciation and emphasis."

And again, Lady Burton said that her husband taught her languages in this way. "He made me learn ten new words a day by heart. When a native speaks, then say the words after him, to get his accent. Don't be English—that is, shy or self-conscious; if you know five words, air them whenever you can. Next day you will know ten, and so on till you can speak. Don't be like the Irishman who would not go into the water until he could swim. Then take a very easy childish book, in the colloquial language of the day, and translate it word for word underneath the original, and you will be surprised how soon you find yourself unconsciously talking." H. J. Marston.

Wood Green, N.

Natal Missionary Society.

FEELING increasingly that the supreme need of our mission work amongst the natives of South Africa is the converting and sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost, I wish to lay before your readers the extensive field of labour where our friends, Rev. G. Pugh and Mrs. Pugh, are working, so that they may have the prayers of God's people.

It is a little more than nine months since the Congregational Union of Natal took over this work from the American Board of Foreign Missions, and already there are tokens of God's presence and blessing.

Numbers of nominal Christians are anxiously inquiring whether they have really passed through a change of heart, and, if so, whether they may be empowered of God to preach amongst the heathen, of whom there are about 20,000 in this district. Recently I held services at Table Mountain, and was followed by Rev. J. Fernie, of Durban. The result of our visits was the stirring up of many hearts to seek a holier and fuller life. Many who have sought have found.

Not only are the Christians and seekers getting blessed, but the heathen are coming to hear the Gospel, and are desiring that preachers may be sent to the distant kraals.

Almost every letter (and we are in constant communication) brings these cheering reports. The only sad thing is this, that we have so few labourers for this extensive and needy field, and so little prayerful sympathy from the churches. We are thankful for the interest awakened in many hearts by the representations made by Miss Whitby, sister to Mrs. Pugh. Miss Whitby is shortly leaving England, I understand, in order to join her sister here, and I am hoping that her departure may increase that interest. I would suggest that friends in England should invite her to address meetings before she leaves. Her present postal address I furnish below. Workers are urgently needed, and I am cheerfully sending my own son, Scott, to co-operate. I am also praying and labouring to arouse the churches here to a sense of their responsibility and privilege.

If the work is to go forward as we are led by the Spirit, we must have not only additional European workers, but also native evangelists, whose support is only £24 a year. Then we need tents to carry on preaching excursions over the hills. Those who cannot come out personally to do this work of evangelising, might furnish the means to those who can.—Yours earnestly in the Gospel,

Walter Searle, Sec. Natal Missionary Society.

The Manse, Pietermaritzburg, Natal.

P.S.—Communications in England may be made to the treasurer of the Mission, Mr. J. Reginald Truscott, 162, Belsize-road, London, N.W.

Model Lodging-Houses.—Mr. D. O. Mills, of New York, after thoroughly investigating Lord Rowton's lodging-houses for men in London, is building a hotel for 1,500 men on Bleecker-street, between Thompson and Sullivan streets; and another for 750 men at the corner of Rivington and Chrystie streets. These hotels will be ten stories in height. Each lodger will have a private room, at a cost of twenty cents per night, with the privilege of free baths, laundries, etc. There will be great kitchens and ample restaurant facilities. Especial attention will be paid to the social requirements of the men. Commodious and well equipped reading, writing, games, and music rooms will be provided. In short, everything possible will be done to make a real home for men, keeping them out of saloons and other evil resorts. It is anticipated that the enterprise will pay a fair interest on the amount of the investment.

Letter to the Editor.

THE CHURCHES AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Dear Sir,—In your issue for April 15th you refer to the amendment carried at the Prohibition Convention in Newcastle, declaring that the time has arrived for the Church "to declare that it is inconsistent for a Christian to be engaged in or financially interested in the liquor traffic," and you say, "If this be so, then it is equally inconsistent for any Christian to use alcoholic drinks under any circumstances."

I have been continually met with the argument that if it be wrong to sell it is wrong to buy, but I hold that there is a great difference between the buyer and the seller. The buyer may be blind to the fact that his moderate use of drink perpetuates the awful evils caused by drink, and may believe that it is impossible for the traffic to be entirely removed; but the seller engages in a business which he knows is responsible for the devastation of homes and the ruin of souls, and he does so deliberately because he can make money by it, and is prepared to thrive on the degradation of his fellows.

Referring to the implied inconsistency of the Christian moderate drinker, you say, "This has not hitherto been the position of Christian advocates of temperance. They have argued on the ground of expediency, influence, and example." But is it not time that the Christian Church should declare that it has before it as its ideal of a Church "without spot or blemish," a Church whose members shall be clear of the responsibility of supporting a traffic which is admittedly the greatest hindrance to its work? I do not advocate that the Church generally should at once make total abstinence from intoxicating liquors as a beverage a condition of membership; but I think it is time for the Church to announce that as being the ultimate aim of its present educational efforts to secure personal abstinence, and (as stated in the portion of my amendment which was not accepted) "earnestly endeavour to cultivate such a sentiment in the Church, that eventually it will be felt to be inconsistent for any Christian to take intoxicants as beverages." Does not the conscience of the Church need to be awakened to a sense of its duty when the drink bill is going up by leaps and bounds in spite of temperance effort?

Yours in the best interests of the Church and Christianity, E. Tennyson Smith.

337, Strand, London, W.C.

Sunday-School Work.

At the Easter Conference of the Yorkshire Sunday-School Union a very telling paper was read by Miss Marianne Farningham on the future of Sunday-school work. In the course of her remarks she said:—

"What was required in the new century was that those who belonged to the Free Churches of England, who had understanding, and knew what the people ought to do, should occupy their proper places, and make themselves felt as a power for good, and as the leaders of the people. The training-place of children was the home in the first place, and the ablest teachers were fathers and mothers. Next to the Christian family, the Sunday-school was the very foundation of Church life, and of the larger life of the nation. If the people were to keep what they had inherited from their fathers; if they were to retain their good name among the nations and be a power for righteousness in the world, they must secure the children. What was needed most in Sunday-school work was an increase amongst the teachers of faith in God and in the Sunday-school as the best possible means of training men and women for the future. Very young children might make a great decision, and often did. Was is necessary that young people should go down into the depths of sin before they could be uplifted to the heights of holiness? People did not believe this of their own children. What was wanted was that children should be taught more and more that Christianity was a life. What was wanted was more heart rather than more head; the need to feel more rather than to know more. Teachers were not sufficiently possessed by the enthusiasm of love. The very best in the churches must be consecrated to this work, and the ministers must feel that no part of their duty was so important as that which had to do with the young."

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. C. B. Jolliffe, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in the Baptist Chapel, Coleorton, Leicestershire. Each week evening the chapel was well filled; the audience, chiefly miners, coming night after night with no other attraction than the story of the Cross. Sundays were never to be forgotten days. God graciously owned and blessed the preaching of his Word. J. Armson.

The evangelistic work in New York is being steadily carried on with continued good results in quickening, reviving, and conversion.

During his recent visit to Chicago, Mr. Moody has drawn immense throngs to hear the Gospel message and the rousing appeals he has made to the Christians of the city.

Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a mission in Deddington. The congregations were good throughout, and the services will long be remembered.

A ten days' Gospel mission in Cincinnati, by Rev. E. P. Hammond, has been a time of much religious interest, with many remaining to the inquiry meetings. It was encouraging to the evangelist to find not a few converts from a former mission of his now heartily engaged as workers.

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted a ten days' mission in the Shooter's Hill-road Baptist Church, Blackheath, from April 3 to April 12. The meetings were well attended, and many have professed to find peace in believing. At the praise meeting, with which the mission closed, there was united testimony to the blessing that had been received.

There has been real blessing on the Gospel testimony delivered by Major Whittle in his short mission at Thurso. A room full of anxious inquirers were dealt with every evening. Major Whittle and Mr. G. C. Stebbins began their mission at Woolwich last Sunday.

A fortnight's mission in the Baptist Church, Kelso (Pastor J. W. Kemp), has been conducted by Mr. P. M'Rostie (Ayrshire Christian Union evangelist) and Rev. E. Last, Glasgow. The old story of redeeming love was the preachers' theme in word and song.

Mr. William Forbes has been conducting services at Folkestone. On Sunday and Monday he gave addresses on the beach at Brighton, in connection with the Brighton Open-Air Mission.

On Saturday, Sunday, and Monday last a short mission was conducted by Rev. Richard Howton, from Glossop, in connection with Mr. A. S. O. Birch's Mission to Working Men and Women in Sheffield. The Bible-readings proved to be a blessing to believers, while careless ones professed conversion. Miss A. Birch did good service by singing Gospel solos.

The Y.W.C.A.

A well-attended meeting was held at the Town Hall, Teignmouth, to inaugurate the opening of the new rooms in connection with the local Y.W.C.A.

The annual public meeting in connection with the Swansea branch was lately held at the Temperance Hall. Miss Reynolds gave an interesting account of her travels round the world.

An appeal is made by the hon. secretaries of the London Association to people living within easy reach of London, for invitations, in the course of the approaching summer, to parties of working girls and women on Saturdays and Bank Holidays. Such invitations to an afternoon tea in the country are a great boon to thousands of girls employed in houses of business, workrooms, factories, and laundries. A few hours spent amidst pleasant surroundings in park or garden afford a welcome refreshment, keenly appreciated by those whose daily life is one of toilsome monotony. Anyone willing to respond to this request can obtain full information from Miss Butler, 13, Onslow-square, Hon. Sec., Saturday Afternoons in the Country.

The Y.M.C.A.

At a meeting of young men, held in the parish church, it was decided to form a branch of the Y.M.C.A. in Kenmore, Perthshire.

A very interesting and instructive lecture on the Catacombs of Rome was given by Mr. J. Adley, of South Tottenham, at the Shoreditch Association, on April 8.

The Harlesden N.W. Association have arranged for a conference, on the deepening of the spiritual life, on May 5-7. The meetings will be held in different churches, and well-known speakers on this subject will take part.

The Mayor and Mayoress of West Hartlepool (Councillor J. F. and Mrs. Wilson) held a reception of the members and friends of the local Y.M.C.A. in the Masonic Hall, where a large and influential gathering assembled.

The annual business meeting of the members of the Edinburgh Young Men's Christian Association was held last week in the Association-rooms, 14, St. Andrew-street. The work of the association has been carried on with vigour during the past year.

The annual meeting of the Blackheath Association was held on Monday week, at the residence of Mr. Alexander Young, the president. There was a good attendance of young men, to whom an address was given by Mr. W. Hind Smith. The report gave evidence of a good and useful work having been done during the past year.

The Rio de Janeiro Association has a project in hand for acquiring its own premises. A large unfinished building has been secured, the work of completion has been begun, and the association hopes to commence its occupancy early in 1898. The cost will be about £5,500, towards which about £1,500 has already been raised. A new association has been formed at Pelotas, in Brazil.

Association work has made encouraging progress in Denmark during the past twelve months. The number of branches is now 166, and the membership amounts to 6,000. The report for Copenhagen is particularly interesting. The membership is now 850, besides 200 honorary members. The Tuesday evening devotional meeting is frequently attended by over 300 young men. Five hundred soldiers have frequented the rooms, and have deposited there, as savings, some 9,300 kroner. The Junior department probably the largest in Europe, if not in the world, has no fewer than 700 members. A section has been formed for the Icelandic colony at Copenhagen; and further evidence of the real life of the association is found in the fact that three members have gone in the year to the Mission school, and three into the Mission field. The building fund now stands at 50,000 kroner, and includes a substantial donation from an English friend, in the person of Sir Donald Currie.

Christian Endeavour.

A Christian Endeavour Society is reported from Rome.

A pastorless church in Brownfield, Me., is kept alive by the Christian Endeavour Society's holding meetings every Sunday morning.

Toronto Endeavourers are planning to take up Christian work among the people connected with the theatres of that city—a hitherto neglected class.

The first year of Christian Endeavour in Tremont Temple Baptist Church, Boston, has been a fruitful one. Several members of the Society have united with the church.

A prison committee is the latest adjunct to the Kentucky Christian Endeavour Union. It will stimulate work by Endeavourers among the prisons and gaols of the State.

At the recent quarterly meeting of the board of trustees, secretary Baer reported the total enrolment of Christian Endeavour Societies as 48,305, with a membership of 2,800,000.

Christian Endeavourers in America are giving especial attention to Sabbath observance, and committees are being appointed for this work in many places. California leads the States in the number of these committees.

An endeavour after apostolic fashion is recorded of a Native Christian Endeavour Society in Shaingay, West Africa. The young men of the Society set out, two by two, to preach the Gospel throughout all their district, a region forty by seventy miles in extent.

A company of Endeavourers from the Broadway Baptist Church, Cambridgeport, Mass., hold weekly meetings in a Rescue Mission in Boston, providing a free lunch for the men, in opposition to a free lunch saloon in the neighbourhood. These meetings have resulted in many conversions and in several accessions to the church. The Endeavourers secure employment for the converts when possible.

[345]

Scottish Notes.

The Portobello Home of Rest for the Aged has been transferred to Dalkeith. There are at present twenty-four inmates.

The U.P. Presbytery of Kirkcaldy are planning mission work among the 700 or 800 navvies engaged in making new docks at Burntisland.

At a recent large gathering of Scottish women in Edinburgh, a resolution was passed strongly protesting against the movement for the reimposition of the State regulation of vice in India.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow branch of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, last week. The annual report stated that during the past year the agitation for suppression of the Anglo-Indian opium trade had progressed steadily, and gathered force in many quarters. A very significant feature was the decided diminution in the amount derived in India from the opium revenue. The total revenue derived from the traffic last year amounted to £2,463,541, whereas at one time it reached a total of nine to ten millions sterling. The Chairman said their desire was the total suppression of the opium trade with China. The action of Parliament in accepting the report of the Commission had been a great hindrance to them in their work. Our attitude towards China in regard to the opium trade was morally indefensible.

Irish Notes.

By the death of Mr. Averell Shillington, J.P., in his ninety-fifth year, Portadown has lost its oldest citizen, and the Methodist Church in Ireland one of its most respected members. He was a Methodist class leader for over seventy years, and was a Sunday-school superintendent to the last. He was a most godly and devoted Christian, and his influence for good in the town was most marked.

A largely attended meeting of the citizens of Dublin and various denominations was held in Molesworth Hall, Dublin, for the purpose of considering the best method of commemorating the life and work of the late Archbishop, Lord Plunket. Mr. Justice Madden presided, and it was resolved that a memorial should be set up, to which all his fellow-countrymen, irrespective of creed or politics, who would wish to honour his memory, could contribute. For this purpose a general and executive committee was appointed.

The Zenana Medical College.

The Z.M.C. was opened about fifteen years ago to train ladies by a shortened course (a two-years' curriculum) in medicine, surgery, midwifery, and pharmacy, so as to minister to the bodies of poor women and children in Eastern lands, who, in millions, are utterly destitute of any medical aid whatever. The success has been proved by the certificates earned at the examinations, and those of the Obstetrical Society of London, which must be obtained before any pupil can go up for the final examination.

The pupils are practically instructed at the hospitals and by attending the poor in the districts around. Partially free studentships are vacant for ladies unable to pay the full fees, which are only fifty guineas per annum, inclusive of board, residence, and medical instruction. It must never be forgotten that in the Zenanas no medical man is permitted to pass the threshold, and but for the skilled attendance of women, thousands of women and children must be allowed to suffer and die.

Letters have been received from former pupils of the College, showing that they have had success in the varied fields of medicine and surgery in the Zenanas, hospitals, and dispensaries where they have been located. One extract may be given. Miss Rainsford (writing from Narawal) says: "I may say that personally I have never wished for a full training. I have found my knowledge in nine cases out of ten enough to relieve or cure, where possible. Here we are thirty miles from a railway or doctor. I have seen over 8000 patients last year, and done over 300 operations. I saw a few weeks ago 177 patients in a day."

In other letters descriptive accounts have been sent home of the closing scenes of life among the inmates, drawn from the bedsides of dying mothers or children, the interest being naturally centred where they have acknowledged the power of the name of Jesus.

We want more pupils to train. There surely must be many Christian ladies who, wishing to consecrate themselves to the Saviour, would take advantage of the shortened course of professional study, and moderate fees, afforded by the Zenana Medical College, and go forth to minister to the cries of agony in these Eastern homes, where women can alone minister to women.

The address of the College is 58, St. George's-road, S.W., the superintendent being Dr. G. de G. Griffith.

THE BOOK WORLD.

The Christian Pictorial. Vol. 8. (4s. 6d. Alexander & Shepheard.) This well-known illustrated weekly makes in bound form a pleasing and readable volume.

Cicely's Little Minute. By Harvey Gobel. Tragedy and pathos are the warp and woof of this slight story. The pages are for readers of mature years. (1s. net. Partridge.)

A Bright To-Day. By Rev. J. H. Townsend, D.D. (1s. Marshall.) A complement or sequel to the author's "A Bright To-morrow" in the "Upward Life Series." It is full of earnest thought, and marked by strong and solemn teaching on the sinfulness of sin.

The Watch Tower, edited by J. J. Sims, has for its secondary title "A Monthly Magazine of Gospel Truth and Bible Study." The first two numbers, for March and April, are filled with excellent things, original and selected. (1d. monthly. W. G. Wheeler. 17, Paternoster-row, E.)

The Homiletic Review for April is a specially rich number, having valuable articles on preaching as well as some very suggestive sermons and outlines. A feature which all preachers will find of service is Dr. Banks's department on "Sermonic Illustration from Current Life." (1s. monthly. Funk & Wagnalls.)

The Wasted Orchards of England (6d. Collingridge) is a useful selection of papers on British fruit-growing, from the pen of a special commissioner of the Gardener's Magazine. The writer runs through twenty-four counties, and gives us much information, as well as many practical reflections and suggestions.

Emmaus Identified. By Mrs. Finn, M.R.A.S. Deeply interesting notes by the widow of the late Mr. James Finn, who was H.B.M. Consul for Palestine fifty years ago. The long-sought village was found in the modern Urtas. Bible students and travellers will read the pamphlet with delight. (6d. From The Author, 75, Brook-green, London, W.)

The Growth of Sacrificial Ideas connected with the Holy Eucharist. By Rev. David Morris, B.A. (Longmans, Green & Co.) This paper, read before the Liverpool Clerical Society, and published by request, presents a careful study of a subject of wide interest. The author takes the Evangelical position, and his pages are a thoughtful contribution to a great controversy.

Practical Hints on District Nursing. By Amy Hughes. (1s. Scientific Press, 28, Southampton-street, W.C.) The able late superintendent of the Central Training Home has done public service by issuing in cheap form these sensible hints on nursing in poor homes, insisting strongly that it must not be a merely official function, but a real, loving, tender service, well mixed with sturdy common sense.

The Free Church Prayer Book: Being the Public Services of the Book of Common Prayer of the Established Church of England, Revised and Enlarged. By Rev. James Mountain, minister of St. John's-road Free Church, Tunbridge Wells. (Elliot Stock.) An admirable work of its kind, spiritual, Evangelical, Protestant. All the features are interesting, not the least attractive being the increased number of canticles and forms of evening service.

Union and Communion; or, Thoughts on the Song of Solomon. By J. Hudson Taylor. (1s. Morgan & Scott.) This little volume, now in its second edition, has many attractions for the devout mind. Its pages abound in simple teaching on supreme realities, especially as these relate to the Lord and affect his servants. Here we dive into the depths and sore into the heights of God's undertakings and the saint's experience; and it is impossible to read with prayer without searchings of heart and spiritual profit.

Lord Stratford de Redcliffe. A Sketch by A. L. Lee, abridged by permission from "The Life of Stratford Canning," by Stanley Lane-Poole. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) Mr. Lecky, M.P., writes an introduction to this excellent outline of the celebrated diplomatist's life. The pages bring to mind events connected with a critical period in the history of the Eastern Question, including the liberation of Greece seventy years ago; also the story of the Crimean War, in which "the great Elchi" played so important a part.

Fifteen Hundred Facts and Similes for Pulpit and Platform. By J. F. B. Tinling, B.A. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The second edition of a work of great utility to such preachers and public teachers as know how to introduce and use illustrative material. Mr. Tinling has gathered with wisdom and diligence. Provided with descriptive titles, the facts and similes are given in alphabetical order, and there are full indexes of secondary titles and Scripture texts lighted up by the way. The book should have a still larger circulation in its present cheapened issue.

Bible Illustrations: A Series of Plates Illustrating Biblical Versions and Antiquities. (Henry Frowde.) This volume is an appendix to the well-known Oxford "Helps to the Study of the Bible," and has been prepared for a new edition of that work. It contains 124 plates (with descriptions) of alphabets and inscriptions, MSS. and versions, also Egyptian, Assyrian, and Babylonian monuments, and Greek and Roman antiquities, illustrative of the Old and New Testaments. The selection of objects has been made with judgment, by Sir E. Maunde Thompson and Dr. E. Wallis Budge, of the British Museum, and the plates have been produced with great care.

Foundation Truths of Scripture as to Sin and Salvation is the title of a compact little volume by Professor Laidlaw, of New College, Edinburgh. It is one of the excellent series of "Handbooks for Bible-classes." (1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) The book is in the form of twelve lessons, which have in substance been given to audiences of Christian workers and young people. The pages show the mutual connection of fundamental doctrines and their Scripture authority; and alike in matter and manner the work is all that could be desired for Bible classes and private study. Though not a theological manual, this book may well serve as an introduction to systematic and thorough culture in "the Queen of the Sciences."

Divine Ambassadors from Earth and Heaven, is the title of a revised edition of a thoughtful little book, by Laurence Bomford, M.A., originally styled "The Essential Absence of our ever-present Saviour," being explanatory remarks on John xvi. 7. By setting forth the truth in its Scriptural simplicity, the author exposes and refutes sacramental and other errors, which have led so many astray (6d. and 1s.). Another publication, having for its object instruction rather than controversy, is The Teaching of the Church of England concerning the Lord's Supper. (2d.) The title page declares it to be by "A Priest of the Church," and it is certainly an admirable statement of the Protestant view of the subject. (C. J. Thynne.)

The Gospel of the Divine Sacrifice: A Study in Evangelical Belief, with some Conclusions touching Life. By Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D. (4s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) An American divine of considerable erudition, and great power in forcible expression, gives us this little volume, which is specially designed to help those who have difficulty in receiving the doctrine of the Atonement as more generally stated. Dr. Hall sets forth fundamental truth in the terms of Scripture rather than in the language of the schools. He has great patience with doubters, but no sympathy with their doubts. God's sovereignty and human suffering are among the questions that very properly come in, and the treatment, though obviously limited in view, is lucid and helpful in a high degree.

The Queen's Diamond Jubilee Bible is a publication which is sure of a ready welcome. It may be had in several sizes, in a variety of bindings, and at popular prices. In addition to portraits of the Queen, one from a painting in 1837 and another from a recent photograph, there are seven collotype illustrations taken from the cartoons painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds in 1778 for the famous window in New College, Oxford, representing Faith, Hope, Charity, Justice, Prudence, Temperance, and Fortitude. A companion publication is The Queen's Diamond Jubilee Prayer Book, in various sizes. Here there are two other portraits of the Queen, and six pictures of sacred subjects. "Hymns A. and M." may be had bound up with this book. Bible and Prayer Book alike are sure to be largely adopted for presentation during the current year. (Henry Frowde.)

The Happy Islander (Rev. i. 9, 10). By Rev. A. N. Mackray, M.A., Croydon. (2d. T. French Downie.) A discourse of uncommon interest, lucid in exposition, and eminently practical in application.

Do You Pray? A Word to Boys. By C. F. Harford-Battersby, M.A., M.D. Canon Taylor Smith writes a preface to this little work, which not only addresses plain words to schoolboys, but gives a series of blank pages to encourage them in systematic and definite prayer. (9d. "Home Words" Office.)

The Boy Friends; or, More than Brothers, is a capital little story for children by Rose Jay. (6d.) I Want to Go to India is another booklet by the same author. (1d.) The Infant Altar; or, Hymns and Prayers for Children (6d.), by the late Dr. W. M. Whittemore, is a simple little book in its ninth edition. Curly; or, Living Shadows (6d.), by Katherine A. Richards, is a warning against haste and inequality in regard to marriage. (G. Stoneman, Warwick-lane, E.C.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From J. F. Shaw & Co.—Jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance. Proceedings of the tenth International Conference, held in London, June-July, 1896.

From Hodder & Stoughton.—Philippian Studies: Lessons in Faith and Love From St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians. By H. C. D. Moule, D.D. (5s.). Primeval Revelation: Studies in Genesis i.-viii. By J. Cynddylan Jones, D.D. (6s.) Knowing and Doing: Eight Stories founded on Bible Precepts. By Mrs. Henry H. B. Paull. (5s.)

International S.S. Lessons.

May 2.

Paul Begins His First Missionary Journey.—Acts xiii. 1-13.

Golden Text.—Mark xvi. 15.

OF these prophets and teachers (1) nothing can be known beyond what this verse tells us. It is possible that Lucius was a kinsman of Paul (Rom. xvi. 20), and that he was one of those who preached to the Gentiles at Antioch (xi. 20). Manaen was a foster-brother (R.V.) of Herod the Tetrarch, the murderer of John the Baptist. He is a most suggestive character. Contrast the two men. They were alike in their beginning, but how widely separated in later life! What a triumph of grace was Manaen when we remember his early surroundings!

The church evidently possessed the missionary spirit. It was itself the result of missionary work, and it is probable that the special "ministering" to the Lord (2) was a waiting upon Him to know his mind about the heathen world. Their fasting was not a mechanical obedience to an ecclesiastical command; but was an indication of the intensity of their spiritual life. The needs of the body were secondary; to know God's will was of first importance. There would be no lack of missionaries for the heathen if the Church still possessed the same spirit.

The Holy Ghost chose the men (2) and sent them (4). Possibly He made choice of these two by a special message through one of the teachers. Only men who are Divinely called and sent can count upon God's presence and power. Yet the Holy Ghost acted through the Church. They must set apart, and they must send (2, 3). Missionary work was theirs as truly as it was that of Barnabas and Saul. And by laying on of hands they indicated their oneness with these brethren, and their readiness to share their sorrows and perils and trials, as well as their successes and joys. This is the lesson the Churches are so slow to learn.

The valedictory service was not a missionary feast, but a missionary prayer-meeting and fast (3). Not that they mourned over the loss they would sustain by the departure of two such useful men. They were glad to send their best upon such a work; but they were careful to keep in conscious fellowship with God. Such a Church will not talk of sending such members as can be "spared." The work of missions deserves and demands the best and most gifted in the Church.

The map will be needful in following the two missionaries on their journey. Seleucia (4) was the seaport of Antioch. Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean Sea, was about ninety miles south-west of Saleucia. The population was mainly Greek, but included also a considerable number of Jews. Barnabas belonged to Cyprus; and some of the first preachers at Antioch were men of Cyprus. Salamis, the capital, was on its eastern shore. John Mark, who accompanied the missionaries (5) was the son of Mary (xii. 12), and was the author of the Gospel of Mark. Paphos, now called Baffo, was at the western extremity of the island, and about one hundred miles from Salamis.

Sergius Paulus (7) is an example of an earnest inquirer. He was the deputy or proconsul, appointed governor by the senate. He proved himself "a man of understanding" (R.V.) by his desire to know the truth. Bar-Jesus (6), otherwise called Elymas, the Aramaic word for Magian, was probably "a representative of a system and a religion." He was acquainted with certain forms of natural science, and succeeded in imposing upon the people. From him the deputy hoped to know the truth; yet was evidently not satisfied. Hence he "called for" the two missionaries (7), and was prepared to hear and consider their message. Learn that nothing can satisfy the heart except the truth of God. And contrast the eagerness of the deputy with the indifference of many to-day. Apply to the scholars—Are they as ready to hear and learn?

The sorcerer is an example of futile opposition. Note what he did (8). No doubt he observed that Sergius was listening with interest, and dreaded the loss to himself if such a man should receive the truth. But it is a serious thing to seek to hinder one whom God is leading into the light (Matt. xviii. 7). Saul, who is henceforth called by his Roman name, Paul, specially "filled with the Holy Ghost" (9), discovered and declared the man's true character; and called down upon him a terrible and yet a merciful judgment (10, 11). This opposition helped, rather than hindered, the work. The interest excited by the message disposed Sergius to believe, but the miracle led him to immediate decision, Arnot says, "If there had not been a fierce wind blowing against this kite, it would not have been able to rise."

Temperance Notes.

Evidence was given before the Licensing Commission by a "trade" secretary as to the excessive and unrestricted drinking on board certain steamers in the Bristol Channel.

The oldest teetotaler in Scotland is said to be Mrs. Millar, of Glasgow, now in her 102nd year. She has been a life abstainer, has never had a serious illness, and within her recollection has never been absent from church on Sunday.

The ex-chairman of the Watch Committee of Penzance, giving evidence before the Royal Commission, said he thought the increase of drinking amongst women was due to certain licensed grocery establishments, where women could obtain drink and have it put down as groceries.

The second reading of the "Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill" is first order of the day in the House of Commons for Wednesday, 12th May. Friends of temperance are urged to write to their members asking them to be present and record their votes in favour of the measure.

The annual meeting of the London Women's Union of the Church of England Temperance Society was held at the St. George's Institute, Little Grosvenor-street, on Thursday week, Rev. W. G. Morcom in the chair. The report stated that during 1896 the six mission women employed by the Union had made 12,316 visits to cases charged at the courts. Thirty-six patients were admitted to the women's shelter home during the year.

The Dean of Hereford, speaking at the annual meeting of Warrington Temperance Federation, described the Royal Commission as a blockade against temperance. One of the greatest causes of the increase of intemperance was vested interests. Still, temperance reformers were not discouraged, for they meant to fight against this organised body and against those who had heaped up their millions on the degradation and wretchedness of the masses of the people, and who got rewarded for so doing.

A well-attended meeting of ladies, convened by the Women's Total Abstinence Union, was recently held at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross, Mrs. Temple, who presided, said the object of the meeting was to gain workers in the temperance movement. The Union was doing a splendid work throughout England. Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, president of the Union, urged all present to pledge themselves to assist the movement by every means in their power. Dr. Helen Wilson delivered an address on the medical aspect of the question.

A conference of the B.W.T.A. was lately held in Bristol. Lady Henry Somerset was absent through ill-health. The Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell presided. Sister Kathleen, superintendent of the Children's Home at Duxhurst, gave an account of the work there for uplifting child life, and considered it possible to teach the slum child more by a fortnight of country happiness than by months of Sunday-school or Band of Hope teaching. At the subsequent meetings details were given of the varied efforts for temperance and purity carried on by these women workers in many parts of the land.

The responsibility which nurses assume when they advise patients to take alcoholic stimulants is exemplified by a case in which a woman was charged with assaulting her husband, at the South-Western Police-court. The same woman a week before had been charged by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children with "wilful neglect." The husband, who holds a position which brings him in a comfortable income, states that he can only point, as the cause of his wife's downfall, to a nurse's strong recommendation to take stout. He speaks with regretful sadness of the pleasant memories of their early married life. Now everything is changed, he has practically no home, and comfort is unknown to him. This instance should convince nurses that they should leave the responsibility of recommending stimulants to the medical man.—Nursing Record and Hospital World.

Requests for Prayer.—For guidance in the election of a clergyman to an important parish in Ireland, that a man full of the Holy Ghost may be selected. For blessing on the Cheltenham General Mission, commencing April 25. Praise.—For blessing on special Gospel service in Mrs. Dunn's Mission-room, Moss Grove, Kingswinford, on March 29, conducted by Pastor A. Griffiths, of Netherton.

Easter with the Sailors.—A social gathering for 200 sailors of various nationalities was held on Easter Monday, at the Strangers' Rest, St. George's-street, E. Open-air and indoor meetings were held both afternoon and evening, and the Gospel was preached by several friends. The sailors assembled in the large hall in the evening, when Dr. Partridge gave his object lecture upon "The Five Crucifixions." It was listened to with earnest attention, and not a few, it is believed, were savingly blessed.

Personalia.

Professor George Adam Smith, of Glasgow, has telegraphed to the selection committee of the Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, that he deeply regrets he cannot see his way to accept their nomination.

Rev. James D. Paxton has had great success in his work among the American students in Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Paxton have won their way to the hearts of these American young people in the French capital to an unusual degree, and their work has been fruitful of good results.

Pastor Geo. Wainwright, after a further medical examination, is unable yet to resume his work. He is ordered a further rest of three months. Should the present rate of progress continue there is still hope that he may be able to remain in the sphere with which he has been identified for nearly nine years.

Obituary.

MR. SAMUEL BLOW, EVANGELIST.

After a long illness this evangelist has passed away to be with Christ, at Exmouth, Devon. He took an active part in the memorable revival of 1859-60, and was well known in London and Devonshire. Mr. Blow was an earnest open-air preacher, and went with the Gospel message to markets, races, and other large gatherings, in days when such labours were less common than they are now. He laboured in Scotland, as far north as the Orkney Isles, and was used in arousing many from their sleep in sin. For the past ten years he has suffered greatly from rheumatism, and been unable for active service. Only a few months ago he published a very interesting book, entitled, "Reminiscences of Thirty Years' Gospel Work and Revival Times," published by John Ritchie, Kilmarnock, at 6d. and 1s. He describes the scenes of the 1859 revival, and some of the memorable preaching of Richard Weaver, Reginald Radcliffe, Sir Arthur Blackwood, William Carter, and others.

Fallen Asleep.

At Bristol, on 7th inst., Mrs. H. O. Wills, aged eighty-two, a tireless worker in past years, a willing giver, and deeply interested in medical missions in China.—At Liverpool, Rev. J. McAndrew, minister for twenty-nine years of Vauxhall Presbyterian Church.—At Christ Church Parsonage, Chislehurst, on 9th inst., Mrs. Fleming, wife of Rev. William Fleming.—At Wrexham, on 10th inst., Rev. F. B. Brown, aged seventy-seven, for twenty-two years minister of Chester-street Chapel.—At 60, Denmark-hill, S.E., on 9th inst., Miss A. Price, a sweet and earnest young servant of Christ.—At Coggeshall, suddenly, Mr. G. H. Gowers, aged thirty-nine, an active worker among the Congregationalists.—At St. Albans, Mr. S. Cherry, aged eighty-nine, for sixty-two years actively interested in Christian work.—At Cardiff, Mr. Noah Rees, a hearty helper at Richmond-road Church.—At Haronby, Helmsley, Rev. O. A. Manners, aged eighty, rector of the parish since 1852.—At Merton Abbey, Mrs. Legg, wife of the vicar of Christ Church, Mitcham.—At Swaledale, Mr. Ralph Fawcett, for thirty years Sunday-school superintendent, and an earnest preacher.—At Doncaster, Mr. Richard Wadsworth, aged ninety, for sixty-seven years a valued preacher and a devoted temperance worker.—At Seafin, Bailieborough, Rev. Patrick Hay. Presbyterian minister, aged eighty-four years.—At Coolock House, co. Dublin, Mr. Jas. C. Colvill, J.P., an earnest and evangelical member of the Irish Church, and trustee and treasurer of the Hibernian Bible Society, aged eighty-three years.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—C. R. Weller, 14, Ansdell-road, Peckham, S.E.; T. Drevor, 35, Westmoreland-street, Govan Hill, Glasgow; F. J. Mansfield, 1, Fritz-vellas, Halifax-road, Enfield, N.

Communications Received with Thanks.—M.E.G. J.E.B. H.W. J.A. E.K.G. F.C. C.P. O.C.A. J.E.B. A.M. J.P.C. W.H.S. J.A. E.P.H. C.F.R. L.P. M.H. A.H.W. J.R. T.C.M. W.R. J.M.M. T.C. E.W.M. W.C.B. W.G.W. C.V. E.C.E. L.J. S.B. R.S.M. N.G.H. W.W.E. E.T.S. W.C. C.R.W. J.R. J.A. A.B.B. D.C. J.D.K. M.P. C.J.M. W.D. K.H. J.T.P.P. G.H.N. J.W.K. J.E.B. J.S. A.S.B.

Appeals.

Aged Christian Blind.—The superintendents of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women ask help on behalf of their aged and afflicted charge, twenty-two of whom are between eighty and ninety-two years of age. These tax much, and in many ways, the Society's resources, as they need day and night nursing.

As there are but two months before the close of the financial year, help is urgently needed to meet current expenses, so that there may not be a deficit. A strenuous effort is being made to increase the number of annual subscribers, so as to make the income equal to the demand of eighty-two aged Christian blind men and women (fourteen men and sixty-eight women).

Henry and Ann Bright, Hon. Supts.
77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.

British Soldiers in Crete.—Our secretary in the Seaforth Highlanders stationed at Candia, writes me that they are without a chaplain, or place for meeting, and asks for books, etc., to distribute amongst the men, as they are hard up for something to read. If any friends would like to forward me literature, I will see that it is put into the hands of men who will distribute it amongst the men of the Seaforth Highlanders and Welsh Fusiliers, as we have branches in both regiments. Arthur H. Wheeler.
S.C.A., 5, Bellevue-terrace, Portsmouth.

"MAY" MEETINGS, 1897.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
[illegible]
Tues. 22	8 p.m.	Mr. Thorne's Evang. Missions	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Sir George Williams.
"	6 p.m.	[illegible]	s [illegible]	[illegible]
"	7 p.m.	Baptist Building Fund	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. E. G. Gange.
Fri. 23	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Association	m Do. do. do.	Mr. F. J. Marnham, J.P.
"	8 p.m.	City of London Tot. Abstinence Union	m 186, Aldersgate-street	Canon Barker.
Mon. 26	2.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions..	c Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. Varwell, C.C.
"	3 & 6 p.m.	The Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. T. V. Tymms, D.D.
"	6.30 p.m.	Bible Translation Society	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Rev. Chas. Williams.
"	6.30	United Meth. Free Churches Missions..	m Exeter Hall	Mr. M. Mordey.
"	3 & 7	Wesley Deaconess Institute	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Miss A. Barlow.
"	7.30	Christian Evidence Society	m St. Martin's Town-hall, W.C.	Lord Overtoun.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	8 p.m.	Sermon-lane Mission	m The Mission Hall, Islington	Alderman Pound.
Tues. 27	10 a.m.	Lord's Day Observance Society	m St. James' Hall, W.	Archdeacon Sinclair.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	10.30 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m 19, Furnival-street, E.C.	Mr. John Town.
"	7 p.m.	" " "	so Cannon-street Hotel	Sir C. Elliott, K.C.S.I.
"	7 p.m.	Trinitarian Bible Society	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. J. E. Mathieson.
"	7 p.m.	Wesleyan Temperance Committee	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. P. F. Wood.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Wed. 28	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	8 p.m.	" " " "	m Do. do.	Mr. T. Cheney Garfit.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	7 p.m.	The Railway Mission	m Exeter Hall	Lord Overtoun.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	8.45 a.m.	Baptist Zenana Mission	b Holborn Restaurant	Mr. A. Spicer, M.P.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	4 p.m.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	6.45	" " "	m Metropolitan Tabernacle	" "
Thurs. 29	10 a.m.	The Baptist Union	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. E. G. Gange.
"	3 p.m.	Mrs. Meredith's Mission and Homes	m ConferenceHall, 143, Clapham rd	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
"	3.30	Ministers' and Missionaries' Prayer Un.	m Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. F. B. Meyer.
"	6 p.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.
"	7 p.m.	Anti-Sunday Travelling Union	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Major-General Bruce.
"	2.45 p.m.	Reformatory and Refuge Union	m St. James's Hall, W.	Lord Aberdare.
"	3 p.m.	South American Missionary Society	m Sion College	Dean of Windsor.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	7 p.m.	Infant Orphan Asylum	m Hotel Metropole	Sir J. B. B. Maple, M.P.
"	3 p.m.	Church Pastoral Aid Society	s St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, W.C.	Bishop of London.
Fri. 30	2.30, 5, & 8	The Protestant Alliance	m Queen's Hall, W.
"	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
"	4 p.m.	Christian Colportage Association	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Lord Overtoun.
"	6 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. W. Hazell, M.P.
"	9 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	b Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. W. R. Rickett.
"	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Judge Bompas.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. B. Barnett, vicar of Preston Patrick for sixteen years, has resigned owing to ill-health.

Rev. G. Buchanan Ryley, of Harley-road Congregational Chapel, Bow, has entered the Church of England.

Rev. H. P. Thornton, a devoted worker, has resigned his charge at Normanton which he has held for about ten years.

The corner-stone of the new chancel of Croyland Abbey was laid last week. The work now in progress is carried on as nearly as possible on the lines of the old work.

Rev. G. Nickson has entered on his new charge at St. John's, Fairfield. His opening sermon had the ring of one who meant vigorous effort and real spiritual service.

Rev. E. E. Temple-Candler having resigned St. Peter's, Stockport, 1,200 parishioners, members of the congregation, have signed a petition for the appointment of Rev. H. d'A. Hubbard to the vicarage.

It is stated by the Record that Rev. Arnold Pinchard is introducing strange innovations at St. Jude's, Birmingham, a church which was for many years a stronghold of Evangelical life and work.

The work in the densely populated parish of St. Luke's, Deptford, is proceeding admirably under Rev. F. A. Pring, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P. The Princess Christian has consented to open a bazaar in aid of the work on the 28th inst.

Miss G. Withers and Miss M. Hamlin have been accepted as missionaries of the C.M.S. An offer of service has also been accepted from Rev. John Fishwick Pemberton, Queen's College, Cambridge, curate of St. Andrew's, [illegible].

Rev. H. Pitt, of St. Mary's, Old Kent-road, preaching at Mitcham, gave a sad description of huge masses of people in South London, maintaining that while some object to the phrase "home heathen," they had only to go and live in certain parts to discover its force and truthfulness.

Lantern services were held at St. Luke's, Barton-hill, Bristol, last week. Addresses were given by the vicar, Rev. Henry Jones, and Rev. C. R. Cottell. The subjects were: "The Great Disease," "The Promised Cure," "The Physician Sent," "The Physician's Great Work," and "The Sad Rejection." Mr. Jones's ministrations at St. Luke's are being greatly blessed, and the work is advancing on all sides.

Two Sundays ago a strange sight was seen in the north end of Liverpool. Owing to the appointment of a High Church vicar to St. Matthew's Church, Scotland-road, the whole of the large men's Bible class, with a roll of over 200 members, decided to leave, and en masse they marched to St. Polycarp's Church, where the vicar received them and gave them a welcome. A large and sympathetic crowd witnessed the exodus.

Congregational.

Rev. D. W. Vaughan has resumed his ministerial duties at Kentish Town.

Dundas-street Church, Glasgow (Rev. G. Gladstone) reports 772 members.

Rev. L. W. Caws, late of Stowmarket, is now staying at Pau, and is regaining health.

Rev. Jona M. Williams has entered on the charge at Edith-grove, West Brompton.

A new church has been opened at Shrewsbury-road, East Ham (Rev. Frederick Boucher).

Mr. F. H. Cooper, of Mansfield College, has undertaken the temporary oversight at Winslow.

Rev. S. Gitblett has entered upon the twenty-eighth year of his pastorate at Morecombe Lake.

Rev. Morgan Daniel, B.D., of Yale University, has commenced his ministry at Hirall, Bangor.

Edmonton and Tottenham Chapel reports 498 members. In the Sunday-school are 645 scholars and fifty-four teachers.

Rev. W. Blackshaw, pastor of Red Lion-street, Boston, is leaving that town to start work with the Mansfield House Settlement.

Lewisham High-road, Brockley (Rev. W. Justin Evans), reports 562 members, of whom sixty-one were admitted during the past year. In the Sunday-schools are 1804 scholars and 141 teachers. The numerous organisations are well sustained.

Snow-hill Chapel, Wolverhampton, reports that during the three years' pastorate of Rev. C. F. Bone, ninety-one members have been added to the church, and the congregations have largely increased. Over 700 houses in the parish allotted by the local Free Church Council are visited every month by the district visitors. The Men's Sunday Morning School numbers 150 members; the P.S.A. and P.M.F. (for women) are also in vigorous operation.

Calls.—Rev. Herbert Davies, of Chingford, to Trinity Church, Poplar; Rev. Thomas Simon, to Stowmarket; Rev. G. Watt-Smith, of Howard-street, Sheffield, to Belgrave, Boar-lane, Leeds; Rev. W. Houghton, late of Guildford, to Upper Norwood; Rev. E. M. Potter, to Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Goring-on-Thames.

Resignations.—Rev. John Taylor, of Henley; Rev. R. R. Collett, of Berkeley.

Baptist.

Rev. H. J. Wicks has been recognised as pastor at Coxwell-street, Cirencester.

The manual of Haven Green, Ealing (Rev. Evan Thomas), erected in 1879, reports 359 members, a net increase of thirty-six.

Rev. R. J. Williamson, of Teddington, has been compelled to have his right foot amputated. He had previously undergone two surgical operations.

Rev. J. Trotman has, owing to failing health and advancing age, resigned his pastorate at Ebenezer Chapel, Stonehouse, which he has held for eleven years.

Rev. William Thomas, pastor of Grove-road Chapel, Victoria Park, has received intelligence of the death of his son by shipwreck off the coast of Western Australia.

It is proposed to erect a "Queen's Memorial Church and Schools" in connection with the Baptist church at Broadstairs. Services have hitherto been held in an old chapel belonging to another denomination. That has now to be given up.

Immediately after the closing services in connection with the anniversary of Manor Park Tabernacle, Forest Gate, the building was burnt to the ground. The building was nearly fully insured, but the contents only partly so. The loss, therefore, is a heavy one.

Many will sympathise with Dr. and Mrs. Watson, who returned to their work at Tsing Chu-fu, about a year ago, in the loss of two of their children. "Sister Ruth" (Miss Greig), who went out to aid Mrs. Watson in her medical work, has also been ill with the disease—diphtheria—which carried off the children.

At the annual meeting of Spurgeon's Orphanage Sunday-school, it was reported that of the children who took part in the Scripture examination, subject, "Jesus the Healer and Teacher," ninety-nine per cent. passed. The Band of Hope choir was successful in winning the challenge banner of the South-West London Band of Hope Union.

On Wednesday week one of the most successful gatherings in the history of Cotham-grove Chapel, Bristol, was held, the occasion being the tenth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. R. Richard. The pastor read his pastoral letter, in which the work of the past ten years was reviewed. The statistics showed "a clear increase of eighty members." Then turning to monetary matters, "as one way of serving God and man through the gifts devoted to the Lord's work," it continued: "These had amounted to the large sum of £12,967. It was "satisfactory to note that a large proportion of this sum has been devoted to the support of Christian and philanthropic institutions outside the immediate sphere of our own church work. For example, over £3000 have been subscribed towards the world-wide work of our Baptist Missionary Society, whilst we have been enabled to help our county, city, and other missions and institutions to the extent of £2460." Ere the proceedings concluded, tokens of affection and esteem were presented to the pastor and his wife.

Calls.—Rev. W. Tooke, of Bury St. Edmunds, to Clare: Rev. W. E. Palmer, to Waltham Abbey; Rev. F. Fells, to [illegible]; Rev. R. M. Dublin, of Accrington, to Wycliff Chapel, Birmingham.

Resignations.—Rev. R. Hepworth, of Edgeside, Rossendale; Rev. R. M. Julian, of Circular-road, Calcutta.

Methodist.

Manchester Wesleyan District reports an increase of 237 members for the year.

A special mission at Cheadle Heath, Stockport, has been followed by much blessing.

Special missions, with cheering results, are reported at Truro, Idless, and Green Moor, Sheffield.

The new president of the South Australian Conference is Rev. Joseph Berry, a native of Preston, Lancashire.

Rev. T. Stowes will return from Archibongville in June after two years' service on the West Coast of Africa.

The Free Methodist for the current month contains a portrait and sketch of Rev. Thomas Carthew, who lately died in East Africa.

Mr. Maurice Williams, evangelist, late of the South-East London Mission, has been invited to assist the President of the Primitive Methodist Conference for the next three months.

Rev. A. Baldwin and Mrs. Buckenham, who are returning from the Zambesi, expect to reach England on May 1 by the steamer Roslyn Castle. Two converts from the Normal North Training Institute are on their way to the Zambesi, to serve as native missionaries.

In addition to the centenary celebration at the New Connexion Conference in June there will be commemoration meetings at Leeds, beginning August 9. It was at Leeds, on August 2, 1797, that a number of ministers withdrew from the Wesleyan Connexion, and resolved to establish the New Connexion.

The United Methodist Temperance Secretary, Rev. J. Thornley, has been making a tour through Cornwall, holding conventions, etc. At a conference in Truro he read a paper on "Town and Country Bands of Hope: How to Manage Them. While strongly advocating attractive and wholesome entertainment he vigorously deprecated the tendency to cater for mere frivolous amusement.

Presbyterian.

Rev. A. Jeffrey, of Stratford, has been appointed clerk to the London Presbytery, North.

Special services are proposed to be held on June 9 in the ancient church of Iona, in celebration of the thirteenth centenary of the death of Columba.

Lord Windsor laid the memorial-stone of a new hall and class-rooms at Cardiff in connection with the church of which Rev. Douglas Watters is pastor.

At the Andover-road Mission, in connection with Crouch-hill Church (Rev. J. B. Meharry), one evening in the week during the winter months the premises are set apart as a play-room for poor children.

The Presbyterian Church of South Africa has now its General Assembly, in which are represented the Free Church, the United Presbyterian, and the separate Presbyteries of Natal, Cape Town, and the Transvaal.

A conference and tea meeting of the evangelistic workers of Trinity Church, Notting Hill, was held on April 12; Mr. J. Short presided. Colonel Oldham, Messrs. J. E. Mathieson, Cohen, Hole, and Miss Savage gave addresses.

The Sultan of Johore has made a grant to Rev. J. A. B. Cook, English Presbyterian missionary in Singapore, of a plot of land 300 acres in extent for the purpose of a Christian Chinese settlement. The grant is made for 999 years.

At the annual meeting of the Brockley congregation (Rev. Hugh M'Intosh) a successful year was reported—seventy-eight new members had been added; while there are 168 in the Young Men's Bible-class, and seventy in the junior.

A sale of work in aid of the new church at Handsworth, Birmingham, was opened by the Countess of Warwick, who, in a short speech, said that though she belonged to another church, she was not quite outside their fold, for as a child she used to attend a Presbyterian church, and her grandfather was Lord High Commissioner of the Church of Scotland.

The Students' Missionary Association during the past year raised £406. Sixty-six congregations received its deputies and gave collections. The money, after deducting expenses, will be devoted to the erection of a mission-house at Thai-pu, China. The money to be raised during the present year will be towards acquiring premises in Aleppo for work among the Jews.

Calls.—Rev. J. G. Goold, of Dumbarton, to Bridge of Allan, in succession to Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross; Rev. T. E. Williams, to Pennel, Denbigh.

Resignations.—Rev. J. E. Jones, of Llanrwg, after twenty-six years' pastorate; Rev. A. F. Douglas, of Ancroft Moor.

Society of Friends.

At the quarterly meeting of London and Middlesex, held on the 6th inst., some increase of membership was reported, and an earnest appeal for help was made towards building a new meeting-house in Willesden.

George Swan, of Itarsi, and Ada Bewley, of Sehove, have arrived in England on furlough after seven years' work in India; and Leonard and Caroline Wigham, of Chung-King, China, have come home on furlough, and were at a social reception in Dublin last week, the 7th inst. The missions both in India and China will much miss the temporary absence of these devoted missionaries.

Howard Nicholson and Wm. Henry Wilson have held a very successful mission of eight days in Newport, Mon., resulting in an extension of the work, and in the provision of increased accommodation. Wm. Kitching and wife have been most acceptably engaged at Llandrindod Wells for three Sabbaths, and Wm. Hobson recently held a nine days' mission in Coventry, and on Tuesday, the 13th inst., completed a three days' pleasant visit to Needham Market by an address to young men. Divine help and blessing have been known all through these various services.

Salvation Army.

General Booth's birthday will be celebrated by two meetings at Exeter Hall on Tuesday, April 27, afternoon and evening. The meetings are announced as a day of thanksgiving and farewell of foreign officers.

According to the returns which reached the Salvation Army's headquarters, £25,000 at least has been raised in the United Kingdom alone as the result of the recent week of self-denial observed by members of the organisation. This is £2000 in advance of the complete returns last year.

(For "Fallen Asleep" see p. 25.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letter relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Indian Famine Fund at the Mansion House has now passed half a million sterling. The sum is large, but still very inadequate to the overwhelming need. It will be observed from the letter by Lord Radstock, in our present issue, that abuses are creeping into the local administration of the fund in the needy districts ; he asserts, on the authority of the S.P.G.'s report, that large peculations by native distributors are lessening the amount of relief given. In view of this, it is all the more necessary that Christian givers should send their contributions through Christian channels.

While heartily concurring in all the feelings of loyal thankfulness that prompt the forthcoming celebration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, we have noted with pain and shame the extent to which mercenary greed is entering into the arrangements for witnessing the procession on June 22. In a recent scathing and high-minded article on the subject, The Spectator says :—

Cannot those who sniff up this stench of money as if it were perfume see that they are taking out of the day all that lends it charm, all the poetry, all the loyalty, all the emotion which make of a somewhat boastful celebration a spectacle that future historians may admire? They are reducing a Roman triumph to the level of an alderman's dinner party, where the one thing of which the host is proud is the profusion and money value of his inartistic plate. Two thousand pounds for a house for one day—this is not an additional glory to the festival, but a lump of rough gold stuck in the middle of a picture to indicate its costliness, and the wealth of the men who can afford to spoil it in that barbaric way.

We are not at all sorry that the vulgar "window boom" seems to be meeting with failure, and if the syndicates formed to make large profits out of the procession should experience heavy losses instead, it would only be poetic justice.

We see it announced that the Queen in her progress through South London on Jubilee day is to receive an address of congratulation from the Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark. There is no reason why our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens should not share in the gladness of the occasion ; but there is much force in the contention of a Times correspondent that if that body is so honoured, other sections of Nonconformists ought to enjoy the like privilege. The writer suggests that an address from Nonconformists might be presented as Her Majesty passes Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, which is sometimes alluded to as the "Nonconformist Cathedral."

It would be an unfortunate thing if political antipathies were to find expression in our great missionary assemblies now beginning to be held. But the present crisis in South-eastern Europe touches so closely on questions of Christian freedom and brotherhood, that it is inevitable that the feud between Turkey and Greece should awaken echoes in these gatherings. A beginning was made in this direction at the missionary anniversary of the U.M. Free Churches on Monday evening in Exeter Hall ; and at the meeting of the Baptist Union. Very strong things were said as to the past misdeeds of the Turk and the helplessness of the Powers, including Great Britain, in putting any stop to them. Christian people have a right to express their intense convictions at their distinctive assemblies, and we hope such a strong body of Christian sentiment will go forth at this juncture as will largely help to mould our national action in the interests of liberty and the sacredness of human life.

With many earnest Christians to-day revival of religion is "the next thing." The Homiletic Review is publishing month by month communications that have been evoked by a timely article on "The Twentieth Century's Call to Christendom." In the April issue, a correspondent writes :—

A deep, powerful, general, and enduring revival and reformation I look for and expect (1) Because it is needed—instantly and urgently needed ; (2) because of the promises of God our Saviour ; (3) because of the prophecies of Holy Scripture ; (4) because of the prayers of the saints ; (5) because without it the Church will be swamped by the tide of worldliness which is sweeping over it. But as this cannot be under the reign of Christ the revival will come ; (6) because it will be for the glory of God, and help to bring in the kingdom of his Son.

These considerations substantially express the mind of many. They should incite to prayer for the Spirit of holiness and power to scatter present darkness and death, and bring in the day of life and light.

In the Sunday at Home for May there is a notable article on "Representative Missionaries of the Nineteenth Century," accompanied by fifty-four portraits of pioneers and organisers. It is impossible not to echo the judgment of the writer, Rev. Richard Lovett, regarding these workers, representing many communions :—

They stand for great ability, splendid courage, quenchless faith, Christlike consecration, readiness to count not even life dear in the effort to bless other lives with the grace with which Christ has enriched their own.

We do well to honour those whom God has honoured in his great harvest field. And at the same time let us not forget that the humbler sowers and reapers are made of the same material, and led by one and the self-same Spirit. Though their names are not found in human genealogy, and though their efforts make no display on the page of history, yet the Holy Ghost is their instructor and guide ; the loving Master blesses their patient continuance in well-doing ; and in due time the righteous God will remember and reward their work of faith and labours of love.

The returns of membership in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, for this year, are larger than ever before. In England, Wales, and Scotland, there are 438,940 accredited members ; 31,923 members on trial ; and 73,500 who meet in junior society classes. The increase this year at home is a cause for thankfulness, especially as it follows a year of decrease, and there still remains the "class" test, from which so many sincere Christians shrink who nevertheless maintain their connection with Methodism. Some parts of the country report a decrease, especially East Anglia, where it is owing to the decline in the population. In the towns we have more people than we know what to do with ; in the country we have too few. Town and country are indeed only the two sides of the same question, whether we look at society politically or religiously. The Methodist Recorder points it out as a curious fact that, apparently, the Connexion is not indebted in any appreciable degree to the great Missions for its fairly good increase, but rather to a generally diffused improvement in ordinary circuit life. This is, from one point of view, a good sign. At the same time, the great Missions in large cities like London and Manchester are very useful.

There is something gladdening, and also humbling, in the remarks of Rev. W. Arthur Cornaby, a missionary in China, who says :—

If only British Methodists—he might have said British Christians—came to missionary meetings as the outside heathen throng to the preaching of the Gospel, and if only the missionary literature in our beloved England were read as our missionary literature in China is read by those we commonly call "heathen," all financial pressure would be removed, and we should have more men at work.

Let it be noted that the Chinese buy the tracts of the colporteur with avidity, and everyone believes that what a Chinaman is willing to buy must be a thing he wants. Yet we ask whether Missions are a failure, and some would have us think only of our home population. The work at home needs warming with the enthusiasm of China !

Colonial policy and colonising practices are at present closely observed and scrutinized, and with good reason, in view of recent events in British South Africa, German Central Africa, and French Madagascar. What with colonising aims pursued on European methods, the native races are being "driven to the wall." Acknowledging an ovation at Capetown on April 21, Mr. Rhodes said :—

See that you have a party of progress on sound and distinct lines—namely, equal rights for every white man, free intercourse and trade between every part of South Africa, and competition among whites on the basis that the best men may come to the front, no matter of what race.

That is to say, "no matter of what race" of whites. The coloured races have neither rights nor chance in Mr. Rhodes's system of intercourse or competition.

The lesson read us from Germany is the outcome of the trial of Dr. Peters, for outrageous conduct towards native women. Remarking on the fact that the well-known explorer has been dismissed from the Imperial service, and condemned in costs, a German paper uses the language of satire, thus :—

Herr Peters is one of those latter-day "superior beings" who shrug their shoulders at the traditional conceptions of ordinary morality, and imagine that they may be a law to themselves. Filled with consuming ambition, unscrupulous in their choice of means, these gentlemen thought that it was business in the Dark Continent not so much to disseminate Christianity as to taste life to its dregs. Champagne for themselves, the whip of rhinoceros hide for the blacks, such were the principles of the colonial policy of these conquerors of the world. Any excess was permitted to themselves, all excesses on the part of the natives must be punished with the lash and with death.

Another paper, looking upon the colonial policy of other States, says :—

In England a very different standard would be applied to the conduct of colonial pioneers in extra-European territories. Many of the most successful champions of British colonial policy have a record of greater misdeeds about which very little ado was ever made. Those who are well acquainted with colonial development in many cases regard this indifference to the moral failings of otherwise exceedingly useful colonial pioneers as constituting one of the reasons of the successes of British colonial policy.

We would fain hope that the imputation thus expressed is untrue or exaggerated. The point we wish to emphasize, however, in view of recent occurrences, is, that the black man has his rights as well as the white; and that He who made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of the earth will assuredly hold colonizing powers responsible for the non-recognition of such rights.

We are glad to read the following in the London correspondence of a provincial paper. The treatment accorded to the English Protestant missionaries in Madagascar by a professedly Christian nation like France constitutes a black chapter in modern history :—

To avert the ruin which threatens, where it has not already overtaken, the Evangelical Missions in Madagascar under Jesuit intolerance, five distinguished French Protestant pastors and professors have gone out, and are expected at Antananarivo about this time. The Free Churches of France united with extraordinary enthusiasm to send them forth, pledging themselves at the same time not to neglect any of their existing missions. M. de Seynes, president of the Paris Society for Evangelical Missions, declared to a crowded meeting that while the revolt of Fahavalos showed the risks of civilising barbarous natives, a worse insurrection threatened Frenchmen in Madagascar—an insurrection against justice, the rights of conscience, and the faith of treaties. The outrages of the Jesuits, as reported by MM. Kruger and Langa, and the loyalty of the British missionaries to the new French régime in the island, have produced a strong impression on members of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. The Colonial Minister of France is said to be acting in a friendly spirit, so that the best results for toleration and fair play are expected from the arrival of the Protestant party at Antananarivo about this time.

There is much force in Dr. Berry's words that the most imminent danger to the Bible to-day is the man who would "fight like a Trojan for the orthodox theory of inspiration," but does not sit down and read the Book for himself. We do not suppose there are many persons of this class. Those who incline to the old ways, even "the unlearned," whose rights to their views of the Scriptures Dr. John Kennedy has so ably and boldly espoused, are generally great Bible readers, and are, for that reason, not easy to silence. They know too much, and know it too well. Still, a man who contends for "views" and "theories," and is not a reader of the Bible can never fail to be a danger to its reputation and influence. He is sure to be undevout and censorious in spirit, and unless the Word is abiding in his heart it cannot be reproduced in his life. Readers of the Word are wanted, but only that they may become doers of it also.

Dr. Chalmers is credited with the remark that religion and political economy work on exactly opposite principles; in religion the supply is needed in proportion to the lack of demand. Where religion is least wanted there it is most needed. And its going will beget the desire for it. The promise is that "to whom he was not spoken of, they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand."

The Presbyterian Synod.

A MISSIONARY SERMON.

THE sermon at the opening of the Synod meetings in Sunderland on Monday was preached by the retiring Moderator, Dr. Thoburn McGaw. He chose for his text Isaiah liv. 2, 3: "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." After a short historical sketch of the great advance in foreign mission work made a century ago under William Carey and his coadjutors, Dr. McGaw said :—

The suspicion that missions are "a failure" is not found among the missionaries themselves. They are often exposed to great hardships; their work requires excessive toil and abstinence from almost everything that men call pleasant. They have frequently to face serious physical danger, and they have often gone to their work with the moral certainty that their faithfulness would cost them their lives. And yet the missionaries never flinch. They never throw up their work in despair. As a rule they give to mission work all the money they can spare, and in many cases they bequeath to it all they possess at their death.

Nor is the suspicion that missions are a failure prevalent amongst those who contribute so generously to their support. Many of them are merchants, or are engaged in the Civil Service, and they have special facilities for ascertaining the true state of the facts. They are regarded by their fellows as good men of business, shrewd and hard-headed, and yet they go on contributing to missions, and increasing their contributions as God prospers them. Hence the question naturally arises, Who is it that complains when the workers and the large givers are satisfied? Is it people who are unable to work or to give, but who habitually remember the cause of missions in their prayers? Not so. As a rule, it is people who neither work, nor give, nor pray for the missionary cause, but who seem determined to suggest doubts and suspicions that are calculated to undermine the faith and paralyse the energy of those who take a practical interest in the supreme problem of the evangelisation of the world. These grumblers do not even take the trouble to master the facts. They talk vaguely about "enormous expenditure" and "meagre results." But when you get to close quarters with them you find that they are ill-informed, and have no definite idea regarding the work, or the measure of success which has been vouchsafed to it. Sometimes, indeed, they do try to get figures, in order to calculate the average cost, in pounds, shillings, and pence of converting a soul to God!! This mode of attack is borrowed from the cattle market, and is as vulgar in character, as it is unscriptural in its principles, and unspiritual in its conception.

It is necessary, however, in estimating results to bear in mind that it is only one hundred and five years since the Church began to realise its duty to the heathen; and only fifty-five years since the evangelisation of the world has been taken up with zeal and activity. We are in danger of unconsciously assuming that missions to the heathen have been carried on throughout the whole Christian era. No doubt they ought to have been; but, alas! the facts constitute a very different history. The Apostolic Church was on fire with missionary zeal; but as soon as error crept in the fire was quenched. Even the leaders of the Reformation hardly recognised the Church's responsibility in this matter. In the two centuries immediately following the Reformation a few zealous individuals earnestly endeavoured to further the cause of missions, but there were no great endeavours, and even at the close of the eighteenth century the whole Christian Church might have been fairly described as non-missionary. Thus foreign missions are the growth of the present century.

No doubt a glance at a missionary map of the world is still discouraging; but it must be borne in mind that one-half of the population of the entire globe is subject to Christian Governments, and is therefore brought, more or less, under Christian influences. Besides, the progress of the last sixty years has been enormous. In 1840 there were three native Christians in China, now they are numbered by tens of thousands; while in India the native Christians are numbered by hundreds of thousands. The total expenditure on foreign missions during the century has probably not exceeded eighty-five million pounds sterling, which is not one per cent. on the amount spent by Christians during the same period on luxuries; and probably not more than one-half per cent. on the amount of the accumulation of wealth in the possession of those who profess to be God's people. This is, of course, utterly inadequate, and shows a lamentable failure to realise the duties and the privileges of the Christian stewardship.

The number of workers is also wholly inadequate. In China there is only one missionary for every half-million of the population, as if we were to have only one minister of Christ for Glasgow, or for Manchester. In the United Kingdom there are 43,000 ordained ministers.

It is evident that we have not yet realised to the full extent the urgent need of missions. In the Moravian Church, the number of missionaries is in the proportion of one to every sixty members; in our Presbyterian Church the proportion is about one to every eleven hundred members. The fact is, that we have not formed an adequate conception of the awful sin and degradation of the heathen and Moslem worlds. In the words of a competent witness, "we little know how sin is enthroned, and deified, and worshipped. There are sin and shame everywhere. Mohammedanism is corrupt to the very core. How corrupt Buddhism is! It is an astonishment to find that there is scarcely a single thing that makes for righteousness in the life of the un-Christianised nations. Over all this seething mass of sin, and shame, and corruption, hovers the ruler of the darkness of this world, rejoicing in the chains with which he has bound two-thirds of the human race." This is a black picture, but it is not overdrawn, and with his heart yearning for the salvation of these lost souls the God of Love appeals to you and me, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" How many of us are ready to answer, "Here am I, send me."

Church Missionary Society.

On Saturday afternoon, in connection with the Church Missionary Society, a meeting for children was held in Exeter Hall. Mr. Eugene Stock, Editorial Secretary of the Society, presided. An interesting address was given by Rev. L. G. Scott Price, missionary in Tinnevelly, South India, who gave a graphic account of mission work, than which, he said, there was no happier kind of labour. He had been really lost in an Indian jungle, but there were jungles in which millions were lost. He referred to the jungles of error, superstition, and idolatry, into which this society, by means of those charged with missionary work, endeavoured to throw the light of the Holy Scriptures, and so spread a knowledge of the Lord Jesus. Rev. W. E. Burroughs, central secretary of the society, pointed out to the children how they could help in mission work by reading about it, praying, giving, and, in time, going out among the heathen. He wished them to be like arrows in the hands of strong men, going straight into the great missionary field before them.

Romish Opposition in Spain.—Writing from Marin, Pontevedra, Spain, on April 8, Mrs. Brooks de Wirtz tells how permission had been gained by her husband of the mayor and corporation to build a mission hall, and operations were begun with the ready help of many townspeople. This roused the priestly party, who have induced the governor of the province to depose the local authorities who gave the permission, and those appointed have countermanded the order to build, thus breaking every law of right and justice. Prayer is asked that this opposition may be overruled for good.

"Rest to Your Souls."

Matt. xi. 20—30.

By the Author of "Threshold Service."

THESE verses unveil to the reverent consideration of the Christian a train of thought in the mind of the Lord Jesus, the following out of which is of peculiar comfort to the weary and sad. In order, however, that the full force of the passage may be realised, the historical crisis of the situation must be recalled.

During his missionary visits to the cities of Galilee, the Saviour had done many mighty works of healing, while the unique privileges consequent on his residence at Capernaum had "exalted" that place "to heaven." Nevertheless, they had rejected the day of visitation, and the "woe" so sorrowfully reiterated would therefore ere long be their doom.

The three towns mentioned were of marked importance. Chorazin was celebrated as an emporium for wheat; Capernaum was a stirring, beautiful garrison-stronghold, situated on the direct line of the Roman road from north to south, with a stream of travellers of every description continually passing through; while Bethsaida, under the rule of Herod Philip, had been transformed from a humble village into the royal city, Julias. In the heyday of prosperity, thronged by merchants, rulers and savants, the pulse of Jewish life beating strongly in synagogue and market, with the brain of the Roman quickening the thought-world by a hundred new suggestions of law and license. Jesus, the carpenter's son, journeyed through, preaching the kingdom of God.

Some few listened, for sorrow and suffering were at work there, as everywhere else; but the poor man's Prophet, who neither lifted his voice nor strove in the streets, failed to make any impression on the mass of the inhabitants. The earthly and the heavenly having been brought for a brief season face to face, the earthly averted its eyes, and turned away.

Then — surprising paradox! — Jesus gave thanks. Surely, if ever a passage in the synoptic Gospels reveals unequivocally the Divinity of Christ, this is one of the most remarkable. What! after such a crushing defeat as the Preacher of a new movement, after such a plain proof of the total indifference of the country at large to the significance of his mission, could He praise God? Even so; for, being the Son of God, He looked on through the coming æons to the unravelling of the mystery of evil, and knew that his Father's slow way of saving the world was best. "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes."

The secret of the Son's rejoicing was the mystery of God's love, which, by means of weakness and apparent loss, would overcome all that opposes itself to that compelling stream. His glance comprehended each of the Divine processes which are ever purifying, converting, and reconciling the world to Himself. "Babes," small beginnings, seed-germs, should be the life-introducers, not cities full of nobles, traders, and ecclesiastics. Conscious of his Sonship, of his intimate, ineffable union with his Father, He perceived that through Himself God would have his sovereign way with humanity. In his name all the Gentiles should have hope, and all Israel be saved. In his including Life was the summing up of all creation, and being the perfect Son of Man, He was utterly willing to go down into death and Hades for the sake of a world of men so dearly loved of his Father. Conscious, too, of the irresistible power of the Godhead, the brute antagonism and force of evil did not appal Him, nor the limitations of human existence hold back his rejoicing confidence. Time must go on, nations must emerge and sink, life in all its kaleidoscopic complexities must form and reform, burn bright and fade; but in and through all, the effect of the Cross would be worked out in its infinitely small yet all embracing details, for "all things" had been delivered Him by the Father. He could wait.

And then his gaze takes in the mystery of suffering, and in an outburst of tenderest compassion, He invites those on whom the weight of life presses, to come to Him. He sees the miserable of all ages, the heavy-laden of every cycle of the world's history, pass in procession before Him. Every slave, every drudge, every bullied, down-trodden, underpaid, harried, hunted, oppressed soul is embraced in those words of unutterable yearning. Could He, perhaps, have just witnessed some specially sickening spectacle of Oriental callousness to pain in those cities whose public buildings, were, perchance, being built by gangs of bondmen, or was it simply the misery of poor humanity that so moved Him? We cannot tell. But this we do know, that the needs of all years and of all races were bound up in that outburst of pity, and that none need despair for himself nor for his brother, since the Son of God spoke thus.

But the invitation spoke of a far deeper sympathy than mere commiseration. Many have wept for grief at the sight of others' troubles, who were yet themselves adding to the mystery of pain by numberless acts of short-sightedness and selfish blundering. That Eye which could pierce through every veil knew that the wretched require a profounder rest than mere relaxation from physical burdens. The iron enters into the soul; the bitterness of the heart is an even more intolerable burden than the yoke that cruelty impresses. Jesus knew that the cure of sorrow was not achieved by a turn in the wheel of fortune, and that temporal compensation could never make up to the bruised spirit for "the years that the locust hath eaten." Ah! no. The heart, craving, empty, and wounded, must first be stilled.

Therefore, He bids the overwhelmed soul to learn of Him. He would impart the same life-principle that was his own inner strength —the same meekness, the same lowliness, invincible courage, and faithfulness. He knew what it meant to be despised and rejected of men, to be bruised, stricken, and hated. He would give the peace that passeth all understanding to the toiler; come down like dew upon the mown grass; change the salt waters into sweet; give songs in the night; and turn the light affliction into an exceeding weight of glory! He seems to fold all sufferers upon his breast—does He not? So dearly are they loved; so completely understood! "Be comforted," He seems to say; "I know it all. The load of evil, the overwhelming fatigue arising from constant pressure, I, too, have borne. Come, my child; come into my close and intimate friendship, and I will impart to you the secret of my own life; I will give you rest."

Blessed Lord! we come to Thee to-day, each with our burden of suffering in one form or another. Teach us this secret. It is the hidden bitterness, the dark, tempting queries that crush the soul. We would look beyond those secondary causes which have such terrible power in the world, to that triumphant solution of all enigmas, which, lying like a birthday surprise in the hand of God, is waiting until we can bear the joy that shall be revealed. We desire to be yoked with Thee, to carry thy light burden "a little while." We would not be among those that "shrink back," in whom Thou hast no pleasure. Lord, we are here at thy feet. We believe Thou hast heard, and we rise to take up the daily task with fresh courage. In Thy name we will go forth and do valiantly.

Tibetan Mission Band.

In a recent circular letter Mr. Wm. Sharp, hon. treasurer of this Band, says:—

"We have once more to admit that Tibet is still a closed land so far as the messengers of the Gospel are concerned, although the printed Word and Gospel tracts are continually being carried into the country, and are probably being more or less widely read. This will no doubt greatly facilitate the work of the missionaries in preaching when once they gain an entrance into the land, as intelligent interest can be so much more readily created and sustained where something is known of the subject, than when the whole matter, and even the very terms employed are, from the nature of things, entirely novel.

"Our six representatives in Western China—Messrs. Soutter, Neave, Moyes, Johansen, Sorrensen, and Amundsen—have been doing well with the Chinese language, and will probably be quite ready for joining in a forward movement under Mr. Cecil Polhill-Turner as soon as he arrives in their midst."

Copies of the letter may be had from Mr. Sharp at Roswyn, Beulah Hill, Norwood.

"Hail, the Prince!"

"He shall have dominion."—Psa. lxxii. 8.

Hail, the Prince of princes! Hail Him!
Robed in vesture stained with blood!
Royal Priest and King of Salem,
Son of Man and Son of God!
Lo! He comes, his right asserting
O'er his own creation fair;
Thrones, and powers, and realms reverting
To the glorious rightful Heir!

Hail! the coming Lord of Glory!
Hail! the glorious Prince of Life!
Spread abroad the wondrous story,
Lo! He comes to end all strife.
All the reins of ruling powers
See He gathers in his hands;
Blessings then shall fall in showers
Over all the thirsty lands.

Hail, the reigning King Eternal!
Wreaths immortal deck his brow.
Tribes of earth, and hosts supernal,
Render loving homage now.
He, who in prophetic vision,
Oft was seen by seer of old,
Manifests the Word's precision—
Truth that stands for evermore.

O what glories now surround Him,
As He takes his rightful place!
Those who wickedly once bound Him
See Him now their King of Grace.
Come, O Lord, thy people call Thee,
Take thy throne—assume thy sway;
Seer of Nazareth! Man of Calvary!
Reign, Lord Jesus! Reign for aye!

Ryde, I.W. H. R. King.

Old Ford and Bow Common.—A deeply interesting work is carried on in this part of East London by Rev. David Roe and helpers connected with the Wesleyan Church. In a score of different ways the Mission aims at saving the people's souls. But temporal wants are always present, and noble attempts have been made to meet these, and encourage thrift and cleanliness and attention to bodily health. In a published record for the past two and a half years, some painful pictures are drawn of moral degradation and spiritual need. The Mission deserves the warm support for what it has done, and for the excellent arrangements made to carry on its varied operations. Mr. Roe's address is, 14, Mornington Road, Bow, E.

Paul: A Servant of Jesus Christ.

"THE MARTYR STEPHEN."

Acts xxii. 20.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A.

THE method of God's introduction of his greatest servants to the world differs widely. In some cases they rise like the dawn from the glimmer of childhood's early promise to the meridian of mature power and usefulness. In other cases they flash like the lightning on the dark abyss of night. Sometimes God charges a man with a message and launches him forth suddenly and irresistibly. Such a man was Elijah with his, "Thus saith the Lord, before whom I stand"; John the Baptist, with his, "It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother' s Savonarola, of Florence; with many another. Such was Stephen.

We know little or nothing of his antecedents. That he was a Hellenist Jew is almost certain, and that he had personally known and consorted with the Son of Man, whom he afterwards recognised in his glory, is more than probable. But of father, mother, birthplace, and education we know nothing. We have the story of one day, the record of one speech—that day his last, that speech his apology and defence for his life.

He reminds us of a cloud, undistinguishable from its companions which has helped to form the leaden covering of the sky during an overcast afternoon; we had not specially noticed it, indeed the sun had set without even touching it; but when the orb of day has passed beneath the horizon, the cloud catches its departing rays, which soak and steep it with fire. See how it burns with glory! Its very heart is turned to flame! For a few moments the light remains, and it is gone. So Stephen caught for a brief space the glory of the departed Lord, and, reflecting it, was transformed into the same image, so that his face was as the face of an angel.

Stephen's life and death must always have attracted reverent interest, but how much more so as we trace his influence in the method, thought, and character of the great apostle, whose life-work it was to perpetuate and render permanent all that was rarest and noblest in the Church's first deacon and martyr.

The movement of which Stephen was the product and representative may for a moment claim our attent of the sidelight it casts on the career of the young man Saul.

Three streams of thought were meeting in tumultuous eddies in Jerusalem.

There were the Jews of the Pharisee party, represented by Gamaliel, Saul of Tarsus, and other notable men. They were characterised by an intense religiousness, which circled around their ancestry, their initial rite, their law, their temple. Were they not Abraham's children? Had not God entered into special covenant relations with them, of which circumcision was the outward sign and seal? Were they not zealous in their observance of the law, which had been uttered amid the thunderpeals of Sinai, not for themselves alone but for the world? Had not their rabbis added to it an immense number of minute and careful regulations, to which they yielded scrupulous and anxious obedience? And as for the Temple, the whole of their national life was anchored to the spot where it stood. There was the only altar, priesthood, shrine of which their religion admitted. Though the Temple might be a den of thieves and Jerusalem full of uncleanness, they felt that no harm could befall them, no fiery storm overwhelm. Narrow, casuistical, bigoted, intensely fanatical; tithing the stalk as well as the seed of mint; straining their beverages lest they should swallow a dead fly and so be defiled; counting on the efficacy of their system altogether apart from personal character; such was the orthodox and conservative Jewish party of the time.

Next came the Hebrew Christian Church, led and represented by the Apostles. To culture and eloquence they laid no claim. Of founding a new religious organisation they had no idea. That they should ever live to see Judaism abolished before the teaching they were giving, or Christianity existing apart from the system in which they had been nurtured, was a thought which in the furthest flights of their imagination never occurred to them. Their Master had rigorously observed the Jewish rites and feasts, and they followed in his steps, and impressed a similar course of action on their disciples. The Church lingered still in the portals of the synagogue. The disciples observed the hours of prayer, were found in devout attendance at the Temple services, had their children circumcised, and would not have dreamed of being released from aught that bound the ordinary Jews, as with iron chains. And if nothing had happened of the nature of Stephen's apology and protest, the Church would have doubtless become another Jewish sect, distinguished by the piety and purity of its adherents, and by their strange belief in the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, who had been crucified under Pontius Pilate.

Lastly, there were the converts from among the Hellenist Jews. In R.V. of Acts vi. 1 these are distinctly referred to; and in ver. 9 the various synagogues in which they were wont to meet are enumerated—of these Stephen was the holy and eloquent exponent.

The origin of the Hellenist or Grecian Jews must be traced back to the captivity, which God overruled to promote the dissemination of Jewish conceptions throughout the world. It was but a small contingent that returned to Jerusalem with Nehemiah and Ezra; the vast majority elected to remain in the land of their adoption for purposes of trade. They slowly spread thence throughout Asia Minor, to the cities of its seaboard and the highland districts of its interior, planting everywhere the synagogue with its open law, and its protest on behalf of the unity and the spirituality of God. Egypt, and especially Alexandria; Greece, with her busy commercial seaports; Rome, with her imperial cosmopolitan influence, became familiar with the peculiar physiognomy and customs of this wonderful people, who always contrived to secure for themselves a rich heritage obtained from the vitals of the country on which they had settled. But their contact with the free and abounding life of the world wrought a remarkable change on them.

Whilst the Jews of Jerusalem and Judæa shrank from the defiling touch of heathenism, and built higher the wall of separation, growing continually prouder, more bitter, more narrow, the Jews that were scattered through the world became more liberal and cosmopolitan. They dropped their Hebrew mother-tongue for Greek; they read the Septuagint version of the Scriptures; their children were influenced by Greek culture and philosophy; they became able to appreciate the purposes of God moving through the channels of universal history; they learnt that though their fathers had received the holy oracles for mankind, yet God had nowhere left Himself without witness. They were compelled to relinquish the Temple with its holy rites, except on rare and great occasions, when they travelled from the ends of the earth to be present at some great festival; but in its place they magnified the synagogue, with its worship, its reading of the law, its words of exhortation; and they welcomed to its precincts all who cared to avail themselves of its privileges, and to set their faces towards the God of Abraham. Many of these open-minded Hellenist Jews were settled in Jerusalem; the different countries from which they had come were represented by special synagogues, one of the Libertines who had been freed from the slavery into which they had been carried captive, one of the Cyrenians, one of the Alexandrians, one of them of Cilicia and of Asia. In mentioning the latter we recall that Saul was of Tarsus, the chief city in Cilicia.

On the conclusion of his academic studies he may have returned to Tarsus or travelled far afield on some religious mission, compassing sea and land to make proselytes. In this way he was probably absent from Jerusalem during the public ministry of the Lord Jesus, and only learnt the whole story on his return to the Holy City. His first impressions were wholly unfavourable. It seemed to him sheer madness to suppose that the crucified Nazarene could be the long-looked-for Messiah, or that He had risen from the dead. He, therefore, threw Himself into the breach, and took the lead in disputing with Stephen, who had just been raised to office in the nascent Church, and, not content with the conservative attitude of the apostles, was leading an aggressive and forward policy.

* * *

The burden of Stephen's testimony, which he gave with such wisdom and grace, may be gathered from his apology, which, while touching chords that vibrated most deeply in the hearts of his hearers, and appearing merely to rehearse the great story of the past, was intended as his own vindication and defence. It is a marvellous address, the whole meaning of which can only be realised when his position and circumstances are borne in mind. It was the first attempt to read the story of God's dealings with Israel in the light of Christ; the earliest commentary on the Old Testament by the New; the fragmentary first-draught of the Epistle to the Hebrews; the suggestion to at least one of his hearers of a deeper way of studying the lessons of Mosaism. The mystery which had been hidden from ages and generations, and which was probably still hidden even from the Apostles was made known to this Christian Hellenist Jew, that the old covenant was becoming old and was nigh to vanishing away, because it was on the point of being superseded by that better hope, through which we draw nigh to God.

Can we not imagine those eager disputings in the Cilician synagogue, between these two ardent and vehement spirits, close akin at heart, as the future would show, though now apparently so far divided. Each thoroughly versed in Scripture, each agile in argument and strong of soul, each devoted to the holy traditions of the past, but the one blinded by an impenetrable veil, whilst to the other heaven was open, and the Son of Man standing at the right hand of God.

Like most who speak God's truth for the first time, Stephen was greatly misunderstood. We gather this from the charges made against him by the false witnesses, whom the Sanhedrim suborned. They accused him of speaking blasphemous words against Moses, of speaking against the Temple and the law, of declaring that Jesus of Nazareth would destroy the Temple, and change the customs delivered by Moses. And as we attentively follow his argument, we can see how it was that these impressions had been caused.

Saul would expatiate on the glories of the Temple standing on the site where for centuries Jehovah had been worshipped: but Stephen would insist that any holy soul might worship God in the temple of his own soul; that there was no temple when God spake to Abraham and the patriarchs; that David was discouraged from building one; and that at the time of its dedication Solomon expressly acknowledged that God did not dwell in temples made with hands.

Saul would insist on the necessity of the rite of circumcision; but Stephen would argue that it could not be all important since God made promises to Abraham long before that rite was instituted.

Saul would show the unlikelihood of Jesus being God's Deliverer, because he was unrecognised by the leaders and shepherds of Israel. Stephen would rejoin that there was nothing extraordinary in this, since Joseph had been sold for jealousy, and Moses rejected on three distinct occasions. "Which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute?"

Saul said that all the prophets pointed to the glorious advent of the Messiah; Stephen reviewed Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, and showed that it behoved the Christ to suffer.

Saul affirmed that nothing could supersede Moses; Stephen quoted Moses himself as asserting that the Lord God would raise up a greater prophet than himself.

All this Stephen affirmed with the greatest reverence and awe. He spoke of the God of Glory; of the great ones of the past as "our fathers"; of the angel that spake at Sinai; and the living oracles of Scripture. And yet it is undeniable that he saw with undimmed vision that Jesus of Nazareth must change the customs which Moses delivered, and lead his Church into more spiritual aspects of truth.

How little he weened that he was dropping seed-germs into the heart of his chief opponent that were to bear harvests to one hundred-fold—nay, to many millions-fold, through the centuries, and in the broad harvest-field of the world. Thus a plant may yield one white flower, but the seeds it drops may live and live again in uncounted springs.

But as the battle rose and fell within the walls of that Cilician synagogue, it was an amazing conflict.

Here ancient authority, there individual responsibility. Here the bondage of the letter, there the freedom of the spirit. Here the priest and ecclesiastic, there the spirit taught and led of God. Here bigotry and pride, there humility and insight. Here the shackles of the prison of the soul, there the open heaven. In miniature, it was the battle of all the ages, the one eternal conflict between form and spirit, between a false religiousness and the religion of the soul, which stands unveiled before God.

* * *

We know little of Stephen's life. May he not have known Jesus in his early life, for he instantly recognised him in the heavenly vision? Perhaps he had followed Him in the latter part of his ministry: certainly he could speak of Him as the Righteous or Just One as though he had had ample opportunities of appraising his blameless worth. Surely he saw Him die, for the traits of his dying beauty moulded his own last hours. How meekly to bear his cross; to plead for his murderers with a divine charity; to breathe the departing spirit into unseen hands; to find in death the gate of life, and amid the horror of a public execution the secret of calm and peace. All these were rays of light caught from the Cross where his Master had poured out his soul unto death.

This, too, powerfully affected Paul. That light on the martyr's face, that evident glimpse into the unseen Holy, those words, that patience and forgiveness, that peace which enwrapt his mangled body, crushed and bleeding, as he fell asleep—he could never forget them. Long years after, when a similar scene of hate was environing himself, he reverted to Christ's martyr, Stephen, and counted it a high honour meekly to follow in his steps. Not only did he mould his own great speeches on the model of that never-to-be-forgotten address, not only did those conceptions of the spiritual nature of Christ's kingdom affect his whole after-teaching and ministry, but the very light that radiated from that strong, sweet, noble character seemed to have been absorbed by his spirit, to be radiated forth again in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in strifes, in tumults, in pureness, in knowledge, in long-suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Ghost, in love unfeigned.

With the "Midnight Sun."

JERUSALEM.—2.

IN my last letter I mentioned the hospital of the London Jews Society. The L.J.S. has also schools for girls, in excellent premises adjoining the site of the new hospital. Several of us spent a very pleasant hour in looking through the buildings and interviewing the children in the grounds. Here, as in other places in the Holy Land, the C.M.S., the Female Education Society, as well as other institutions, are doing good work among the young.

The school for boys, founded by Bishop Gobat on Mount Zion as an orphanage, but now not confined to orphans, is a very valuable institution. It was formerly called Bishop Gobat's Orphanage, now Bishop Gobat's Memorial School, and has become a branch of the C.M.S. I visited this most interesting place with Mr. and Mrs. Christie Reid, of Chislehurst. We were very courteously received by Mr. and Mrs. Ellis, who introduced us to the boys in their classes, and showed us the school premises, and the many points of interest in the remains of ancient buildings. Other parties followed ours, and it may be hoped that the schools will benefit through the information thus gained by many who probably had little previous knowledge of the schools or of their devoted founder. Someone afterwards told me that the boys, as a rule, turned out most satisfactorily.

THE LATE BISHOP GOBAT.

One morning I took a donkey ride out to Abraham's Vineyard, the locality surrounding the former residence of the late Consul and Mrs. Finn. It was cheering to see so many of the sons of Abraham engaged in building, soap-making, and other handicrafts, under the very competent and experienced management of Mr. W. H. Dunn. Mrs. Finn has recently said in London, that 900 children died in Jerusalem last year for want of water. This gives a pathetic interest to the fact that a cistern, the cost of which had been provided by friends in Tunbridge Wells, had been completed, and inaugurated by Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt of that town, a week or two before my visit to Abraham's Vineyard.

The schools of the Female Education Society at Bethlehem are delightfully situated, with views of the land south of Jerusalem, reaching to the Dead Sea, though the approach, as in many other cases, is more fragrant than pleasant.

Miss Lovell, who formerly was a fellow-labourer with Miss Newbury in West London on behalf of the blind, has begun a much-needed work for blind girls. She lives in a house formerly occupied by Mr. Holman Hunt, next door to H. B. M. Consul, to whose care her letters are addressed. She enlightened me as to the great superiority of the Braille dotted system for the blind, especially as it enables them to produce their own books.

I had the pleasure of speaking on Sunday afternoon to a number of workers connected with the Christian Alliance Mission of New York (Rev. A. B. Simpson). Miss Dunn is the superintendent, Bethel House, near the British Consulate.

Hebrew is again becoming a living language. The only two newspapers published in Palestine are in Hebrew.

Dr. Handley Moule preached at Christ Church on Sunday morning, and Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton, gave a powerful evangelistic address in the evening. It was pleasant to hear that a Syrian thanked him afterwards: he had been long seeking the way of peace and life, and now it had been made clear to him.

In a lecture on the Jews in Jerusalem, Dr. Wheeler commended Prof. G. A. Smith's wonderful book, "The Physical Geography of the Holy Land" (Hodder & Stoughton). He said that the Jews are coming back in numbers. In 1885 there were about 17,000, now there are 40,000. Then there were only four or five Jewish colonies, now there are thirty-six. The average rainfall from 1861-80 was 22½ inches; from 1881-90 it was 27¾; from 1821-95 it amounted to 31½ inches, and is steadily increasing. It may interest tourists to know that to the Jews all tinned provisions are unclean.

Remembering that a spur of Mount Hermon is now accepted as the site of the Transfiguration, it is interesting to note that the prayer of Moses was there answered that he might see "that goodly mountain and Lebanon."

I received much attention and information from Rev. Abraham Ben Oliel, and many useful hints as to archæological and other questions. He is visited by many young Jews, who are more or less deeply interested in Christianity. Mrs. Ben Oliel and her daughter have sewing and other classes for girls and women, mothers' meetings, etc.

R. Cope Morgan.

AT JAFFA.

The storm in which we had left Damascus was mild compared to the gale in which we bade farewell to Jerusalem. Consequently our arrival at Jaffa was greeted with the announcement that to embark was impossible. We were therefore billeted in detachments upon the different hotels, the C.M.S. hospital, and wherever else a lodging could be found. This was the more difficult as considerable accommodation had been reserved for a "Cook" party nearly as large as our own, which was due to rejoin the Garonne on the following day. For nearly 300 tourists to swoop down thus upon a town like Jaffa was no small tax upon its resources, and it was pretty much a case of living from hand to mouth as regards the food supply, and from hour to hour as to the advent of a propitious moment in which to embark. The latter, however, did not come for four days, despite sundry disappointed hopes.

These circumstances, if a little trying, at any rate afforded a healthy test of patience. It has been said of parties camping through Palestine that the travellers are apt to gain such an insight into each other's peculiarities that, after making various combinations of companionship during the trip, by the time they reach their destination no two of them are upon speaking terms! Fortunately our experience had been far different, nor was our record lowered during our enforced sojourn here. In the intervals between the storms (when we were not packing in haste or unpacking at leisure) va ous games were improvised, either on the beach or at the hotels. Messrs. Woolrych and Connop Perowne, our leaders, also did all in their power to mitigate the untoward turn of events, their endeavours being suitably acknowledged by a well-earned vote of thanks when we boarded the Midnight Sun again. Archdeacon Wilson contributed two informal but suggestive and interesting lectures in the evenings, one descriptive of "The Condition of Palestine and its People at the time of our Lord," and one on "Our Visit to the Holy Land as an Aid to Faith." The last of these was repeated on board a few days later, and may be thus summarised in the lecturer's own words:—

"Difficult as it is to formulate the permanent influence on our faith, and the religious impressions resulting from such a short visit as ours to the Holy Land, these points seem to me to have emerged into clearness, as I try to disentangle my thoughts. Most prominent is the immense impulse that it gives to the intelligent study of the Bible, and the help to the realisation of the details of history, the words of the psalmists and prophets, and the scenes in particular of our Lord's life. There is also the greater as a final overthrowing of that German and French criticism which, half a century ago, attempted to resolve the history of our faith into a myth or a romance.

APPRECIATION OF ARCHÆOLOGICAL RESEARCH

"There is the deep and silent feeling stirred by some few of the sacred places, and, in my own case, especially by the Calvary outside the present walls. There is, what I have tried to bring out in some detail, the clearness with which this visit has taught us the fitness of the stage of the Holy Land for the long religious drama it has witnessed; its fitness both as a 'sanctuary and as an observatory,' to use the striking expression of Prof. G. A. Smith, and, what is to my mind even more important, the utter inadequacy of the scenes and the stage themselves to account for the spiritual streams which have flowed from this land over the whole earth. To express the same thought otherwise, this visit, in addition to some practical lessons which I have endeavoured to draw from it, has brought out the human reality of the actors, whether patriarchs, or kings, or prophets, or psalmists, and yet has assured us that they were speaking and acting with a power that is not to be accounted for by the circumstances in which they lived. Above all and finally, and not to obscure this lesson by reference to anything else, it has confirmed to my own mind, in fresh vividness and reality, the belief in Jesus Christ, Son of Man and Son of God, and our Lord and Master."

At last came the welcome tidings that embarkation was practicable, and our patience was rewarded by a perfectly smooth passage to Alexandria, whence we proceeded at once to CAIRO.

But it was a great disappointment to know that our stay here must now be curtailed by three days. Still, it was no good chafing at the inevitable, so the best possible use was made of the time at our disposal. It was an agreeable change to be once more in the midst of a higher degree of civilisation, and we appreciated the accompaniments of English life by which we found ourselves surrounded, while the element of interest was sustained by the orientalism native to the place, and happily by no means as yet exterminated.

That the British occupation of Egypt has been a great boon so far as its material progress is concerned none can doubt. The "necessaries," real or imaginary, of the Englishman's existence create trades and commerce which give employment freely, and tend to the general well-being of the community, and the natives are happy and content under our rule. But the concomitant vices of the white man seem to be inseparable from his presence, and afford to the Mohammedan his most powerful weapon against what he regards as "Christianity." With this stumbling-block the missionary everywhere is brought face to face, the inconsistent lives of his fellow-countrymen forming an ever-recurring taunt. Worldliness and worse, more than native unbelief, hinder his work and form the ground of much discouragement.

The Church Missionary Society has a medical mission here, and the American Presbyterian Board, under the superintendence of Rev. Dr. Watson, who has been there for over thirty years, has a prosperous church and schools. In the church a native service is held on Sunday mornings, the evening service being for English residents and visitors. At the former, ninety sat down at the Lord's table on the Sunday we were there. In connection with this work there are also out-stations in the villages around, under native pastors, which are in a very encouraging condition. Here, as elsewhere, we found that the early teaching received by the children in the schools greatly influences their after life; and even where direct conversion is not traceable, they have proved to be the most capable and trusted occupants of responsible positions, in which they are often able to aid the further work of the missionaries to whom they owe so much. It is very difficult for us in a free country to realise the issues involved in a confession of Christianity by a native whose every earthly tie would thereby be severed, if indeed his life be not secretly or openly forfeited.

Egypt being par excellence a land of antiquity, there was much to see in and around Cairo. Its majestic mosques, the tombs of the Mamelukes, the Pyramids, the Ghizeh Museum, all claimed attention. The last alone would take a month to see with any degree of thoroughness, but having gazed on the mummified face of the Pharaoh of the Oppression, we felt there was not much of greater interest to see beyond. To what a wonderful degree have the discoveries of recent years corroborated the accuracy of the Scriptures! Truly we need have no fear of "fresh light" (if it be light, and not darkness disguised as such), for every year but adds its witness that the Word of God is true. The range of these discoveries is, of course, too vast to be more than referred to in a cursory sketch of a flying visit such as this. Still, the evidences of high civilisation and of the vast resource of these ancient peoples create a deep impression on the mind, which makes it very difficult to accept the prevalent ideas of consistent development and evolution through the successive ages of the world.

All too soon came our summons to depart, and we found ourselves once more, and for the last time, upon the Midnight Sun bound for Naples and Marseilles en route for home. Two fine days and two of rough sea brought us to the Italian port, where a select and, shall I say, a bilious few, ourselves among them, bade the ship farewell. But it was with the consciousness of many a friendship made to be renewed, we hope, under other circumstances, and with memories as pleasant as any we have treasured of other days.

"Co-operative Educational Travel" is the motto under which Dr. Lunn and Mr. Perowne conduct these trips, and the educational is very far from being a merely nominal element. A passenger who had worked hard at "sight-seeing" remarked that he was thinner in body, but "it had gone to his head," and we think in many cases to the heart as well. Certainly none who read their Bibles at all can fail in future to peruse the sacred page with an intelligent interest they had not known before.

G. E. M.

The Very Last.

After being closely engaged in dealing with an interesting old couple, who had found their way into the inquiry room at the close of one of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings in Addison-road, I rose from my knees to find that with the exception of one or two officials waiting to close the hall, there were only two other people besides myself left of all the immense congregation. Almost a the same moment as I rose and glanced at these two, I discovered that one was a man who had at one time belonged to my own Bible-class, the other was an evangelist, who came towards me saying, "I see that you know this man. I have not been able to help him; perhaps you may be able to do so." With that he turned away, and we were left together.

I was much moved, for this was a man who had seemed to come very near the kingdom whilst in the Bible class, and over whom the other members of the class as well as myself had yearned intensely, and for whom much prayer had been offered. But he had been stumbled through the persuasions of his wife and a doctor, who had urged him to take stimulants when he was not very well; he was ashamed of having yielded, and could not be induced to return to the class after having broken his pledge.

Now we stood once more face to face, and I exclaimed, "P——, I am surprised but glad to see you here!" "Yes, ma'am," he said. "I have been looking at you for some time, though I knew that you did not see me." "Well, P——," I answered, "it is no chance that has left us two to be the very last of all the thousands who filled this building to-night." "No!" he replied, "I feel that it is very solemn, and that if I leave this hall unsaved to night I shall die a lost soul." I, too, felt the awful solemnity, and at once said, "Do not let us wait a moment; let us get upon our knees and pray." Down upon our knees we went, and I poured out my own intense longing for his soul's immediate salvation. At my suggestion P—— followed, but before we rose prayer was changed to praise for another wanderer sought and won.

By this time it was late and there was no train to take me to my destination, so together we walked some two miles, during which time P—— told me how nearly he had been prevented from going to the meeting at all. Now when he did reach the hall he had been twice turned away from the door because there was no room. Now the last time a steward had overheard, and had kindly said that if he would go round to the inquiry-room he would open a window and let him in. This he did, but, strange to say, P—— had not been able to hear one word of Mr. Moody's address. Yet when the crowd streamed into the room for the after-meeting, there he was, and there he remained until he became a new creature in Christ. He was the first to be converted out of twelve children of a Christian widowed mother, to whom he wrote at once telling the good tidings. One of his brothers was brought to Christ on receiving a letter from P—— telling of his conversion.

This was an encouraging instance of fruit found after many days; but whilst in this case there was a peculiar personal interest, I met with many cases where the good work had been begun in a soul by a dear mother then in glory, or a Sunday-school teacher, or some other instrument. It was both humbling and encouraging—humbling as it showed how little ground there was for self-gratulation at having been the instrument, seeing that others may have had as much to do with the blessing long before, and encouraging as showing that when perhaps we have seemed to have failed, there has been a real work for eternity begun. "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos?" "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

L. J.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 2.

"Thorns and snares are in the way of the froward."—Prov. xxii. 5.

This is due to the love of God, shown in the constitution of the world. It would have been malignity indeed to have placed us in the world without the warning signal of pain to show us where we are wrong, and to sting us when we go astray. By the pitiful mercy of our Creator, pain is the inevitable consequence of the breach of physical and moral law; thus men are shown that they are on the wrong path, and driven back in repentance and rectitude. According to the old Greek motto, "Pain is therefore gain."

You say that there are many who suffer, who are among the holiest and meekest of mankind, and you wonder how it is that those snares have come so plentifully to their share. But you must remember that though an individual may not have broken the law himself in any special sense, yet he inherits broken law. By virtue of his union with a sinful race he reaps a harvest sown by others' sins, and by bearing it meekly and lovingly he enters into union with some aspects of the death of Christ, and fills up that which is believed of His sufferings.

But, in addition, there are some who suffer according to the will of God. Pain, beneath the touch of the Spirit of God, is in the highest degree disciplinary. As the angels watch the result on a soul of God's sharp ordeal of suffering, they say:

> The keen sanctity,
> Which with its effluence, like a glory, clothed
> And circled round the Crucified, has seized
> And scorched, and shrivelled it.

MONDAY, May 3.

"Be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long."—Prov. xxiii. 17.

I asked a working man the other day how he fared. His wife, the partner of many years, has died, and there is no one to welcome him on his return from work and prepare for him. His fellow-workmen, younger men, delight in tormenting him and increasing his arduous toils, because they hate his simple godliness. A physical weakness grows upon him distressingly. But he said that he was very happy, because he lived in God. All the way along it was Jesus—Jesus when he woke in the morning; Jesus when he went to bed at night; Jesus when he went to the butcher's shop to buy his little piece of meat for Sunday ("He made the beasts; He must know what is good to eat"); Jesus when he wrote a letter. And when I asked how he managed to maintain this life, he said, "I always ask Him to rouse me up early enough to have a good meal on the shoulder and breast of the Lamb," referring to the priest's portion in the olden sacrifices, as symbolical of the strength and love of the Lord Jesus.

If we are in the love of God we shall be in the fear, for though perfect love casts out fear that hath torment, it introduces the fear that dares not cause needless pain to the Infinite Lover of the soul. We fear to tear open his wounds again, to expose his heart to the spear-thrust, or to miss aught of his gracious pains to make us what He wants us to become.

TUESDAY, May 4.

"If thou forbear to deliver those that are drawn to death . . . doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?"—Prov. xxiv. 11, 12.

Christ has greatly added to the convicting power of truth. Before his time men were taught that it was wrong to do wrong; but He taught that it was wrong not to do right. In the Christian church we confess that we have done the things that we ought not to have done. We do this in common with all men that acknowledge the rule of conscience; but we are taught to go farther and confess that we have not done the things that we ought to have done. This is our great and damning crime.

It is the priest and Levite that did not go to the help of the wounded traveller, the servant who simply did not use the Lord's money, the nations that did not feed, clothe, or visit Him in the persons of the distressed, the virgins who had not oil in their vessels, the trees that did not bear, that Christ holds up to shame and everlasting contempt. We cannot ignore the evil around us and say we are not responsible for it. We cannot shut our eyes and avert our faces from wrong-doing, and tyranny, and oppression. We cannot profess that it is not our business, whosoever else's it may be, without it becoming known to the Searcher of all hearts, who will certainly reckon it against us on the day of account. Not to do righteousness and mercy is to incur the heavy displeasure of the Master.

WEDNESDAY, May 5.

"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink; the Lord shall reward thee."—Prov. xxv. 21, 22.

The pagan ideal of a manly life was to succeed in doing as much good to your friends, and as much injury to your enemies as possible. A few exceptions to this rule are recorded, but the wonder at them proves that the sentiments of forgiveness and mercy were foreign to popular morality and public opinion. How different is the teaching of the Bible, and in this have we not an evidence of its divine authority? Our Lord went further even than this noble maxim; He said, "Love your enemies, and pray for them which persecute you."

We are not taught to be entirely indifferent to the moral qualities of actions. The perception of sin and evil is necessary to a holy soul. And it is not required that we should abjure that holy resentment to wrong-doing, to which the Apostle alludes when he says, "Be ye angry and sin not." We must always resent wrong as wrong, though we must carefully eliminate any vindictive feeling towards the wrong-doer.

Do you think that others have wronged you? Pity them; pray for them; seek them out; show them their fault, humbly and meekly; wash their feet; take the mote out of their eye; seek to restore them in a spirit of meekness, remembering that you may be tempted; heap coals of loving-kindness on their heads; bring them if possible into such a broken and tender frame of mind that they may seek forgiveness at your hand and God's.

THURSDAY, May 6.

"For lack of wood a fire goeth out."—Prov. xxvi. 20.

How simple a parable! Of course, it must be so. As soon as a fire has reached the end of the material on which it fed, it expires.

This is true of the fire of slander. As long as there is an ear to receive, and a tongue to pass on, some piece of malicious slander will continue to circulate. But directly it reaches a hearer who will not whisper it forward, in that direction at least its progress is arrested. Why do you not adopt this rôle, and urge others to do so? Hear if you must the whisper of the slanderer, but let it stop with you, locked in the secret of your own breast. You may be voted rather uninteresting and stupid by certain society which thrives in whispered calumnies, but you will save many a heart from being torn and lacerated by unkindness and falsehood.

How graphic that word "whisperer" is! People always tell you to be sure not to tell; it is a way they have, though they do not expect you for a moment to keep the story to yourself. It is the kiss under which they betray. Always tell them that you refuse to be an accomplice in evil. If there is such wrong that you may not speak of it or take action on it, better not defile your ears with it.

This is true of the fire of the Holy Ghost. You must feed it by your loving obedience, your study of the Word of God, your faith and prayer. Yield yourself more entirely to his possession. Let your spirit, soul, and body, your every act and desire, be as fuel to the Spirit of God.

FRIDAY, May 7.

"The full soul loatheth an honeycomb."—Prov. xxvii. 7.

Honey was not used in sacrifices made by fire unto the Lord. Its luscious taste may have made it an emblem of the pleasures of the world. As bees roam from flower to flower, sipping nectar here and there, so does the heart of the worldling roam over the world for satisfaction; settling nowhere for long, but extracting sweets from a variety of attractive sources.

The best way of combatting worldliness is by satisfying the heart with something better. The full soul loatheth even the honeycomb. When the prodigal gets the fatted calf, he has no further hankering after the husks which the swine eat. The girl who gets real jewels throws away her shams; and the child who has become a man has no taste for childish toys that once seemed all-important. This is the meaning of the old proverb: Love God, and do as you like.

We are reminded of the words which the Psalmist applied to the Word of God: "Sweeter than honey, or the honeycomb." Fill your heart with God, and his sacred truth, and the things of the world will lose their charm. Do you know this absorbing love of Jesus? We can only will to know it, and present ourselves to the Holy Spirit, that He may shed it abroad in our hearts. Oh to be full souls! Full of the more abundant life, of the unspeakable joy, of the peace that passeth understanding—in a word, of Jesus, as the Chief and Best.

SATURDAY, May 8.

"He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper. But whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy."—Prov. xxviii. 13.

There must be confession before forgiveness. This is clearly taught everywhere in God's Word. "If thy brother trespass against thee seven times a day, and seven times a day turn to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him." But he must turn and say, I repent. This is the clear condition. You may and must use every method of inducing him to say this, but he must be brought to say it, before it is right to pronounce the gracious formula of absolution. There may be the disposition to forgive, but there cannot be the declaration of forgiveness, until the wrongdoer perceives the wrong and express his regret and sorrow.

The prodigal must say to his father, I have sinned. It is only as we confess our sins, that our merciful High Priest can forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Confession is to take God's side against sin. It is the lifting out of one thing after another from heart and life, and holding them for a moment before God, with the acknowledgment that it is our fault, our grievous fault.

There is only one way in which transgressions can be covered: that of which the Psalmist speaks, when he says, Blessed is the man whose iniquity is forgiven, whose sin is covered, because hidden under the Propiation of the Blood. Be not content with confession of sin—forsake it also: and you will obtain mercy of Him who despises not the sighing of the contrite heart. F. B. M.

Central Africa.—Mr. F. Schindler has been labouring with other devoted servants of Christ at Kavungu, between Bihé and Garenganze, for the last five or six years. There has been much blessing of late among the young people on the station, several having professed conversion and given every evidence of a real change of heart. W. C.

[Copyright.]

Memory Training: By Rev. J. D. Kilburn.

LETTER TENTH.

THE EASIEST AND BEST WAY OF LEARNING THE FORM, MEANING, ORDER, AND NUMBER OF THE CHINESE RADICALS.

If you attempt to learn separately these four things respecting the two hundred and fourteen radicals—which form the basis of the Chinese written language, and correspond somewhat with the alphabet of our own—you will find that it is a work of immense difficulty. If you arrange them properly and associate them with each other, and with the things to which they refer, you will find that the task is made both interesting and easy.

I shall divide this letter into two parts, so as to put these four things under two heads.

1. How to learn the Form and Meaning of the Radicals.

(a) Notice in what respects one radical resembles another, and, if possible, a similar one. By doing this you will photograph its form on your memory. Not only so, but you will thus photograph the other with which you compare it on your mind, and unite the two in such a way that the one will recall the other. While comparing the radicals fix your attention upon them. (See Table below.)

(b) Notice in what respects the radical resembles, and in what respects it differs from, the thing for which it stands. This will impress it on your memory much better than by repetition, or even by writing, and it will unite the radical and that which it represents in your mind, so that the one will tend to recall the other.

2. How to learn the Order and Number of the Radicals.

Never attempt to learn one radical alone; always connect it with others. It is very easy to connect a number of radicals together. It is even easier to remember them when they are so connected.

There are two ways in which radicals may be connected together.

(a) They may be connected in a sentence. Take, for instance, the first three in the first division—one; a down stroke; a point. "One down point" easily recalls them all, and the exact order in which they occur. You will be in no danger of forgetting whether one or down stroke, or whether down stroke or point comes first, if you remember this simple sentence.

Take the next three—a stroke to the left; one, a hook; a barb. "Left hook and barb" will recall them, and the exact order in which they occur.

It is not difficult to write the whole of the two hundred and fourteen radicals in groups in this way. If you do this carefully, you will find that the different members of the group will be so united in your mind that if you recall one of them it will recall the others.

(b) Some of the radicals can be united still more easily and firmly in a mental picture. Take, for instance, the whole of those in the thirteenth division:—A frog; a tripod; a drum; a rat. Test yourself. Think of these placed one above the other. Make a mental picture of them. Can you remember them in regular order? Can you repeat them backwards? I feel sure almost every reader of these lines can do this. You will find too that the tenacity with which the mind will retain them will be quite as striking as the ease with which it learnt them.

Then, too, if you learn the number of only one of the members of a group, you have thereby learnt the number of all if the method here given be followed.

Try if this is not so. Take any of the groups already given. Let us begin with the last. A drum is Radical No. 207. What number is a tripod? a frog? a rat?

Again, a barb is No. 6. What number is a hook? a stroke to the left?

Again, a down stroke is No. 2. What number is a point? and one?

Three remarks in conclusion.

(a) Do not attempt too much at a time. If you do, you will injure yourself, and retard your progress. This is true respecting every study. There are reasons which make it to be specially appropriate here. The earlier radicals are used in forming the latter ones, and the more thoroughly the former are learned, the more easily the latter will be acquired.

(b) Do not attempt the pronunciation of the Chinese name without the assistance of a duly qualified teacher. (See letter 5, suggestion 8.)

(c) Pay particular attention to those radicals which are printed in capitals. They are far more important than the others. There are thirty-three of these. Speaking of them Rev. F. W. Baller says:—"These thirty-three cover more than two-thirds of the Chinese language; the remaining one hundred and eighty-one less than one-third." Whenever one of these comes into a group, learn the number of this rather than of some other, except for some reason another is easier to remember. (See Letters Third and Fourth in Life of Faith.)

The Human Mind is the greatest and most wonderful work of the Divine Creator; use it aright, and seek his blessing on its use, and it will develop powers, and produce results, of which you have now but little conception.

CHINESE RADICALS REFERRED TO IN LETTER TENTH.

It will be seen upon reference to the characters given below that Radicals Nos. 11 and 12 closely resemble each other; also Nos. 85 and 86; while Nos. 108, 109, and 132 are somewhat alike.

一	1 ih	one.	入	11 ruh	to enter.
丨	2 kuen	a down stroke.	八	12 pah	eight.
丶	3 chu	a point.	水	85 SHUI	WATER.
			火	86 HO	FIRE
丿	4 p'ieh	a stroke to the left.	皿	108 ming	a dish.
乙	5 ih	one; a hook.	目	109 MUH	THE EYE.
亅	6 keo	a barb.	自	132 tsï	from; self.

Mr. Müller on the Christian Life.

THIS veteran evangelist preached at Cotham-grove Baptist Chapel last Sunday morning on 1 Cor. xv. 1-2. In his exposition of the clause "I declare unto you the Gospel...wherein ye stand," Mr. Müller said:—

What is meant by "standing in the Gospel"? In a few words, simply this: To remain in the same mind regarding ourselves and regarding Christ as we were when first we believed in the Lord Jesus. It is not that because we believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, we less and less need Christ as time passes on; that more and more we can help ourselves and save ourselves—the very opposite—though we should hate sin more and more and love holiness more and more. Yet in ourselves we remain weak and feeble and helpless, and dependent on God as we do at the first. We fail in a variety of ways. We may not live in sin; as we ought not to do. We need not be guilty of drunkenness and lieing and other evils; but still there is the failure now and then in our spirit, in our words, in our thoughts. Our deportment is not perfectly as Christ's deportment was while on earth even in the best condition in which human beings may be found as believers in Christ; therefore, we have still to own to the last moment of our life: "I am a poor weak sinner."

This I do day by day. Though seventy-one years and a half now I have been a believer by the grace of God, and hating sin and loving holiness, and bear in Christ somewhat of the image of God, yet I am not what I might be nor what I ought to be—in complete conformity to the image of God. I need the Saviour now just as ever. If any believers consider themselves now more deserving heaven, more worthy of heaven than they were at the first, they are deluded. I say advisedly, they need more than ever a Saviour. Why? Because, though they are not drunkards or thieves or habitual liars, yet failure and shortcoming are found in the very best of the believers in the Lord Jesus. Failure and shortcoming were found in a Peter, in a John, in the very writer of this letter—even in Paul. On one occasion he says, "There is nobody who can accuse me of anything I did before the council, except it be for this, that I cried out that I was there on account of holding the doctrine of the resurrection." He saw there were Pharisees and Sadducees there, and the Sadducees denied the resurrection, and he cleverly, cunningly, to bring disunion among them, said, "I am here as a believer in the resurrection," and he confesses this before the crowd and before the Roman Governor. There is a flaw, and a great flaw, found in the apostle in the cunning, crafty way in which he sought to bring about disunion between the Pharisees and Sadducees while he was standing before the governor, and he accomplished what he desired. Immediately after he had uttered the words there was disunion, and they were ready to pull him to pieces, so that the governor had to send down the soldiers to take him out of their midst on account of the party spirit which had been engendered.

I refer to this instance to show how even such an exceedingly holy man as the Apostle Paul was not free from failure and shortcoming, and, therefore, he needed a Saviour for this one single sin to save him from going into perdition. How doubly important, therefore, it is that we feel and own our weakness, our helplessness, our failure and shortcoming, and see our need of a Saviour, and that we simply, solely, and entirely put our trust in our Lord Jesus Christ as we did when we first came to Him. If anyone is found in such a state of heart, such a one is "standing in the Gospel," and this is what is necessary for peace and comfort of soul and joy in the Holy Ghost, being continued to us. But if we have high ideas about ourselves, and think that we do not need the Saviour as much as we did at the first, we are completely deluded, completely in the wrong road instead of being in the right road.

Mrs. A. R. Cousin.

Author of "Immanuel's Land," Etc.

THIS lady, whom the voice of the whole Christian Church ranks with Mrs. Alexander, Miss Havergal, Miss Elliot, Miss Waring, and other gifted sisters who in recent years have so greatly enriched our hymnology, is a daughter of the late Dr. Cundell, who after serving as a surgeon in the Army (at the battle of Waterloo, among other places), became a medical practitioner at Leith, but died while his daughter was but an infant. Removing to Edinburgh, she came under the influence of the late devoted Rev. D. T. K. Drummond, of St. Thomas's, and it was through him that Mrs. Cousin received her first serious spiritual impressions. She was greatly attracted likewise by the preaching and spirit of Dr. Moody Stuart, of St. Luke's Free Church, and found his ministry most edifying and refreshing. There, too, she used greatly to enjoy the occasional ministrations of the Bonars, Dr. Somerville, William Burns, and others.

At the time of her marriage to Rev. William Cousin that gentleman was minister of the Presbyterian Church at Chelsea, but soon after he removed to Scotland. At his death, in 1883, he was minister of the Free Church at Melrose. Mr. Cousin enjoyed a high reputation as an earnest and devoted minister of the Gospel, aiming constantly at the highest spiritual fruits, When that distinguished savant the late Sir David Brewster resided at Allerly, his country house, he was a member of Mr. Cousin's flock.

In the spirit of gentle, humble service, Mrs. Cousin, besides carefully rearing her own family, took an active part in those Christian labours which call for the help of the wife of an earnest minister, but she had no such specialty in that capacity as to call for particular notice. Indeed it is only since she passed her meridian that gifted Christian women have found the door open to those more public modes of service in which many of them engage with so much ability and so much benefit to others. But Mrs. Cousin did, from her earliest years, possess a special gift, and it is as one who has made memorable use of her talent, and consecrated it to the highest service of her Lord and Saviour, that we deem her entitled to a high place among Christian workers. From her early girlhood she was devoted to poetry, and was always trying to express herself in its forms. Her first poem was published in 1845 in The Christian Treasury, then under the editorship of Rev. Andrew Cameron, the subject being the second coming of Christ, and the title, "The Bride is Sitting Lonely." Some years ago she published a volume, entitled "Immanuel's Land and Other Pieces." A new edition of that volume has recently been published by James Nisbet and Co., containing additional pieces, well worthy of her previous fame.

There is hardly a hymn-book in the English tongue that does not include some of her hymns. Of her various pieces the best known, and perhaps we should say the favourite, is that which gives its title to the volume—"Immanuel's Land," and begins with the well-known line, "The sands of time are sinking." It was the fruit of a long, loving study of Samuel Rutherford's Letters. It is founded on his last words, "Glory dwelleth in Immanuel's Land." When written, it was not intended as a hymn; indeed the poem extends to nineteen stanzas, of which the hymn in our hymn-books usually contains but five or six, arranged in a somewhat different order from the original. Some of the omitted stanzas are very beautiful, as the reader will at once see from what we subjoin. Anwoth, to which reference is made, is the parish where Rutherford began his ministry and from which he was banished to Aberdeen, his "sea-beat prison."

E'en Anwoth was not heaven,
E'en preaching was not Christ;
And in my sea-beat prison
My Lord and I held tryst;
And aye my murkiest stormcloud
Was by a rainbow spanned,
Caught from the glory dwelling
In Immanuel's Land.

The little birds of Anwoth,
I used to count them blest,
Now beside happier altars
I go to build my nest;
O'er these there broods no silence,
No graves around them stand;

(From Photograph by Mr. C. Shaw, Bruntsfield Links, Edinburgh.)

For glory deathless dwelleth
In Immanuel's Land.

Fair Anwoth by the Solway,
To me thou still art dear!
E'en on the verge of heaven,
I drop for thee a tear.
Oh! if one soul from Anwoth
Meet me at God's right hand,
My heaven will be two heavens,
In Immanuel's Land.

Among the added poems in the new edition one on Augustine and his mother, Monica, is very touching; it bears on the conversation they had about heaven at Ostia, just before Monica's sudden death, and concludes thus:

O kindred hearts your co[n]verse pour,
Still fondly seated side [by] side;
For ye may commune t[hus] no more
Till throned amidst [the] glorified.

Yet down the ages ye [shall] go,
With linked name [thro'] many a clime;
A double star in me[mory's] glow,
A concord on the [ear] of time.

Grand lives of old! What thoughts of love
Are clustered [a]round you as their home!
Your strong abi[ding] charm can move
To-day the h[eart] of Christendom.

The early history of the Christian church has been a favourite study; several poems are founded on it.

The poems of Mrs. Cousin have nearly all a double note—sorrow and joy. Human life is full of trial; earth is beautiful but evanescent; nothing but disappointment and grief would befal us if, through the grace and love of God, a blood-sprinkled way had not been opened for us into the holiest of all, and provision made for the forgiveness of all our sins, the healing of all our souls' diseases, the full satisfaction of our hearts, and eternal felicity at God's right hand. To the Divine Redeemer whose sacrifice has procured this unparalleled inheritance, she is ever full of gratitude and praise. In her own path, amid many mercies, she has had to encounter her share of sorrows, one emphatically in recent days, but she has borne them in the spirit of her own lines written for a doubly-bereaved friend:—

We are not wronged, when to love's well-watched garden
Our Lord comes down and culls our fairest flowers,
Some new-spread lily, stately, pure, and fragrant,
More meet in sooth for his delights than ours.

His is no wanton hand that plucks unsparing,
Then casts the sweet but fading wreath aside;
His gathered lilies in his bosom bearing,
They bloom for Him, and in their bloom abide.

There was a fair bud and a fairer blossom,
Once in the garden of our love they grew;
Our Lord came down and raised them to his bosom
So gently that it shook not off the dew.

Now we've two bright expanding flowers in heaven,
Blooming in glory, sweet immortal flowers!
With struggling heart unto the Giver given,
His were they ever—and they still are ours.

Home of Industry.

The workers' meeting on April 21 was a small gathering, many being away at Easter time, but the Lord was present in our midst, and hearts were refreshed. The address by Rev. Frank Eardley was searching and helpful, and proved a stimulus to the workers. Object lessons were found in the life of Ezekiel concerning service, and of the Lord Jesus, God's perfect Servant.

Those who have gone far afield were remembered in prayer. Our sympathies were drawn out by two Armenian brethren who were led to pray and sing in their own language.

Mr. G. Hyde caused us to raise a note of praise for the work being done by the Gospel van in villages, especially in Essex, where the Lord has blessed the efforts to the conversion of souls. Miss Macpherson asked prayer for the seventy-third party now being gathered into the Training Home, each with a sorrowful tale caused mostly by the demon drink, which is devastating so many thousands of our homes. The last rescued lassie was found by a policeman weeping bitterly in the street, and was taken to the workhouse. She had been cruelly beaten, as proved by the severe bruises caused by cruel blows; it was her father who had dealt thus brutally with her, through the drink. How glad the little motherless girl was to be brought to our Home; the crying and trembling ceased when she found she was not going back to her cruel father.

F. A. W.

Natal Missionary Society.—Referring to the work which the Congregational Union of Natal has undertaken among the Zulus at Table Mountain Reserve, as described by Rev. Walter Searle in our last issue, the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society have agreed to £50 a year for two years at the disposal of the Natal Union for this mission.

Four Precious Things.

NOTES OF BIBLE-READING AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

By PRINCIPAL H. C. G. MOULE.

I AM about to read four short passages, linked together by one word, and all from the Epistles of Peter.

To them that have obtained like precious faith with us. (2 Pet. i. 1.)

That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. (1 Pet. i. 7.)

Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the Divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. (2 Pet. i. 4.)

Unto you which believe He is precious. (1 Pet. ii. 7.)

The order is a little complicated, but it is necessary to place the verses so, with regard to the light they may throw on one another. You see at a glance what the thread is which connects the four verses; it is the word "precious." Precious faith; precious trial of faith; precious promises; and the Lord who, to them that believe, is precious.

And what is the word "precious"? It is not a word of softness and emotion; it is a word which suggests to us the thought of cost. The faith, the trial, the promises, the Lord, are all gifts put into our hands, but they cost a great deal before they came to us. They cost the thought of God in his eternal plan of redemption; they cost the blood of the Lamb; they cost the infinite painstaking and caretaking of redeeming providence and grace. Yes, they have cost much, though to us they are all gifts of absolutely ungrudging love. They are things which we are to prize as well as to enjoy. They are like the water from the well of Bethlehem, which was absolutely free for David's use, but he looked on it with awe because it had cost, as it were, the very life of his heroes. And these gifts cost, not as it were but in fact, the life of the Son of God, who loved us and gave Himself for us, that He might give Himself to us.

So we have before us this morning a chain of Divine messages full of joy and rest, full of the secrets of a profoundly happy life. But they are also things to look upon with awe and godly fear. We can take them and without misgiving can use them heartily; but it must be as those who are always kneeling before the Giver, and adoring Him for the gift. And now a few words upon each in order. The Apostle speaks in our first utterance of those "who have obtained like precious faith with us." "With us"—meaning, I suppose, the first who distinctively believed—the Apostles themselves. "You have obtained," he seems to say, "a faith which is costly as God's gift, and which is just of the same quality as the gift that He gave to us—to me, Peter—that flesh and blood did not reveal to me, but the Father which is in heaven." The faith manifested in those first glorious days had not deteriorated in quality.

THE FOUR GOLDEN LINKS,

The word "obtained" reminds us of what Paul tells us in memorable words in Eph. ii., where he says, "and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God." It is God who has opened our eyes to see faith's Object; who has set the heart, bound by its own sin, free to go out to that Object, in the simplicity of trust.

Then it is "precious" faith. As we have considered, it is costly in itself though a gift to us, and it is priceless in the blessings which it brings. How does it bring blessing? Not by any virtue of its own. Is there any merit in trusting the infinitely Trustworthy One? Is there anything that should exalt us for a moment in our own eyes in the fact that we have fled for refuge to the hope set before us; that we rest on the Rock that is set beneath us? No; faith is not, properly speaking, in the least a recommending virtue before God. It is the sinner's clasp in drowning, upon the life-belt thrown to him; it is the sinner's rest in rescue, in the arms that are bearing him to the shore; it is the sinner standing in peace behind the mighty shield presented to the foe. Faith, from our point of view, is the opposite of merit. It is simply our willing recourse to mercy. And just because it is all this it is precious in the blessings that it brings. It is faith first, last, midst, and without end, that receives of the merits of Christ, of the presence and power of Christ, so that, not of itself but of Him, weakness is transformed into strength, irritability into noble peace, selfishness and complacency into the oblivion of self and the recollection of Christ—into desire for the blessing of God in the bond-service and help of others.

It is because faith is a receiving grace that it is so precious. In the Olney hymns, that deep treasure-house of Christian truth, Cowper calls faith a "blood-receiving grace." We may add that it is a receiving grace for all the blessings of God in Christ, which are ours through the blood of sacrifice, the blood of atonement, the blood of propitiation, the blood of sprinkling and of cleansing. Because this faith is precious, cherish it; not by continually looking at it, but by continually putting it into practice; remembering that in it you have this organ of reception, this open hand that takes, those burning lips of thirst and hunger which are just the receptacle of the bread and the wine of God; remembering that in it you have that through which Jesus Christ is to be not merely an outside benefit of infinite significance and certainty, but that which you know is in you, and grows in you, and makes all things new within and so around.

Then we come to our second link—the trial of your faith. Please to note that in this second passage it is not your faith that is said to be more precious than gold—it is

THE TRIAL OF YOUR FAITH.

That is obvious by a glance at the Greek, and can hardly be mistaken from the English. Faith is a thing which as it is used and employed demands trial. This may be illustrated in the familiar case of the man in danger of sinking in the deep water. If he has a life-belt in his hand or round his body, his reliance on that which upholds him is being continually tested and put to continually fresh verification by the peril of the circumstances bringing out the reality of the support.

Faith can scarcely be intelligently conceived without the trial of it. When I am trusting in anything, whatever it is, my reliance is being put to the test by the way I use the object of reliance. I am very ill and I send for the skilled physician who has helped me before. My reliance in him is put to the test, in his not telling me what his mode of operation is going to be, but asking me for personal confidence in him. If I knew all about what he was going to do it would not be a case of faith at all. And so in the daily life of the Christian, from the simplest thing up to the greatest, this trial of faith is precious because it keeps us in blessed remembrance of where our safety and our strength lie. It is precious because every real acceptance of the trial will deepen and will discipline the whole experience of the soul for the next trial. Alas for us when we let the trial go, and waste it in despondency, or in repining when it is over as to what it might have been.

One of the great opportunities in the exercise of the life of faith is assuredly this recollection of the preciousness of its trials, be they little or great. I was talking, only the other day as it seems, though it was so far away in distance, with a Christian friend at Jaffa—a veteran servant of God, who for years has served Him in missionary work in the hard field of Palestine. We were conversing about the life of faith in the Son of God. Deeply moving, instructive, and helpful it was to my own soul to listen to the humble language of that noble Christian as he spoke of the difficulties of his own past experience there, and how not many months ago he and his family were in circumstances of special peril. He said to me that it was not a matter of course or a very easy thing to exercise faith then. It took him time to gather the promises together and let the soul rest upon them, and to recollect what God was who is able to keep both body and soul of his people. He spoke of the tremendous reality of the trial of faith at such a time. God gave his servant the victory—that was evident to me. It was both humbling and touching to be asked to put myself into an experience which had never occurred in my life in any degree, and to ask myself how I should have believed then. That is one extreme aspect of the trial of faith; but such trials are full of precious teaching to those who pass through them. They are not things to sigh over, but to regard as elements in the life lived by faith in the Son of God. The trial of my trust in Him, whether in the great agony or the little fret, is much more precious than the fire-tried gold that perisheth. Be on the watch then for the preciousness of the trial as a test, a strain, a pull upon the cord—which is in fact a reliance on Christ by your needing soul.

(To be concluded.)

A Romanist's Death.

WHILE visiting a sick girl in one of our Dublin hospitals a few weeks ago, she pointed across the ward and said: "Do you see that empty bed there, sir?" "Yes," I replied; "what about it?" "A young girl died there last night—or, rather, early this morning." "Indeed," I said. "Did you know anything of her?"

"Oh, no," she answered, "but it was pitiful to hear her crying to the Virgin and saints to save her. Her friends brought the priest to hear her last confession, and anoint her for death; but when this was all over, and he had taken his leave, she was in a worse state of mind, apparently, than before. She seemed to know nothing of the way of salvation. How I longed to be allowed to tell her of the love of Jesus, and of the comfort and peace which comes from trusting in Him. But, of course, the hospital rules forbid anything like this. Her cries kept me awake most of the night, but they gradually grew feebler and feebler, till at last they ceased altogether, and in the morning the nurse told me she was dead."

Such a death scene is by no means rare in Ireland, where the Word of Life is withheld from her sons and daughters, where thousands are born, brought up, and die, without the knowledge of pardon and acceptance with God through Jesus Christ. Many who were at one time groping in the darkness of Romanism, are now rejoicing in the Lord Jesus Christ, having come to know Him through reading the Scriptures. The Irish Church Colportage Mission is seeking to place the Bible in the hands of Roman Catholics, that they may learn how to live and how to die. At present we can maintain only six colporteurs in the field, so that many places must necessarily remain untouched.

(Rev.) W. MORTIMER WEIR.

3, Westmoreland-street, Dublin, April 20.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Missionary Week.

Text for Sunday.—"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth labourers into his harvest." Matt. i., 37-38.

Hymns—Songs and Solos, 473; Christian Choir, 13.

THIS month I am myself the one to write from a foreign land, to tell you something about missionary work, for I am in North Africa. Though only five days' travel from London, very few of the people here have ever heard the Gospel, and, though they know God and Jesus Christ by name, very few have yet learned of the love that gave Jesus to die. They number perhaps twenty millions, nearly all being followers of Mohammed, but a good many are Jews. Although I have travelled in all the North African countries, and have talked much with the people, I hardly ever found any who wanted to hear the Gospel, and those who did had almost always been led to ask because of what they had seen and felt of true Christian lives among them. Abroad, as at home, it is the life that tells.

To-day our story will be of Mohammed himself, that wonderful man who has taught so many millions all he knew about God, yet who knew so little. His followers are to be found from China to Morocco, and from Zanzibar to Russia, the widest-spread religion but that of Christ. Mohammed was but a camel driver in Arabia, whose father worshipped idols in an ancient temple at Mekkah, close to the well believed to be that shown to Hagar and Ishmael in the Wilderness, and said to have been built by Abraham. It stands there yet, the Kaabah, towards which all Mohammedans turn in prayer, and to which all who can make a pilgrimage, for the Arabs are the great nation promised by God as the children of Ishmael.

As a thoughtful fellow, Mohammed saw that the idols could not answer his prayers, and from the Jews and Christians thereabouts he learned something of the One Living God, for his time was some five hundred years after Christ. But Mohammed never had an opportunity of knowing the simple truth about Christ, as the accounts in his book, the Koran, show, and he never came across spirit-filled Christians. Had he done so he would probably have been another Paul, but the lives of those he knew were not Christ-like lives, and he never had the chance. Do not let us forget how many who are watching us will be helped or hindered by what they see.

So Mohammed began to teach a jumble religion—a good deal from the Old Testament, a little from the New, and much out of his own head, which he said was a revelation from God. This religion, called Islam, or "Resignation" (i.e., to the will of God), only exists because the early Christian Church failed to do its duty, and it will continue till we do ours. Had Christian missionaries carried out our Lord's commands as well as those of Mohammed carried out his, that religion could hardly have existed. At first he met with small success, though I am sure he was an earnest, good man, as many of his followers are, but after a while success made him proud, and he began to think himself all his flatterers said he was, till he put himself above all but Christ, and claimed to be the promised Comforter!

Yet he always acknowledged Christ to be greater than he was, and his followers never utter that holy name without adding—as they do with Mohammed's and several others—"the prayers of God and peace be on Him." One day, Mohammed said, the Angel Gabriel stood by his bedside at Mekkah, and told him to mount a white mule named Lightning, on that he immediately found himself sitting on Mount Moriah, where Solomon's Temple stood, at Jerusalem. Thence he was taken into seven heavens. In the first he saw Adam, who bowed down before him. In the second was Enoch, who did the same. In the third was Abraham, his ancestor, who bowed down nevertheless, and in the fourth was Moses, who also paid his self-styled successor homage. In the fifth was David, who acknowledged that Mohammed was the greater writer; but in the sixth was Jesus the Christ, who alone could admit into the presence of God in the seventh—how beautiful and true a thought! At the sight of Jesus Mohammed himself did obeisance before he returned to earth. Oh, that all who have followed him so far might be led further by Christ!

Mohammed's book teaches many true things of Christ, whose whole life on earth is recorded there except its grandest scene, when He laid down his life for you and me, when the vail was rent that all might enter the holiest place. It says that being the Spirit of God He could not die, and that another suffered in his likeness, He ascending directly to heaven. But a religion without a saviour is not a religion for sinful man, and with all its advantages over the worship of idols, Mohammed's creed has failed to produce a changed life. Yet how many there are who know why Christ died, yet who do not realise it was for them, who might as well or better be Mohammedans! I trust there is not one among you who will leave this matter unsettled, but that everyone who has not done so already will at once ask God to accept and forgive you because Christ has died and bought you. And pray, too, for the people of those lands who know it not, and ask how you may help to teach them.

Facts About North Africa.

Stretching the whole length of the Mediterranean Sea are the empire of Morocco, the French possessions of Algeria and Tunis, the Turkish possession of Tripoli and Egypt, now in English hands. In all these lands there is freedom to preach the Gospel, but as yet there are not many over a hundred missionaries. Most of their work is done in the homes of the people, which are open only to women, but medical work opens many doors, and something is done, too, by way of education, especially among the children, who are very neglected. Yet here and there God has raised up native witnesses, who, in some parts, have stood much persecution, and in Morocco some have gone forth to teach and baptize others. But the number of converts is very small, Tangier, whence our story comes, is almost opposite Gibraltar, only thirty miles away, but very different. It is the chief seaport of Morocco, the Sultan of which is still only a youth.

Uncle Ted.

Uncle Tom Home Again.

I am very glad to be once more "at home" to my young friends. I see from the lists that there are quite a number of fresh ones who have joined while I have been away. I hope by degrees to make their acquaintance through their letters.

I think you and Uncle Ted have been getting on famously, and it seems almost a pity for me to come again to take his place. But he has gone off on another of his long journeys, to the wilds of Morocco or some other outlandish place. However, I know he will often be thinking of you and praying for you, as I hope you will for him. You will, I am sure, be interested in the letter he has sent this week, and look for another soon.

So after this week the Young People's Page will, as before, be edited by your old friend,

Uncle Tom.

Personal.

The Indian Famine.—Once more let us call to mind the terrible need this summer in India, of which the newspapers give us accounts, and do not let us remit our self-denial for hunger. You will remember what I said in the spring—that the famine must last for months, till the new crops have ripened, for which let us pray for abundant rain next month, that they may be full and rich. But India is not alone in being afflicted with famine this year, for many other countries have suffered from lack of rain. The South of Spain, in which I have been travelling, and here in Morocco, the drought has been very severe, besides which parts of this country are overrun with locusts, so that later I may have to ask you to send some of your contributions to the missionaries in North Africa to feed the starving little ones.

Louie Penny.—It was very kind of you to write such a long, interesting letter. Charlotte Cane (South Africa).—It was a pity your certificate got bent in the post. Am glad you find the Searcher a help. M. McM. Thomson.—You must write your answers with more care. I could not read them this week. Janet C. Black.—Many thanks for your letter. I am so grieved to hear of Chrissie's death. Hilda Skinner.—Your letter was unstamped, and twopence had to be paid for it. Bessie Whitehead (South Africa).—Your letter this week is overweight, so I had to pay fivepence.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, St. Andrew's, New Kent-road (Sun. 11 and 3 o'clock, week-days 7.30), May 1-9; Smithills, May 16. Mr. Reginald Callender, Oakley Mission Hall, Onslow-square, April 29; Shaftesbury Hall, Ealing (3.30), May 1; Shrewsbury Home, Shooter's Hill, May 5; Alexandra Hall, Cambridge, May 6; St. Stephen's, Wandsworth, May 8; Penge, May 25; Ealing, May 27; Weybridge, May 30. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Hayward's Heath, April 29; Southboro', April 30; Brighton, May 1-5; Gt. Baddow, May 10-14. Mr. H. Hankinson, Newport to May 4; Upton Bishop, May 5; Ross, May 5-6; Hereford, May 7; St. Luke's, Redcliffe-square, May 13; Addlestone, May 27. Mr. Geo. Goodman, Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, to May 2; Bromley, May 8-16. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Broughton Park, Manchester, to May 3. Mr. E. Hughes, Woolwich, May 2-7; Balham Grove, May 3; Castle Yard, Holland-street, May 7; Reeve Mission, Baker-street, May 15; Mall Hall, Notting Hill Gate, May 17. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting (with caravan), Earl Stonham from May 6. Mr. Lidstone, New Malden, May 9-12. Mr. Phillips Welch, Institute, St. George's, Hanover-square, May 4.

Easter Holiday Meetings continued by Mr. Josiah Spiers, Denning Hall, Hampstead, to April 30 inclusive, at 11 and 7 o'clock.

Half Yearly Meetings for Local Secretaries and friends.—Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 13 (3 and 6.30); Gordon Hall, Liverpool, May 14 (3 and 6.30); Bolton, Central Hall, May 18, at 7.30.

Bible Searcher (No. 69).

☞ Rules sent on receipt of a penny stamp.

All answers from the Scripture Union portions for April. Children under ten do the first three; under thirteen the first six.

1. What did Christ teach us that it is necessary for us to do when we pray, if we wish to be forgiven (Mk. xi.)?
2. What commandments did Christ say are the first and greatest of all?
3. What does God desire rather than sacrifices and burnt-offerings? (Hosea vi.)
4. What does Hosea tell us about the ways of the Lord?
5. What did Christ say when He drove the sellers and changers out of the Temple? Whence was He quoting?
6. What was the question and answer on which Christ was condemned to death?
7. What Scripture are we told was fulfilled in his death? Quote the whole Old Testament verse, giving reference.
8. What did Christ say must be published before the end comes, and where?
9. What does Christ tell us to do with regard to his coming again?

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 68.)

1. Song ii. 11-13.
2. Ho. xiv. 5.
3. Is. xxxv. 1-2.
4. Is. xxxii. 20.
5. 2 Ch. iv. 5.
6. Job xiv. 1-2.
7. Ps. ciii. 17.
8. Is. xl. 7-8.
9. Ja. i. 9-11.
10. 1 Pe. i. 25.

Fifth Prize Competition.

FIRST PRIZES.

Division 1.—Evelyn E. Hewer, Constance Gabbett.

Division 2.—Thea Guimpess, Gladys M. Phipps, William Aston, Arabella V. G. Onslow, Ida Cole.

Division 3.—Dora Colebrook, Eleanor M. J. Hatchett, Willie A. Findlay.

Division 4.—Norman Quintin Johns, Margery Matthews, John Walter Thomson, Mary Eleanor Clarke.

SECOND PRIZES.

Division 1.—Jessie C. Palmer, Margery Smart.

Division 2.—Reginald J. Hatchett, Alice M. Palmer Maggie Menzies, John William Wheeler, Gracie Barnes Flora Simmons.

Division 3.—Ruth E. Harrison, May Bligh, Evelyn Lowndes Moir.

Division 4.—Richard Holdsworth Williams, Gertrude W. Vellacott, Florence K. Bellerby, May V. Hunter.

FIRST CERTIFICATES.

Division 1.—Charles Wright, Elizabeth B. Black.

Division 2.—Ada E. Palmer, Nellie Dowsett, Dorothy G. Hewer, Frank R. Wilson, Ada M. Vickers, Lionel Calvert, Willie Palmer, Eric Studd, Kenneth H. V. Soltau, Wm. Fred. Williams, Leslie W. A. Berry, Mary T. Colville, Mary E. Plumb, Mary Charles, Lilian M. Ellacott, Kenneth J. D. Dunbar, Betty Stocks, James S. Jackson, Winifred Harvey, Lilian Blackie, Maude F. Tyson, Margaret A. Morris, Janet C. Black, Dorothy Cooper.

Division 3.—Helen M. Hunter, Eva L. Oakes, Christopher Fidler, Isabel W. Phipps, Jessie G. Pook, Frances Taggart, Cecil F. Robertson, Lilian G. Boxer, Walter C. Perryman, Lilian G. Willoughby, Randolph Daintree, Maggie F. Palmer, Elsie G. Wright, Janet Thomson, Margaret G. Charles, Ethel Williamson, Stuart T. Ellacott, Lucy M. Soltau, Agnes M. Sterry, Mabel Cole, Thomas Mack.

Division 4.—Eva Christine Monti, Chas. Hunter, Maria Morris, Ethel M. Light, Kate G. Johns, John Menzies, Ada K. Blackie, Elsie Johnson, Helen M. Willoughby, Kathleen E. V. Ashworth, Thos. A. Kirkpatrick, Laura B. Macaulay, Ethel Beauchamp, Gertrude Kingerlee, Rosetta M. Sherwin, Frederica H. Hunton, May Watson, Bessie H. Millar.

SECOND CERTIFICATES.

Division 1.—Nelly M. Peachey, Wm. E. Clarke, Jack Harris.

Division 2.—Gladys Calvert, Edward G. Reeve, Edyth M. Reeve, Cecil K. Dodd, John Benger, Dorothy Hughes-Games, Mary A. S. Law, Teresa Blackie, William Charles, Daisy Groves, Dorothy E. Harris, Sabina E. Mackintosh, Allan L. Woodman, Louie Peachey, Ernest P. Herivel, Ellen L. Skinner, Bessie M. Cheale, Frank Thompson, Hubert V. Kirkpatrick, Dolly Penny.

Division 3.—Arthur P. Turnbull, Jeanie Robertson, Muriel Shaw, Willie Bellerby, Euphemia C. Graham, Edith S. Tyson, Evelyn H. Wood, Susie A. Keen, Annie Cooper, Ethel Morgan, Alf. Penny, Mary E. Tongue, Vera M. Fulcher, Herbert A. Wright, Harry G. H. Wright, Jessie G. R. West, Margaret L. Pook, Mary S. Ballingal, Kate Fletcher, Gertrude Kirkpatrick.

Division 4.—Ashley H. Bowker, Muriel Reeves-Palmer, Kathleen M. Light, Maggie S. Smith, Guinefred L. Leigh, Anna E. Leigh, B. H. Spencer, Mena Hunter, Gertrude B. Brookfield, Lavinia E. S. Barnes, Constance A. Andrews, Winifred M. Page, Nellie Couch, Mary L. Tibbits, Helen C. M. Daniels, Jane E. Kirkpatrick, Mary Maitland-Kirwan, Ethel Hutchings, Constance L. Godfrey, Edith M. Cole, Constance Scott, Nellie Walker, Claud Donaldson-Selby, Flora M. King, Bessie Fletcher, Ellen Drake, Hilda Rawson, Minnie Giddings.

HONOURABLE MENTION.

Fanny and Nelly Ames, Aline Bazett, Emily Bridgewater, Gulielma Cheal, Maud Cleal, Ruth Coupe, Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Dorothy and N. A. M. Dyke, Lilian Fidler, Maggie Fletcher, Bella and Abraham Mack, Dora Marples, Arthur Lowndes Moir, W. M. Penny, George W. Powell, Gracie Reeve, Olive Robertson, Gertrude Scott, Isabel Salt, Ethel Taylor, Grace Wright, Phillis Wright.

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 59.—Maria H. Listor, Daisy McArthur, J. Garrett (S. Africa). No. 60.—Charlotte Cane, Maria H. Lister, Daisy McArthur (S. Africa). No. 62.—L. M. Knight (America). No. 61.—Una Whitehead, Anna Lombard. No. 63.—Jean C. Scott, D. H. Marshall (Canada). No. 64.—Winnie and Helen Gartshore, Jeanie Scott, Hy. and Annie Baillie, D. H. Marshall (America).

No. 67.—Correct answers received from:—

Fanny and Nellie Ames, M. J. Arres-Mather, Marion and Ernest Aldwinckle, Wm. Aston, Lizzie Athole, W. T. Aldous, A. R. Anton, Violet Ashworth*, Olive and G. Andrews, Dorothy G. Arbuthnot*, Hy C, Barefield, Jn. Baring, Charlotte Bailey*, H. Braddon, Lil., Ter., K., and R. Blackie, Geo. Brand, G. and Elsie Bartlett, A. H. Baker, E. B.* and J. C. Black, Millicent and Wallace Bentley, Steph. and Gr. Benians, Fl. and Wm. Bellerby, Herbert* and L.* Berry, L. Bentall, Emily Bridgewater, M. Birney, Bert. Brotchie, Robt. G. Browne, Ph. Boyd, Ralph Bourne, Stan. Boxer, N. Brookfield, A. Boniface, L. Berthe*, D. A. Bennie, Nadine Beauchamp, May and Gn. Bligh, A. H. Bowker, Wm. E. Clarke, Lionel and G. Calvert, Dthy. J. Clarke, Lottie Carter, Mag., Jessie, and Walt.* Carter, M. M. and C. M. Craven, V. J. Chamberlin, Mab. Campbell, Md. Clarke, J. A. Chamberlain, Elnr. Chance, Mde. J. Cleal*, B.

Cheale, Wm. and Hld. Cheesman, Arthur M. Cole, Rth. Coupe, Dthy. Cooper, H. R. Compton. Ed., F., and Dora Corrie, Ed., M., Mab., A. M., and Ida C. Cole, M. T. Colvill*, Susie, and Ethel Cumbers, My. and Wm. Charles, My. E. Clarke*, Hy. J. Cheney, Ly. Coles, Hy., Annie, Arthur, and N.* Couch, Nina Coote, Marj. Collins, F. and B. Dance, R. Daintree, Ed. Daisley, Mgt. Davison, Vera Dickinson, May Dring, C. K. and E. A. Dodd, N. and Wm. Dowsett, Gr.* and A. K. Doddington, Arnold M. Donzall, Cld., Kitty, Vlt., G., and Ivy G. Donaldson-Selby, Kath. Dunbar, Gdn. S. Duncan, Dthy., M., and Hjy. Dyke, Ernest Dunn, Lln. M. Ellacott*, Wm. and E. Edmonds, Eva L. Edmundson, Mrn. G and Jas. I. Freegard, Bessie. Kate, Mag., and Mbl. Fletcher, Thos. H. Firth*. Amy Foster, Janetta S. Fullarton, Annie Fleming, Fr. A. and A. E. Figgis, Ln.* and Chris. Fidler, Wm. A., Reg., and Er. Findlay, Fy. and Wm. Field, Lee Gardner, E. C. Graham, Constance Gabbett, Lillie Grierson, My. E.* and Afrd. and Dy. L. Greenacre, M. Giddings, Nellie* and Rex Hatchett, Victor Henry, Stan., Fl., and Fr. Hoyte, Rose Hamilton, Wm. Harvey*, Met. Hassé, May Handsayde, Thos. and Jack Harris, Amy F. Hersey, Evelyn E. and Dthy. G.* Hewer, Emily and Ed. Hearn, Ada Heap, Thea Hill, Lizzie Hill, E. C. S. Hogge, Mgt. D. Hogg, Nellie, Horsford, Vlt. Holford*. Dthy. and Joshua Hughes-Games, Tom M., May V.. Helen and Harcourt Hunter, Dthy. E. and Fs. E. Harris, Eliz. Hill, Ed. L., Chas. and Mena Hunter, Gladys Isaac. Murl. G. Joselyne, K. G. Johns, Sinc. and Mon. Jackson, Dud., Dora, and Gr. Joyce, El. Johnson, Alex.. Isa., Agnes*, Tom*, and Wm.* Kay, Hjrt., Jane E., and Gert. Kirkpatrick, Rebe M. King, Susie Keen*, Gert, Kingerlee, Sidney E. and My. A. Law, Ruth Lane*, Ted Lawrence, Ethel Larwill Doke Lewis, Md. F. Leigh, K. M. Light, Hannah Lovell, Ln., Grahame, and Murray Lloyd, May Leigh, Margie and Gracie* Marston. Ella MacEacharn, Barbara Maconchy, Geo. McDonald, Abm., Thos., Nellie, and Bella Mack, Mgt. J. Macphee, Flor. Mackenzie, My. D. and E. Valerie Maitland-Kirwan, Ian D. Macgregor, Dora and Alan Marples, Agnes*, Mag., and Jn. Menzies, H. M. Medill, Reg. V, Measor, Arthur L. Moir, L. F. Morice, Dthy. Morrisson, Hilda Matheson, Ls. Matthews, S. S. Mackintosh, Marg. and Trev. Matthews, Hy. Malaher, Enid and Gladys Mather, Tita and Daisie MacKenzie, Nellie Meade, Dthy. and Mgt. A. Morris, Ger. and Eth. E. Morgan, Les. Morris, E. L. Moir, Eva Monti, Fr. L. Munce, M. and A. Nottage, A. V. G. Onslow, Geo. O'Beirne, L. and H. Orr, Mde. and Eva Oakes, Douglas Parkes*, Alice M. Palmer*, Dthy. Patten, Duncan Payne, Horace H. Palmer, My. Palmer, Mag., Ada, Willie, and Jessie C.* Palmer, Dolly and My., Louie and W. M. Penny. Dthy. Piper*, Kahl Piggott*, F. S. Phillips, Isabel* and G. M. Phipps, Lizzie and Wm. Porter, J. G., Mgt., and Lln. Pook, My. E. Plumb*, E. M.* and K. A.* Pasley, Win. Page*, Louie and Nelly Peachey, W. C. Perryman, Ed. Quick, Mbl. Redwood, Clara Riley, Jn. and Martha Rogers, Leo.* Roberts, Theo. Roberts, Cecil, Sydney, and Olive Robertson, C. L. Romaues, Ml. Reeves Palmer, Al. and Con. Rouse, Flora A. Shadbolt, Frank and M. Dthy. Stalker, Margery Smart, Undine, Gwen. K., and Eric Shaw, Ernest Stevens, Barb. and Hld. Stevenson, R. Sherwin, Ernest Spencer, Ada M. Spencer*, Syd. Smith, Ha. Skinner, L. and K. Soltau, Gert. E., C. M., and Mildred Scott, Eric Studd, Emily Stuart, Bessie Symes, Con. and Hilda Schaeffer, Ed. Saunderson, T. M. Stanier, Doll. Salt, Ernest and E. Fred. Seymour, N. Skinner, Herb. Strickland, Annie Tawse, Frances Taggart, Ethel Taylor, Janet* and J. W.* Thomson, My. Tongue, F. K. Thompson, L. Tibbits, Ol. Tritton, Fr. H. Trotter, Ed. and Mde. Tyson, Gert. Vellacott*, May Vickers*, Fan. and Alec Waring, Ida F. Watson, C. H. Washington, Elsie Willoughby, Arth. Wright, Phillis, Noel, and Cecile Wright, E. M. White, Hy. J. and Q. Williams, Prin. Wilson, Connie Wood, Hetty Wodson, Madge Wallace*, Willie Wheeler, Chas. and Jessie West, Fk. Wilson, Elsie, Grace, and Ida Wright, Gertie M. Wood, Ed. H. Wood, Ibla and Allan Woodman, Cecil and Edgar Yeldury.

No. 68.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Ernest and Mn. Aldwinckle, Vt. Ashworth*, Ad. and On. J. Akers, W. T. Aldous, Wm. Aston*, Clara Barnes, Herb. Braddon, Alice N. Biddle, Gn., May, and Dy.* Bligh, Phillis Boyd*, N. Brookfield, Bert. Brotchie, Sarah Buckingham, Md. Clarke, R. C., Eleanor, Eric, and E. S. Chance, Dthy. J. Clarke, Md. J. Cleal, Wm. and Hd. Cheesman, Lu. Collins, Ida C., Annie M., Mabel, and Ed. M. Cole, Mgt. Davison, Fl. and Bell Dance, Vera Dickinson, N. Dowsett, Ivy G., Cld. and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, K. and G. Dodington, Ln. M. Ellacott, Kate Fletcher, Con. Gabbett*, Lee Gardner, N.* and R. Hatchett, Nellie Horsford, Fl. Hutchins, Dthy.* and J. Hughes-Games, G. Isaac, Robt. Jones, Mn. and Ey. Kelk, Ted and A. Lawrence, Lydia*, and Alice E. Ladd, Ruth Lane*, M. and S. Law, Miriam G. and Margie Marston, Geo. McDonald, May McCallum, Helen Mickelburgh*, L. F. Morice, A. and G. Onslow, Horace H. Palmer, My. Palmer, J. E. Pearce, Louie and W. M. Penny, Hjrt.* and J. Melbourne Perry, Alf. and Dy. Penny, W. C. Perryman, J. L. and M.* Pook, W. S. and L. M. Porter, My. E. Plumb, Hilda Rawson*, Mabl.* and Alice Redwood, Gn. Remington, Margery Smart, Flora A. Shadbolt, H. and Con. Schaeffer, Hld., Barb., Stevenson, B. H. and Ada M. Spencer, Ernest Stevens, Kath. Shepherd, Flora Simmons, Fl. Smith, B. Stocks*, J. and E. Snowball, Mildred Scott, E. Studd, Fr. Taggart, Annie Tawse, A. M. and Win. E. Thomson, Mde. and Ed. Tyson, May* and Dthy.* Vickers, Cy. H. Washington, Willie* and Edith* Wheeler, Fk. R. Wilson*, Prin. Wilson, Q. and H. J. Williams, Allan* and Ibla Woodman.

Donation List.

Indian Famine Children (Mrs. Bruere).—Miss M. S., £5; Bible Class, Barn, Churchdown, 13s. 6d.; H. P., 7s. 6d.; E. T. C., 1s. 6d. Total £6 2s. 6d.

Indian Famine.—Knock Mullen, Household, 4s. 6d.; C. F. R., 1s.; I. C., 1s.; A. C. and E. L. R., 2s.; G. K., 6d.; Willie and Nellie, 1s.; A. J., 1s.; A Little Cornish Maiden, 11s. 6d.; C. B., 1s.; Sunday-school Class, per H. P., 2s. 6d. Total £1 6s.

Cripples' Bathing Machine.—G. K., 6d.; D. J. C., 1s.; T. and D. McK., 1s.; F. L. M., 1s.; M. W., 1s.; A. C. and Children, 1s.; F. A. S., 1s. Total 6s. 6d.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S. Hebrews	i. 1-14.		Th. Hebrews	iii. 12-19.
M.	,,	ii. 1-9.	F.	,,	iv. 1-16.
Tu.	,,	ii. 10-18.	Sat.	,,	v. 1-14.
W.	,,	iii. 1-11.

St. Malo Sailors' Rest.

The report for 1896 has been issued, showing that the Rest continues to be a boon to the many seamen trading to this port; some 3000 of these have visited the institution during the year. A Mission service has been held throughout the year.

It is wished to secure the help of a good man, who will carry on services on unsectarian lines. A suitable missioner is in view, but help will be required so as to offer him a fair stipend.

Postal and Telegraph Men.

The annual conference of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (senior) was recently held in the City Temple. Delegates were present from Edinburgh, Wakefield, Yorkshire, Sheffield, Leicester, Portsmouth, Eastbourne, Bath, Bristol, and other distant branches, as also from branches nearer and in the vicinity of London. Rev. G. C. Grubb, Mrs. Penn Lewis, Miss Brabazon (of Eastbourne), Mr. Albert Head and Colonel Oldham led the several meetings.

From the opening conference right through the different meetings there was a stillness and consciousness of God's presence. At the conference hour on "Work of the Branches," some valuable suggestions were made by the delegates, who returned to their several centres praising God for blessings they had received.

[364]

The Jubilee and Missions.

WOULD you allow a friend of Missions to suggest a practical way of utilising the remarkable popular enthusiasm of the British people in this memorable year that marks the sixtieth anniversary of the accession of Queen Victoria? One of the most remarkable developments of this Victorian era, and one of the latest, is the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, which has enrolled about 10,000 young men and women in its ranks and sent probably 1000 additional workers to the field. This is a statement in round numbers, but is not far from the truth when we consider how many who have been inspired by it with a missionary enthusiasm have found work nearer at hand, if not in foreign lands.

There is needed now a memorial building in London to be used for the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, where missionary volunteers and departing or returning missionaries, without regard to denomination or field, might find a common meeting place. It need not be an expensive structure, and might either be built anew or reconstructed from some existing building. But it should contain a missionary library and reading-room, which might be combined with a missionary museum, and should have a moderate-sized hall for prayer meetings, etc., and a caretaker's rooms, which might be occupied by some student volunteer. Such a building would become the natural and habitual resort of young men and women who have the mission field in view, and of missionaries passing through or temporarily residing in London and vicinity. It would be a common place of concourse and intercourse for the friends of a world's evangelisation without distinction of sect or field of work. Perhaps God may prompt some reader of these lines to furnish site or building, or both, as a memorial of this great Jubilee year.

Further, may I suggest that permanent funds be raised for each of the following objects—perhaps some of them are already in contemplation:—(1) By each of the great societies for the establishment of medical missions, with hospitals and dispensaries, throughout the British Empire; (2) For the relief of returned, disabled, and indigent missionaries, unable from their meagre means to provide against declining years; (3) For a permanent educational home for the children of missionaries, who for any reason cannot without risk to health or morals continue with their parents in the field. The few such homes now existing do not meet the need; (4) For the setting up of Christian printing presses in the needy and especially newly-opened fields of foreign missions, to be known as the Queen's Jubilee presses; (5) That the Bible Society issue a special Jubilee edition of the Scriptures in a form so cheap and popular as to be almost gratuitous, and adapted to the widest circulation, so that every British subject may easily possess one.

These are some of the ways whereby the immense tide of popular enthusiasm attending the jubilee celebrations may be utilised for vast and lasting blessing to the whole cause of our common Lord.

Arthur T. Pierson.

58, Ladbroke-grove, Notting Hill, April 24.

Gosport Seamen's Mission.

The work in Gosport town and on the shipping in Portsmouth Harbour continues to be blessed of God. The "Bethel" recently has justified the name given to it. During a week of services, conducted by Messrs. Melling and Durrant, some are giving evident tokens that old things have passed away, and all things are become new. Believers, too, have got a lift heavenward. Services were held for the children.

The testimony of a merchant seaman who had spent his evenings at the Bethel shows the necessity for such a refuge. It would have rejoiced the hearts of the contributors to the work to have heard him praising God that he had been led among those who were really the seamen's friends. Visiting the ships in harbour with bags of books, the missionary is heartily welcomed everywhere. The record of a work like this need only be presented to the Lord's people to command their practical and prayerful sympathy. Mrs. Henry Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, will gladly receive the help of friends.

Sailors' Orphans in Scotland.

THE annual meeting of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland was held last week in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow—Mr. R. S. Allan presiding.

The secretary intimated that he had received a letter from Mr. Cayzer, M.P., in which he said:—"I am glad to find that during the past year 533 children have been provided for in the Mount Blow Home, in the two houses in Glasgow, and at their mothers' homes, whilst the families helped represented upwards of 1000 children who have received outdoor assistance, which has enabled the mother to keep the home together. I understand the trustees now find that the Mount Blow Home is insufficient, that the boys and girls must have separate homes, and that it is essential that the younger boys and girls should be provided for in the country. Though the trustees have for some time been looking out for a suitable site on which to build homes, I regret to learn that so far they have not been successful, and that, unless they get one presented to them, £20,000 will be required to purchase ground and build homes. As last year I promised £5000 to build a boys' home, I shall now have much pleasure in increasing my donation to £10,000 for this object, trusting that others will come forward and subscribe the amount required to enable the trustees to start the new homes during the year."

The Chairman said that the trustees were at a loss to express their gratitude to Mr. Cayzer for his munificent donation. They looked upon it as a call to go forward with the work even more thoroughly and earnestly than they had done in the past. The Society undertook to find out the widows and orphans of sailors and render them assistance. Their hands had been considerably strengthened by Mr. Cayzer's offer, and if the public of Glasgow were stimulated by this gift, he trusted that within the next year or two the Society would be enabled to erect homes of its own.

The annual report stated that eighty-five new children had been received, which, added to the 448 at the beginning of the year, made a total of 533 who had passed through their hands; but while that was the number actually taken on to the roll, there were in the families represented 1006 children, all of whom might be said to have derived some help through the Society. There were a great many schemes before the public at present to commemorate Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, but the trustees thought there could be no more fitting scheme than to provide homes for the orphan children of seamen who had had so much to do with the progress and prosperity of the country during the past sixty years. Mr. John Galloway and Mr. J. H. Maclay also spoke on behalf of the work.

Since the annual meeting was held we learn that another friend has promised £1000 towards the new Homes.

Conference in Shansi.

Last year a conference of missionaries and Chinese Christians was held at T'ai Yuen Fu, Shansi, North China. Another conference has been held, and it has been decided to hold the meetings annually. The societies thus uniting are the American Board, the Baptist Missionary Society, China Inland Mission, and the Sheo Yang Mission. Dr. E. H. Edwards, of the Schofield Memorial Hospital (Sheo Yang Mission) has been appointed secretary.

The meetings which have closed were held in T'ai Yuen Fu, Feb. 14-16, and have been most successful. The predominant note of the Conference was very happily struck by Dr. Edwards, at the Saturday prayer meeting, by an address on the words, Shen Chih Yeh Su, "to know Jesus well." The subjects for discussion were: "The Observance of the Sabbath," "Christian Education," "Distribution of the Scriptures," "Family Religion," and "The Culture of the Spiritual Life." The meetings were closed by a united communion service, when ninety-seven native Christians partook of the Lord's Supper. Altogether more than 250 Chinese Christians and inquirers were present, and some of them had travelled considerable distances. The missionaries were responsible for expenses, but the Chinese themselves made a very good subscription also.

Arthur Sowerby.

THE EVANGELIST.

Striving for the Strait Gate.

By THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

Jesus Christ, when He was on earth, pointed out two gateways; and they remain to this day. One of them is the "gate which leadeth unto life"; the other is the "gate which leadeth to destruction." The first gate He described as "strait" or narrow; the second is a "wide" gate, and opening out into an exceedingly broad road that was, and is, thickly travelled. This latter gate is very easily found; it is the popular road of self-gratification and self-indulgence; it allows a wide berth for "free thinking" and free living, and those who travel there are not required to give much thought about God, or the Day of Judgment, or a coming eternity. There is no need to rear pulpits or to employ preachers to point out this wide entrance; one has only to obey his sinful inclinations and run with the crowd; "many there be who go in thereat."

The great object of Christ's coming into this world was to open the "strait gate," to lay out the road, to guide all those who tread it, and to secure their full and final salvation. On one occasion, by a very bold metaphor, he declared, "I am the Door; by Me if any man enter in he shall be saved." Why is this gateway to the Christian life called "narrow"? Did Christ mean to say that his power, or his pity, or his love were limited? No, indeed; for nothing under heaven could be more unlimited than his gracious, loving invitation, "Whosoever will, let him come." He simply meant that his gate was "strait" or narrow because it did not allow perfect latitude of opinion or utter laxity of conduct. No one is permitted to say, "Henceforth I am my own master; I shall do as I like." Favourite sins and self-indulgences are contraband at that strait gateway. Pride cannot drive through its coach-and-four; sensuality cannot smuggle in its harlots, or its hampers of strong drink; the worldling cannot bring in his worship of Mammon, or the covetous man his greed of lucre; and no self-righteous sinner is permitted to stalk in and assert that he has no need of the righteousness of Jesus Christ. To everyone who approaches this blessed gateway of salvation the loving Saviour gives the firm command, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself!"

"Strive to enter in at the strait gate!" said Jesus Christ. It was to be no child's play. It is no holiday business to deny self, to put the knife to wicked appetites, to break from dangerous associations, to face possible ridicule, to cut loose from entangling sins. If there be one person reading this article who honestly desires this new and noble life, I would say to him or her—there are many things to hold you back. The Evil One does not go out of human hearts in these days, any more willingly than he did in the olden Bible-times, and only at the bidding of Christ. Pray earnestly to Christ for deliverance. The world has got its grip on you. Perhaps your intimate associates are unfriendly to religion! they may stare at you, or sneer at your exchanging a frolic for a prayer-meeting. Moral cowardice has cheated millions out of Heaven. Good resolutions made in your own strength are mere pipe-clay.

You have never striven to enter the open gateway to the new and the eternal life. You have had the divided mind that accomplishes nothing. It has been only half-and-half work, spending itself on a few serious thoughts soon dissipated, or on a few formal prayers. "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit" (i.e., is well put) "for the kingdom of God." If you take hold of the plough spiritually you must, with the help of the Holy Spirit, push it through. Thrust it down deep, into the subsoil of your affections and your hitherto stubborn will. If that plough tears up some beds that have only borne flowering weeds, all the better. You are not a Christian until you have given your heart to Jesus Christ. You must begin to keep his commandments, to resist sin because He hates it, and to do right because He loves it. Quench not the Spirit! Just begin to serve Christ by doing the first duty that comes to your hand. Refuse to do the first wrong thing to which you are tempted; and do this with fervent prayer for Divine help. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many will seek to enter in, and shall not be able when once the Master of the house is risen up and hath shut to the door!" That gateway of life may soon be shut!

The Bible is full of glorious encouragement to you. A pure life, a useful life, a happy life and an eternal life in the Father's House is now within your reach. The only time you are sure of is the present. There are two gates, and the two opposite roads into eternity. You must take one or the other! Beside that strait gate stands the Infinite Love saying to you: "I set before you death and life. Choose life!"

Brooklyn, N.Y.

Evangelistic Notes.

During the last six weeks addresses have been given by several ladies in connection with the City Mission Society amongst the factory girls employed at John Sinclair's tobacco works, Newcastle-on-Tyne. The attendance of the girls, dressed in work-aday garb, listening to the Gospel message, was cheering to the workers.

Mr. Charles Greenow held during the Easter holidays a four days' mission, at the Theatre Royal, Barnwell, Cambridge, when large gatherings were attracted. On Easter Monday the evangelist gave the story of his life, showing how God dealt with him in a wonderful and remarkable way; numbers were present, and the touching account brought tears to the eyes of many.

W. K. Vawser, Hon. Sup.

Minsterley is a little village of 800 inhabitants, about ten miles from Shrewsbury, in a south-western direction; scattered about in village and hamlet there dwell about 5000 souls. The district is well supplied with Free Churches, notwithstanding the opposition in former days of the land-owners. Last autumn Rev. Thomas Cook held a united evangelistic mission in Shrewsbury, under the auspices of the Evangelical Free Church Council, and the interest spread to Minsterley. The Shrewsbury Council were appealed to. Its officers went down to Minsterley and formed a branch council, which applied to the West Midland Federation, who sent Rev. Frederick Page, of Birmingham, for a week. As Pontesbury was considered the most ready he began services there. He speedily laid hold of pastors and people in a remarkable way. His freshness, his readiness with his Bible, and his clear exposition of Gospel truth made a deep impression and produced excellent results. Representations were made for Mr. Page to prolong his visit, and the Federation gladly acceded. The next week Minsterley was the centre of the mission, and the following week the remoter villages were visited night after night by Mr. Page, and the closing meeting was held at Pontesbury Baptist Chapel, which was crowded. The churches recognize that the revival long hoped and prayed for has come, in response to the spirit of united prayer and expectant faith. J. R.

Mr. Charles Galletly has held a fortnight's mission at Largo, in Fife. The interest slowly but steadily increased, and latterly the meetings were well attended. The workers had the joy of knowing that some were brought to a saving faith in Christ as far as one could judge. It was a great joy to the evangelist to find amongst the most active workers some of those converted at a former one.

A correspondent, writing from Campbeltown, Argyll, says:—"A great awakening is going on in this town, for which we praise the Lord. Pains, prayer, and preparation have not been wanting, and now this has come spontaneously, one might say. Many are being born of the Spirit, and testify openly. The human agent is the same as mentioned in your recent notice of the movement about Drumlemble, and it is the same work on a larger scale. The Christian workers look so happy."

An interesting fourteen days' mission has been held at Sevenoaks by Mr. Monro Collings, of Gosport. From the first he had an abundant entrance into Gospel work, and his clear, strong, vigorous style of dealing with sin and eternal things made deep impressions. Night by night good numbers came to hear, and many professed decision. One of the most noteworthy features of the mission was the hearty goodwill and sympathy displayed by a Christian business man in closing his workshops earlier than usual, thus giving his men time to attend the service. Many availed themselves of this privilege, and several professed faith in Christ. Nor has the work ceased now that Mr. Collings has gone elsewhere, for tidings are reaching the workers continually of fresh cases of decision or help.

Writing as to Mr. George Clarke's recent mission at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood, Rev. J. G. Train says: "We have much to thank God for in the experience vouchsafed us during Mr. Clarke's visit. So deep were the impressions made at some of the meetings that it was found difficult to cope with the number of inquirers. Over 150 persons availed themselves of the nightly opportunities of converse and prayer, and of these the greater part testified to an intelligent acceptance of God's way of salvation. Many outside of our own congregation, and some even from considerable distances, have shared with us in this season of refreshing, and no report of our framing can possibly represent all that God hath wrought."

A twelve days' mission has lately been conducted in the Bible Christian church, High-road, South Tottenham, by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander. A gracious influence was realised at all the services, and there were several cases of professed conversion.

The Primitive Methodist Church of Pollokshaws, Glasgow, has had the joy of witnessing a work of grace. After a week wholly devoted to prayer, special services were commenced by Rev. J. Bastow Wilson, the pastor. The congregation grew, and the power of God through the Gospel was proved in numbers of professed conversions. The work spread, and the minister was relieved by the welcome help of Mr. Albert Harrison, evangelist, of Birkenhead, and his wife. General interest was aroused. Over 130 persons, young and old, entered the inquiry room and professed conversion; about seventy of these are adults.

Evangelistic services in Westerham and surrounding villages have been conducted with much encouragement by an evangelist and band of workers from London. The expenses of travelling, board, and lodging for fifteen young men have been met by a Christian gentleman interested in the villages.

Mr. John Currie, of California, has visited Quebec for a season of Gospel work in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in that city. He hopes to engage in mission work in Montreal during the summer.

Mr. Moody, after an interval of eighteen years, has paid another visit to the city of St. Louis. Great audiences have been attracted to his services. His addresses are largely reported in the St. Louis papers, and the accounts show a wide and strong religious interest.

Rev. James Lyall, the Scotch evangelist, has held special meetings at Arlington Heights, in which the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches united. Many have professed a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and others are seeking the light. A deeper work of grace has also been established in the hearts of professing Christians. The pastors, much encouraged, are valiantly planning to go forward with the good work.

Mr. David Wallace, of Leith, has concluded a three weeks' mission in connection with the Hawick Association. The services were held in the Institute, which was filled throughout. Not a few professed conversion, and Christian workers were edified and stimulated. The mission altogether was very encouraging, and the work of the Association was strengthened by the addition of a number of recruits from those who had hitherto held aloof.

During the past fortnight a mission has been held at Combs, Stowmarket, by Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings have been crowded, and God has blessed the faithful and earnest addresses of his servant; many have confessed Christ, and Christians have been refreshed.

Owing to the great blessing on Mrs. Baeyertz's Gospel mission at Westbourne Grove Chapel, the church desired the extension of the mission over Sunday, but the friends at Cardiff state that they cannot postpone the beginning of the evangelist's mission there, so that the Westbourne Grove meetings will terminate to-morrow (Friday).

Free Methodist Missions.

THIS branch of the great Methodist body unites home and foreign work in one anniversary, which was held on Monday last in Exeter Hall. Meetings were held afternoon and evening.

The evening assembly was goodly in size, and earnest in spirit and tone. The shadow of the recent death of Rev. F. H. Carthew, of the East African Mission, made itself felt in the report read by Rev. H. T. Chapman. He stated that Mr. Carthew's devoted life is being written by Rev. Jos. Kirsop, and will soon be published. As to finance, Mr. Chapman remarked that a bold policy on a failing income may appear heroic, but in practice it means bankruptcy. Statements full of encouraging facts were read as to different parts of the field, the results in some cases being described as "quite pentecostal." In view of certain views of the native African, it was very interesting to hear of one worker who is going out to that land because he "believes in the black races, and that the Gospel of Christ can raise and save them." If people understood the needs of Africa, said the report, there would be a more hearty and liberal response to the appeals made on its behalf. The statement of the secretary was on the whole of a roseate nature, and very eloquent in its terms. The news from China was "as air from the tableland of Beulah." Mention was made of the marriage of Miss Bardsley (lately companion to Mrs. Stott, at Wenchow) to one of the United Methodist Free Missionaries in Japan (Dr. Hogg), and a high tribute was paid to her gifts and past service. Her husband is the only Christian doctor in an area of from 6000 to 8000 square miles. The general financial position was stated to be grave, and an earnest appeal was made for further support. Twopence per week from each full member of the home Church would produce over £22,000, in place of the £8000 odd they had received.

In the course of a plea for the maintenance of the work, the Chairman, Mr. Mordey, of Newport, said he was ashamed as he saw the thousands of pounds spent by their young men and others on football and kindred sports while Christian missions are in poverty. Then there came "a significant and spontaneous innovation," as one friend put it, in the shape of a resolution, duly moved and seconded, protesting against the Armenian atrocities perpetrated by the sanction of the "Great Assassin" of Turkey, and calling for the intervention of the Christian powers in stopping the present war. The sympathy of the meeting was very strongly and unitedly on the side of the Greeks in their present struggle. The German and Russian Emperors were described as "two young tyrants who have not a spark of sympathy with human freedom." The resolution was passed amid great enthusiasm, and it was resolved to send a telegraphic intimation to the King of Greece.

After this exciting episode it was a little difficult to recur to the immediate purpose of the meeting. The President of the F.M. Conference (Rev. G. Turner) spoke feelingly of the noble life and death of Mr. Carthew, and called for still greater enterprise in this all-important work of foreign missions. Then an excellent address came from Dr. R. Swallow, of Ningpo, who urged the sending out of missionary deputations to the foreign field. He declared that the difficult work of evangelisation among the Chinese is a grander service than abiding in the luxury of home labour. Dr. Swallow gave warm testimony to the work of Christian women in China, making special mention of Miss Milligan, who is now on her way home. In China, said the speaker, the newspapers are happily all on the side of the missionary. Some most pathetic incidents of the work were related as to the healing power of the Gospel, and as to the place which women can fill in such work. The last speaker was Rev. C. F. Aked, of Liverpool, who dealt most eloquently with the European situation, which he said was the result of the temporary set-back which all moral movements had received during recent years. In the thrilling words of Wm. Watson, the poet, the speaker declared that the present position of things in this nation is the legitimate and inevitable outcome of the greed, the drink, the gambling, and the impurity that have been growing in our midst.

"Ye can arise; reclaim your manliness;
And flee the things that are unmaking you."

The terrible evils of the public-house, of the prevalent impurity, and of the growing immorality of gambling were powerfully exposed and protested against.

Christian Succour to India.

DEAR SIR,—I must thank the readers of The Christian very warmly for the help they have given. Many of the gifts are touching evidence of a self-denial that has been inspired by love. All is needed, and ten times more. The prices of grain in districts inhabited by millions are utterly beyond the purchasing power of the people even in ordinary times, but now people who were well to do cannot pay the terrible famine prices.

Since I wrote I have received a letter, which says that 97,000 died of famine in Jabalpur division of 2,735,000 population last year, and, of course, the distress deepens week by week; and the writer says: "Government (Provincial Government) started too late. They are now unable to overtake the distress. In the hilly parts village communities are altogether disorganised. Many villages are almost forsaken, and I need not describe to you the terrible emaciation of thousands. You will understand that from the numbers who have died of starvation...If the whole of the Famine Fund were sent to this district, it could all be well spent here. The crops are next to nothing...following four years of scarcity. The cultivators have no money. They have sold their bullocks to the butchers for two or three rupees (2s. 6d. to 4s.). They have no seed grain."

Another missionary writes: "I saw 500 men, women, and children huddled together with scarcely any clothes or food." Another writes telling of "thirty deaths a day in the poorhouse." Another says that 100 or 150 orphans died soon after they were received in their orphanage, as they were too far gone in emaciation.

This is not the worst. The wife of a Government official speaks of seeing men, women and children found dead in the fields or on the road every day. To add to the distress, there seems to be considerable peculation by natives entrusted with the distribution of grain. Some painful statements to this effect are given in the S.P.G. report for April.

I have just received a telegram from the Central Provinces:—"Received three instalments; pitiable destitution; immediate need of funds; could personally distribute several hundred pounds." I ought to add that our three Indian local committees and all our correspondents tell us that the worst will not be reached for several months.—Yours for Christ's sake, Radstock.

42, Eccleston-place, S.W.

South Africa General Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was held at Exeter Hall on Friday evening, Mr. T. B. Miller presiding. There was a large attendance, and the opportunity was taken to bid farewell to eight missionaries on their departure for South Africa. These were Mr. and Mrs. John Baillie, returning to Swaziland; Miss Constance Grieve, returning to Majuba; Miss Thomson, Miss Hay, Miss Brown, Mr. James Young, and Mr. Estall. A statement was presented, showing that the Mission, founded three years ago under the Rev. Andrew Murray's presidency, has a multifarous and "interdenominational" scope. At Cape Town there are two soldiers' homes, a sailors' rest, mission-halls, and other institutions; and special work is carried on among the Malays. Missioners visit many parts of the colony where religious privileges are scanty. There are also six missionaries and three or four native evangelists at work in Pondoland. In Basutoland the French mission is being helped to establish fresh stations in the hitherto inaccessible mountain districts. Ten missionaries are labouring in Swaziland, where many are now becoming Christians. A Zulu evangelist is at work among the many kraals in the Vryheid district. The Mission has established itself both in Pretoria and in Johannesburg, and is carrying on aggressive work among the Jews—who are said to form one-fifth of the Rand population—as well as among the "Christians" and heathen. In Natal a soldiers' home has been opened at Maritzburg; and at Durban there are two mission churches for Zulus, meetings are held for Europeans, and two missionaries have begun operations among the natives of India.

Stornoway.—The local licensing justices have again, for the third or fourth time, declined to grant licences to the three hotels in Stornoway, Lewis. In previous years the decision of the local bench has been reversed on appeal to the quarter sessions.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins.

WOOLWICH.

WE are having a successful mission. The evening meetings at the Tabernacle are large and the interest is great. The hall at St. James's is full in the afternoon. Christians of all denominations are taking part in the work. We have also had the presence and help of well-known evangelists, Mr. Lane, Mr. Spurr, and Mr. Telford.

Both the afternoon and evening addresses have been most helpful to believers. The Major's general theme in the evening was Ephesians i. 7: "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the fofgiveness of sins." It was a clear exposition of our standing in Christ. One could see the eyes of intelligent Christians sparkling as fresh light was given to well-known texts of Scripture, and the illustrations from his own experience in the war "made the message clear and plain."

The evangelist had one subject also for the afternoon, "The gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 38). As he spoke to us of the works, the reality, the desire, and the condition of being filled with the Holy Spirit, "our hearts burned," and one earnest united prayer ascended to heaven that we might be all "filled with the Holy Ghost."

The mission has been a trumpet call to Christian energy, and the announcements are a proof that the call has been responded to. Every night four or five open-air meetings are held, and every dinner hour, either at the gates of the Royal Arsenal or in front of Siemens' Works, Charlton, the Gospel is proclaimed to hundreds of men and earnest invitations given to attend the services.

On Monday, April 26, we had a children's meeting for Sunday-school scholars over ten years of age. There must have been over 1500 present. The Major gave them his "poison sermon." It is found in his book, "Gospel Pictures and Story Sermons for Children" (Morgan & Scott). He had an appreciative audience, and as he asked us all to rise and express our earnest desire to receive Christ as the only remedy for the poison of sin, there was a feeling of solemnity that was deeply impressive, and we believe much fruit will be found from this service.

A meeting is arranged on Wednesday for soldiers in the Barrack Theatre, at five o'clock, under the auspices of the senior chaplain of the garrison. Major Whittle is delighted, as he has been anxious from the first to get an opportunity to plead with the soldiers on behalf of Christ. The door has been opened in answer to prayer.

Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins have rendered valuable help by their singing. The song has often been an earnest appeal. We have been reminded of "Beautiful hands, Beckoning hands, Calling the dear ones to heavenly lands." As to results, we should like to speak later. Christians have been revived; some who have been living at a "poor, dying rate" are to-day aglow with love to Christ and souls. Men and women and children have been brought to the Saviour. A respectably-dressed woman came in drunk and interrupted the service. She had been a Roman Catholic. We persuaded her to listen, and the Word found an entrance. She came again, and to-day she is in the kingdom of God. A worker pleaded with a young man for over half-an-hour to come into the Tabernacle and hear the Gospel, and at last prevailed, and that night he yielded to Christ. Many have stood up for blessing, but we long to see greater things. Our hearts are crying:—

Oh for the showers on the thirsty land,
Oh for a mighty revival,
Oh for a sanctified fearless band,
Ready to hail its arrival.

Brethren, pray for Woolwich during this day of visitation. John Wilson.

Woolwich Tabernacle.

South Wales.—Pastor Owen Tidman and Mrs. Tidman, whose devoted labours at Blaenavon and many parts of South Wales are well-known, and who have so earnestly laboured in this district for four years, are about to remove to a larger sphere in the heart of a thickly populated colliery neighbourhood and are hopeful of much future blessing. Mr. Tidman intends commencing his labours on May 2nd with a ten days' mission, and will be very grateful for any Gospel tracts or books, etc., which any readers may send him. Parcels should be addressed to Pastor Owen Tidman, Noddfa House, Abersychan, South Wales.

Letters to the Editor.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.

Sir,—As one who has lived many years in India, I would like to add my witness to the real cause of the necessity for such Acts as the C.D. Acts, a blot and stain and disgrace to our country, branding us before the nations as a mother of harlots. The English Government owns no prophets; had it done so, years ago they would have advised the Government to have and to keep a married soldiery. Had they done so, and colonised the lands now lying desert and forestless and rainless upon the earth's surface, the earth would wear another aspect, and rainfall would have another tale to tell.

I know many will scoff at this letter, but let them read carefully 2 Chron. xx., and see there what a godly married soldiery can do when God leads them forth to battle: they can come back to the wives and little ones they left behind (in v. 13) without having lost a man. Ask the English Government if the blessing of Barachah (v. 26 and 27) is not better than the curse of India? and I know Lord Roberts will say, "You are right." There are thousands of acres in India and Africa that in seven years might be turned into a paradise, it only wants willing hands in time of peace, and those men under God's faith and God's Scriptures would be the men to go, and the men to lead to battle. Havelock led such and they never disgraced him, and he never forgot them. Those are the men who come home with joy.—Yours truly,

Cashmere and Scind.

MISSIONARIES AND SOUTH AFRICAN NATIVES.

Sir,—In The Christian of October 22, 1896, Mr. Theo. Schreiner wrote, saying:—"Even on some mission stations in South Africa, the missionary, by agreement with the people under his charge, possesses and uses the right of inflicting corporal punishment on any of them for certain misdemeanours."

Mr. S. J. Helm, minister of a native church in the Cape Colony, answering Mr. Schreiner on November 5, said:—"Until he gives us the names of these men, suspicion will rest upon every missionary in South Africa."

On November 19, Mr. Newberry, as one who has been in South Africa, gave his opinion; and no one, I think, could read his letter without feeling that the statement made by Mr. Schreiner might be, and most likely was, true. He said:—"When the native has done something wrong, that he has to be punished for, he and his friends will ask that his master, or the missionary, or those who are over him, will themselves thrash him rather than put him in the power of the law. This has happened in my own experience."

I have had an experience of over thirty years in Bechuanaland, the early part of which was spent with one of the first missionaries to the country, and I affirm that I cannot recall a single instance of an agreement such as that described. I say, moreover, that Mr. Schreiner's statement must surely refer to missionaries in the Transvaal, where the native has good reasons for being afraid of the laws.

Many unfounded charges are brought against missionaries, which we do not answer. When, however, such a charge appears in the pages of The Christian, an answer is imperative.

John Brown,
London Missionary Society.
Taungs, Bechuanaland.

IN DIREST SLAVERY.

Dear Sir,—In a recent issue of your paper I read a letter on a subject which has long occupied my thoughts, and which called forth my sympathy and sorrow. The letter mentioned was headed "The Song of the Shirt." How long it is since Hood sang that plaintive song! It told but too plainly the sad, sad condition of our sisters—I will not say the ill-paid, but the nominally paid, needlewomen of Christian England. They are not paid; they receive a trifling sum in acknowledgment of work done in order to keep body and soul together. Brave effort, for if any could be tempted to ask, "Is life worth living?" surely the women who toil all their long days and far into their nights at sewing, to be paid at the rate of threepence halfpenny for making a shirt, might ask it, or the girls who try to earn their bread at crochet and other fancy work, and receive sixpence or less per day. Oh, to think that the starvation return they receive for their labour has led many into paths of sin and shame!

Is there no remedy for all this? Employers profit by it. Who else? Women who know, or ought to know, the value of good work, the expenditure of strength it entails. Is not the buyer often disposed to ask, "How could this beautifully-made garment have been made to be sold at this price?" The material is good, and the work excellent. Some years ago the writer saw in a shop window some underlinen marked at a very low figure. She entered and bought some. Arriving home she examined her purchase, and asked herself, "Which have I paid for, the material or the work?" It has been a lesson for life to her. Can nothing be done to stop this sad oppression of the helpless and suffering? Could there be no system of oversight or inspection, no competent arrangement of charges?

We cannot do too much for the heathen abroad, but can we not do something for our crushed sisters at home? One thing Christian women can do, they may influence the demand. They may employ their own needlewomen and pay them.
—Yours truly, Justitia.

The Y.M.C.A.

Mr. George R. Bolster, of Tralee, has been appointed to the secretaryship of the Cork Y.M.C.A., in the room of Mr. James Chambers, resigned. He will enter upon his new duties early in May.

Mr. J. Gurney Barclay, the president, and Mrs. Barclay, have given a social reception to the members of the Brighton Association. Over 300 guests assembled. The proceedings were of a very gratifying character.

There are good prospects of a United Y.M.C.A. being formed in Perth, and of a building being obtained. The memorial stone of the new building of the Hamilton Association has been laid by Mr. David Dreghorn, chairman of the Scottish National Council.

The half-yearly Conference of the S.E. Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s took place in the Croydon Association building on April 22. Papers on practical topics were read by Mr. Harding, of Beckenham, Mr. S. Stevens, of Croydon, and Mr. W. F. Groves, of Clapham Junction.

The annual meeting of the Wakefield Association has been held with much success. Mr. Alfred Haley took the chair. The secretary gave a report, the tenor of which was very encouraging, notwithstanding a deficit in the year's finances. The Mayor of Wakefield, Dr. Bruce, and Archdeacon Madden gave excellent addresses.

The seventeenth annual Conference of the Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Great Malvern on Easter Monday. There was an excellent attendance of delegates and visitors. The report set forth a very encouraging state of affairs in connection with most of the Associations in the district, showing general progress and increased efficiency.

The Scottish National Council has invited Mr. J. H. Oldham, general secretary of the British College Christian Union, to represent it as Y.M.C.A. foreign missionary secretary at Lahore, in work among the native young men of that important city. Mr. F. Anderson, who is already representing the English council in similar labour throughout the Bombay presidency, was closely allied with Mr. Oldham, both in the work of the B.C.C.U. and that of the student Volunteer Missionary Union.

The Easter Conference of the North-eastern Incorporated District Union was held on Monday week, at Sunderland, Mr. C. S. Wilson, president, in the chair. Ninety delegates attended from twenty-one Associations. Mr. Robert Burn, London, and Mr. Thomas Moffett, Leeds, attended. The former read an able paper on the right lines of work of the Y.M.C.A. The reports were generally encouraging. The Conference was of deep interest throughout, and was declared to be one of the best ever held in the district.

The Good Friday meeting, for so long one of the principal events of the year in connection with the Stafford Rooms Association, Edgware Road, W., was held under the presidency of Dr. Gladstone, and was well attended by the members and friends, the proportion of young men being noticeable. Brief and helpful addresses bearing upon the great subject of the day were given by Revs. W. H. Griffith Thomas, W. P. Legg, W. A. Wilson, and J. C. Carlile, as well as by the chairman. In the evening a good company assembled for a Missionary Conference, when Mr. J. R. Truscott gave an interesting account of the Natal Missionary Society and its work among the Zulus of South Africa.

The fine new building of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. was opened on April 21. The premises have cost £18,000, of which £500 only remains outstanding. The opening ceremony was taken part in by the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, Lady Dufferin, Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P., Lord Charles Beresford, Sir Jas. Musgrave, Bt., Archdeacon Madden, the Lord Mayor of Belfast, etc. The principal hall will accommodate 1700 persons and on emergency 2000, and is shortly to contain a grand organ, the gift of Sir George Williams. The minor hall has accommodation for 500 persons; and there are besides a spacious and model gymnasium, a splendid reading room, making provision for a hundred readers at the same time, numerous other well-appointed rooms and offices, and a café which in its general equipment is said to be the finest in the city.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Associations in Denmark are about to send missionaries to China and India.

At a meeting of the Dumfries Association, Mrs. Bennet, the secretary, gave a resumé of the winter's work.

Under the auspices of the Falmouth Association a retrospect of the sixty years' reign of the Queen was given by Mr. Bowles the other evening.

In the rooms of the Elgin Y.W.C.A., Miss Croll, of the U.P. Mission in Rajputana, recently gave graphic word pictures, culled from her own experience of the value of woman's work in the Zenanas of the great cities of India. The joys and sorrows of a missionary's life in the East were powerfully depicted.

The seventh anniversary of the Ramsgate branch was recently held. A public meeting was held in the evening in the Christ Church Parish Hall. Miss Schudt said the home was opened nine years ago, during which time 1272 young people had come under its Christian influence. A small sum is needed to enlarge the house, which is quite inadequate to meet the needs of the members.

Miss Pacy, of London, and Mr. Andrew Bell, of Dunfermline, conducted meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life in connection with the Dundee Association. At the afternoon and evening meetings the attendance was very large. The incisive teaching given brought glory to God in abundance of fruit. A Conference on Christian work was held on the second last day of the Mission; both it and an address on the Lord's second coming are times to be remembered.

The East Liberty branch (Pittsburg, U.S.A.) of the Y.W.C.A. lately held its twenty-second anniversary. There was a large and enthusiastic attendance. The annual report showed a year of successful work, fifty-two new members had been added. The home had been largely patronised, and the industrial school had been well attended. In the day nursery hundreds of children had been cared for, thus allowing their mothers to more easily earn their support. Over 1000 poor persons had received relief.

A large and influential gathering of friends and members of the Harlem (N.Y.) Association was held early this month. Harlem branch has a membership of over 3430, and has provided situations for more than seven hundred applicants, besides giving lodgings to two hundred. Nearly 2000 have joined its educational classes. During the last five years the Association has outgrown two buildings, and is now erecting a fine building to cost 80,000dols., which will be ready for occupancy early in the autumn.

Christian Endeavour.

Christian Endeavour is steadily growing in Wales, and every week sees the organisation of one or more new societies.

Anyone wearing a Christian Endeavour badge can enter a Kentucky prison and be sure of every courtesy from even the most hardened criminal. The convicts always listen with earnest attention to the services by Christian Endeavourers.

The Two Organizations under the general lead of Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, the Christian Alliance or Faith Mission and the International Missionary Alliance, have been united under the name of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. It will be under the care of a board of managers of twenty-one persons arranged in three sets of seven each, one set retiring annually. Each department is to be under the care of a special superintendent and secretary, and the entire work is to be provided for in a more thorough and systematic manner than before. In connection with the reorganised society is to be the Alliance settlement at Nyack on the Hudson. The Missionary Institute is to be erected there.—N.Y. Independent.

Scottish Notes.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is giving a series of addresses on Christian Evidences at Motherwell. The Christian Institute is packed every night, and much interest is awakened.

Mrs. Stott, of the C.I.M., has been addressing meetings in different parts of Scotland. She will continue there till May 4, and will then take a much-needed rest before returning to London for the annual meetings of the Mission.

The Jubilee Synod of the U.P. Church will open on Monday next. The commemoration services will extend over the whole week, and will embrace many aspects of the Church's work. Some English brethren, as well as leading ministers of the Free Church, will take part in the interesting celebration, and there will be a closing missionary assembly on the evening of Sunday week.

The Convention on the Spiritual Life was held in Dundee last week, when good audiences were gathered day by day in Kinnaird Hall to hear the practical addresses of various brethren. Among the speakers were Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and others. A missionary meeting on the last afternoon was full of interest, addresses being given on work in Finland, Palestine, Ceylon, and India.

Ex-Provost Moncur, of Dundee, who some years ago established the Bannatyne Home of Rest at Newtyle for the benefit of working women and girls in need of change of air for a week or two, has further laid this class under a debt of gratitude by subscribing £1000 for the extension of the Home. The extension is greatly needed, as the Home is much crowded during the holiday season. Work will be started immediately, and efforts made to finish it in the summer.

Irish Notes.

A hall has been secured in Cork in which a service for the deaf and dumb in the city is held every Sunday afternoon.

The Presbyterian Orphan Society, which has added to its roll seventy families, at an annual cost of about £800, has received notice of several small bequests, including one af £50 from late Rev. J. S. Gass "in memory of his mother."

Rev. J. O. G. Dougherty has completed a successful deputation tour on behalf of the Society for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews in co. Tipperary. He addressed meetings at Ardmayle, Cashel, and Nenagh, and preached at Templemore.

Japanese in London.

Dear Sir,—In a former notice I intimated that I had secured a suitable place to which I could welcome Japanese sailors. Since March 1 I have had a series of meetings at the address given below, varying from six to about sixty. On Bank Holiday we had one of our largest musters. Friends from a distance who joined were much gratified on seeing so many rows of chairs occupied by most attentive listeners. To a man they had yielded to the advice given on the previous day to abstain wholly from strong drink. The party, a crew of eighty men, left for Glasgow on Wednesday last week to fetch a newly-built ship. I ask the prayers of your readers that the effort put forth in this place, and by daily visits at the Strangers' Home, where they have been lodging these two months, as well as to ships, may bear much fruit.

The details of this work are full of interest, but I fear your space will not admit of my relating more at present. I have much cause to thank God for the way my body, soul, and spirit, are girded and equipped by Him. There are still 600 Japanese in the British Isles for whom a little is being done. Perhaps your readers may wish to send me parcels of Japanese portions and Testaments?—Yours truly, M. McLean.

62, Coolfin-road, Custom House, E.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

One of the most interesting operations of the St. Giles' Christian Mission is that among the young, especially among those who have got into trouble through a first criminal offence. The Mission has also for years been conspicuous for its work among discharged prisoners; and on this account the metropolitan magistrates give it material as well as moral support. The funds of the Mission have for some time past been so low as to occasion great anxiety; therefore, the magistrates and others have signed a hearty appeal for special donations during the current Diamond Jubilee year. The Mission deserves ready help. The superintendent is Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, W.C.

Personalia.

Mr. Sankey has returned to Brooklyn from the Pacific coast, and will resume Gospel work in conjunction with Mr. Moody in New York.

Mr. Walter Notman, who for twelve years has worked in connection with the Evangelization Society, is now settled as mission preacher and superintendent of the Albert and Circus-street Halls, Nottingham.

Rev. John McNeill left Liverpool on Wednesday last week by the s.s. Majestic for New York, where he will conduct Gospel services during the month of May, in association with Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn. He hopes to return to this country in June.

Rev. Thos. W. Gladstone has intimated his intention to resign the pastorate of Trinity Reformed Episcopal Church, Eccles, on the completion of three years' ministry, in August next. Mr. Gladstone was for eleven years the secretary of the Southport Y.M.C.A.

Professor Bertrand, of the French Mission to Romish Priests, has arrived in England to address meetings and look up friends of his work. While in this country he may be addressed to the care of M. L. Dégremont, pastor of the Huguenot Church, 9, Soho-square, W.

Sir W. Lawson.—Speaking at a Band of Hope meeting in Carlisle, Lady Lawson said that Sir Wilfrid Lawson had caught cold while attending temperance meetings recently at Newcastle, and the doctor had forbidden him to speak anywhere this summer, as his throat required an entire rest.

Mr. Walter Leslie, an actor, has left the stage for the Salvation Army. To crowded audiences he has been telling the story of his conversion. It took place in one of the metropolitan hospitals, where he was so impressed by the ministrations of a "lady lieutenant" to a fellow-sufferer that he sought her services. He is now a regular member of the Army.

Mrs. Isabella Bishop, the Christian traveller, is likely to be in great request during the May anniversaries. We have already stated that she will address the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Foreign Missions in Queen's Hall on May 14. It is also announced that she will be a speaker at the meeting of the Medical Missionary Association in Exeter Hall on the afternoon of Monday next, May 3, and of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society in the same place on Monday afternoon, May 10.

Central India.

Dear Sir,—Your readers have heard from time to time of the excellent work carried on by Mr. John Lampard in Balaghat in the Central Provinces of India. He has laboured entirely alone, without aid from any society, for about three years at a village named Nikkum, where he lives in his own native house, with the natives, as one of themselves. His work has been prospered in a spiritual sense in a marked manner, and his three years' effort amongst an ignorant and entirely heathen population has resulted, with God's blessing, in the formation of a wholesome little church of some forty adults, and further additions appear probable at an early date.

About a year ago, in the endeavour to remedy to some extent the extreme poverty of his humble neighbours, he commenced farming operations on a limited scale. Drought temporarily neutralised his efforts in this direction, and then the terrible prevailing famine resulted, the Balaghat district being one of the worst. These visitations will doubtless be remedied and overcome, but the labour has been and is very great, too much for one man. It is, therefore, very desirable that a suitable man be found, God willing, to assist Mr. Lampard in his work. Should any reader feel himself called to such a life's labour of love, I should be very glad if he would communicate with me at 23, Billiter-buildings, E.C. H. W. Fry.

"The Christian" abroad.—A correspondent in China writes in reference to the copy of The Christian which he receives from an unknown friend in this country: "As the postage is underpaid, the recipient is charged 4 cents for each packet." We have also received a similar communication from California. Will those friends who post the papers to missionaries and others abroad kindly note that the postage is 1d., being according to weight, ½d. for every 2 ozs.? We would also again suggest that the address of the person for whom the paper is intended should be written on the paper itself if possible, or if a wrapper is used it should be one that will not easily tear or get detached. We have a few names of missionaries who have written us recently that they would like to receive The Christian. These we will gladly allot to any friends who will signify their willingness to send the paper regularly.

Obituary.

MRS. MARY ANNE GAINFORT.

A few days since there was laid at rest in the quiet cemetery of Windsor an aged saint of God Mrs. Mary Anne Gainfort. She had recently entered her ninety-second year, and her long life was full of stirring memories. Death removed her husband many years ago, and within the last eleven years her only child was taken home. Though born in Bath, she lived many years at Blackrock, co. Dublin, where her most valuable work was done. Being asked to receive as a visitor at her house a young Christian man, the request suggested to her the need that many young Christian men have of helpful and congenial friendship. That house became to them "a house of prayer." They searched God's Word together, till they became mighty in the Scriptures. They were always on the alert to draw other young men into their happy circle, where their warm-hearted, sympathetic hostess welcomed them and encouraged their spiritual growth. Great was her joy to see her "boys," as she called them, go forth into the home and foreign mission field. The young man already alluded to, Charles F. Perrin, after faithful service in Australia, has long since heard his Master's "Well done!"

About 1868, her daughter (a duplicate of her mother in Christian zeal), being about to marry and leave for China as a missionary, one of the "boys," the late Mr. Henry Williams, of Dublin, persuaded Mrs. Gainfort to make a home near him in Windsor, where he at that time lived. By every means in her power she sought the spiritual welfare of all who came within her reach, being instant in season and out of season, none being allowed to leave her without spiritual counsel or appeal.

Open-air Mission.

PROPOSED EXTENSION IN VILLAGES.

Dear Sir,—The committee of this Mission have for some time past been carefully considering the possibility of undertaking extended efforts in many of the villages of our land. Out of the nearly 1100 members of this Mission, residing in town and country, there are a large number who are known to be willing to devote part, or the whole, of their summer holiday to such an evangelistic campaign, which would largely take the form of open-air services, with visitation of the people in their homes, and the distribution of Gospel publications. By desire of the committee we now seek the co-operation of Christian friends residing in country towns, in order that, where the spiritual need is exceptional, such towns may be made the centres of village visitation.

We should be glad to hear from your country readers on this matter.—Yours faithfully,

George Mackinlay, Major, Hon. Sec.
Frank Cockrem, Secretary.

11, Adam-street, Strand, London, April 23.

Stratford Conference Hall.

The work among young women in connection with the above hall has grown very rapidly; the Bible-class membership having risen from thirty to 136. Further development being hindered on account of possessing no rooms of our own, a lady and gentleman are generously building rooms adjoining the hall, in commemoration of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. It is needful to raise about £150 for furnishing them.

Any help sent toward this will be acknowledged by Mrs. J. A. Boardman, "Hadley," Forest Gate, treasurer; or Miss Emily Barnard, secretary, 48, Margery Park-road, Forest Gate, E.

With six or seven exceptions, every Baptist minister in Scotland is a member of the Denominational Total Abstinence Society.

City of London Abstainers' Union.—A good account of the progress of this useful Society was given at the nineteenth annual meeting, held last week at the Young Men's Christian Association, Aldersgate-street, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. It appeared that access had been obtained to some houses of business in which meetings had not been previously held, and the necessity of providing wholesome temperance beverages in large establishments was emphasised. Chemical lectures, illustrated by experiments, had been utilised to secure some first-class exponents of temperance truths. Congratulations were tendered to Mr. W. S. Caine upon his work in India and his safe return home. The chairman gave cheery words of encouragement to the members, and addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. R. Whyte, jun.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 9.

Paul preaching to the Jews.—Acts xiii. 26-39. Golden Text.—Verse 38.

TRACE on the map the course of the two missionaries from Paphos to Pamphylia, one of the southern provinces of Asia Minor, and thence to Antioch of Pisidia, in Southern Galatia. The story of these journeys is briefly told, but it must not be supposed that they were free from peril and discomfort. Pisidia was a barbarian country, and the roads were infested with bandits. Let one of the scholars read 2 Cor. xi. 23-27. We may conclude that some of those experiences had to be met during these journeys.

Antioch was an idolatrous city, yet the Jews had a synagogue there (14). When the invitation was given to Paul to speak, he rose in his place and gave the address which forms the subject of our lesson.

Summarise the address, and show how the Apostle began by getting on to common ground with his hearers, while he reviewed the past history of Israel, and God's prophetic announcement concerning them (16-22). Then he presented Jesus, of the seed of David (23), heralded by John the Baptist (24-25), in whose rejection, death, and subsequent resurrection the prophecies of Scripture were fulfilled as the promised Saviour (27-37). The application included earnest appeal and solemn warning (38-41).

What Paul needed to teach and prove before his audience is known and believed among us. The Golden Text may suggest the practical lesson to be applied.

Forgiveness is the theme. Enforce three points. (1) It is a universal need.—Why? Because sin is universal. Let a scholar read Rom. iii. 10-12, the statements of which include all. And to some degree the consciousness of sin is universal too. Every man's conscience accuses him of the past, and awakens dread of future judgment. Appeal to each scholar—Have you not felt it? Forgiveness is therefore our first need. Picture a man in a prison cell, having been condemned to death for some great crime, and awaiting his punishment. What does he need? Feasting? Laughter? Song? Art? None of these will suffice. He says: "Nothing can minister pleasure to me until you secure the pardon of my offence." Is not that our condition—condemned already? We ought not to be content to live until we have sought and obtained pardon.

An unpardoned sinner cannot enter heaven; and if he could he would be unable to join in the song of the redeemed. What do they sing? (Rev. v. 9-10). That song must be learned on earth before it can be sung in heaven.

(2) It is freely offered through Christ (38).—We are not told to purchase it, or to work for it; but it is declared—preached—proclaimed—to us. Illustrate by Abraham Lincoln's proclamation to the slaves in America. It told of liberty for every slave. So does the Gospel declare that God is "ready to pardon."

But note the words, "through this Man." God does not forgive except through Christ. At the time of the Deluge the ark was God's only provision for man's salvation; so in Christ only is there salvation now. Why was this? Elicit the scholars' explanation of this statement. Misunderstanding here is the cause of many unsatisfactory conversions. Why could not forgiveness come to us apart from Christ? What was there in the death and resurrection of Christ that should secure our pardon? We know, but do our young people know? If not, why not teach them the meaning of substitution? They would see then that while pardon is "without money and without price" to us, it was exceedingly costly to God and to his Son.

(3) It is to be accepted by simple faith.—"Be it known," says the Apostle. And how may we know it? Because God declares it. The message of God is true, and must be accepted because He says it. There are two ways of treating this message. To faith is attached the blessing of justification (39). To unbelief is attached a fearful doom (40, 41). Which of these two shall be ours?

Zulu Tent Mission.—In Zululand and the neighbouring colony there are nearly half-a-million Zulus living in heathenism. Every kraal or native home should be visited, and every individual made to understand the plan of salvation. This cannot be done with the present missionaries living on stations scattered very far apart. A few zealous evangelists, either Europeans who know the language or native Christians living in tents and continually travelling from kraal to kraal throughout the land, seem to be what is required. Something has already been done, and we trust the work will be extended.

Eshowe, Zululand. J. D. Woodward.

THE BOOK WORLD.

BRITISH AND CHURCH HISTORY.

We have already called attention to the very attractive work which is being issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co., in sixpenny monthly parts, entitled The Church of England: A History for the People. Written by Dr. Spence, Dean of Gloucester, it will command a very general confidence. When completed, the parts will make four volumes, beautifully illustrated with copies of celebrated pictures, photographic views and sketches of places connected with the history of the Church, facsimile copies of MSS. and documents, maps, and reproductions of objects of historic interest. The first volume, just published (6s.), deals with the British and Anglo-Saxon Church; and, in a very readable manner, it unfolds the ever-interesting story of Columba and Aidan, the Chads and Bede, Patrick, and many other pioneers of the Gospel in our islands. This history will be generally welcome in Christian homes; its interest cannot be limited to the claims of any specific branch of the Church of Christ.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE JUBILEE.

Those who were privileged to attend the meetings held last year in connection with the International Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, will not soon forget the impressive scene that was presented by the large gatherings at Mildmay, and the weighty words of speakers representing many lands. It is a pleasure to hold in our hands a noble volume, edited by Mr. A. J. Arnold, general secretary, and published with the title: "Jubilee of the Evangelical Alliance: Proceedings of the Tenth International Conference, held in London, June-July, 1896." As will be remembered, the conference was held jointly with the annual gathering at Mildmay. The addresses at the morning meetings unfolded Evangelical doctrine regarding the Church which is the body of Christ. In the afternoons and evenings account was rendered of Gospel work in various parts of the earth. The papers and speeches, which fill this volume of over 500 pages, cover a wide field of deeply interesting reading, and there are portraits of most of the speakers. (6s. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

Golden Chimes, and Other Poems. By Alfred Horatio Gray, B.A. (Elliot Stock.) A little volume of choice verse, for the most part relating to Gospel story, Sabbath delights, and rural charms.

Old Things and New: A Spiritual Autobiography. By M. B. Sinclair, Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. (1s. Nisbet.) The author gave up much to serve Christ fully, and is now a worker in South Africa. Rev. Andrew Murray writes a hearty introduction to the book.

The Martyr-Crown; or the Seed of the Church. By Rev. Randolphe Henry Pigott, B.A. (2s. "Home Words" Office.) A capital illustrated story of the sixteenth century. The testimony and martyrdom of Cranmer is outlined, and a good deal of useful information embodied in the narrative.

The Abode of Departed Saints, by Bernard Piffard, is not a very fruitful study. For "the heavens" in the New Testament our author reads "the Church," thus asserting a liberty which we think quite unjustified. Nevertheless, there is some thought in the booklet. (Elliot Stock.)

The Queen's Empire is a timely and useful serial, of which the first part has been issued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. (6d. monthly). By the application of photography, we have here a reproduction, not only of architecture and natural scenery, but of life in all parts of the British Empire. When complete, the work will be one of unusual interest and value. Her Majesty the Queen has accepted the dedication.

The Sunday at Home for May has several striking articles. "Representative Missionaries of the Nineteenth Century" is accompanied by fifty-four portraits of the right honourables of world-wide evangelisation. The West London Mission is described; and among other illustrated sketches is one on the Dead Sea, and another telling the story of a day on Vesuvius (6d. Religious Tract Society).

Hymns of Ter Steegen and Others. Second Series. Translated by Frances Bevan. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) Here are verses by "Friends of God" and others of like mind, including Mechthild of Hellfde, the probable "Matilda" of Dante. The translator has drunk deep into the same spirit, and the result is a volume of very choice pieces. The hymns are rich in experimental teaching; and they are followed by some gems for the young. The large type makes this an ideal book for invalids and the aged.

The Joy of the Ministry: An Endeavour to Increase the Efficiency and Deepen the Happiness of Pastoral Work. By the late Dr. F. R. Wynne, Bishop of Killaloe. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This volume of counsels for young ministers is full of practical wisdom. The chapters deal with ministerial qualifications, duties, and methods in a very suggestive manner; and the fact that the book is in its fourth edition affords presumptive evidence that it meets a real need.

The Spirit of Truth, by H. W. Fry, is described on the title-page as "A Friendly Appeal to Hindus, Mohammedans, Buddhists, Christians, and Other Seekers after Truth." The description is admirably sustained by the booklet itself. The argument is as sound as the tone is modest. Moreover, the appeal is sympathetic as well as logical. Mr. W. S. Caine, in an introductory letter, expresses a conviction that Indians of all creeds and castes will receive the appeal with respect. It is well worth putting into their hands, and we hope it will be widely circulated. (3d. George Stoneman.)

The Divine Indwelling: Selections from the Letters of William Law. (1s. Nisbet.) Here we have in a smaller form the extracts from Law's "Address to the Clergy," which appeared in a larger volume, published a year or so ago, entitled, "The Power of the Spirit." In an introduction, Rev. Andrew Murray says: "I have learned so much from Law, of what God's purpose is with the gift of the Spirit, and he appears to me to have had such a revelation of this central truth of redemption, that which constitutes the very essence of its fulness of blessing, that I feel urged to do my utmost to direct attention to the treasures these selections contain."

The Christian Union Hymnal. Compiled by Pastor Fuller Gooch. This admirable compilation was primarily designed for use at Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, where Mr. Gooch is pastor, but it will doubtless meet with much acceptance at undenominational Christian assemblies throughout the country. The selection from the vast repertories of the Church's praise has been made from the Evangelical and union standpoint, and the result is a collection of about 800 hymns, which seems to meet every aspect and aspiration of the believer's life and walk. The price is only 1s. 6d., in neat cloth binding, and copies may be had of the compiler at Manseville, Chatsworth-road, West Norwood, S.E.

"These Sixty Years": 1837 to 1897. A Sketch of British Progress under Queen Victoria. By F. M. Holmes, W. J. Gordon, and D. J. Legg (2s. 6d.). This bright volume, with nearly sixty portraits and other illustrations, deserves a good place in the "Diamond Jubilee" literature. It is not exactly a sketch of the personal life of the Queen, but rather an outline of the marvellous progress of the nation during her reign—in art, science, literature, industry, and religious and philanthropic activity. Another capital book, specially suited for the young, is Our Gracious Queen: Pictures and Stories from Her Majesty's Life. By Mrs. O. F. Walton (1s.). Smaller books (one penny each) in the same line are: The Life and Reign of Queen Victoria, by Emma Leslie; and Victoria, R.I., a timely addition to the "Excellent Women" series, from the pen of Dr. Macaulay. (Religious Tract Society.)

The Hill of Frankincense, by L.A.H.S., is a booklet expounding in a spiritual sense the latter part of the Song of Solomon. (James Carter, 13, Paternoster-row.)

Three Years among Congo Savages. By Arthur J. Bowen. Friends of mission work, especially those whose prayer is for Dark Africa, should read this little book, from the pen of a worker of the Congo-Balolo Mission. (2s. per dozen. Partridge & Co.)

Why I am a Christian? by W. R. Bradlaugh, is a striking booklet, first issued twenty years ago. Having enlarged it so as to strengthen its testimony and appeal, Mr. Bradlaugh now sends it forth again. It is in its 250th thousand, and worthy of widespread circulation. (1d. Snow & Co.)

BOOKS RECEIVED.

From James Bowden.—The House of Dreams. (3s. 6d.)

From Mr. H. R. Allenson.—Which Bible to Read: Revised or Authorised. By Frank Ballard. (1s. net.)

From Messrs. W. Blackwood & Sons.—A Survey of Foreign Missions. By Rev. P. Barclay, M.A. (3s. 6d.)

From Messrs. Longmans & Co.—The Bible: Its Meaning and Supremacy. By F. W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S. (15s.)

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—A Study of St. Paul: His Character and Opinions. By S. Baring-Gould, M.A. (10s. 6d.)

From Messrs. Hazell, Watson, & Viney.—China and Formosa: The Story of the Mission of the Presbyterian Church of England. By Rev. James Johnston, a former missionary.

From Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.—Pardon and Assurance. By the late Rev. Wm. J. Patton, Dromara, county Down. Edited, with a biographical sketch, by Rev. John McIlveen, B.A. (3s. 6d.)

From The Religious Tract Society.—Cousin Mona. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. 2s. 6d. Not Peace but a Sword. By G. Robert Wynne, D.D. (2s.) Old Testament Criticism, and the Rights of the Unlearned. By Rev. John Kennedy, D.D. (1s.)

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—The Story of Keswick. By Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D. (1s.) The Holy Family. By Rev. F. C. Spurr. (1s. net.) Soldier Tim. By Rev. Canon Cooke. (1s.) Among the Syrian Christians in Travancore. By Rev. J. G. Gregson. (2d.)

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—Some Lessons of the Revised Version of the New Testament. By Dr. B. F. Westcott, Bishop of Durham. (5s.) Records of the Life of Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B. Compiled by a Friend, and edited by his widow. Popular edition. (7s. 6d.) Glympses of Our Empire. By Robinson Souttar, M.A., B.C.L., M.P. (1s. 6d.

"MAY" MEETINGS, 1897.

Date.	Hour.	Institution.	Place of Meeting.	Chairman or Preacher.
APRIL
Fri. 30	2.30, 5, & 8	The Protestant Alliance	m Queen's Hall, W.
,,	3.30	Female Education in East	m 118, Westbourne Park-terrace	Mr. Victor Buxton.
,,	4 p.m.	Christian Colportage Association	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Lord Overtoun.
,,	6 p.m.	Dr. Stephenson's Children's Home	m Wesley's Chapel, E.C.	Mr. W. Hazell, M.P.
,,	9 a.m.	Baptist Missionary Society	b Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. W. R. Rickett.
,,	7 p.m.	Young People's Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall	Judge Bompas.
MAY
Sun. 2	10 a.m.	B. and F. Bible Society	s Westminster Abbey
,,	11 a.m.	Church Association	s St. James's, Clapham	Canon Woodward.
,,	11 a.m.	Religious Tract Society	s St. Michael's, Chester-square	Archdeacon Diggle.
Mon. 3	2.30	Church Association	m Exeter Hall	Captain Cobham.
,,	3 p.m.	Medical Missionary Association	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. J. E. Mathieson.
,,	6 p.m.	Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society	m Mansion House	Ald. Sir J. Savory, M.P.
,,	6.30	Bible Christian Missionary Society	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Mr. A. Thomas, M.P.
,,	6.30	Church Missionary Society	s St. Bride's, Fleet-street	Bishop of Ripon.
Tues. 4	8.30 am.	,, ,, ,,	b Exeter Hall (Lower)	Canon W. J. Edmonds.
,,	10.55	,, ,, ,,	m Exeter Hall	Arch. of Canterbury.
,,	10.55	,, ,, ,,	m St. James's Hall, W.	Col. Williams, M.P.
,,	3 p.m.	,, ,, ,, (Ladies)	Exeter Hall (Lower)	Rev. H. E. Fox.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m Exeter Hall	Bishop of Newcastle.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m Exeter Hall (Lower)
,,	4 p.m.	B. and F. Bible Society	s St. Paul's	Bishop of Derry.
Wed. 5.	11 a.m.	B. and F. Bible Society	m Exeter Hall	Earl of Harrowby.
,,	3 p.m.	Church of England Temperance Soc.	m Lambeth Palace	Arch. of Canterbury.
,,	3 p.m.	Missions to Seamen	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Sir Wm. Willis
,,	3 p.m.	Missionary Leaves Association	m Exeter Hall (Lower)	Bishop Royston.
,,	3 p.m.	The Church Army	m St. James' Hall	Duke of Fife.
,,	3 p.m.	Col. and Continental Church Society	m Sion College	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
,,	3.30 & 7	The Protestant League	m Exeter Hall	Mr. Reader Harris.
,,	6.30	The Pastors' College	m The College, S.E.	Mr. W. Willett.
,,	9 p.m.	,, ,, ,, (Supper)	The College, S.E.	Mr. W. Willett.
Thurs. 6	11 a.m.	London City Missions	m Exeter Hall
,,	2.30	Church Pastoral Aid Society	m Exeter Hall	Mr. J. H. Buxton.
,,	3.30	London Auxiliary Moravian Missions	m Exeter Hall	Sir Geo. Williams.
,,	6.30	The Pastors' College	m Metropolitan Tabernacle	Pastor T. Spurgeon.
,,	6.30	Sunday School Union	m Exeter Hall	Lord Overtoun.
,,	7 p.m.	Prot. Evan. Mission and Electorial Un.	m Avenue-road Church, W.	Pastor W. B. Neatby.
,,	8 p.m.	Brit. Soc. Propagation Gospel to Jews	s Bloomsbury Chapel	Rev. J. Lawson Foster.
,,	8 p.m.	Church Association	c Royal Institute Water Colours
Fri. 7	11 a.m.	LondonSoc.PromotingChristianityJews	m Exeter Hall	Sir J.H.Kennaway,M.P.
,,	2.30	Church of England Zenana Society	m Church House, S.W.	Rev. H. E. Fox.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,, ,,	m St. Martin's Town Hall	Bishop of Caledonia.
,,	3 p.m.	West London Mission (Sisters' M't'ng).	m St. James' Hall, W.
,,	7 p.m.	,, ,, ,,	m St. James' Hall, W.	Mr. F. A. Hills.
,,	6.30	Religious Tract Society	Exeter Hall	Mr. J. C. Rickett, M.P.
,,	4.30 p.m.	Scripture Gift Mission	m St. Paul's Chapter House	Archdeacon Sinclair.
,,	7 p.m.	British Orphan Asylum	Hotel Metropole	Earl of Jersey.
,,	7.30	The Boys' Brigade	m Queen's Hall, W.	Viscount Wolseley.

b.—Breakfast; c.—Conference; m.—Meeting; s.—Sermon; so.—Soirée.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Worcester desires to revive in his diocese the ancient custom of Easter offerings to the clergy, irrespective of what their private incomes may be.

The Bishop of Hull is so ill that all his engagements have been cancelled. He is suffering from pleurisy, caused by a fractured rib, the result of a severe fit of coughing.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Rev. H. B. Norman, formerly a missionary in the Madras Presidency, and now curate of Kilmersdon, Bath, to the rectory of Tolland, Somerset.

Dr. Fremantle, Dean of Ripon, recently supported the President of the Methodist New Connexion Conference (Rev. E. Holyoake) at the opening of the annual sale of work in the Zion Chapel Schoolroom, Ripon.

On the evening of Good Friday, Canon Garratt, of Ipswich, fell during Divine service in St. Lawrence Church, sustaining a serious blow on the forehead. The canon, who is now in his eightieth year, is, we are glad to learn, recovering from the wound and its attendant shock.

The Bishop of Ripon delivered his Good Friday address in the Victoria Hall, Leeds, to an audience of men that crowded the building in every part. As in previous years, the gathering had been arranged by a committee of working men, representing nearly all the parishes in the city.

Canon Benham, rector of St. Edmund's, Lombard-street, has been appointed Boyle Lecturer. The office is held for three years. Canon Benham will give his lectures this year on the Sunday afternoons in June and October at St. James's, Piccadilly. The subject will be "The light that lighteth every man."

A "floating church" has been inaugurated in the fen country. The parish of Holme, in the diocese of Ely, has so extended itself that about half the population are practically out of reach of their parish church. To assist him in getting at these outside parishioners, the vicar is trying the experiment of using a kind of house-boat which can be moved from point to point on the large fen dyke or canalised river surrounding three-fourths of the parish. There is accommodation for a congregation of about forty, and in fine weather, additional worshippers can participate in the services from the dyke bank.

Congregational.

The London Missionary Society directors have decided for the future to throw upon students themselves, or the churches and their friends, the whole cost of college training.

The Congregationalists of St. Helens recently decided to open the Knowsley-road Mission Church as a day-school, to meet the demand of the rapidly-growing district of Newton.

Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith, J.P., of Croydon, has left England for the purpose of visiting Western Australia, New Zealand, and Canada. At Toronto he will be joined by Mrs. Pye-Smith.

The annual public meeting of the Bishopsgate congregation was held a few days ago. The pastor, Rev. Thomas Grear, spoke of the affection that past members of the church felt for their first spiritual home.

The Cornwall Association has held its annual meeting at Newquay. Mr. J. J. Wenham, the president, suggested in his address that they should follow the example of their Wesleyan friends, and group several churches under one minister, and supplement his work by lay preaching.

Mr. J. Wycliffe Wilson, J.P., of Sheffield, having visited Canada, the United States, and New Zealand with Mrs. and Miss Wilson, is now homeward bound. Wherever he and his family have gone, they have placed themselves in communication with the churches, and their visits have been greatly appreciated.

The manual of the church worshipping in Paddington Chapel refers to the great blow which the congregation sustained by the lamented death of Rev. Morley Wright so soon after commencing his pastorate. The report gives details of the many activities of the church, which is bravely fighting trying circumstances.

Calls.—Rev. F. W. B. Weeks, to Cores End, Wooburn.

Resignations.—Rev. S. C. Gordon, M.A., B.D., Newport Pagnell.

Baptist.

Dr. John Clifford has wired from Capetown that he and all his party are well, and are greatly enjoying their trip.

The American Baptist Year Book shows 1567 associations, 40,658 churches, 27,257 ministers, and a membership of 3,824,038.

Rev. W. A. Foster, of St. Louis, United States, has undertaken the temporary charge of the West London Tabernacle, with a view to the permanent pastorate.

Drake-street, Chapel, Rochdale, is henceforth to be known as Park Church. For the ensuing six months the pastoral duties are to be undertaken by Messrs. C. P. Thorpe and D. H. Jones, of the Baptist College, Manchester, under the superintendence of Rev. D. O. Davies, of Newbould Ebenezer Church.

Hamstead-road Church, Handsworth, Birmingham, of which Rev. Henry Bonner is minister, has just resolved to build schools. Though there are four schools in connection with the church, with nearly a thousand men, women, and children as scholars, the church has no school buildings. It is expected that the schools will cost about £3000, towards which sum £2200 has been promised.

According to the official handbook of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, the summary of statistics shows for the United Kingdom:—Churches, 2924; chapels, 3822; sitting accommodation, 1,288,514; membership, 360,112; Sunday-school teachers, 50,721; scholars, 519,225; local preachers, 4838; pastors in charge, 1955; baptisms, 16,113. In every one of these departments the figure is in advance of last year.

Calls.—Rev. J. Scilley, of Bridlington, to Plumstead; Rev. Sim Hurst, B.A., St. Andrew's, to Fishergate, Preston; Rev. C. E. Stone, of Middlesbrough, to Union Church, Luton; Rev. John Seeley, of Bridlington, Yorks, to Station-road Baptist Church, Plumstead (all accepted).

Resignation—Rev. W. Turner, Mill-street Church, Bedford.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Aird, late minister of Creich, Sutherlandshire, and ex-Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, conducted a Gaelic service in Brunswick-street Church, Manchester. Dr. Aird has reached his eighty-fourth year.

The official "blue book," which contains reports of committees and other papers, has just been issued, and showing that the congregations have increased during the year from 300 to 305, and the membership from 69,632 to 70,639. At the union (1870) the average membership per congregation was 198; it is now 232.

Call.—Rev. Norman Wright, M.A., of Kilmarnock, to Ancroft Moor.

Methodist.

The new U.M.F.C. chapel and schools at Bellingham have been opened, the president of the Assembly (Rev. George Turner) preaching the dedication sermon.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society has decided to make a final grant of £3500 to the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, in connection with the transfer of the German Mission to that church.

Bailie Doig, speaking at Ward-road Chapel, Dundee, said that if the Wesleyan Church was anything at all, it was a home mission church. As such it won its greatest triumphs a century ago in the small villages of England.

A Lay Evangelists' Association has been formed in Newcastle district to try and secure for the evangelists of Wesleyan Methodism: first, connexional recognition and registration; second, provision for sickness and old age.

The President of the Wesleyan Conference (Dr. Randles) has opened new Sunday-schools which have been erected in connection with the Castlemere Chapel, Rochdale. The schools, which will accommodate 700 persons, have been erected at a cost of £3500.

The annual report of Surrey Chapel Central Mission, Blackfriars-road, S.E., of which the Rev. J. Tolefree Parr is superintendent, gives a membership of 345. A determined effort is being made to celebrate the diamond jubilee by substantially reducing the debt of £6200. £2300 has been subscribed or promised.

Sir H. H. Fowler, M.P., speaking at the anniversary of the Wolverhampton branch of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, urged the need of adapting missionary methods to the character of the people it was sought to convert. Money, he said, was vitally necessary, but the supreme necessity was men of the right stamp.

Sir W. Pearson, M.P. for Colchester, recently unveiled at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Artillery-street, Colchester; a tablet to the memory of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, recording, in the great preacher's own words, how in that chapel, when seeking peace and finding none, he looked, and the grace of faith was vouchsafed to him that self-same instant.

A volume which is likely to be in great request at the centenary conference of the Methodist New Connexion has been prepared by Rev. W. D. Gunstone, of Chester. It is called a "Companion to the Minutes of Conference," and contains the pith of all the "minutes" in their relation to ministers and the numerical and financial returns since the origin of the Connexion in 1797.

Fallen Asleep.

At Coatham, Redcar, Rev. Francis Chapman, Wesleyan minister, for many years engaged as a missionary in the West Indies. — At Hove, Rev. Prebendary Sutton, from the effects of a fall, in his seventy-eighth year.—At Boston, Mr. George Richards, postmaster, a deacon of the Congregational Church.—At Teignmouth, Rev. Octavius Dene, rector of the parish, for many years Principal of the Laurence Military Asylum, Octamacand, and chaplain of Lovedale, in the diocese of Madras.—At Alderley Edge, Rev. Joseph Sykes, Wesleyan minister, in his eighty-seventh year, for over sixty years a minister of the Gospel.—At Auckland, New Zealand, Rev. Robert Laishley, the oldest minister in the service of the Colonial Missionary Society (Congregational). — At Stratford-on-Avon, Mr. Fred. Winter, J.P., for nearly forty years a member of the Congregational church, and for over thirty-six years superintendent of the Sunday-school.—At Iver, Bucks, Rev. W. S. Ward, for over fifty years vicar of the parish.—At Coleraine, Mr. Samuel Woodburn, an elder and congregational treasurer in the Presbyterian Church.—At Cork, Dr. Edward Townsend, a friend of the poor and active member of the Irish Church.—At Limerick, Mr. Zachary Myles, J.P., an earnest member of the Methodist Church.—At Ealing, W., Mr. William Robert Stuck, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, for many years deacon of Bloomsbury Church, and in other ways a useful member of the Baptist denomination. — At Norwich, Rev. W. F. Creeny, late vicar of St. Michael-at-Thorn, in that city, for many years past a distinguished antiquary.—At Reigate, Rev. A. H. Murray, M.A., vicar of the parish, and chaplain of Lady Henry Somerset's Home for Inebriate Women at Duxhurst.—At St. Heliers, Jersey, Mrs. Pasley, of "The John iii. 16 and Whole Bible Mission."—At Dewsbury, Mr. Emanuel Bickers, a Wesleyan and temperance reformer.—At Filey, Rev. Foster Crozier, Wesleyan minister of that town.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Miss Shutler, Bluntsmore, Crewkerne; Miss A. M. Scantlebury, Myrtle Villa, Weston Hill, Cadoxton, near Barry, S. Wales; C. Potter, 9, Romsey-road, Winchester, Hants; Miss E. Wootton, 72, Garbett-street, Birmingham; F. Bradshaw, 49, Scott-street, Scarcroft-road, York; Mrs. J. Kindon, 220, Lichpool-road, Aston; A. F. Solloway, 8, Dixon-road, Crosshill, Glasgow.

☞ As it is found that infidels and others send papers to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers should be carefully read before being given away.

Communications Received with Thanks. — G.E W.M.B. I.S.H. J.M. H.D. E.C. M.P.B. T.F.T. H.M C.P. T.J.U. N.A.S. J.H. P.B.J. J.B. G.O.C. G.F H.O.P. R.S.M. W.T.R. G.K. F.G.B. H.J.W. R.B C.P. J.S. W.K.V. T.O. M.H. R.H.H. G.R.C. W.D J.T.McG. V.M.C. W.R. E.F.W. R.G.P. E.T. E.H A.S. J.C.W. A.L. S.H.J. A.T.W. M.C. M.D. O.M A.T.P. L.V. A.T.S. R.B.W. J.G.T. S.E.R. J.C. J.E F. de P.C. H.W.F. W.M.C. S.H.A. A.R.S. A.H.H G.E.W. A.O.N. C.P.B. T.L.C. T.M. A.R.S. A.J.T. G.M. A.F.C. F.J. L.P. H.U. W.H.B. J.L.A. J.A.S. D.W. J.G.C. J.B. E.P. J.A. A.H. M.B. G.T.

Female Welfare.—The committee of the Society for Promoting Female Welfare propose to inaugurate a fund, to be called the "Royal Victoria Fund," to which they invite contributions. In the report for 1896-7 about to be issued, attention is drawn to an interesting feature of the society's work, viz., rewards for faithful service, the object of which is to encourage young servants to steady continuance in well-doing, and thus to place a check on the spirit of change of place which has tended to destroy good feeling and loyal attachment between employers and employed. The society's general fund cannot be drawn upon for servants' rewards, being always inadequate to the ordinary needs of the work. Any contributions to this proposed Royal Victoria Fund would be a real help to the work, and would be gratefully acknowledged by the committee through Miss Jane Barnett, resident secretary, at the central office, 22A, Devonshire-street, W.

Japan.—The outlook for the future of Christian work in Japan is brighter than it has been for the past two or three years. The day of captious discussion and intense nationalism seems to be waning, and the interest in practical Christianity is manifestly growing. For this we are truly grateful.

Kobe, March 23. J. L. Atkinson.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letter relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

All Advertisements for THE CHRISTIAN should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Central Advertising Offices, Bouverie House, Salisbury-square, London, E.C., accompanied by remittance. (For Terms, see Page 1 of cover.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address.

The subscription for one year, including Postage and Coloured Almanack, is as under :—

For Great Britain and Ireland ..	6s. 7d.	per annum.
For India, China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, Africa, France, Germany, and other European Countries	8s. 10d.	„ „
For United States and Canada .. Or including Monthly Copy of HERALD OF MERCY	2¼ dols.	„ „
	2½ dols.	„ „

Subscriptions for THE HERALD OF MERCY.

4 Copies monthly	2s.	per annum.
8 „ „	4s.	„ „
12 „ „	6s.	„ „
24 „ „	12s.	„ „

Post free to any address at home or abroad.

Remittances to be sent as above. Postcard should be enclosed for receipt or extra stamp to cover postage of same

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

LAST week we gave the closing instalment of the series of Rev. J. Kilburn's Memory lessons on languages. Various readers have expressed from time to time their appreciation of the help which the lessons have afforded them. It may be remembered that in the interview with Mr. Kilburn which we published several months ago, he stated that he did not accept any personal remuneration for lessons, and that he strongly urged all friends who derived benefit from them to give a thankoffering to some missionary society. We now remind our readers of this suggestion; we hope that many of them will carry it out, and so further the cause which the writer of the lessons, in preparing them has had at heart.

We shall be much obliged by any communications relating to the experiences of our readers with regard to these lessons. And also as to any donations to missionary societies in response to the above, in order that Mr. Kilburn and ourselves may know the results.

The circular invitation sent out by Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, Cockermouth, for the Keswick Convention, is now issued. The meetings this year will be held from July 19 to 24. Mr. Wilson says :—

We meet seeking more holiness before God. To this end may we "cease from man," and "wait only upon God," and when our dear brethren speak, may they have a direct message from Him, in the power of his Spirit through the Word, to our souls, and may we be obedient to every indication of his will. Our prayers ascend for our beloved missionary brethren and sisters, and the missioners gone forth in our Master's Name, as well as for others unable to be with us, and for his saints glorifying Him in sickness.

There will be the usual meetings in the Tent, the Pavilion, and the Victoria and Lecture Halls. Mr. Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, as in years past, will attend to applications for accommodation.

The opponents of foreign missions make much of the expense involved "for the conversion of a single convert," as they put it. Why spend so much, say they, to accomplish so little? But they overlook the educational value of all missionary work, which, in addition to conversions, is a large and important factor. Every year thousands upon thousands of children are taught how to live creditably and usefully the life that now is, as well as how to attain to the life that is to come. Even the sceptic should not be too prejudiced to recognise the value of this.

A very important and very suggestive view of the growth of Methodism is presented by the official statement, that

The last two years the increase abroad has been proportionately twenty-nine and a-half times as great as at home.

Were every church to compare home and foreign growth, we believe it would show substantially the same result. The Church of England can point to no increase here at all to compare with her growth in Uganda. Congregationalism has more cheering news from India and China and Polynesia than from any English county. Many reasons may be adduced in explanation, but is not the reason to be found in the fact that missionaries look on the whole field they occupy as one to be won for Christ, and that they never lose their sense of responsibility for its conversion? For the churches to hold their own is not enough; it is progress, conquest, that is wanted everywhere; and that can only take place where there is missionary enthusiasm.

Notwithstanding the increase of Wesleyan Methodism at home, and especially in the foreign field, The Methodist Times thinks that Wesleyan Methodists as a body are simply playing at foreign missions; only the missionaries, the returned missionaries, the committee, and a few devout souls here and there, are in earnest. For proof, appeal is made to the work of the Moravians, who send one missionary into the field for every sixty of their members, and give £73,000 per year for the support of their 500 missionaries. Were the Wesleyans to act in the same way they could send 7,257 men into the field, and raise as much as £1,022,000. Yet the Moravians live in comfort, and none of them have to go to the workhouse! Such an instance of devotion, always present with us, ought to have a great stimulative effect on all the churches. But certain current ideas as to why we are Christians, and how we should live, will have to be corrected first.

In his wanderings about England George Fox came upon some people who had once apparently professed doctrines similar to his own, but were then all shattered to pieces. This change, he told them, was the result of their not having waited patiently upon God to feel his power in their meetings. They had spoken themselves dry; they had spent their spiritual portions; "not living in that which they spoke of they were now become dry." How many or how few congregations may be in a like condition now we cannot say; but the danger is always present with Christians to work before they have waited for power, to speak before they have received a message; to go on living on the past rather than abiding in Jesus in the present, and testifying of the things at this present time which their souls taste and know of the good word of life.

A correspondent writes to us as follows :—

Every man has many leisure moments which he is obliged to spend in public or semi-public while travelling by railway, steamer, or tramcar, in the restaurant, etc. Many Christians, and may be inquirers, occupy this interval with the ephemeral newspaper or magazine, who would gladly choose their Bible as their companion were it not for their reluctance to be considered by their fellow-travellers pharisaical or hypocritical. To some robust minds this diffidence may be regarded as groundless and unworthy, but some of these robust ones little realise the dubious contempt and unexpressed repugnance evoked in the minds of their companions by their disregard of conventionality. If one or more enterprising publishers would render the English public the service of issuing an edition of the Bible—the Revised by preference—in a somewhat similar form to that in which Lasserre's Gospels were issued in France, they would lay many Bible readers under a deep obligation, and would doubtless find it a profitable commercial enterprise.

Dr. John Hunt's inquiry into "Religious Thought in the Nineteenth Century" has led him to the conclusion that toleration one of another is necessary among Christian men, and that they should weigh impartially other beliefs than their own. He very rightly regards the strifes about opinions as manifestations of human infirmity, "the outcome of the disposition to determine what revelation should be and how it should be given, instead of patiently inquiring what it is and how it has been given." We cannot realise intolerance as could our fathers, though ways may still be found of making life very painful to a man on account of his opinions. The Christian way is not to count him as an enemy, for that will neither correct his mistakes, if he has fallen into any, nor win his faith to the truth. Neither is it a good or healthy thing for anyone to assume that he has certainly got all the truth, and condemn those who differ from him. We are not pleading laxity or indifference, but for a due recognition of human infirmity and the need for true charity.

The Pall Mall Gazette devotes a column to the subject of temperance in Russia, from which it appears that the peasants mortgaged away much of their land for drink to the publican. So alarming was the state of affairs that M. de Witte, the Finance Minister, decided to take it in hand, and to make the vodka or brandy trade a Crown monopoly, thus obtaining for the State the enormous profits which had gone to private dealers. Two years' experiment has proved a financial, but by no means a moral, success. It is contended that just as much vodka is drunk in the provinces, where the new regulations are in force, as in other parts of the empire, and drunkenness is as rife. M. de Witte also appointed measures for carrying on temperance propaganda, but these are said not to be flourishing. The Finance Minister himself believes that his plan is succeeding, but we fancy he will ultimately find that whoever touches this traffic, State, or company, or private person, is contaminated and injured by it.

The Indian Churchman has an excellent article on the health of the army, in which it can see only one real and effective remedy, which goes to the root of the matter—marriage. Nature and religion alike point it out. There are difficulties in the way, and it would involve considerable expense, but the writer does not know where to look for a better. The saving of efficiency, and the saving in the expense of invaliding, to which many other things might be added, would go a long way towards meeting the additional expense which a much freer grant of permission to marry would involve. If this be called a counsel of perfection, the reply is that we appear to be aiming at a still more unattainable degree of perfection, namely, a clean-living celibate army. We are thankful for this fresh evidence of a strong feeling in the country that under fair and reasonable conditions a far larger proportion of soldiers should be allowed to marry. There are other reforms also required, but this is the first and the greatest. Nature and religion demand it.

It may not be an easy thing to supervise the whole of a child's reading, and yet parents do well to keep their eye upon it. Even the publisher's name may not be a guarantee that a book is of a right kind in tone of thought and feeling. Without intending to glorify violence, or crime, or to deal in a false sensationalism, there is a good deal offered to the impressible mind of a child which cannot conduce to mental or moral health. It is not pleasant to come upon a passage like the following, which is put into the mouth of a boy in a recent book :—

My father drew his sword, and no one could stand against him, no one! He cut and he slashed, and heads and arms and legs rolled off...one after the other. He got up to the colours, and with a shout he plunged his sword right through the enemy's body that had stolen them! The enemy fell over dead.

Had "the enemy" a boy to come and grieve over his dead father, or to plan revenge? Descriptions like this are enough to give us a generation of Kurds or brutes.

The accident to the platelayers at Peterborough, two of whom were killed and two injured, is another reminder of the needless dangers to which these gangs of men are exposed. It is distressing to read so of the poor fellows knocked down, or dashed in pieces, or cut in two by trains rushing along at a pace which only a keen and vigilant scout can give warning of, but too often no scout is provided. In this case at Peterborough the danger was increased by a fog, which not only made seeing impossible, but hearing difficult. All the more need that workmen's lives should be safeguarded with the greatest forethought and care.

Our police courts have other than sordid stories of crime to tell. The charge of a street visitor of the London School Board against three little girls, sisters, for "being found wandering without any visible means of subsistence," was the means of revealing the noble devotion of their elder sister, a girl of fifteen years of age. It has been her custom to rise early in the morning, wash and attend to the little ones, and then go off to a long day's work, for which she was paid ninepence, return in the evening and mend the clothes and otherwise play the part of a mother. "Mother" died sixteen months ago, and father comes home drunk every night. The brave, patient girl has done all she could to hide the family's poverty from the world, but the wandering infants, pacing the street, brought all to light. Happily there was a court missionary to whom the magistrate could commit the case for further investigation and help. Surely the "little mother" will have her burdens lightened.

Brixton Orphanage.—The twenty-first anniversary of this institution, which is situated at Barrington-road, Brixton, was celebrated by a public meeting at Brixton Hall on Saturday afternoon. The Lord Mayor, who was accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, presided, and there was a large attendance. The annual report presented by Mrs. Montague showed that during the early part of the past year there were over 300 children in residence, but at the end of the year the number stood at 286. During the year 26 girls were placed in domestic service—an occupation for which they are specially trained, the entire household and laundry work of the Orphanage being done by the children. The report was adopted upon the motion of the Lord Mayor, who expressed the deep interest he felt in institutions of this kind. Other friends spoke highly of the work.

[376]

The Indian Famine.

DEAR SIR,—I thank the friends who have sent us help towards the support of famine orphans, and should be glad if they would still remember us as our needs are very great. We have taken in, up to date, 103 children during the present famine. Of these some twenty-four are partially supported by a Government grant, which does not, however, cover the cost even of bare food, to say nothing of clothes, etc. Then we have sixty-five children of the remainder who require support. Our necessary extra expenditure is about 540 rupees per month—of this the Government have promised us 250 rupees from March 1 until the rains break. So that I have to raise 290 supees, and look forward to the time when the Government help will be withdrawn.

Gifts of material will be especially welcome.—Very truly yours, EDW. REGG.

Sikandra Orphanage, Agra.

PUNDITA RAMABAI AND THE FAMINE.

To many the name of Pundita Ramabai is known as that of the gifted lecturer and the friend of Hindu widows. This year when news of the terrible famine in the Central Provinces reached Ramabai she opened the doors of her Home for Hindu widows, and wrote, "So long as we have a little room or a seer of grain in the house we shall try and help our sisters who are starving."

When I saw her in February she had already received 125 women and girls (widows and deserted wives) from famine districts. Many of the younger ones looked gaunt and ill with suffering, and some were too ill to step forward for a salaam. I found these under a temporary enclosure of matting and cloth supported by poles. Ramabai admitted the need of new buildings, and with quiet confidence she said to me, "The Father must send the money."

Of late God has greatly blessed Ramabai, giving her a deeper knowledge of the life of Jesus and of the possibilities of that life being manifested in her. She expressed to me her wish that the new girls should be taught in Hindi, and thus be prepared to return as missionaries to their own people. Since reaching England I have found that some friends who wish to aid in famine relief have been glad to send gifts to Ramabai.

I have been requested to write these lines for others who might like to aid this effort of an Indian Christian lady. My friend Miss Bernard, who knows Ramabai, has kindly consented to forward to her any moneys sent to 1a, Amherst-road, Ealing, W. In prospect of the approaching monsoon, I feel sure that prompt help would be of special value. GRACE E. WILDER, Missionary in Western India.

RELIEF IN POONA.

The following is extracted from a letter by Miss Bannister, who is at work in Poona :—

The villages are nearly deserted, and the poor people are wandering about in the most terrible condition. They have sold their last possessions, and wander about with the merest rag on. The poor children, often deserted by their parents, are more frequently orphans, wander helplessly and hopelessly about, reduced gradually to the most fearful state of starvation. You find them grovelling in the dust of the road, eating little raw grains of anything that may have dropped from the carts; others turn over dustheaps in the town, and eat remnants of food which they find there. These are not even the low caste people, but many of them are of the highest castes, who have gradually been reduced by two or three years of famine.

We were able to collect and bring away forty-four of the poorest and most starving children, and we are going to fetch another sixty. We are trying to get up subscriptions to keep these poor children; £3 will keep one of them for the whole year. Of course these are all heathen children, and here we have the most wonderful opportunity of getting them into our Christian schools. It might take us ten years of hard work to get in half the number under ordinary circumstances. We don't believe that Christian England will let us be crippled for want of money. People are dying all round us here, struck down in one day by this fearful plague. Everyone is flying from Poona now, except those who are in the Lord's work, who stick to their posts.

DISTRESS IN AGRA.

DEAR SIR,—Since March 20 a large responsibility has been thrown upon me—viz., that of feeding from 400 to 500 starving persons daily, with a prospect of this having to be continued, with probably increasing numbers, until the end of August, or later.

The daily expenditure is from R.16 to R.20—i.e., from £1 to £1 5s. This work was entirely unsought, but has gradually grown, for the number of starving, enfeebled creatures increased, and their desperate need became more apparent. I have been led to take up the work, and make the necessary effort to find the daily supplies.

The famine in and around Agra has been very acute. The Government Relief Works have been crowded, the poorhouse is full, and the number of those receiving out door relief has been the largest in the district; and yet it is evident there are hundreds and thousands who remain unrelieved, and but for private effort must succumb during the next few months, especially as the most acute stage of the distress will probably not be reached before the month of June. At present there is a slight abatement of suffering on account of the harvesting of such rabi crops as there are.

Our plan has been to give a small quantity of grain or meal to each person, and more recently we have had to increase the quantity of meal to the more emaciated, and to add lentil soup in the case of feeble children, with milk for the very worst cases. The 400 or 500 persons are carefully sifted from much larger numbers, many of whom we would gladly help if funds allowed. Of those admitted many are blind, lame, infirm, and old, but the essential qualification is emaciation!

The funds in hand, chiefly received from friends in India, will last until about the end of May at the present daily rate of expenditure, but for the worst season, viz., June and July, we have as yet no provision. Yours truly, (Rev.) JOHN P. HAYTHORNTHWAITE, Principal.

St. John's College, Agra.

Working Lads in North London.

THE Finsbury Park Working Lads' Institute held its annual meeting and display on the 26th ult., the Archdeacon of LONDON being the principal speaker.

This organisation was created in Jubilee year for the rescue and guidance of the poor lads of the neighbourhood, and very nobly and efficiently is the work being carried on. A decade has seen a small beginning grow into important and potent work for the benefit of the male community, at that very critical period of life between schooldays and manhood.

An important departure was essayed last session, a resident superintendent being appointed to guide, evening by evening, the working of the various classes—which include, in addition to the Sunday services and week-day Bible meetings, carpentering, fretwork, painting, ambulance, gymnastics, education, and recreation—and give a steadying hand and watchful eye to the many parts of the machinery, and secure the harmonious working of the whole. With what success may be gathered from the increased and continued attendance, improved discipline and work, culminating in the most successful meeting and display yet attained.

This institute has just emerged from a very encouraging session, and having attained this distinction during the Diamond Jubilee year, it is a fitting time, seized on by its committee, to make strenuous efforts to free it from a debt of some £1100, the interest on which absorbs about 25 per cent. of the annual income. The chairman, Mr. THOMAS SMITH, has generously started the movement by the offer of a substantial amount, on condition that the remainder is forthcoming during the present year.

A report and further information concerning this voluntary and unsectarian effort will be gladly supplied by the Hon. Director, 44, Poole's-park, Seven Sisters'-road, N.

Love is Supreme.—To me love seems infinitely higher than knowledge, and the noblest distinction of humanity—the humble minister who wears himself out in labours of Christian love in an obscure retreat a far more exalted person than the mere literary champion of Christianity, or the recondite professor who is great in Fathers and Schoolmen.—Dr. John Cairns.

Four Precious Things.

By PRINCIPAL H. C. G. MOULE.

(Concluded.)

I COME now to two other links of our chain. We have thought of the costly faith, of the costly jewels of the daily trial; now Peter takes us to the exceeding great and precious promises and to the Lord who to them that believe is precious. A few words about the promises.

It is indeed possible to have been long in the Lord, and yet to need to be reminded of the mighty more that there is always to follow, and begin as if we began all again. These promises are not for our past, or our present only, but for each step as we move on into the future. "Converted believer, remember the promises," Peter seems to say. "You want to escape the corruption that is in the world through desire, that is, all desire which is at all away from God; you want to escape the fathomless corruption that is in the world, and to run away from it to where you shall be in safeguard. Remember that every forward step you take is to be upon exceeding great and precious promises, using which you are to be nothing short of partaker of the Divine nature, which is holiness and love. You are to be so joined to God in Christ that his power shall be in your weakness, his life in your death, his purity in your pollution; not repressing from the surface, but dislodging from the centre the enemy that has been there so long. Do not make a false use of the magnificent truth that, having come to Christ, you are not merely near Him, but in Him; that, having come to Christ, you have nothing short of Christ and all that is in Him."

That is true, and sometimes it is the very side of truth the soul needs. But remember that you may have a possession and not enjoy it; you may have wealth and not use it. To grasp the great promises of what God can do in you as well as the mighty certainties of what He has done for you, is the way to possess the possessions, and to realise the wealth.

It is one of those messages which at meetings like this, for many a long year past, has been pressed home, and by the grace of God brought home to innumerable hearts.

IT IS NO NEW-FANGLED THING;

it is as old as the prophets, the psalmists, and apostles. But there are those of us here who know what it was through our own fault not to have seen it for years, and then to have found what a discovery it was. We have been content with the surface of the soil, and have not at God's command dug for the gold deep down. Do seek to gather up the costly promises as those who have already obtained costly faith: that is to say, who have learned something of what it is to trust and use their Lord.

It may be you have anchored long upon the facts, the certainties of his finished work, but have you made use enough of his never-finished working? That Jesus Christ, who has once and for ever offered a sacrifice for your sins, and bids you know that for you it has been accepted; and that, wholly and utterly because of his sufferings, not yours, of his tears, not yours, of his bearing the burden, not yours, you are a beloved and accepted child of God, deep in the embraces of his home and of his love—this Jesus Christ you know, on Him you rest, to Him you cling; you only ask for more and more enjoyment of what there you know. But remember that the Christ who is eternally fixed in his atoning merits is prepared immortally to grow in you in his sanctifying indwelling by the Holy Spirit. He can grow in you with a dynamic force from the inmost centre of the soul, which shall make the strong enemy weak beneath your feet; which shall make your mighty temptations, as it were, paralyse themselves beneath, not your defiance, but his command. He shall beat them back, through the trembling lips, perhaps, of your faith in Him as your indwelling Conqueror, in order that He may be your blessed Master.

And now I come to the last glorious link of our chain, which sums up, after all, everything in it: "Unto you that believe He is precious." We are sometimes accused at meetings like this of talking about holiness and not about Jesus Christ. If that charge is true it is an awfully grave one.

I DO NOT THINK IT IS TRUE.

I used to think it was. There were years back in which I had great misgivings, great prejudices about meetings like this. But I needed to know more of my need and more of my Lord, through messages given to my soul at such a gathering as this, though in a far different scene. And I felt that the real heart and the centre of the messages God had given me through his servants on that occasion was just Jesus Christ. If it had not been Jesus Christ, if it had been only and apart from Him what would be called holiness, if it had been holiness defined in some way that could for one moment be separated from the old and everlasting Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ for us and in us, my prejudices would have been right judgments, and I should have been right never to go again. But I was found out by one address, in that well-remembered meeting, about the tremendous needs of my supposed Christian life and labour; and I was found out by another address with the discovery of the exceeding great and precious promises laid up in One of whom, when we believe, we find that in a very new sense He is precious.

It may be that meetings for the advancement of spiritual life may say sometimes too much about theories of the life, and too little about the Lord; but my experience in the mercy of God has been, that they have been wonderful times of

WITNESS TO AND DISCOVERY OF HIMSELF.

And I thank God that I less and less feel there is any fear of a certain sort of it taking the place of the Eternal Christ. It is not it but He; it is not a subtle something; it is the Lord, the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

"To you that believe, He is precious," What is the special message of these words? The apostle does not say "to you that are seeking, but have not yet found; to you that have seen afar off his coming to your souls"; but "to you that believe." And we who have believed often have to say to those who do not believe "Christ is precious, look at Him, and you will believe in Him." One of the great needs which, it seems to me, we preachers have is to set forth more and more to the unconverted the large, the glorious, the boundless fact of Jesus Christ—that they may not think about problems of how to trust Him, but, seeing Him who is to be trusted, may unconsciously do it and find that they are with Him.

But then there is another aspect of the matter which Peter bids us remember here. When we have come to Him then is the time to find that the Lord whom, perhaps, we first recognised only as a Refuge, is also a Paradise. We saw Him to be precious as our City of Refuge from the avenger of blood. But behold! being within, our eyes are opened, and we find it is the very home of God; it is the very hearth fire of the Divine family circle; it is the place where God has stored his gold; it is the place where He pours forth his fountains of living water; it is the place where He enriches the fugitive with all the wealth that is in his Son. To those that believe, those that have taken Christ at his word, He develops and manifests his preciousness in what He is able to be to them now, in the need of their souls for deliverance from sin, and in the need of their souls for development of spiritual power and serviceableness; in all they want Christ to be to them, in the blessed realities of life with Him.

So I leave these words upon your hearts: "To you that believe He is precious." The apostle has been speaking of Him as a "Living Stone," and how, coming to Him, we become living stones to be built up into the spiritual temple. And the living stone on which we build is not only strong, solid, angular; it is precious, it is the great gem of God. The Lord Jesus Christ is not only necessary, but unutterably beautiful and glorious. You find, if we may render the words quite literally, that the preciousness is to you that believe. You fled to Him, it may be, under the consciousness of necessity, to discover Him with a glad consciousness of boundless beauty, rest, and joy, as you put Him into use.

Bible Chronology.

A LECTURE on the above large and important subject was delivered in St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow-square, W., last Friday afternoon, by Rev. D. H. Hechler, of Vienna. The room was well filled, and much interest was manifested. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe presided, and in opening the proceedings remarked that the discoveries of our day furnish fully equivalent provision to meet its dangers in the prevalent spirit of opposition to God's written revelation.

The lecturer discoursed in a graceful and pleasant manner, exhibiting a series of most elaborate charts, which seemed well calculated to familiarise and consolidate acquired knowledge of a historical kind. It is impossible to give within due limits even a summary of the extensive ground covered by a lecture which, during more than an hour, maintained the interest of the auditors, while numerous events of Biblical and general history were touched upon. Mr. Hechler said that his thirty years' work began when Strauss, Renan, and others were being held up to public estimation. He claimed for his charts that they were a means, by God's help, of almost seeing such men as Noah, Abraham, David, Nebuchadnezzar, or Alexander the Great, each at his place in the ages of the world.

Long research and comparison had convinced him that the Bible is absolutely reliable in its figures; indeed systematic study in that direction elucidated points left obscure by general records, while the collateral facts of ordinary history afforded valuable confirmation of Scripture. One chart contains thirty Books of the Bible, beginning with Samuel and closing with Malachi; another furnishes a view of English literature during the last 800 years; while a third embraces a complete history of art in various countries. It was incidentally mentioned that it is exactly 1000 years since godly Alfred the Great conquered the Danes; so that Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee year is also an occasion of millennial rejoicing. Incidents of Mr. Hechler's travels were touched upon, with interesting details of useful intercourse with various classes of men, from prominent public personages to humble personators of characters in Passion Plays performed in the heart of Bohemian woods. Closely connected with the subject was the remarkable present-day movement for the return of the Jews to their own land, to which much impetus is likely to be given by the world's congress of that people, announced to be held in Munich on August 25, 26, and 27 this year.

Rev. Gosset Tanner suggested that if a guarantee of from £150 to £200 could be made up by various friends, it was proposed to publish the Biblical chart at a low price for the benefit of all Bible students.

Young Christian Missionary Union.—A large meeting of young people, in connection with this Union, was held at Westminster Chapel on May 1. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided. Mr. W. B. Sloan spoke on the New Testament atmosphere of giving. Dr. A. T. Pierson, in the course of his address, said there was a crisis now in missions. Workers are ready, but funds are needed. Mr. Meyer said that God wanted channels to work through. A solemn dedication closed the meeting.

Home of Rest, Littlehampton.—The large number of friends who have sought the hospitality of this Home during the past year demonstrates the need of such help to Christians of all names. Whilst studiously caring for the physical requirements of the visitors, it is borne in mind that mere rest and recreation, without spiritual reinvigoration, is of little service. A larger number than ever of free and assisted cases has been received. The cost of this part of the work had been £620.

Paul: A Servant of Jesus Christ.

A LIGHT FROM HEAVEN.

Acts xxvi. 13.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

IF the importance of events can be estimated by the amount of space given in Scripture to their narration, the arrest placed by the risen Lord upon the career of Saul of Tarsus must take the second place in the story of the New Testament. It is described three times, with great minuteness of detail—first by Luke, and twice by himself—and the narration occupies more space than the story of any other event except the crucifixion of our Lord.

This must be accounted for, partly because of the important part played by the Apostle in the moulding of the early Church, and partly because his conversion was due to the personal agency of the risen Lord, who appeared as literally as during any of the appearances of the Forty Days. This was no mere vision, like that which John had when he was in the Spirit, no mere transient impression on the sensitive plate of the imagination, no evanescent, dream-like fancy; but a manifestation of the risen Lord like that which carried conviction to Thomas, or like that of which Peter spoke when he said, "We ate and drank with Him after his resurrection from the dead."

It was one of the deepest convictions of the Apostle in all his after life that he had veritably and certainly seen the Lord; and was therefore as really empowered to be a witness of his resurrection as any who had companied with Him, beginning from the baptism of John until the day that He was received up. Am I not an Apostle? Have I not seen the Lord? he asks. And after enumerating the Lord's appearances after his resurrection, he adds, placing that scene on the road to Damascus on a level with the rest: "Last of all, as unto one born out of due time, He appeared to me also." Ananias used the same phrase, when, entering the darkened chamber in which the Apostle lay like an eagle with broken wing, he said, "The Lord, even Jesus, who appeared unto thee in the way which thou camest, hath sent me."

Six days before, Saul had left Jerusalem with a small retinue furnished as his escort by the high priest. The journey was long and lonely, giving time for reflection, of which he had known but little during the crowding events of the previous months. He had been too closely occupied by those domiciliary visits, those constant trials, those scourgings, tortures, and martyrdoms; and in the incessant occupation he had been without taking his bearings or realising their precise direction.

DRIFTING WITH THE RUSH OF EVENTS,

It was high noon. Unlike most travellers, he forbore to spend even an hour in the retirement of his tent for shelter from the downward rays of the sun, piercing like swords, whilst all the air was breathless with the heat. He was too weary of his own musings, too eager to be at his work. Suddenly the little cavalcade left the stony wastes over which the track had lain, and began to pass beneath "the flickering shadows of ancient olives," whilst Damascus suddenly came into view, amid a soft haze of verdure: its gardens, orchards, and groves making an emerald setting for its terraced roofs and white glistening cupolas.

The goal of the long journey was well in sight. Within an hour or two he would be within the gates, and traversing the street called Straight, to deliver his commission to the authorities, and to ascertain the best point for commencing proceedings. But suddenly a great light—above the brightness of the Syrian noontide sun—shone around him; and a voice, amid the blaze, unintelligible to his companions, though clear enough to himself, was heard, speaking in the familiar Aramaic, and calling him by name.

There can be no doubt, in the light of the passages we have studied, as to the origin of that light—it came straight from the face of the glorified Saviour. With some such light as this it was irradiate on the Mount of Transfiguration when his face did shine as the sun, and his garments became white as the light, and all the snows around reflected the golden sheen. Something of the same beauty and splendour was described by John in after years, when he speaks of the vision given in Patmos, which must have fallen far behind the actual appearance on the way to Damascus, and his countenance was as when the sun shineth in his strength.

In the light of that moment the Apostle saw many things. It was like a sudden flash-light flung over an abyss, revealing secret things which had been entirely hidden, or but dimly understood.

In the glory of that light he beheld the supreme revelation of God. Nature had told something of God. His glory had shone from rolling worlds, and the outspread expanse of oceans and seas; had covered morning skies with daffodil, and evening clouds with crimson and gold; had goldened in the harvest-fields and kindled around bush and brake, flower and bracken. God had not left Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave from heaven rains and fruitful seasons, filling all hearts with food and gladness. The heavens declared his glory, and the firmament showed his handiwork. Day uttered speech unto day, though there was neither speech nor language. Night unto night showed knowledge, though their voice could not be heard. Thus the invisible things of Him were perceived through the things that had been made, even

HIS EVERLASTING POWER AND DIVINITY.

But this light was above the brightness of the sun, though it shone in the meridian, with all the strength of a Syrian noon.

There had been a further revelation to Israel. The light that shone on the face of Moses was emblematic of the fuller disclosures of Himself which God gave to his chosen people. So excellent was that light that the children of Israel could not look steadfastly upon Moses for the glory of his face, and he was finally compelled to cover it with a veil. And that veil also had been emblematic of the blindness of Israel to the greatness and glory of the revelation made to them.

But the glory of God on the face of Jesus was above the brightness of that dispensation. That was of the letter, this of the spirit; that was the ministration of death, this of life; that was temporary, and passed away, this was the final and permanent outshining of the love of God. There is no conceivable method of Divine manifestation that can excel the light which shines from the face of Jesus. It is a human countenance that looks down to us through the opened doorway of heaven, but it is aglow with the light of that Shekinah which passed between the pieces of Abraham's sacrifices, shone in the burning bush, lighted the march of Israel through the Red Sea, and at the dedication of Solomon's Temple drove the priests before its waves of billowy glory from the Holy Place into the Outer Court.

Would you know God? You must study Him in Jesus. So utterly did the Son of Man renounce his own words, and works, and will, that we know comparatively little of Him. All was from the Father, and to the Father. The words He spake were the Father's; the works He wrought the Father's; the death He died, the reconciliation with God, the Father wrought through Him with his erring creatures. We need nothing beyond; there is nothing beyond. In heaven itself we shall still behold the light of the glory of God on the face of Jesus, our eyes getting stronger to bear it, our insight being always deeper and more perfect. That light was above the brightness of the sun, and will shine when sun, and moon, and stars are dark and cold, and we have for ever left behind the teachings of Moses, as children put away the toys and dress of childhood.

In the revelation of that light, Saul of Tarsus saw the real nature of the war which he had been waging against the religion of Jesus. The earliest name of the new sect was the Way. It was thus that the Apostle spoke of it in after years: "I confess unto thee, that after the Way, which they call a sect, so serve I the God of our fathers." It was a pathetic and significant title; these simple souls had found a new and living way to the knowledge and worship of God, consecrated through the rent flesh of Him whom their chief priests and rulers had delivered up to be condemned to death.

The young man Saul was exceedingly mad against the pilgrims of the Way. He made havoc of them, and the word is that which would be used of wild boars uprooting tender vines. He devastated them with the fury of an invading army. Not content with attacks on their public meetings, he paid visits to their homes, dragging forth the patient holy women as well as the uncomplaining men, scourging them, thrusting them in prison, putting them to death, and compelling them to blaspheme the holy name by which they were called. He breathed out threatening and slaughter, as a cruel monster might snort fire. He was so mad against them, that when the church at Jerusalem lay desolate, and its garden was torn and trampled into a desert, he pursued the same methods in distant cities, and on the present memorable occasion had received letters to bring those of the Way that were there in bonds unto Jerusalem to be punished.

By this fanatical outburst it is probable that the door was opened for him into the Sanhedrim, his participation in its deliberations being suggested by his having given his vote against the disciples of Jesus when they were put on trial for their lives (Acts xxvi. 10). Great prospects were thus unfolded before the persecutor, and though his tender nature must have revolted from his sanguinary and ruthless efforts, though the sight of suffering inflicted at his instigation must have been very abhorrent, he was incited to pursue the path he had chosen by the enthusiastic encomiums and plaudits of his co-religionists. There was, however,

A DEEPER MOTIVE.

"I verily thought I ought." This work of extermination seemed to him part of his religious duty. He owed it to God to stamp out the followers of Jesus, and the more revolting it was to his nature, the more meritorious it was in the sight of Heaven. Might not these efforts condone for a coming short in respect to the demands of God's law, which now and again forced itself home on his inner consciousness? But, like the Roman soldiers who crucified the Lord, he knew not what he did. "I was a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious; howbeit I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief."

As, however, that light fell upon his path, he suddenly awoke to discover that, instead of serving God, he was in collision with Him, and engaged in uprooting and ravaging that for which the Son of his love had expended tears and blood. In persecuting the sect of the Nazarenes he was persecuting the Son of God. By every blow he struck at the infant Church, he was lacerating those hands and piercing that side. With every sigh and groan that had been extorted from the members, he had elicited from the Head in heaven the remonstrance, "Saul! Saul! why persecutest thou Me?" It was a terrible and overwhelming discovery. The earth seemed to yawn before him. Somehow his religion had brought him into collision with God in the person of those who were dear to Him; evidently then, instead of their being wrong and he right, they were right, and he wrong; instead of his fanatical zeal being pleasing to God it was grievous to Him, and heaping up wrath against a day of wrath. So it may befall some reader of these lines! Some day a great light from heaven may show that what you now count your solemn duty is one long succession of sin against the most cherished purposes of God.

That light also revealed the inadequacy of his religious life. He had lived out all that he thought to be right. There was no prescription of the elders to which he had not conformed. So far as he knew what religion prescribed, he was blameless. Yea, had he not gone beyond its prescriptions in the zeal with which he had harried the Church? And yet of late he had been compelled to confess to a dull sense of uneasiness and dissatisfaction. He studiously fought against it by immersing himself more sedulously than ever in the worst of persecution; yet there it was, and sometimes the evil thing (as he thought it) cast a petrifying glance upon his utmost efforts.

Two causes further instigated this uneasiness. First he felt that his religion did not satisfy him; it gave him no such tender views of the love of God as had impressed Moses or Daniel, and it seemed ineffective to curb the imperious demands of sin. Often the good he would he did not, whilst the evil he hated he did. Often he felt himself a captive, sold under sin. Often he cried aloud that he was a wretched man bound to an intolerable yoke, which chafed him to the quick. And there seemed no deliverance. Always those cases of minute casuistry, always the same exactions of outward obedience, always as the attempt to spend one day of perfect obedience was reviewed from the evening hour. Was there nothing better?

THE SAME WEARY SENSE OF FAILURE

Then it seemed as though these humble disciples of Jesus of Nazareth had something better. The meekness with which they bore their sufferings was far removed from obstinacy; the purity of their home-life vindicated their professions; the light that shone upon their dying faces, the prayers for their persecutors, which they offered with their dying breath, evidenced the possession of a secret of which he knew that he was destitute. Could that religion be right which threw him into antagonism with such lovely traits and characteristics? Besides, he had often heard them speaking of their Teacher, his life of beneficence, his pure and lofty teachings, his maxims for the regulation of the inner life, his directions for the behaviour of his followers—they touched chords which responded deep in his own soul as they spoke. It seemed to him sometimes as though this Nazarene had discovered the Pearl of great price and the Treasure hidden in the field of Old Testament Scripture; yet how could He be the Messiah who had come to such an end! And how absurd it was to say that He had risen, when the Roman sentries had solemnly averred that his body had been stolen by his disciples, whilst they slept.

But all these questionings about his religious life were brought to a head and confirmed, when suddenly he beheld Jesus of Nazareth enthroned on the right hand of power, and shining with a light above the brightness of the sun. What could he say of a righteousness which had led him to reject and persecute the Son of God? Of what value was it? Surely that which had led him to reject and persecute the Son of God Himself in the persons of his adherents was an altogether deadly and pernicious delusion. He had thought himself blameless; but in the beam of that light he discovered that he was of all sinners the chief, that he was not worthy to be called a son, and might be glad to be numbered among the hired servants.

Now, too, he discovered the source of his uneasiness of heart and conscience. He may have attributed it to a morbid and melancholic element in his constitution, to the reaction of his mind from the sight of suffering, to a weakness of which he ought to rid himself as speedily as possible. He now saw that these strivings were the prickings of the great Husbandman's goad, by which He had long been attempting to bring him into that attitude, and lead him to undertake that life-work which had been prepared for him from the foundation of the world.

When the Master said, "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad," his speech bewrayed Him. It was said of Him during his earthly ministry that without a parable He did not speak to his people. Now from heaven his lips took up the wonted strain. He likened Himself to one who had purchased a young heifer at a great price. He has brought it into the field to drag the plough in a certain direction, but it resists and seeks another, compelling its owner to use the sharply-pointed goad, pressing it against its flanks till it conforms to his will. Saul suddenly awoke to find that he had been purchased by the Lord; that Christ had been seeking for a long time to make him take the predestined track; and that all the bitter remorse of conscience had been intended for this sole purpose. It was a new conception of the religious life. Not to do his own prompting, but God's; not to be clothed in his own righteousness, but in God's; not to cut up and destroy, but to construct; not to oppose the Nazarene, but to take his yoke, to bear his burden, to do his will.

That light also revealed to him the course of his future life. Henceforth he was to be a minister and a witness of those things which he had seen, and of those in which Christ would still appear to him. All that was required of him was to live in unbroken accord with the risen Saviour, beholding his beauty, inquiring in his temple, receiving his messages for transmission to others.

It was enough. Meekly he asked what he must do, what the new and rightful Master of his life would have him do. He little weened how great things he would have to suffer (Acts ix. 16). But after all, men do as much by suffering as by active toil; and the world owes as much to the anguish of its martyrs as to the words and deeds of its apologists and workers.

And then there arose before him, in a flash on the high road, and in fuller development in the three days' retirement in the house of Judas, the Lord's ideal of his life—that he should be sent to Jew and Gentile, by his simple witness to open blind eyes, that they might turn from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, so as to receive remission of sin and inheritance among the sanctified. That conception moulded his life, and forms the basis of one of his noblest outbursts (Col. i.).

To know the Divine will, to see the Righteous One, to hear a voice from his mouth, to be his witness and chosen vessel, to bear his name before Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel, such was henceforth the prize of the mark of his high calling to which he began to press (Acts ix. 15; xxii. 14). He saw that he had been apprehended; he realised something of the purpose for which he had been apprehended; and with patient faith he resolved, so far as in him lay, to apprehend it.

He would not be disobedient to the heavenly vision that summoned him to a life of self-sacrificing toil; and as a token of his meek submission he was willing to be led by the hand into the city, which he had expected to enter as an inquisitor, and to receive instruction from one of those simple-hearted believers whom he had expected to lead captive to Jerusalem. Such are the triumphs of the grace of God, which in his case was shown to be exceedingly abundant.

Kept from Evil.—Precept, "Remove thy foot from evil" (Prov. iv. 27). Prayer, "Keep me from evil" (1 Chron. iv. 10). Promise, "The Lord is faithful, who shall establish you and keep you from evil" (2 Thess. iii. 3).

How the Bible Wins its Way.

By Rev. E. E. JENKINS, D.D.

OF all the forces which are gradually but surely making the races of India one people, the mightiest in its silent and pervading operation is the Word of God; and herein the position of the Bible Society is positively unique. Missionary Societies make converts, organise churches, and establish schools, but these derive their inspiration and support from the Scriptures, which the Bible Society supplies. But beyond schools and beyond churches, this Society circulates the Word of God not only by its colporteurs and Bible-women, but by the people themselves, who purchase copies of the Gospels and of other portions of the Word of God at great central fairs and festivals, and carry these copies away into villages and towns as yet unknown to the missionary and to the evangelist.

It has been said that most of the people cannot read. That is a false statement. There are districts where the priest may be the only reader, but that state of things is passing away very rapidly. The schools are multiplying yearly, and with the multiplication of schools there will be millions, many millions in the course of one decade, of readers added to the population. So that state of things is passing away. And the Bible is going forth, not to one particular district, not in any one particular language, not to one particular class; the circulation of the Bible represents many classes—I was going to say all classes—many provinces, many races. Consider this one fact, which overpowers my imagination as I pursue it in my mind, that beyond the present range of direct missionary work, the Bible, in the languages and dialects of the common people, is opening its treasures to the inquisitive, the questioning, and in one sense the religious, mind of the Hindu reader. As a result, the clear revelation of our heavenly Father, and the truth of the Incarnation of God, are silently sapping or disturbing the pitiful and licentious imagery of idolatry; and the lofty standard of conduct shining forth from our Lord's life, as seen in the New Testament, is rebuking the immorality of the Hindu and Mohammedan priests, and rebuking the vile habits which distinguish the life of the people under their charge.

Of course the operations of this influence are secret; they can be seen but by few, they can be measured by none; but sometimes a fact comes up to the surface, and tells us what is going on below. I got a letter lately from my friend, Rev. J. Elliott, in which he tells a Hindu, to whom he gave a Hindu New Testament about twelve months ago. This youth, about nineteen years of age, read the book, made it his companion, and studied it, and was so amazed, so transported, by the revelation of a great Saviour from all sin, that he became a secret convert to the Master. He was ready to be baptized, but the strong hand of his father, and the stronger heart of his mother withheld him, and it was deemed impossible that he should be baptized and publicly admitted into the Church. But at this time he was taken ill, and somewhat suddenly died. As he was dying his mother came to him and said: "My boy, Have you any request?" "Yes," he said, "that I be buried" (that is, not cremated), "and that under my head, when I am laid in the grave, my New Testament and my hymn-book may be placed." The caste authorities were consulted, but at the graveside one of the most influential of them said: "We cannot refuse his request; we must do what he desired; the gods love knowledge, and this lad loved knowledge." A few years ago it would have been impossible for this boy's request to be granted, and Mr. Elliott adds: "I am astonished that they permitted it; but it is a sign of the times, and the Bible is doing it."

A PATHETIC STORY OF A YOUNG MAN,

It may be added that the Bible in other non-Christian lands, such as China and Japan, is accomplishing—in China with swifter, in Japan with slower steps—a similar revolution of the native mind to that which I have described in regard to the Hindu mind. If it was a distinction of the Jews that unto them were committed the oracles of God, to us in a more important sense these oracles are committed, that we may not lock them up, but publish them in all the languages and to all the hearts of men; it is our glory, and it is also our great responsibility.—Bible Society Reporter.

[379]

Is My Bible Really True?

WHERE DID WE GET IT?

By Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., Manchester.

V.

THE ANCIENT FATHERS OF THE CHURCH.

MANY years ago, says Thomas Cooper, a party of scholarly men met for a dinner-party. During the conversation which went on, someone in the party put a question which no one present was able to answer. The question was this:—

Suppose that the New Testament had been destroyed, and every copy of it lost by the end of the third century, could it have been collected together again from the writings of the Fathers of the second and third centuries?

The question startled the company, but all were silent. Two months afterwards one of the company called upon Sir David Dalrymple, who was also present at the dinner. Pointing to a table covered with books, Sir David said: "Look at these books. You remember the question about the New Testament and the Fathers? That question roused my curiosity, and as I possessed all the existing works of the Fathers of the second and third centuries, I commenced to search, and, up to this time, I have found the entire New Testament except eleven verses."

It must be quite clear to every person that when these Ancient Fathers lived and wrote their books,

OUR NEW TESTAMENT WAS IN EXISTENCE,

or they could not have made such copious extracts from it as they did. Many of the books they wrote have been lost in the passing of the ages, and only a comparative few have reached us. But if the entire New Testament is to be found in such writings as have come down to us, we must conclude that the Sacred Scriptures were not only known among them, but were their constant companion, their meat and drink, their precious treasure of the Word of Life, as it is the case with us to-day.

In further illustration of this I may mention just one fact in connection with one of the ancient Fathers named Origen. This man was a most active scholar, and occupied an important place in the Church. He was born in the year 185 A.D. He wrote many books, only a few of which have survived the ages and reached us. But we are told that in the few of his works which have come down to us, two-thirds of the New Testament can be found. This is a most noteworthy fact.

It would make these articles very long if I were to attempt to give you some account of all the Fathers of the first three centuries which are known to us. I must leave those who desire fuller information to pursue their studies through the usual channels, and will content myself by selecting and naming only a few. Those which I will introduce shall be men all of whom lived in the first and second centuries. Among them were some who lived when men were alive who had heard and seen the writers of our sacred books, and conversed with them about some of the august facts concerning our Lord's life and works, and some of them even the friends of the Apostles themselves.

THREE EARLY FATHERS.

In the year 175 three very eminent Fathers were alive. They are known as Irenæus, Tertullian, and Clement of Alexandria. I want to give you a very short account of each of these three, and it is important to note the valuable testimony which they bear to the existence, in their day, of the New Testament—our New Testament, observe. They lived in different parts of the world, moved among different circumstances, but all bear most valued testimony to the place and authority of the Gospels and Epistles in their day.

TERTULLIAN.

Tertullian was born at Carthage, in Africa, about the year 150 A.D. His parents were heathen, but they were in a good position, and Tertullian was blessed with a sound education. Philosophy, history, and law were subjects in which he took much delight. He grew up to manhood before his conversion to Christianity, and was probably forty years of age before that important event took place. He was a man of profound mind, ardent and deep feeling, and a voluminous writer. This scholarly lawyer makes great use of the New Testament. He ascribes the four Gospels to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. His works which are known to us have been carefully examined, and it is found that he makes 2500 references to the New Testament. Of these 700 are references to the Gospels, and of these, again, 200 are to the Gospel by St. John. He quotes from every chapter in Matthew, Luke, and John. He is the first to introduce the phrase "New Testament."

IRENÆUS.

Irenæus was another type of man, lived in another part of the world, and had entirely different surroundings. He was born in the year 130 A.D., and was a native of Asia Minor. He had the unspeakable advantage of being a disciple of the ancient Polycarp, who was the disciple and friend of the Apostle John. It is not quite clear how or when he came to leave his birthplace, but we know him chiefly for his connection with the Christian church at Lyons. He was presbyter of the church there during the time of a fierce persecution under Marcus Aurelius, the Roman Emperor. The aged bishop of the church, named Pothinus, died in prison in the year 177, and Irenæus succeeded him.

In his writings he used the New Testament with great freedom indeed. He attributes the four Gospels to Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. He argues that there were four and could be no more than four Gospels. In his works which are known he makes 1200 references to the New Testament. Of this number 400 are to the Gospels, and he makes eighty references to the Gospel of St. John.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA.

From Gaul we pass to Alexandria, that we may get a short notice of Clement, of that city. The early history of the church in this city is not very certain. Tradition has said that Mark was the founder of it. Be that as it may, we know that Alexandria early became an important centre, noted for its scholars, its library, and its university. It was the meeting-place of men of all nations. Christianity early took root in this city, and famous Christian schools were established.

Clement was probably born about the year 165 A.D. Like Tertullian he was grown to manhood before he became a Christian. He was a great scholar, and presided over a most famous school of thought at this centre of active life and culture. He was a man of wide intelligence, and broad sympathies. Within one hundred years of the death of the Apostles of our Lord, he was working and teaching, and accepted as genuine and authentic the Gospels as we accept them. He mentions Matthew, Luke, Mark, and John by name, and places them in the order here last named. He makes 320 references to the New Testament in his works which have come down to us.

This is the testimony which these three ancient Fathers bear to our sacred Book. Living in different centres of life and thought, they yet all had our New Testament. They used it not simply as a private book, but as the recognized Scripture of the Churches with which they each lived and worked. It must be quite clear that our Bible came from men who lived before they did, and as one of these men was a scholar at the feet of Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, we need but to go back one step more and we are with the Apostles. We want but one more link, and our chain of evidence, reaching from the Bible lying on my desk as I write, to the hands of the inspired men who wrote the New Testament portion of it, is complete. We will try to supply that one link in our next article, and thus clasp hands with the Apostles.

Vice Regulation in India.

IN a letter written to a friend on the renewed conflict with respect to the reimposition of the C.D. Acts in the Indian Army, Mrs. Josephine Butler writes:—

"In the course of every great conflict for truth and justice it seems to me that those who fight for the right are again and again thrust back upon first principles; are called again and again to be 're-baptized' in those great principles. They have to re-learn them in order that they may continue effectively to teach them. It is a severe discipline, but it is necessary and good for us. Let us not shrink from it, nor grow weary of the battle. Let us never yield to compromise when a vital principle is concerned, but continue to hold our standard high, even if we should have to die before the victory is gained, or to see our standard knocked down and trampled under foot.

"One word concerning the special nature of the renewed conflict which is forced upon us. We should all be glad to find a standpoint of agreement with any honestly-disposed Government which would enable us to work together for the good of our unhappy soldiers; but that standpoint has not yet been found. I cannot too strongly express my feeling (in which all mothers at least will surely sympathise) of compassion for the soldiers—those poor boys sent out in such numbers to India, and there subjected to every evil influence and to few good ones. Apart from all statistical errors or exaggerations, we believe that their physical state is bad in the extreme, and we do not deny the truth of certain ghastly descriptions of military hospital patients. I have been permitted at times to visit such patients in hospitals (the male as well as female wards), and the very memory of the faces of these, my poor blighted fellow-creatures, fills my heart with pain at this hour, and with the most yearning desire for their redemption of soul and body in the fullest sense.

"But whose is the responsibility for this suffering in the case of the young soldier? It is certainly not wholly his own, as anyone cognisant of the soldier's life in India must see. It is no exaggeration to say that our soldiers in India have been long and carefully trained in the shameful doctrine of the necessity of sexual indulgence. Under this training, disease has constantly increased; and the authorities now attribute its continual increase in these recent years to the relaxation (for I do not believe it was complete abolition) of the regulation system in the Indian cantonments, and they accuse the abolitionists of having 'opened the floodgates' of disease by demanding that fornication should cease to be regulated and encouraged by them in India. This is childish. As if the advancing wave of immorality and consequent disease could have been expected at once to be put back by the partial abolition of any outward checks (supposing they even were checks).

"I feel strongly that in our present campaign we must make very prominent our positive proposals for bettering the moral state of our Indian army; that we must continually insist upon and call loudly for the application of moralising and disciplinary measures, which have never yet been honestly tried. We must demand, as we deeply desire, real reforms, and prove that we are penetrated with a true sympathy for the sufferers from the physical penalty of indulgence, and for the families at home of the poor soldiers, while we resist to the last the abominable assertion and belief that unmarried soldiers must have access to women in some way, and that these women must be provided and superintended by the Government. . . . .

"All Government utterances dwell upon the soldier's need of protection from the women of the conquered country (or rather from such of them as are not engaged by the authorities, and supervised as allowed concubines). But when do we hear of the need of protecting the weak and ignorant Indian woman from the British soldier! Surely there is as much need (or more) of protection on the one side as on the other. While we compassionate and plead for our soldiers there, let us with equal persistency plead for, and insist, on the need of protection for the women from the licence and too frequent brutality of the British soldier; and further, on our part as women, we must apply ourselves to the consideration of any and every possible scheme for the rescue of native Indian women from the tyranny and immorality of Anglo-Indian military officials."

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, May 9.

"Where there is no vision."—Prov. xxix. 18.

WHAT a difference it makes to our teaching and preaching where there is no vision! The people perish for want of seers, of those who can say with the Apostle, "That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you also, that ye may have fellowship with us." It is not difficult to know whether a poet or painter has had a vision. If he have, there is glow and passion in his work; and it is not difficult to detect in the accent of the speaker whether he is speaking at second-hand, or as the result of direct vision.

This vision of God is what Moses had, and Elijah, and the Apostle Paul. Concerning the latter God said, "He shall be a minister and a witness of things which he has seen." This is our only qualification for teaching others; not intellect, nor imagination, nor rhetoric, but to have seen the King and beheld the Pattern on the Mount. For such a vision, on our part, there must be humility, patience, and faith, a definite withdrawal from the life of sense, and a definite fixedness of gaze on the things that are unseen and eternal. But on God's part there must be revelation. "It pleased God," said the Apostle, "to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach Him."

Have you had a heavenly vision lately? Has there been a real contact between you and the Lord Jesus, which has dazzled you to all other sights? The Apostle said, "I could not see for the glory of that light." Then let us go forth, and tell men what we have seen. In us men will see some reflection of Him, and be convinced, and believe, that they may not perish, but obtain everlasting life. God's prophets must be seers, or people will discredit their words and persist in the way of death.

MONDAY, May 10.

"Feed me with the food that is needful for me."—Prov. xxx. 8 (R.V.).

God knows what you need for the maintenance of physical life and strength. The body is more than meat, and to have given you this is a pledge that He will give you that. The body is the vehicle and organ of the soul, and since God has given it to you, He is bound from time to time to furnish needful supplies. He could not expect that you should do what needs to be done in your life, and not provide for the repair and refuelling of the wonderful machine through which alone your life-plan can be realised. Trust in his faithfulness. He cannot fail.

But there is other food which is needful. The daily bread of love, of hope, of holy thought, and fellowship. There is other hunger than that of the body. But this also will be provided, according as each day requires. If the human fails, the Divine will take its place, and God Himself will become the complement of your need. The Chinese Christians often put on the gravestones of their cemeteries the words, "They shall hunger no more," in allusion to the idea of the Confucians that children must constantly be sending on supplies to maintain their ancestors. But may we not say of those who have learnt to be satisfied with God, "They shall hunger no more."

Notice the alternative rendering of R.V., "The bread of my portion." In God's granaries there is our share of corn already calculated for and provided. Let us ask for and claim it. O newborn child of the great Father, his hired servants have enough and to spare; how much more is there for thee! Eat, drink, and be merry, after a Divine fashion.

TUESDAY, May 11.

"The heart of her husband doth safely trust her."—Prov. xxxi. 11.

This alphabetical poem to godly womanhood is one of the gems of Old Testament Scriptures. It should be read from the R.V., that its significant and beautiful touches may be appreciated. Clearly the Hebrew woman was held in high honour, and had as much freedom of action as she enjoys in Christian countries. Herein the contrast was very marked, as against the women of other Oriental nations. But in the whole delineation there is hardly any trait more beautiful than this—absolute trustworthiness. You can see the pair together: The husband comes in from sitting among the elders, his heart weighted with affairs of state, and he seeks her confidence and advice. He has no fear of her betraying his secrets. He can safely trust her.

This surely is the most sacred joy a woman can have. To be consulted, to be trusted, to share the common toils and responsibilities. Who would not work willingly with her hands, and rise while yet night, and engage in ceaseless toils, if only she had the inspiration that trust brings! Can Christ, in like manner, safely trust us? It was said of some in his earthly life, "Jesus did not trust Himself with them, for that He knew all men" (John ii. 24, R.V.). Can He trust us with his secrets, his interests, his money? May He be sure that we will not purloin for ourselves what is rightfully his own? Abraham was one whom God could safely trust, and He did trust Him as his friend: "Shall I hide from Abraham,...for I have known Him?" Now it is required of us that we be absolutely trustworthy.

WEDNESDAY, May 12.

"All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full: unto the place whither the rivers go, thither they go again."—Eccl. i. 7 (R.V.).

The complaint of this chapter is the tiresome monotony of existence. Always the same tedious routine! The jaded soul of the worldling, who has put God out of his life, sees nothing fresh or interesting anywhere, and yawns with weariness. King Solomon had everything that the world could give to make his years rich, glad, and useful. But his heart turned away from God to things, from the only true God to idols, from the spiritual to the sensual, from heaven to earth; and he became a jaded voluptuary, who records his experiences on these pages, to warn coming generations. His words remind us of Byron's lament at his life being in the sere and yellow leaf; of the closing sentence of "Vanity Fair"; and of entries in the journals of the world's greatest wits and courtiers.

All the rivers of earthly joy may be flowing into your heart, but they will never fill it. They may recede, or dry up, or ebb; but if not, still they will never satisfy. The pleasures of this world after a while become monotonous, and pall on our taste. The appetite grows with its food. But in Christ there is perennial interest. The water that He gives rises up to eternal life. In his love and service there is always satisfaction and blessedness. We need not go outside of Him for new delights; and to know Him is to possess a secret which makes all things new.

THURSDAY, May 13.

"All his days are but sorrows, and his travail is grief."—Eccl. ii. 23.

What a glimpse this is into a heart that has put God out! Solomon's power turned away his heart, so that he was not perfect with God, as David, his father. He drifted from God; and plunged into pleasure and laughter, into building and planting, into the pursuit of science and learning. "Whatsoever mine eyes desired, I kept not from them. But, behold, all was vanity and a striving after wind" (R.V.). Nothing can satisfy us but God. We were made for Him, and the heart, as Augustine says, must be for ever restless till it finds rest in Him.

We have no need to envy those who prosper in this world, but are without God, and without hope. Their days are sorrows, and their travail is grief, and at night their hearts take no rest. But if we are to avoid their inward anguish, we must avoid their fatal mistake, and learn to take God into our lives. The river of life, which is the Holy Spirit, flows at our feet, but we must learn to take it freely. Your days may be full of turmoil and toil, but they need not be sorrowful, when you have learnt to make God your exceeding joy; you, may-be, have travail of soul for others, and yet be preserved from over-mastering grief, because your heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord. God is the cure of the heart-ache. God is sufficient for heaven, why not for earth? Is there not light enough in the sun for one violet?

FRIDAY, May 14.

"He hath set eternity in their heart."—Eccl. iii. 11 (R.V. marg.).

The Preacher has been enumerating the various extremes and alternatives of existence, and the natural conclusion might seem to be that since each neutralises the other, it might be as well for a man to do nothing at all. But a deeper thought is suggested. Man is greater than the changes around him; he has eternity in his heart, and therefore all the varied circumstances of human life resemble the wheels of some great machine, the cogs of which turn in different directions, but the effect is a forward motion, and the manufacture of a fabric that will outlive the machinery that made it. We are greater than circumstance, or change, or things. We have the capacity for the Eternal and Infinite. As the sea-shell sighs for the ocean, so our hearts cry out, though sometimes inarticulately, for God, for the living God. Christ said that foxes have holes and the birds their nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head; and this is true in another sense. The noblest men are those least able to rest anywhere short of God.

Let us come to Him who has the words of eternal life, who is Himself the Bread that endureth unto eternal life, and who is the King Eternal, Immortal, and Invisible. He can give the life more abundant. He that cometh to Him shall never hunger, he that believeth in Him shall never thirst.

Here would we end our quest;
Alone are found in Thee
The life of perfect bliss—the rest
Of immortality.

SATURDAY, May 15.

"Behold, the tears of such as were oppressed."—Eccl. iv. 1.

It is a sad, sad world, and perhaps must get sadder yet. It may be that we have not yet reached the darkest hour. Oh, the tears of the oppressed! The tiny children; the terror-stricken fugitives from the Turk, the European colonist, the drunken tyrant! Tears have flowed through the centuries, enough to float a navy.

I find no difficulty in accounting for the supremacy of the oppressor. Man has elected to serve self, which is ultimately the service of Satan, and he is reaping as he has sown, and these defenceless ones suffer by reason of the great law which makes the whole race one. It must continue until the Stronger than the strong man comes to divide the spoils and set the captives free. Ultimately all will be well, but just now the agony is sharp.

What a blessing it is to learn that God knows our sorrows, that his quick and living sympathy bears us on his heart, that his compassions fail not. Though the general law of oppression and sorrow must hold for the present, yet He interposes in individual cases. "I know their sorrows, and am come down to deliver them." "The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble: therefore, those that know thy name will put their trust in Thee." Let us, in the meanwhile, learn how to comfort others, and to wipe away all tears from their eyes. F. B. M.

Southsea Convention.—This established conference on the spiritual life will be held in St. Simon's schoolroom, Southsea, May 18-20. The regular convention meetings will be held morning and evening, and there will be Bible Readings, with subsequent accounts of work at home and abroad in the afternoons. Many well-known expounders of the Scriptures will take part. The convener is Rev. F. Baldoy, Southsea.

Armenians in Syria.

JUST before we left Beyrout for the mountains, last August, Muallim Useph, an Armenian teacher, who had formerly been with Mrs. Bowen Thompson, in the early days of the British Syrian Mission, called to ask whether we would not like to light some little lights in Armenia. Said he, in broken English, "I bring you one girl from Marash; and one girl I bring you from Diabekr; and one from Oorfa. Then you teach them, and they go back, and give light in their places; for my country every day Mrs. Bowen Thompson she do good to women and girls, in Syria; now you, you do good to girls in my country!" I promised to take five girls, real orphans, if he would bring them, and among them was to be his own orphaned niece, in remembrance of his early connection with this work.

A few days later he reappeared. "You say you take my brother, his girl, but see! my brother, he leave some money, and his girl, she can pay something. Now take you instead, of one English priest killed, his children They very poor, no money now, all took! they ask their bread! English priest! your church!" Then, with painful labour, half in English, half Arabic, he unfolded a heart-breaking story of an Armenian clergyman, in English orders, Garabet Surrujiân by name, who had been brutally murdered at Adiamant, three days beyond Aintab, leaving a widow and three children.

So it was agreed that Useph should send for the girls, and that they should have a home here, in Beyrout.

On our return, in October, we asked where the children were, and the reply was sent; "No money for their journey, and the mother, bereaved of her husband, could she part from her children? Was it not possible to manage a corner for her?" Remembering who had said: "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive, and let thy widows trust in Me," we cast the burden of their support upon the Lord, and promised to share the expenses of the journey and take the mother with her children. That afternoon a telegram was sent to friends in Adiamant to pass the family on stage by stage to Beyrout, and to supply their needs.

Weeks passed by; we had almost given them up, when one busy day in January someone ran in, saying, "The Armenians have come." Yes, there they stood, a little group of exiles, in the garden, careworn and travel-stained after their thirty days' journey—the sorrowful mother, with a puny child of two in her arms, and by her side a pale, wan child of ten; their earthly possessions a bundle of rags, a few garments, among them the murdered father's shirt, and some dark, coarse bread, lay on the bench beside them.

A kiss of welcome brought a smile, like a gleam of sunshine, for a moment over the widow's sad face. We soon had some food ready and hot baths, but it took some days to remove all traces of that long, toilsome journey.

We made them up beds in a little garden room, which is now their home, and thankful they were to rest and lie down, none making them afraid. Not a word of Arabic did they know, nor could we speak either Turkish or Armenian. An interpreter, however, was found in the person of one of our Moslem children, a kind-hearted girl, who was touched with pity for the poor creatures, and ministered to them by every means in her power. It was strange that out of our sixty boarders it should be a Moslem who was the one able and willing to make them feel at home.

At first the poor mother felt her exile very deeply. Her mind had evidently been overstrained by the murder of husband, brother, cousin, and many other relatives. But now, after two months here, her face is getting quite bright; she is finding a little employment, and goes with the household to church and to Sunday-school, though, as yet, she understands nothing. And the baby, Yesteer! How it used to clutch at the food, and eat and eat, as though it never would be satisfied, but now it is getting fat, and is trying to use its puny legs, and is losing its constant querulous whine of privation and sickness.

Urshalous (i.e., "Sun"), the elder girl, takes her place daily in the class, and has plodded a good way through the Arabic primer, and is learning to sew, to understand a little Arabic, and, hardest of all, to get tidy.

Our interest in them grows, and our love for them, too. As far as we can tell, they will be dependent on us for life, and we know that the Lord will send us, from time to time, what they need.

Especially we ask Him to incline some widows, who have become such under very different circumstances, to care for their sister-widow, Sultanie. The children we shall train, in time, to earn something for themselves as teachers.

Now and then kind Muallim Useph comes to see them, and when I tell him how surprised we are, that the widow of an Armenian clergyman should not be able to read, and should be so utterly helpless in her ways, he looks with surprise at me, and says: "Ah, you think the Armenian womens like Syrian women, that learnt in these schools. In my country, they most like Sultanie; but you! you light lights! I bring you girls!"

And now, dear friends, supposing he does bring them, shall I take them?

Caroline Thompson,
Acting Hon. Directress B.S.M., Beyrout.

Cornwall Hall.—The annual meeting of this Mission in Notting Hill was held on April 27, Captain Key, R.N., presiding. The report, read by Mr. Gaussen, stated that the work had been well sustained, and some new branches had been started. Addresses were delivered by the chairman and other friends. They were of a stimulating and practical character, urging to more sacrificing labour, in view of the needy multitudes around. The open-air operations of the Mission commence this month.

The Gospel in Madrid.

I TAKE the following paragraph from the Semana Catolica of Madrid:—

"We dedicate the following notice to all those who sit quietly and patiently at home and trouble themselves for nothing and for nobody, and pretend to believe, or at least say they believe, that all goes well for the Catholics. The notice is this: The building of the handsome Protestant university at the Four Roads continues without interruption.

"The enemy advances. At the Four Roads the Protestants have built a fine edifice, with its temple, schools, seminary, and hospital, a perfect centre of corruption. This densely-inhabited part of the town which is much in want both of spiritual and bodily nourishment, is in imminent danger of perishing by the doctrines of the Protestants. Is there no means of averting the danger? We know one which, with God's help, is easy and effective. Quite near, almost opposite, the Certiaries of St. Francis have their house under the patronage of the Divine Shepherd. They mourn over the evil, and wish to resist it with all their might. They have a chapel, but it is very small, and they must build a large church. They have a school, but it too is very small, and must be enlarged. The nuns are ready to make every sacrifice in order to oppose the instruction of the sectaries. We hope that the Catholics who have wealth at their disposal will take an interest in this beneficent work, and send their mites to the nuns, who from gratitude will constantly pray to God for their benefactors."

Thus far the Semana Catolica, and we hope that the notice will have the opposite effect. Is the kind reader not of the same opinion? The Madrid Herald has published the following notice:—"The Prime Minister received on Sunday the visit of a deputation, consisting of distinguished Catholic ladies, who requesthd the Government to prohibit the opening of the edifice which a Protestant society has built in the populous suburb of the Four Roads destined for a church and seminary." The reference is to the high school built by the German Society for Evangelisation in Madrid.

Fritz Fliedner.
Almudena 3, Madrid.

Italian Military Church.

The twenty-fourth anniversary of our first Lord's Supper in the Military Church at Rome was a wonderful sight. There was a large gathering of soldiers of all arms and all ranks, and from all parts of Italy, serving under the same banner for their country, and now testifying their wish to serve under the banner of Christ. These young men had been brought up in the darkness of Roman Catholicism, but by coming under arms they were Divinely led into the way of the Gospel; and it is hoped that the word of truth which they have thus learned will be carried by them to their homes when they return from their military service.

The Roman Church has done, and still continues to do, all in its power to destroy the work of the Evangelical Military Church, but Cav. Capellini has been able to continue his work to this day. Many hundreds of soldiers attended the service. Rev. H. J. Piggott presided, and preached from John vi. 53, the sermon being listened to with devout attention. After the Communion Supper, an old friend of the Mission from England, Canon Bell, addressed some kindly words in Italian to the soldiers, promising, if it should be possible, to return next year and assist at the jubilee. The pastor had not time to read all the messages and telegrams which he had received from the churches at the various stations.

Major Whittle stated, at a meeting on Sunday last in Woolwich Tabernacle, that £7000 per month are spent in the public-houses at Woolwich.

THE LATE

Mr. F. W. Crossley, J.P.

A FEW weeks since we recorded the death of this Christian philanthropist. He was of a type far too rare. His life strikingly illustrates the difference between Christian and secular philanthropy. The latter loves and helps men directly for themselves. The other loves and helps men in God. Mr. Crossley was not content to give away large sums of money while residing in his beautiful home at Bowden. There came to him, and to his like-minded wife, some ten years ago, the call to follow yet more fully in the steps of Him, "who though He was rich for our sakes became poor." Leaving Bowden they took up their abode in Ancoats. Here, on the site of a music-hall, Mr. Crossley built a commodious mission-hall, with lesser halls, dining-hall, coffee-house, baths, etc., for the use and benefit of the poor, besides dwelling-houses for the workers, a training home for evangelists for home and foreign service, and the modest dwelling-house in which he and his family resided. Amidst the grime and smoke, and, what is far more trying, the moral corruption and putrifaction of Ancoats, the pungent and purifying salt of lives wholly for God has been making its influence felt, with a result that only eternity will reveal.

The breadth and manifoldness of Mr. Crossley's sympathies were remarkable. In the early years of the Salvation Army, he was one of the most princely supporters of its work. Under the description of "A Manchester Friend," it was possible to reckon up some £15,000 given in a single year to this organisation alone. By his death other missions have lost one of their most generous helpers. When Professor and Mrs. Rendel Harris went to visit the scenes of massacre in Armenia a year ago, it was Mr. Crossley who furnished them with funds. He very largely bore the expense of the undertaking, and placed large sums of money at the disposal of the heroic travellers for the relief of the remnant of the persecuted nation.

In this and in other ways he gave thousands of pounds to Armenia, and the beautiful wreath of flowers from a few Armenians, hanging conspicuously on one of the pillars at the memorial service, was a powerful reminder that this martyr country has lost in his decease one of her heartiest friends. With what intensity he laboured on her behalf, only those know who were eye-witnesses of his prayers, activities, and anguish. There can be no doubt that the going out of his tender, sympathetic nature in so lavish a degree towards these oppressed ones had not a little to do with the illness which in the end proved fatal.

Deeply interested at home in the care of orphan children, in the Boys' Refuge, the Manchester City Mission, rescue work, temperance enterprise, and a multitude of other local objects, his heart was capacious enough and his sympathies rich enough to take in and succour Christian work the world over.

Another beautiful trait in Mr. Crossley's character was the delight he felt and the interest he took in the work of others. The petty jealousy which makes one worker think and speak slightingly of the labour of another was to him absolutely unknown. He rejoiced in the labour of all sincere toilers, and many a one has been upheld in the faith that God had called them to this or that field of labour, and had imparted to them spiritual gifts adapted to its special needs. But for his sympathy and aid many a discouraged worker would have faltered. God-given work has been thus sustained by his faith and love, his prayers and his purse, and discouragement and threatened defeat have been turned into encouragement and victory.

It was the possession of this spirit that enabled him to enter so thoroughly into the sorrows and difficulties of others. He would listen as patiently to the woes of an out-of-work as though he recognised in that ill-clad stranger the King who has made the poor his special representatives, and who not unfrequently draws nigh to his children in some lowly guise to see whether their hearts are really responsive to every appeal of real need. To see him humbly and lovingly kneel by the side of a sinner, pointing him to the Saviour, was to learn afresh how precious the salvation of a soul is, and how truly Christ-like it is to enter into this individual contact with those who are seeking a personal acquaintance with God. In the address which Dr. Maclaren gave at the funeral, he said:—

(From Photograph by Mr. Warwick Brooke, 350, Oxford-road, Manchester.)

> If ever there was a man that lived as seeing the invisible, to whom sense was less than faith, and the realities behind the veil the nearest realities, our friend was such. Although he had the cares of a great business on his shoulders, deeper than the motives that bound men in commerce were his motives. There was the strong basis of a vivid realising perception of the things unseen. There was sweetness in the natural disposition; much that attracted us was rooted in his very constitution and temperament, but he would never have been what he was if it had not been for the dwelling in him by his simple earnest faith of the power and the love of Jesus Christ. I believe no man could estimate the worth to Manchester of the example of our friend. It had pricked the conscience of many a luxurious and well-to-do professing Christian, and had gone home to the hearts of many in that district for which he lived and for which in a sense he died.

The funeral service will never be forgotten by those who were privileged to be present. It furnished a striking illustration of the extent of Mr. Crossley's sympathies. Without invitation, friends had gathered from all parts of the country, and the hold which Mr. Crossley had obtained upon their hearts was manifested in the sobs that mingled with the songs, and that now and again made singing almost impossible. Death and all its trappings was swallowed up in victory. To gaze upon the crowds that lined the streets to the poor people's cemetery in which he was buried was to be reminded of the far-reaching influence of such a holy and self-renouncing life. We close this imperfect sketch with Canon Rawnsley's poetical tribute in The Manchester Guardian:—

> There are so many that when one man dies
> We scarce may miss the long-familiar face.
> There are so few, the heroes of our race,
> That all the city, in its sad surprise,
> Sobs, and the humblest worker feels his eyes
> Dim, and the strong voice falters for a space:
> So much of manliness and gentle grace
> Gone swiftly to its home in Paradise!
>
> For this was he who what the left had given
> Let not his right hand know. And this was he
> Who made the woes of poor men all his own;
> Stood for Armenia and her martyr crown;
> Bade Britain dare from bondage to be free,
> Took up his cross, and followed Christ to heaven.

The Presbyterian Synod.

Last week we published a portion of the sermon of the retiring Moderator, Dr. McGaw. The address of the new president of the Synod, Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, of Swatow, was also of special missionary interest. He traced the rise of the Church's China Mission fifty years ago, under Mr. Wm. Burns, and the progress made since then in China proper and in the island of Formosa. The fields occupied by them embrace a population of fifteen to twenty millions, and the converts gained by all the agencies at work do not reach a total of 10,000. As to methods, Mr. Mackenzie urged that the greatest possible use should be made of the native Christians in reaching their fellow-countrymen.

In presenting the report of the College Committee, Dr. Watson, of Liverpool, commented on the prevalence of religious doubt as a reason for the paucity of young men entering the Gospel ministry, and thought the Church, instead of concerning itself with the minutiæ of doctrine, ought to uphold the great essentials of the Christian faith. The renewing of spiritual life was the only antidote for the secularism of the age.

The various other reports submitted to the Synod did not show any striking features of public interest. The petition sought to be presented by several ministers and elders of the Church against the unsettling teaching of Dr. John Watson, of Liverpool, was rejected by the business committee, on the grounds that it had not been dealt with in the usual constitutional way of primary consideration at the Presbytery, and that the charges were not specific enough. The Synod, by a large majority, endorsed this rejection of the petition, so that the matter was not at all discussed on its merits.

The Borough.—The annual meeting of the work at Friar-street Mission Hall was held on April 27, Mr. W. H. Seagram in the chair. Mr. A. H. Dence spoke of the great need for such work. The changed lives of many present at the meeting was justification for its continuance. There are 1200 families being visited. Other friends testified from personal knowledge to the good work done.

London Home Settlement for Young Men.—The council met at Wyndham House on Friday, April 30, Dr. Rigg in the chair. The work during the year has been full of encouragement. The object for which the Settlement was established—the shielding of young men from the temptations which abound and the leading of them to a definite consecration of themselves to God and to a life of real usefulness—has ever been kept in view. Many during the year thankfully associate the dedication of themselves to God and his service with the happy influence of the Home life. Dr. Rigg said no work would more richly repay the Church of God than that which saves the sons of Christian parents from falling into the perils of London life.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

Text for Sunday.—"Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

Hymn.—"Sacred Songs and Solos," No. 30.

A Child's Work for Jesus.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond.

At the request of the late Dr. A. J. Gordon, I once held two weeks' union meetings in his church in Boston. Each afternoon we had services for children, and many, as they heard the story of Jesus' love, were led to give themselves to Him. Among them was little Winnie Lewis.

Some years later, while I was holding a series of meetings in Hartford, Dr. Gordon chanced to be present, and knowing how much he loved to see children trusting in Jesus, I asked him to tell those present the story of Winnie Lewis. I have time to tell you only a few of his touching words with regard to the work she did in leading those in her neighbourhood to Jesus.

He said: On a hot day in June, I was called to attend her funeral. My eye fell on a crippled lad, crying bitterly as he sat on a low doorstep.

"Did you know Winnie Lewis, my lad?" I asked.

"Know her, is it, sir? Niver a week passed but she came twice or thrice with a picture or book, mayhap an apple for me, an' its owin' to her an' no other body that I'll ever follow her blessed footsteps to heaven. She'd read me from her own Bible wheniver she came, an' now she's gone there'll be none at all to help me, for mother's gone from Mike's sky intoirly with Winnie, sir."

I passed on, after promising him a visit very soon, and made my way through the crowd of tear-stained sorrowful faces. I came to a stop again in the narrow passage-way of the house. A woman stood beside me trying to dry her fast-falling tears, while a wee child wept at her side.

"Was Winnie a relative of yours?" I asked.

"No, sir; but the blessed child was at our house constantly, and when Bob here was sick, she nursed and tended him, and her hymns quieted him when nothing else seemed to do it. It was just the same with all the neighbours. She took tracts to them all, and has prayed with them ever since she was converted, which was three years ago, when she was but six years of age, sir. What she's been to us all no one but the Lord will ever know, and now she lies there."

The next day a good-looking man came to my house, and said "I am Winnie's uncle, sir. She never rested till she made me promise to come to Jesus, and I've come."

"Will you tell me about it, my friend?"

"Well, you see, sir, it was this way. Winnie had always been uncommon fond of me, and so was I of her '—his voice broke a little—" and I'd never felt quite right. Yet I knew her religion was true enough, and a half hour before she died, she had the whole family with her, telling them she was going to Jesus, and she took my hand between her little ones and said, 'Uncle John, you will love Jesus, and meet me in heaven, won't you?' What could I do? It broke me all up, and I have come to ask you, sir, what to do, so's to keep my promise to Winnie, for she was an angel if there ever was one. Why, sir, we were all sitting with her in the dark, and there was a light about that child as though it shone from heaven. We all noticed it, every one of us, and when she drew her last breath and left us, the radiance went too; it was gone, quite gone."

Within a month, Winnie's uncle was received into the church, thoroughly converted, and a sincere disciple of Christ.

When Dr. Gordon had finished this touching story, all hearts were deeply moved, and we offered the prayer that the children who had been converted in Mr. Wheeler's church might, like Winnie Lewis, and others in Dr. Gordon's church, show by their changed lives that they had for Christ's sake had their sins forgiven.

You need a new heart, my dear young reader, as much as Winnie Lewis did. I suppose she had no thought of becoming a Christian when she came into that meeting I conducted in Dr. Gordon's church. But as she heard me explain how much Christ had to suffer that our sins might be forgiven, her heart melted in love toward Him, and she felt what a dreadful thing it would be to turn away from such a Saviour.

Jesus, take this heart of mine,
Make it pure, and wholly thine:
Thou hast bled and died for me,
I will henceforth live for Thee.

Scripture Union Portions for Next Week.

S. Hebrews	vii. 1-14.	Th. Hebrews	ix. 15-28.
M. „	vii. 15-28.	F. Psalms	l. 1-13.
Tu. „	viii. 1-13.	Sat. „	l. 14-23.
W. „	ix. 1-14.

[324]

A Visit to Dothan.

As the Bible Searcher this week is about Joseph I thought you would like to hear something about Dothan, as I was there a few weeks ago. You will remember that Joseph was sent by his father to Shechem to find his brethren, and inquire how they were getting on. But when he got there he found they had gone to Dothan.

I was travelling in the opposite direction—from Nazareth to Shechem, and passed Dothan on the way. It was early morning when I arrived there, and the luxuriant grass was bending beneath a heavy dew. A range of hills rose on the right hand and another on the left, and in front stretched a great plain. It was from this beautiful and fertile spot that Joseph's brethren saw him coming toward them, and decided to destroy him.

No one knows now the exact pit into which they threw him, but there are many similar ones which would answer to the description given in the Bible. There is also a well in the plain, in which a man was bathing, and hastily put on his only garment, a long blue robe, as he saw our cavalcade approaching. Here we rested awhile while one of our party took a photograph of our group by the well.

A little further on we came to another road—or rather track—which crossed the one we were on. This was the one along which the merchantmen came on their way down to Egypt, which must have been a very long journey. As we passed it we saw in the distance a train of camels and donkeys, and wondered if it was such a caravan as that which Joseph had to join, through the cruelty and envy of his brothers.

No doubt the appearance of the neighbourhood has somewhat changed since then, but I am afraid that now, as then, there are hearts full of "envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness," even among young people towards their brothers and sisters, although perhaps they do not show it in such a dreadful way.

How sorry Joseph's brethren were in after years, when he was so kind to them in their distress. That is the way to win over those that hate you, boys and girls—"If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." And be quite sure that if you harbour in your heart feelings of hatred towards anyone, the day will come when you will be very sorry for it. Let us all ask God to "Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify thy holy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

A Word of Praise.

I was so very pleased while I was away to see what a splendid lot you have given for the Indian famine. It was quite delightful to see how your sympathy had been shown to your unfortunate little brothers and sisters out there. Next week I will tell you about a little London boy who did a very brave thing for them.

This week I want to remind you about that bathing machine you were going to provide for the little cripples at Southend. The amount necessary for it has been rather a long time coming—in fact, it has not come yet—and as this is "Christian Endeavour" week for missions at home in our own country, I hope you will be able to make it up.

It is rather too bad to press you, as you have been so generous already; but you know we only ask generous people, because it's no use asking stingy ones!

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. Hutchinson, St. Andrew's, New Kent-road (Sun. 11 and 3 o'clock, week-days 7.30), to May 9; Smithills, May 16; Pershore and neighbourhood, May 22-28. Mr. Reginald Callender, Alexandra Hall, Cambridge, May 6; St. Stephen's, Wandsworth, May 8; Penge, May 25; Ealing, May 27; Weybridge, May 30. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Gt. Baddow, May 10-14; Norwich and neighbourhood, May 16-31. Mr. H. Hankinson, Ross, May 6; Hereford, May 7; St. Luke's, Redcliffe-square, May 13; Addlestone, May 27. Mr. Geo. Goodman, Bromley, May 8-16. Mr. E. Hughes, Woolwich, to May 7; Castle Yard, Holland-street, May 7; Reeve Mission, Baker-street, May 15; Mall Hall, Notting Hill Gate, May 17. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting (with caravan), Earl Stonham from May 6. Mr. Lidstone, New Malden, May 9-12. Mr. A. E. W. Gwyn, St. Jude's, Mildmay, May 7. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Stockport, May 12.

Half Yearly Meetings for Local Secretaries and friends.—Strangeways Hall, Manchester, May 13 (3 and 6.30); Gordon Hall, Liverpool, May 14 (3 and 6.30); Bolton, Central Hall, May 18, at 7.30.

Bible Searcher (No. 70).

All answers to be from Gen. xxxix to the end.

Children under seven do the first three; under thirteen the first seven.

1. What did Potiphar find to be the reason of Joseph's prosperity?
2. Why did the keeper of the prison trust him?
3. What did Pharaoh tell his servants was his reason for putting Joseph over his house?
4. What reason did Joseph give to his brethren for having been sent to Egypt? By whom was he sent?
5. Quote one verse or more showing how Joseph's dream about his brethren was fulfilled.
6. What was Joseph's caution to his brothers when they left the second time for Canaan?
7. Before Jacob started for Egypt, what did he do at Beersheba?
8. How many people went with Jacob into Egypt?
9. Whom did Jacob adopt as sons? Which had the first place?
10. What prophetic promise did Israel give to Judah before he died? Can you say anything (from any source) about its fulfilment?

☞ Next week's Searcher will be on the Epistle to the Philippians.

KEY TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 69.)

1. Mark xi. 25.
2. Mark xii. 29-31.
3. Hosea vi. 6.
4. Hosea xiv. 9.
5. Mark xi. 17. Isaiah lvi. 7.
6. Mark xiv. 61, 62,
7. Mark xv. 28. Isaiah liii. 12.
8. Mark xiii. 10.
9. Mark xiii. 33-37.

Foreign List.—Correct answers received from:—

No. 57. J. A. Field (Australia). Nos. 61 and 62. Charlotte Cane (S. Africa). No. 64. L. M. Knight (America). No. 66. Olive van Millengen (Cyprus). No. 67. Dora Corrie, Edith Meuter.

No. 68.—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

Minnie Allen, Ol. and G. Andrews, Mabel Adams, Mag. and Robertha Arres-Mather, L. Athole, Nellie, Frank, and Fy. Ames, Dsy., K. Ruby, Hugh, Anld., and Enst. Allen, Chris. Arnold*, Massy Baker, Cath. Barber, Lavinia Barnes, Mary Ballingal, Elsie Bartlett, May, C. B., and Jess. B. Baker, Lu., Kath., and Teresa Blackie, Arthur Barker, Geo. Braud, E. B.* and J. C.* Black, Gr. Barnes, Ella and Dora Brayfield, Anld. Baker, Jn. Baring, Charlotte Bailey, W. and M. Bentley, Nadine Beauchamp, Eva Bergen, Jn. and Eth. Benger, Wm., Fl. K., and V. Bellerby, L. Berthé*, Nellie Bellerby, Ey. Bridgewater, Ml. Birney, Stan. Boxer, H. S. Bone, Edith and — Badham, Herbt. and L. Berry, D. A. Bennie, J. C. Bell, Ethel Beauchamp*, Fr. J. Bennett, Au. Boniface, Robt. G. Browne, Albt. Botting*, A. H. Bowker, Ly. Clarke, Mary Caster, Gladys and Lul.* Calvert, Lottie Carter, J. A. Chamberlain, Wm. E. Clarke*, Vlt. Chamberlin, My. E. Clarke*, C. M. and M. M. Craven, Wm.* and My.* Charles, Jack and Rosalind Clarke, Walt. and Jessie Carter, Hy. Jas. Cheney, B. Cheale, Kath. Code, M. T. Colville, H. R. and Fredk. Compton*, W. and E. Cockrem, Marj. Collins*, Lily Coles, Dora Corrie, Ruth Coupe*, Annie Cooper*, N., Hy., Annie, and Arthur Couch, S. Cumbers, Dthy. and R. Courtenay, A. E. and E. T. Cowley, Wm. and Edith Corrick, Dthy. Cooper, Arth. M. Cole, Arch. B. Cornabé, Ey. Church, Ralph and D. Daintree, May Dring*, Dthy.* and Marjory* Dyke, Ed. Daisley, W. R. and Dthy. M. Davies, C. K. and E. A.* Dodd, Anld. M. Dougall, Wm. Dowsett, Eva C. Doning, Gdn. Duncan, Ray.* and Est.* Dunn, Ken. Dunbar, Enst. Edmonds, Eva Edmundson, Mn. and Jas. Freegard, An. Fleming, Lu.* and Chris.* Fidler, A. Fosten, F. A. and A. E. Figgis, Eva Fullerton, Flossie*, Nanny*, and Janetta S.* Fullarton, Enst., Reg., and Wm. Findlay, Herbt. Fowler, C. M. Garriock, E. C. Graham, My., Alf. H., and Dsy. Greenacre, Min. Giddings. Rose Hamilton*, Dthy. and Fr. E. Harris, J. and M. Handasyde, Ln., Clarice, and Enst. Herivel, Thos., Reg., and Jack Harris, Ruth E. Harrison. Mgt. Hasse, Win. Harvey, Vic., Henry, Ey., and Ed. Hearn, Dthy. G.* and Evelyn* Hewer, Ada Heap, Thea. Hill, Jn. and Mgt. Hogg, Vlt. Holford, Mena, Chas., and Ed. L. Hunter, May V., Tom M., Helen, and Harcourt Hunter, Lila K. Hughes, F. Hunton, Eth. Hutchings*, Vlt. and K. Ireland, Moffat and Sinclair Jackson, K. G. and N. Q. Johns*, Dudley Joyce, Ag. Jones, Mi. Joselyne, Elsie Johnson, Susie Keen*, T. A., K. G., and Hubt. Kirkpatrick*, Isa Kay, Gert. Kingierlee, Eth. Larwill, Hannah Lovell, Guin. and May Leigh. Sam. and Doke Lewis, Ln., Grahame V. and Murray Lloyd, Barb. Maconchy, Abraham, Thos., Bella and Nellie Mack., Hilda Matheson, S. E. Mackintosh*, Jan MaGregor, Gladys Mather, Laura Macaulay, Trevor and M. Matthews, Alan Marples, Bruce and Hy. Malaher, H. M. Medill*, Ethel L. Mackenzie, Jn., Ag., and Mag. Menzies, Nellie Mead, E. L. Monti*, Dthy. Morrisson*, Dora Muir, Fl. Mackenzie, Dsy. and Tita Mackenzie, Mgt. Macphee, Jn. H. Mather, An. G. Macnair, E. L. and A. L. Moir, Eth.* and Grd.* Morgan, Frances Munce, Enst. and Edie Nash, Mde. and Amy Nottage, Geo. O'Beirne, Mde. and Eva Oakes, Lottie and H. Orr, Gwen. Ogilvy, Fl. Osmond, Winnie Page*, Kath.* and Eth. M. Pasley, Ada, Wm., Mag, and Jessie C.* Palmer, Doug. Parkes*, Nelly and Louie Peachey, Al. My. Palmer, Dsy. Phillips, F. S. Phillips, S. Pim, Is.* and Gladys* Phipps, Joanna Pearman, May, Dsy., Vera, and Norman Petrides, Edwin Peters, Edith Quick, Ed. H. Rainey, Ml. Reeves-Palmer, Cl. Riley, M. L. Rickards, Syd. and Ol. Robertson, Al. and Connie Rouse, Theo. and Eileen Roberts, C. L. Romanes, Jeanie Robertson, T. M. and J. Stanier, Win. Stangre, Ag. M. Sterry*, Con. Scott, B. Scantlebury*, Ed. Saunderson, D. and B. Salt, Gwen., Undine, Mervyn*, and Eric Shaw, Dthy. N. Shaw, F. K., M. Dthy., and Helen Stalker, Eric and Ernest Seymour, Ml. A. P. Sells, R. Sherwin, Beasie Symes, Hilda Skinner, May Q. Spiganowies*, Lucy and Ken. Soltau, Ey.* and Nellie* Stuart, Ronald Studd, Eth. Taylor*, Louie Tibbits*, Ol. Tritton*, Fred and Sarah Thomas, Teresa Toop, Fk. Thompson, Hubt., Peveril, Laurence, and Arthur Turnbull, J. W. and Janet* Thomson, Mgt. A. Trotter, Herbt. and Frnk. Tomkins, Jessie E.* and Ida F. Watson, Wm. J. and Bertie Ward, Nellie and R. Watson, Nellie Walker, Gr. Welbank, Walt. and Lillie Whenday, Kath. White, Const. and Eth. M. White, Elsie* and Grace* Wright, Phillis, Noel, and Cecile Wright, A. and Fy. Waring, Jessie West, Eva Winpenny, Arth. Wright, G. M. Wood, Evelyn H. Wood. Hetty Wodson, Edgar and Cecil* Yorbury.

No. 69.—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

Violet Ashworth, Auld. and O. J. Akers, Ernst and Mu. Aldwinckle, A. R. Anton, W. T. Aldous, Eliz. B.* and J. C. Black, Herbt. Braddon*, Leo. Bartlett, Wm. and Fl. K. Bellerby, May, Dsy., and Gdn. Bligh, Bert Brotchie, Md. Clarke, Dthy. J. Clarke, Md. Cleal, Ruth Coupe, Ida C. and Au. M.* and Mabel Cole, Mgt. Davison, Vera Dickinson, Cld., Kitty, and Ivy G. Donaldson-Selby, Lu., M. Ellacott, Enst. and Willie Edmonds, Mn. and Jas. Freegard, Const. Gabbett*, Lee Gardner, Ellen J. Hatcher Nellie Horsford, J. and Dthy. Hughes-Games, Fnk. and Robt. Jones, N.* and K. G.* Johns, May and S. E. Law, Ruth Lane*, Geo. McDonald, J. H. Mather, Alan Marples, Hilda Matheson, S. E. Mackintosh, L. F. Morice, Eva Monti*, A. Onslow*, Alice M. Palmer, My. Palmer, Myrtle W. Perry, Alf. and Dy. Penny, My., Wm. M., and Louie Penny, J. E. Pearce, Hilda Rawson*, Al. Redwood, Const. and Hilda Scheffer, Barb. and Hld. Stevenson, Fl. Smith, Betty Stocks*, My. L. Symon, Fl. Simmons, L. and K. Soltau, Gert. E. Scott, Au. Tawse, Fr. Taggart, Mde.* and Ed. S.* Tyson, Gert. Vellacott*, May and Dthy. Vickers, Edith and W. Wheeler, Pringle Wilson*, Hy. J.* and Q. Williams, Artn. Wright, Ibla and Allan Woodman, Hetty Wodson.

Personal.

E. I. Hatcher.—Write the answers, not only the references, next time. Harold Wodson.—Hope you will soon be feeling well again. Janet C. Black.—"Many happy returns." Violet Ashworth.—We have not space to publish a key to the competition questions. Muriel Sells.—Hope you will continue answering the Searcher. Kenneth Dunbar.—You did not give "the last words of Jacob's vow" in No. 66. Ada Heap.—Am glad you have interested your friend in the Searcher. Dora Smith.—Please send the name and address of your newsagent, and I will try and find out why he does not get The Christian in time.

Donation List.

Indian Famine Children (Mrs. Bruere).—E. O. C., 4s.

Indian Famine.—I. M. and M. H., 1s. 6d.; L. C., 6d.; H. P. S., 5s.; Four Friends, 10s.; Maggie, 1s.; A Family, per Lover of India, £3 3s.; B. H. M., 2s.; M. C., 1s.; Total, £4 4s.

Cripples' Bathing Machine, Southend.—Rita, 2s. 6d.

Uncle Tom.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

The Protestant Alliance.

THE annual meeting of the Protestant Alliance this year took the form of a demonstration on a large scale, by reason of the co-operation of various organisations holding like principles and having similar aims. The demonstration comprised a series of meetings, held on Friday last, in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., two of these being open to the public, and having for their object the warming-up of friends and the enlisting of fresh sympathy from those who hitherto have been wanting in fervour in the fight against Romanism, or lacking in zeal in the propagation of Evangelical principles.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided in the afternoon, opened the proceedings by deploring, not so much the prevalence of Romanism as the growth of Romish principles in the Church of England. Rev. C. F. Ward, of Manchester, who followed, commended the Protestant Alliance for its energy in exposing Romish errors, and its vigour in opposing Romish encroachments. He regretted that the controversy with Papists had, at times, been wanting in spirituality, whereby the impression has got abroad that the issue is simply and solely one of argument. Rev. A. Roger, of Putney, who for some years has been on the lecturing staff of the Alliance, said that of late much watchfulness has been exercised in following up Roman Catholic lectures in various parts of the country. There had been abundant fruit, as one of the Romish controversialists had admitted, by saying that the Alliance was "undoing all the good" which the Church thought it had done! Mr. Roger rejoiced to have found in his travels throughout England many signs of a revival of Protestant sentiment and enthusiasm.

Two visitors from the Western Continent followed, the first being Rev. T. Leyden, from the United States, who dwelt upon the Romish influences which threaten freedom and Gospel truth in America. He spoke of the seeds of hatred, domestic and social, sown by Romanism. Having been brought up in the papal system, he spoke from personal knowledge. The second visitor was the renowned Pastor Chiniquy, who expressed the conviction that Britain would never become Romanist again. Being in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and having spent twenty-five years in the Church of Rome, he had a message to deliver to such as regarded Romanism as Christianity with an admixture of errors. That message was—Beware of the idolatry of Romanism, for it is more degrading and God-dishonouring, more injurious to human intelligence and more damning to the soul, than the idolatry of the hoary religions of the East, or the barbarous heathenism of the darkest races that inhabit the isles of the sea. Romanism is, indeed, the old-time paganism with a Christian name. In the Roman Church mortal man makes his Creator; the priest has power above God, and claims to control the Deity. Romanism has obliterated among her devotees all sense of the greatness, holiness, and eternity of God. Counselling prayer for papists, the speaker declared that they are honest men, as also are many of the priests. How could he have come out of Rome, when as yet he had no light? And in his darkness no one ever came to him to help him to light and liberty!

The evening meeting was very largely attended. Dr. Barnardo presided, and, in the course of an earnest address, traced the blessings of our nation and time to an open Bible and a Protestant dynasty. Having described the recent tactics of the Romish hierarchy in Canada, in the matter of elementary education, he alluded to the prevalence of Ritualism, and expressed the conviction that Romanism and its principles are advancing by leaps and bounds in Great Britain.

Rev. C. H. Wainwright, of Blackpool, moved a resolution for a loyal address to be sent to the Queen, heartily congratulating Her Majesty on her memorable reign, and expressing a deep sense of the inestimable benefits, social and national, conferred under God by her illustrious example. In an eloquent address he remarked that if the past has been bright and glorious, the future looks terribly dark, by reason of the disposition of many to surrender their rights, and to neglect the Word of God and its teachings. Not only has Romanism taken the place of Protestantism in numberless churches, but the rulers of the Church of England are openly excusing things and doing their utmost to come to terms with the Pope.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., who seconded the resolution, expressed the conviction that a very dark cloud hangs over the nation owing to the departure that has taken place from the simplicity of the Christian faith. The religion taught in thousands of churches is not the religion of Jesus Christ, but is another. The clergyman has become a miracle-worker, a kind of magician; and, as a consequence, a species of idolatry, "a blasphemous fable," to use the language of the Articles, has taken the place of Scripture doctrine. The battle of the Reformation requires to be fought over again. If we intend to preserve the privileges for which our forefathers fought, we must gird ourselves for a great struggle to extend over many years. Whereas Romanism has been dying rapidly at the roots, in Italy, Spain, and France, it is advancing by giant strides in English-speaking countries — especially in Great Britain, where the system enjoys peculiar favour in high circles, and where the people are living in a fancied security while all the time their freedom is in great peril. A prime need to-day is a revival of Gospel truth and a faithful use of the Word of God.

The resolution having been carried by acclamation, an address was delivered by Rev. H. Lindsay Young, of Portsea, who, in view of the warmth of the meeting, said he was sorry that the Pope was not present to see that the English people did not mean to give themselves into his hands. He spoke of the Ritualistic movement as a great religious crime; and in stirring language contrasted Romish error with Gospel truth.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

The sixty-sixth annual meeting of the Trinitarian Bible Society was held on Tuesday last week at Exeter Hall. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, who opened the proceedings by reading solemn testimonies from Holy Scripture regarding the words of God — their purity and power, their Divinity and binding authority. Having regard to religious inquiry in Israel, he expressed the conviction that the fig-tree which has long been barren has begun to blossom.

Dr. Bullinger, secretary of the Society, read the report. After affirming the Protestant and Evangelical character of the Society, and maintaining the importance of the work which it exists to advance, the committee rejoiced at the formation of new auxiliaries, and the increase of interest at home as well as effort abroad. The Hebrew New Testament has gone into another edition, making an aggregate of 279,000 copies during the past ten years, the circulation having of late extended to Asia and Africa, as well as Europe and America. The new edition of the Hebrew Bible has at length been completed by the publication of an Introduction explaining the phenomena connected with the sacred text of the Old Testament, and setting forth the principles on which Dr. Ginsburg carried through his great work. It is no exaggeration to say that this edition marks an epoch in Sacred literature. The New Testament in Judeo-German, the common language of Continental Jews, has continued to be sought after, and the Old Testament is now in type to the end of Hosea, so that there is prospect of completion in a short time.

Proceeding to notice the Breton Bible, the report spoke of steady circulation and continued blessing. Young men preparing for the priesthood have been among the many who have inquired for Scriptures; and in consequence of the widespread interest in "the Protestant Book" there have been the usual misrepresentation and persecution on the part of Romish ecclesiastics. The work in Spain has been steadily developed during the year. Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, of Figueras, having sent Bibles to the editors of Spanish papers, received most encouraging letters of thanks, some of them quite remarkable in their terms. The report further gave details of circulation of Scriptures among English sailors and foreigners at home and abroad, also grants to missionary and other societies. Expressed in figures, the circulation was—Bibles, 6,979; New Testaments, 46,827; portions, 27,697; total, 81,503. The audited balance-sheet showed receipts £6,052, and expenditure £5084, leaving a balance in hand of £967, carried forward to meet engagements already entered into.

The first speaker was Rev. J. J. Beddow, vicar of Drypool, Hull, who, in a vigorous address, deplored the degree to which, in Biblical literature and religious worship, nominal Protestants are coquetting with Romanism. He also described what he had seen of Evangelical progress in Brittany, where he had inspected the work of Pasteur Lecoat. Rev. George Freeman, of New Southgate, followed, urging that as the demands made upon the Society are always greater than the ability to meet them, increased energy should be thrown into the work of making known its principles and undertakings.

Addresses were also delivered by Surgeon-General Partridge on the truth, integrity, and authorship of God's Word; Mr. T. H. Stockwell, who deprecated compromise with error, and advocated more diligent dissemination of the Bible; and Professor Bertrand, who dwelt upon the power of the Scriptures as witnessed in his work among converted Romish priests in France.

Lord's Day Observance Society.

The annual meeting was held last week, after a breakfast, at St. James's Hall. The Archdeacon of London presided. Dr. Peake, secretary, presented the annual report, which described the progress made on the Continent in efforts to recover Sunday rest. In Germany a highly-complicated system of legislation had sprung up resulting in widespread dissatisfaction. In Austria a much larger degree of Sunday rest had been theoretically secured; but commerce had not shared in the privileges obtained by manufactures, and small workshops were not favoured like large factories. In this country the committee were thankful to report the defeat of the attempt to cripple or destroy the Lord's Day Act. The attendance at the national collections which were opened on Sundays last year had rapidly fallen off after the first, and the average Sunday attendance at the Guildhall exhibition had decreased in three years from 2921 to 1518 and 769.

Archdeacon Sinclair said the Society's principles were founded on liberty and justice. The falling off in Sunday attendance at the museums and galleries showed that when let alone the national feelings were strongly in favour of a day of rest. Referring to the Newlyn riots, he said he hoped that the owners of East Coast fishing boats would refrain from outraging the strong religious feelings of the Cornishmen. Mr. S. Smith, M.P., in the course of an address, condemned those clergymen who told young men they might do what they liked on Sunday after attending early Communion. As a legislator, he felt very great difficulty in laying down compulsory rules for those who did not acknowledge the law of God. It certainly could not be done without the general consent of public opinion. They should beware of calling those acts sinful which Christ did not condemn.

Mission to Coalies and Carmen.

The London City Mission has dealings with all sorts and conditions of men among the toilers and moilers of the suburbs. Its missionaries visit the yards where the men work, and thus come into direct touch with people who are ordinarily outside the pale of religious influences. One of the branches of the work is the Mission to Coalies and Carmen, and at the annual meeting held at the Mildmay Conference Hall last week there was a large gathering. The office of the Mission is at the Coal Exchange, and Mr. W. R. Rickett is the president. The material comforts of the coal porters and their wives were looked after by the deaconesses of the Conference Hall, and afterwards there was an adjournment to the big hall, where the singing was led by the Coalies' Choir, with Mr. Cecil Rickett at the organ.

Earnest addresses were delivered by the president, Mr. J. Dunn, Mr. S. Munns, Mr. W. Prentice, and Mr. F. Tite. The last named, as treasurer, congratulated the meeting upon the success of the movement, and reminded the members that an additional subscription of one halfpenny per week would provide sufficient funds to start another missionary.

Baptist Missions.

There is no branch of Christian endeavour that is more calculated to unite the churches than that of foreign missions. So it was very fitting that the missionary anniversary of our Baptist friends should be presided over by a Wesleyan, Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. It was noteworthy that of the three hymns sung on the occasion one was by Bishop Heber, the Anglican, and another by Mr. Charles Wesley.

The well-known secretary of the society, Mr. A. H. Baynes, said that the year's report would be fully printed and circulated during the present week, and it was never better worth reading. It is made up of warm messages from those in the high places of the field. In a short summary of its leading points, Mr. Baynes passed on good tidings from India, China, the Congo, and elsewhere. From China, 400 converts are reported during the year. Special interest centres around the Congo Mission, where the native Christians are most devoted, and where every church member is also a worker or giver. Ten fresh missionaries were sent forth last year, and there is now a larger number of offers from well-equipped young men before the committee than in any previous year. The shadows on the Congo work, in the death of labourers, were referred to, and the faith expressed that out of these losses fresh effort would arise.

The financial statement of the treasurer, Mr. Rickett, was in the main a most encouraging one, as he had a clear balance-sheet to report. It was true that on the transactions of the year a deficit of £5400 had arisen, but it had been resolved to sell out the invested stock left over from the Centenary Fund after providing for certain other demands. It was necessary, however, to remember that the Society, by reason of its prosperity, is spending £8000 in excess of its income. There is large room therefore for increased liberality.

The address of the Chairman embodied a brotherly greeting, a historical review, and a dissertation on the outstanding aims of missionary work. Incidentally he alluded to the indirect commercial outcome of Christian missions. He expressed pain at the fact that two-thirds of the income of the British possessions on the Gold Coast arises from spirit duties. The greatest sinners in this matter, however, are Germans and Americans, who import into West Africa five or six times as much spirituous liquor as Great Britain. The abolition of the legal status of slavery in Zanzibar was mentioned with commendation. Mr. Perks also sounded out a clear note of confidence that nothing can solve the dark problems of the world's sin and misery except the presentation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the power of God's Spirit.

Clad in his ordinary Chinese costume, Rev. A. G. Shorrock, from Shensi, spoke in a most interesting way of his work among that ancient and needy people. One is soon impressed, he said, by the poverty of the people, caused partly by the non-development of the resources of the country. In his opinion, however, the opium is the chief hindrance in the north of China at any rate to the happiness of the people and the progress of the Gospel. He described some of the disastrous social and individual effects of this tyrannous habit—closed schools, penniless communities, etc. They had made it a rule to exclude from church-membership the opium-grower as well as the opium-smoker. The speaker protested against the idea that would exalt the Confucian system at the expense of the Christian faith; there is as much difference between them as between light and darkness. There are elements of hope in the attitude of the more intelligent of the people, and in the spirit of inquiry that is spreading. An interesting and encouraging account was given by Mr. Shorrock of the origin and progress of the work in the province of Shensi, where he has been labouring for some years past. After passing through the vicissitudes of famine, fever, war unsettlements, and rumours of riot, the Shensi mission is now producing most hopeful results. Mr. Shorrock's statement was altogether a delightful and praise-inspiring one; it was one more proof of the reality of Chinese Christian discipleship.

The second speaker was Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Highbury, who directed his remarks specially to certain hindrances to foreign missions that still exist even within the limits of the Christian churches of these lands. He maintained three axioms in opposition—(1) that Christianity is propagandist or it is nothing; (2) that missions have done more for the home cause than it has done for the missions; and (3) that the cause of Christian unity has been furthered by missions more perhaps than through any other channel. The speaker proceeded to comment on the changed views of some modern thinkers as to the ultimate fate of the unsaved heathen, which did not however affect the imperative call for the proclamation of the Gospel. The chief tenets of the Buddhist teaching were examined, and shown to be utterly helpless in the face of the sins and sorrows of heathendom. There was a very pathetic closing appeal for larger campaigns and deeper missionary consecration.

A closing address came from Rev. R. Wright Hay, lately of Dacca, East Bengal. He quoted the recent remarkable saying of a cultured but non-idolatrous Hindu that "in the providence of God, India has been given to England that India might be given to Christ." He could not allow the idea that in the nearness or remoteness of claim on the benefits of the Gospel there is any such thing as a "foreigner." The special call to Britons to evangelize India, as a part of their own Empire, was powerfully pressed home. "If any provide not for his own, he hath denied the faith." If cultured India were permeated by the Gospel, who could estimate the results on the humblest and more illiterate classes of the people? Mr. Hay spoke with special thankfulness of the evangelistic work now being done among educated young men in different centres of India by some half-dozen well-equipped young men chiefly from America. It was work of this sort that he had been privileged to attempt at Dacca in the past years, and God had greatly owned his efforts.

The Baptist Union.

The meetings of the Baptist Union, held in London last week, were largely attended by ministers and others from all parts of the country. At the first gathering, on Monday evening, Rev. Dr. Vincent Tymms vacated the presidential chair in favour of Rev. E. G. Gange. The report of the Council of the Union, as presented by Dr. S. H. Booth, showed an increase of seven churches and 6145 church members. Under the head of Church Extension there was an encouraging statement. Rev. S. Vincent, of Plymouth, was elected vice-president for the year.

At the second session, on Wednesday evening, Mr. Gange delivered his presidential address, which was entitled, "A Look All-round; or, A Century of Baptist Home Mission Work." In some vigorous passages he depicted the England of a hundred years ago, when the Home Mission of the denomination was founded; and then dwelt upon the present condition of our land and the many opportunities for evangelisation and Christian culture. He urged his hearers to brace themselves for the duties of the immediate future, to take greater care of their villages, as well as plant churches in populous centres. City ministers must stand by their country brethren, and city churches must be in full sympathy with their country sisters. The villages are passing through a severe ordeal, but a brighter day is dawning. Let us, said Mr. Gange, solemnly here and now in the sight of God, reconsecrate ourselves to his service. May our hearts be the "temples of the Holy Ghost," purged from every particle of self and sin. May our lives be object-lessons to the unbeliever, that whether we are ministers, deacons, or members of Christ's Church, we may all be preachers, and always preaching! May we be willing for Christ's sake to face difficulties, "endure hardness," and make sacrifices, if by so doing we can but extend his kingdom! In 1867, when Garibaldi was on his way to Rome, he was told that if he got there he would be imprisoned. "Never mind," said he, "if fifty Garibaldis are imprisoned let Rome be free." That is the spirit we want. Willing to be anything or nothing, "door-keepers," or doormats in the Lord's house, willing to suffer or to die if He be magnified.... We are living in a world of shadows. There are personal shadows—infirmities of body and of temper. Home shadows—the empty cot, the vacant chair. Church shadows — bigotry, superstition, and spiritual lethargy. Social shadows—poverty, drink, vice, and crime. National shadows—plague, famine, oppression, "wars and rumours of war." World-wide sorrows—sin, sorrow, death. In the midst of these shadows our lot is cast, our life-work lies. We are to pray on, toil on, waiting, watching, believing, hoping, "until the day break and the shadows flee away."

On Thursday the education question was discussed and a resolution adopted. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, introduced the subject of church extension. He set himself to propound and answer four main questions: (1) Had the Baptists as a denomination done their fair share in the evangelisation of the country? Statistics were not needed, he declared, to show that they were not even maintaining their position. (2) Was their denominational position worth fighting for, praying for, or giving for? This was not simply a question of peculiar views with regard to a rite. But Baptists went down to the bottom rock, and maintained that faith and faith only—a personal surrender of the individual soul to the person of Christ—was the bond that united souls to Him and made men Christians. Further, they declared the sole right of Scripture to define and determine the action of the Church. (3) Had they, he asked, found out where the true pinch of the fight would come? England, he answered, was becoming an aggregation of urban populations, and unless the churches were reinforced in the towns, they would fail in the villages. Strengthen the one, and you strengthen the others. (4) Had their method of church extension hitherto been supremely wise, as when one church became two through internal dissensions? If you want, said he, an inefficient ministry, form a church in a pet, have envy, malice, and all uncharitableness as deacons, and call a young man fresh from college and quite ignorant of the circumstances to be the minister!

A three days' Home Mission Centenary sale realised nearly £2000. Mr. Gange has undertaken, during his presidency, to devote a large part of his time to visiting the churches in order to promote interest in the Home Mission.

British Syrian Mission.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held last week at 26, George-street, Hanover-square. Rev. D. Stather Hunt, who occupied the chair, read a letter from Canon Tristram, who was to have presided, stating that he was detained in Jerusalem by an accident which had laid him on his back. The schools of the Mission, said the Canon, were admirably managed and "most orientally clean and tidy." The schools were attended by the daughters of Turks, Arabs, and Greeks. The Chairman gave an account of his visit to Palestine, where he saw the Mission at work at Tyre, Beyrout, and Damascus. The Society was doing a great work, and had 3000 children under its charge. They could not possibly estimate the blessing of these schools to Palestine, and he believed it would leaven the whole country.

Col. Macneil, the hon. treasurer, said the available income of the Society last year was, roughly speaking, £5200. They had fifteen lady missionaries, four of whom gave their services without payment. There were 100 native teachers and Bible women trained in their institution at Beyrout, and the money paid in salaries was £2500. The rest of their income was spent in maintaining the schools. Miss Butcherd at Damascus gave over £500 a year to the Mission, besides her time and work. There was a deficiency of £150, and there was urgent need of more funds and workers. Rev. C. H. Banning and other friends addressed the meeting.

South American Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held on Thursday at Sion College, the Dean of Windsor presiding. The annual report presented by Rev. R. J. Simpson, showed that the mission worked among the aborigines of Tierra del Fuego, the Paraguayan Chaco, and Araucania; among the Spanish Roman Catholics and among the English communities. The report included a letter from the Bishop of the Falkland Islands describing the state of things in Tierra del Fuego. For several years the physical and moral improvement of the Indians under the influence of the mission was most encouraging. But in the wake of government came soldiers, sailors, traders, and gold searchers, with the usual result. Finally, an attack of measles followed a distribution of clothes by the Argentines. The civilised Indians, living within a radius of thirty miles of the Mission at Ushuwaia, almost all died, and the future of that mission was hopeless.

Archdeacon Sinclair, Mr. F. A. Bevan, the Bishop of Waiapu, Mr. W. F. Archibald, Rev. G. A. Adams, and Mr. W. C. Morris gave addresses.

The Railway Mission.

We are all deeply and personally interested in railway men. They show us numberless tokens of kindness all the year round, in our travels to and fro. Too often it is to be feared that our solicitude for them ceases when we step out of the station; we find it convenient to forget what risks they run in our service, and what limitations are placed on their religious opportunities by the travelling necessities of the public. The measure of public neglect of this worthy class of the community is the measure of the value of the operations of the Railway Mission. For years past this Society has been doing its best to carry the message of the Gospel to the 400,000 railroad servants of the United Kingdom, not to speak of many others in different foreign countries.

The annual gatherings of the Mission held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week were full of encouraging import. At several preliminary gatherings, delegates from various parts of the country gave testimonies as to the progress of the mission in their localities. These reports showed the reality and vitality of the efforts made for the salvation of the men and their families.

At the more public meeting on Wednesday evening many friends came together in the large hall to sympathise with the workers, and encourage them to still further efforts. In the regretted absence of Lord Overtoun, Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair, and his presidential remarks were full of warmth in appreciation of the special work of the Mission, and in advocacy of its claims on the support of the public. In a financial statement, Mr. Gurney Sheppard spoke of an empty treasury, and strongly appealed for its replenishment.

The report of the Secretary, Mr. R. Nixon, was full of matter. It told of over 1200 meetings held weekly in connection with the Mission. During the year eighteen new branches were opened, making a total of 436. Cheering news comes from the distant branches in South Africa, Japan, India, Australia, Chili, etc., etc. In a personal addendum, Mr. Nixon referred to the spread of total abstinence among the men. He cited one place where out of 300 employees some 130 were abstainers. In other places the whole staff are pledged against the use of intoxicants. The opening this week of the new convalescent home at St. Leonards was referred to. Some £1500 is yet needed to meet the cost. The secretary said that in the five years of the old home's existence 700 railway men had been patients, and quite a number had there found their Saviour. The railway men had gathered £1000; one goods guard had collected as much as £54 10s. During the evening numerous donations towards the general work, and the Convalescent Home were announced.

The addresses that followed were partly evangelistic (by Dr. Harry Guinness and Mr. Josiah Nix) and partly by way of testimony by selected delegates to the value of the work as they had experienced it in their own lives and seen it in the case of others. Some of their bits of witness-bearing and exhortation to their chums were very touching and impressive. As the chairman remarked, it does not need much Hebrew, Greek, or Latin, or even theology, to preach the Gospel, as these hardy sons of toil had proved. Dr. Guinness was very plain and clear in his unfolding of salvation as all "of grace, by faith." Mr. Nix fairly dissolved the meeting as he poured out a stream of Gospel truth, illuminated by thrilling incidents culled from his own experience as an evangelist.

Union Hall Mission.

The annual gatherings of workers and friends of this Mission on Thursday last were most cheering and inspiriting. The afternoon was devoted chiefly to praise and prayer, brief addresses being given by Mr. W. Luff and Mr. Pitter.

At the public meeting Mr. Algernon Coote presided, and testified from personal knowledge to the blessing the Mission had been. The report, read by Mr. Stuart Thorpe, the hon. sec., told of blessing in each department of work. The year closed without any outstanding liability, but this was due to the expenditure being considerably reduced. It is necessary that someone should be engaged to assist the honorary superintendent, Mr. Edwin Cook, in the general work of the Hall.

Helpful addresses were given by Dr. Henry Soltau, Mr. J. E. Taylor, Mr. Chas. Inglis, and Mr. Fegan. It is hoped that the £350 needed annually to support this Mission will be subscribed.

Christian Evidence Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held recently at St. Martin's Town Hall, Dr. H. J. Gladstone presiding. Rev. T. T. Waterman, secretary, read a summary of the report. One part of the Society's work was both educational and controversial, through the delivery of lectures combatting erroneous opinions respecting Christianity. The lectures are generally followed by questions and discussions. Many appreciative letters have been received with reference to them from all parts of the country. More distinctively educational work is found in the encouragement given to the study of books for examination. The students are established in the faith, and prepared for any questioning which may arise in social life and friendly intercourse. The committee have no reserve fund. To perpetuate the Society's existence one of the secretaries has made a great personal sacrifice; but this will not be effectual if it does not encourage and stimulate others to do their part by a considerable increase in subscriptions.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein expressed his sympathy with the controversial work of the Society. It is almost impossible to get people to realise the danger of moral poisoning and the difficulty of supplying an antidote. Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., said it was sad to reflect that large masses of the people rejected the truths of Christianity before they took pains to come within the range of its influence, and argued that the Society's claims to support were greater than ever. Rev. A. R. Buckland said the increased mental activity of the age had necessarily brought with it a larger measure of doubt. A paper by Miss Caillard on "The Place of Experience in Christian Evidence" was read by the organising secretary.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

This well-known Mission to the women of India held its annual meeting on Wednesday afternoon last week in St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. The chair was occupied by Lord Kinnaird. In view of the existing famine, an increased interest attaches to Indian affairs at the present time; and though the audience was not large, it was made up of persons for the most part deeply concerned in the spread of the Gospel and the advancement of philanthropic work in our great Eastern Dependency.

The general secretary, Rev. A. R. Cavalier, read an abstract from the report, which showed a great round of labour carried on in conditions of much financial straitness. The Mission has thirty-four centres of work, and 398 workers were employed during last year—129 of them being European missionaries and assistants, 191 native Christian teachers and nurses, and 78 Biblewomen. The missionaries and Biblewomen have access to 7988 zenanas and houses, with 2923 regular pupils under instruction; while the Biblewomen have visited 2485 villages. At the Society's hospitals and dispensaries at Lucknow, Benares, and Patna there were 17,594 patients, and 54,924 attendances at the dispensaries.

Mr. W. T. Paton presented the financial report. The income reached a total of £18,067, not reckoning receipts for famine relief. The account closed with a deficiency of £2000, and there is every reason to believe that the famine and plague will involve the Mission in a largely-increased expenditure. Determined to do his best to clear off the deficiency, so as not to carry it to another year, Mr. Paton had been soliciting donations from friends, and he announced sums amounting in all to nearly half the amount required.

Miss Clifford, of Bristol, sister of the Bishop of Lucknow, described a recent tour in India. Christianity she said, is making great progress there; the last Government census showed that the number of those who profess the Christian religion is increasing rapidly, at a greater pace than was the case even in Apostolic days. Describing the famine conditions, Miss Clifford spoke of the burnt and baked condition of the country round Allahabad at a time of the year when it should have been green and fresh. The people had in many cases eaten native berries, which not only destroyed their powers of digestion, but induced a kind of paralysis. In many cases, in getting the berries, the natives lost their last shred of clothing; and among other duties devolving on the missionaries was the provision of fabric and the making up of apparel. As for the Government officials, the lady said that they have worked most heroically, and indeed overworked, many of them having in consequence fallen victims to fever and died. Miss Clifford eulogised the hospital and dispensary work of the Mission.

Addresses were also delivered by:—Miss Davies (Aligarh), who said that the famine is opening up large numbers of zenanas; and Miss Wilder, of the American Presbyterian Mission in Kolhapur, who spoke of the heart-restlessness, the spirit of fear, and the dispositions of jealousy and anger, which enter into the social experiences of the women. Her message from the people of India who had come under the influence of the Mission was, "Tell the friends in England to send us more workers of the same kind." Rev. H. C. Squires, M.A., of Richmond, late C.M.S. missionary at Bombay, also spoke, outlining the progress of the Mission, and mentioning the names of pioneers and other workers, past and present.

At a second meeting, held in the evening, presided over by Mr. T. Cheney Garfit, a report of the work, with dissolving views, was given by the secretary. Addresses were delivered by outgoing missionaries, Miss Weatherley and the Misses Deimler, these latter returning to their work at Bombay. Miss McGrotty and Miss Evans, who are leaving for Poona, to assist Mr. and Mrs. Bruere in taking charge of famine orphans, also spoke, and were earnestly commended to the Divine care and blessing.

Christian Colportage Association.

The anniversary of this Association was held at Exeter Hall on Friday last. Lord Kinnaird took the chair at the afternoon meeting. An abstract of the report was read by Mr. H. D. Brown, the secretary, after which Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, of Portman Chapel, gave a stirring address, followed by Sir George Williams, Mr. T. A. Denny and Mr. W. H. Seagram. At the evening meeting Sir George Williams presided, and a very excellent address to the colporteurs was given by Dr. McKilliam.

A large portion of the time, both afternoon and evening, was given to hearing many short, bright testimonies from the colporteurs, of whom about ninety were present, representing twenty-three English counties. Stress was laid by the chairman upon the fact that out of the 125 colporteurs employed by this Association only three were stationed in Wales. He made a strong appeal to Welshmen to introduce the work more largely into that principality. The testimonies of the men, of which there was a continuous stream, were all of the deepest interest, and impressed the hearers with the wonderful effectiveness of this simple yet powerful agency as a means of preaching the Gospel from house to house. It is this which is so attractive and delightful to all who are in the habit of attending the meetings of this Society.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

There was a goodly attendance of friends and supporters at the annual meeting of the Barbican Mission to the Jews on Wednesday evening last. The meeting was held at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, the chair being occupied by Archdeacon Sinclair, who was supported by several ministers and others, representing various forms of work and different missions to the Jews.

An abstract of the report was read by the director of the Mission, Herr C. T. Lipshytz. The Bible class has been blessed to many inquirers, and the Converts' Home has come to the help of numbers who would otherwise have had to choose between shipwreck of faith or temporal ruin. In the course of the year, twenty-nine inquirers and converts passed through the Home, making a total of 151 since it was opened. Several confessed the Lord in baptism, some of them thus incurring all the hatred and hostility which are associated with what orthodox Jews regard as "accursed apostasy."

After describing the evangelistic, Sunday school, and other work, the report referred to the new Mission House proposal. As is generally well known, the house in Finsbury Square was placed at the disposal of the Mission by a warm-hearted friend, who paid the rent for seven years. In less than a year-and-a-half from now the lease will expire, and it is proposed to transfer the work to a building to be erected in East London. It will not be possible to build until about £3000 is in hand. The income during last year amounted to £1010, but the expenditure amounted to £1082, thus leaving a deficiency of £72.

In the course of a hearty address the Chairman enlarged upon our debt to the Jews, as Englishmen and as Christians. He explained that though he had been compelled, by reason of his many duties, to retire from the presidency, the Mission would always have his goodwill and prayers. Rev. Dr. Bullinger followed with an address on the extent to which the Church of Christ has neglected the Jews. Not until the beginning of the present century was any organised attempt made to give them the New Testament in their own language, so that to-day there is a great and heavy and accumulated debt to be discharged. Rev. E. C. Britton, in a comprehensive speech, remarked that a rabbi in London told him that it was his belief that Jesus was a prophet of God, and that "our fathers" did wrong in putting Him to death.

Other speakers were:—Revs. S. T. Bachert, A. W. Gough, M.A., G. N. Walsh, M.A., and Mr. H. C. Hogan. The first-named specially commended the Converts' Home to the sympathy of Christian people. No agency is more important in practical work than a place of asylum for the help of such as are cast off by parents and friends owing to their faith in Christ.

Sunday Railway Traffic.

Last week at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Major-General Bruce, the joint annual meeting was held of the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union and the Shareholders' Union for the Defence of the Sabbath. The report of the first-named body stated that during the past year, 1,310 additional members had been enrolled, making a total of about 20,600. Influence had been brought to bear on the public in various ways. The report of the Shareholders' Union set forth that the tabulation of Sunday goods trains had received special attention, and the evil was found to be greater than hitherto imagined. A memorial to the Midland Railway Company was signed by some 1069 shareholders, representing the sum of over two millions. It had been ascertained that there were from 500 to 700 goods trains running on the Great Western Railway every Sunday, and the same traffic on the L. and N.W. Railway system was very heavy. In Switzerland, Hesse, Alsace-Lorraine, Bavaria, and Prussia Sunday goods trains had been abandoned, and the committee urged that what had been done on the Continent could certainly be accomplished in Great Britain. The difficulties which environed Sunday goods traffic were nowhere greater than in Belgium, and yet restriction was progressing in that country. Beginning in 1889, by 1892 out of 1,640 trains 1,502 had been suppressed. At present there were only eleven regular Sunday goods trains on the State railways, and 127 "conditional" trains, which were only run under special orders. The plans of the union for the future involved a canvass of the Great Northern Railway, and, if possible, of the London and South-Western, in addition to a continuation of the struggle with the Great Western and the London and North-Western companies. To do this additional funds were required.

Addresses were delivered by Rev. W. W. Pomeroy, Major Mackinlay, Mrs. Hind Smith, Mr. Harry Nisbet, and Mr. Charles Hill.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

The annual meeting of Mrs. Meredith's institutions was held at the Conference Hall, Clapham, on Thursday last. Lord Rookwood read the report of the Princess Mary Village Homes, after which that of the Prison Mission was read by Mr. Wm. Southall, the secretary. His lordship testified, as one who has taken the deepest interest in all branches, that to such institutions was in a great measure due the diminution of crime. The work was retarded by the want of regular support from the public.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston said Mrs. Meredith did not only talk and write, but she stretched out a hand to help in the most practical manner. Mr. Wm. Tallack attributed the success of the work to the fact that it was based on the foundation of the Gospel. Hope, combined with common-sense, is the spirit of the institutions. Mr. C. M. Barker said Mrs. Meredith did not only take nice children into the Homes, but those living in vicious haunts. She was also the pioneer of the distribution of children in cottage homes. Rev. A. W. Baldwin, chaplain of Wormwood Scrubbs, also spoke very highly of the work among women.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

The anniversary of this great Society, held on Monday morning at Exeter Hall, was, as usual, a gathering of Methodists from the three kingdoms. Mr. Richard Booth, of Dublin, who presided, was supported by a goodly number of the fathers and leaders of the denomination. He opened the proceedings with some earnest words on the obligation of the Church of Christ to evangelise the world.

The report, read by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, explained the nature and conditions of work in many lands, and indicated grounds of encouragement in several directions. After a brief reference to effort on the Continent, the great Indian field was surveyed. The gods of India hold, not only the soil, but the very atmosphere of the country; and to dispossess them of their power is an arduous as well as glorious task. While the work has gone forward through various stages of success, large opportunities have opened up, which, owing to financial straitness, it was impossible to embrace. In China there are no mass movements towards Christianity either in progress or in promise, no trembling of foundations foretelling the speedy overthrow of great systems. But the Gospel is preached day by day to increasing numbers, the sick are healed, the poor and helpless are succoured and comforted, the young are instructed, and the little native churches watched over with a care that has its reward in their stability and growth in grace.

In both these Oriental fields additions are steadily made to Christian fellowship. The same is true of West Africa, where, in the three districts of Sierra Leone, Gold Coast, and Lagos, there are 16,945 members. There are numbers of native ministers, to a large extent supported by the local churches. In the Transvaal and Swaziland district, in spite of agitations and excitement, the work has gone forward. The total figures of the entire field were large, and showed cheering progress, including the following: Chapels and preaching places, 2,322; missionaries and assistants, 370; catechists, teachers, and other agents, 2,859; local preachers and Sunday-school workers, 5,841; church members, 44,573; on trial, 9,695; children attending Sunday and day schools, 88,542. The total income for the year was £127,858, which fell short of the expenditure by the sum of £834.

Rev. Dr. Randles, in the course of a thoughtful address, maintained that there are to-day in Methodism men and women who are as self-denying and devoted, as sympathetic with Christian missions and as eager for the evangelisation of the world, as had been the case in any age. The theology that lies at the base of missions, which, in fact, gave origin and impetus to Christian work in the foreign field, is still the theology of Methodism at large. The doctrines that sent the Gospel forward in the primitive church, and which impelled Brainerd and Eliot, Coke and Boardman, Judson and Martyn, Williams and Moffat, still prevail among Methodists, who have not changed in their views of sin and salvation, nor adopted any modern eschatology. The notion that every nation should keep its own religion the speaker held to be heathen, and a repudiation of the fact that Christianity is the only religion that can benefit the world, and is destined by God to bless the entire planet. While speaking warning words against "refuges of lies," which stand in the way of thoroughgoing missionary interest and endeavour, Dr. Randles deplored the extent to which Methodists fall short of their professions and fail to compass their great aims.

Rev. Charles Bone, for many years a labourer at Canton, in a powerful speech, met the modern notion that each nation's religion is the best for that nation. He reviewed Chinese life in the aspects of humanity, philanthropy, and idolatry; and asked if it was "good enough" for anybody. Christianity takes a better humanity, a divine philanthropy, and a truer religion that saves the soul; and if Christ had not given the command to go and evangelise the heathen, we should be impelled to go out of a sense of common brotherhood, and because of the great and crying need. With reference to Chinese persecutions, the speaker said that there are grounds for belief that the current of opposition is turning back, and that a time of favour to the missionary is near at hand. He was for absolute firmness on the part of the British Government in dealing with China, but for motherly gentleness and thoughtfulness on the part of the missionaries. There is opposition, and there will be; what else could be expected? On the other hand, there is steady progress, the adherents of the Christian Church numbering some two hundred thousand.

The other speakers were Revs. A. H. Bestall, of Burma, and W. B. Simpson, of Madras. The former outlined the work in which he has been engaged, with Mandalay as the centre of operations. Burma is the land of pagodas, Buddhism having its paw on everything; and when all other difficulties are out of the way, there is "the carnal mind" in that country as well as at home. Preaching is the substance of the work, and the young are receiving every care. The lepers, to whom the Buddhist monks never go, have been gathered in a home, which is a great object-lesson to the people. Mr. Simpson's address was also descriptive of life and work in Southern India.

The Salvation Army.

The large Hall of Exeter Hall was filled to overflowing one day last week by the soldiers and friends of the Salvation Army. The occasion was the birthday of General Booth, and the object a day of thanksgiving and farewell of officers who are going abroad to work in various countries. They wore as sashes the flags of the countries to which they are bound, and in the case of Eastern countries wore the native costume. The countries to which they are going are South Africa, Jamaica, South America, British Guiana, the United States, India, and Japan.

General Booth addressed the large audience, thanking them for the result of the self-denial week, which showed their love of Christ, their trust in the Army, and their belief in their General, by exceeding the amount of last year by £4000. Amidst all the troubles and anxieties he was daily called upon to undergo, he could always thank God for the assurance that they were all working together for the good of the Army. He claimed he had a proper standard of theology in the three points of the Salvation charter: the first, the forgiveness of all our sins; secondly, power over ourselves; thirdly, being saved from seeking our own good, and turning to seek the good of others. The Army was a mighty superstructure, and it was almost impossible to realise the good done by it in forty-four different countries.

Medical Missionary Association.

The Christ-like work of alleviating physical suffering is now generally recognised as a powerful auxiliary in Gospel work. This principle received full confirmation by what was said at the annual gathering of this Association, held in Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, as chairman, pointed out the important place which the "gift of healing" occupied in Paul's day, and the access which is gained through the modern form of such work to Jews and Mohammedans especially.

Dr. Maxwell, in presenting the report, mentioned a considerable increase in the number of students in London's great medical schools who are looking forward to a missionary career. Good tidings are to hand from workers already scattered throughout the foreign field; while home branches are in a flourishing condition.

Dr. Sewell McFarlane gave an interesting account of ten years' medical mission work in North China, where he has been labouring for the London Missionary Society, in and around Chi-chou. He had found medical work to be a most valuable evangelistic channel. Earnest words followed from Dr. Walter Miller, the young travelling secretary of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union. Nearly 200 students are studying medicine in the colleges and universities of Great Britain with a view to missionary work. Thirty-five beyond that number have already sailed for foreign fields of labour. Of ninety female students, with the same aim, twenty have sailed.

Mrs. Bishop was warmly received on her first public appearance since her return from the far East. Coming from some of the darkest of earth's dark places in Asiatic empires, she said it was pleasant to remember rays of light glimmering here and there, in medical missions. She could justify the testimony given as to the practical wisdom exhibited by those in charge of such work in China and Corea. Dr. Main's hospital in Hang-chow had developed widespread influence; and it was the same with Dr. Christie's mission in Manchuria. In Swatow, Dr. Causland had abundant cause to rejoice in spiritual as well as material cures. At Wukingfu, in the Hukka country, similar blessed results were seen under Dr. McPhun. It was remarkable to find the Chinese viceroy of the province giving his patronage to Dr. Main's hospital, while mandarins, as paying patients, testify that it must be a good religion which bears such fruits of kindness as they receive. In Moukden, the capital of Manchuria, Dr. Christie and his workers command the confidence of Chinese officials from the governor downward, who annually make large contributions towards supporting the hospital. Mrs. Bishop's testimony was that she had travelled for more than seven years in Asia, and, as one entirely unconnected with missions except by sympathy and interest, she desired to bear the strongest witness that could be borne to the blessings of medical missions, wherever they are carried on wisely, in spreading a knowledge of the glorious Gospel, and in gradually putting an end to the barbarous and brutal modes of so-called healing which are practised by heathen peoples themselves.

Church Missionary Society.

All day long on Tuesday, something was going forward in connection with this eminently useful organisation of ancient foundation. Breakfast at an early hour, followed by morning meetings in both Exeter and St. James's Halls, an afternoon meeting for ladies (Exeter Hall), and two evening meetings in the same building. The Strand gathering at 11 a.m. was presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and, as usual, every available seat was filled long before the commencement of the proceedings.

After Scripture and prayer, came the committee's review of the past year, read by the Hon. Sec. from a bulky pamphlet, in which, however, the committee reviewed the year in the briefest and most condensed sentences possible. As this document was in the hands of everyone in the hall, there is the less need for us to summarise the details, which, on the whole, called forth unfeigned thanksgiving for the supply, by a gracious God, of the two great needs of the Society—men and money.

His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury was warmly received on rising to deliver his address as chairman. From boyhood he had been much interested in a Society which all must recognise as being inspired by God Himself. An unseen power had enabled the Church of God to pursue its way through the ages, with such remarkable progress, despite innumerable difficulties which must have overwhelmed any merely human agency. The purpose for which the Church exists is a part of the Christian life itself, and aims at the spiritual good of the whole human race. The work to be done at home is largely dependent upon that which is accomplished abroad. If we are to come nearer and nearer to God, one step is the devotion of your life to the conversion of mankind. Every Christian is bound to follow Christ, and this involves self-denial for the spiritual benefit of others.

A resolution reappointing officers, acknowledging the Divine faithfulness in supply of means and living agents, and urging increased recognition of Christian responsibility to evangelise the heathen, was moved by Sir John Kennaway, who spoke in thankful terms of progress marked by mercies unnumbered, opportunities innumerable, dangers averted, and perhaps discipline given. An appreciative review of the Society's finance recognised its ability to meet liabilities, and, at the same time, the necessity for earnest effort to cover the adverse balance. Dealing with the temptation to forget God in the intoxication of national success and prosperity, Sir John counselled practical remembrance of the fact that it is righteousness which exalteth a nation.

Dr. Saumarez Smith, Bishop of Sydney, seconded a resolution expressing sympathy with the Society's work. This he did as President of the Board of Missions and the Church Missionary Association in Sydney. He eloquently advocated the need for doing more, in thought, prayer, effort, and gifts, for the great work of proclaiming the Gospel to all the world. The thought that we have not done enough should not discourage, but rather stimulate to greater unity and energy in God's work.

The desire of all assembled to "offer up thanksgiving to Almighty God for the priceless blessings bestowed upon Great Britain and the world at large during the sixty years of Her Majesty's reign" was expressed in a resolution moved by Bishop Williams (Waiapu), who confined his remarks to thankful recognition of the general growth of missionary interest and enterprise, which, among other places, had been certainly apparent in New Zealand, ever since the visit of Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. Robert Stewart, that country having its own missionaries in Japan, India, Western Africa, and elsewhere. But there is still much missionary work to be done in New Zealand which can hardly be accomplished by European agents, but must be done by the natives themselves, and active effort is in operation to this end. If successful missionary work is to be secured, we must enlarge our sympathies and co-operation as much as possible, abstaining from envious criticism of the weak or faulty instruments which God is pleased to employ.

Rev. J. C. Hoare (Cheh-Kiang) spoke of a marked and continuous progress in God's work during the twenty-one years he has laboured in China. The growth of Missions in that country is in an increasing ratio, comparing period with period, and this is considered to indicate a deepened spiritual life. Progress is largely connected with the development of native pastorates. Such signs constitute a loud cry for more workers.

Bishop Tugwell, in an earnest address, pressed home the unsatisfied claims of China, India, and Africa for Gospel light. Rev. H. D. Williamson (Bengal) read a letter, giving a painful picture of famine sufferings in India, and claimed sympathy, which he said ought to be more than the mere giving of relief in money.

A stirring closing address came from Rev. Canon McCormick, who said that increased support of the Society was demanded by considerations of fidelity, patriotism, and devotion.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

Sir William Vincent presided at St. James's Hall over the annual meeting of this Union, which provides a central association for reformatories, refuges, industrial schools, and other voluntary institutions of a similar nature. The report referred to the report of the Government Departmental Committee on reformatory work, etc. It was pointed out that there had been of late a tendency to detract from the grand results accomplished by reformatory and industrial schools, while the statistics given were misleading. The committee regretted that so little provision was made for feeble-minded and epileptic children, and that there was no certified reformatory school for Protestant girls in Ireland. With regard to "criminal inebriates," or so-called habitual drunkards, legislation largely in the interests of the children of such parents was much needed. The provident and benevolent fund of the Union was in a flourishing condition, and was largely supported by the workers. The "female mission," commenced in 1858, was still doing a valuable work.

A resolution approving of the work of the Union was moved by the chairman, and seconded by Rev. J. W. Horsley.

Aged Pilgrims' Society.

Alderman Sir Joseph Savory presided on Monday evening at the anniversary of this society, held in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. The society, has for its object the regular and permanent help of Christian aged poor. Its operations extend to all parts of the United Kingdom. Mr. Hazelton (secretary) stated that since the establishment of the society 6420 persons had been assisted, and £265,000 distributed. The income had increased in all branches, but the subscriptions were not sufficient. The expenditure was £13,000 per year. All the homes were in excellent order.

The Chairman said that it would be difficult to say that any society was more fraught with charity than this one. The Dean of Norwich claimed as a special significance for the gathering, that, while the young took up a large amount of attention, they were assembled on behalf of the aged. He liked the society for its catholicity, and appealed for increased subscriptions, so that the pensions might be raised to a respectable sum; and Mr. F. Bevan said he would like the meeting to resolve that in memory of the celebration of the Queen's long reign, every 5-guinea pension should be raised to £7 7s. Several other speakers advocated the claims of the Society.

The Woolwich Mission.

"GO your way, and tell...what things ye have seen and heard, how that the blind see, the lame walk...to the poor the Gospel is preached." These words, which formed the message sent by our Lord to John in prison, may well be taken to describe the visit of Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins to Woolwich.

From the first the meetings have been most encouraging, and those held last Sunday formed a fitting and cheering climax not only to this mission but to the present visit of the evangelists to these shores. No wonder, then, at the heartiness with which the large audience sang:—

Great things He hath taught us,
Great things He hath done.

"Look unto Me and be ye saved," was the text both afternoon and evening. "Why don't you do it?" began Major Whittle; and with characteristic earnestness he pleaded for response to the loving invitation of the Lord. "'Beside Me there is none else,' says Jehovah. You believe in yourself, in your philosophy, in your own ideas of salvation, but in Him alone can you find rest and peace." Tenderly, fervently, logically, and convincingly he laid the whole case before his audience—the power of sin, the need of a Saviour, the all-sufficiency of his power to pardon and sanctify.

At the preacher's side were his fellow-labourers, Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, whose gift of song has done much to deepen the solemn impressions otherwise formed. A male choir, as well as a mixed one, also rendered important service. Indeed, everything that human effort could do had been carried out by the workers, from pastor downwards, with a heartiness and efficiency that left nothing to be desired. The Y.M. and Y.W. Christian Associations, the Polytechnic, and many helpers from other churches, notably St. James's, as well as the Soldiers' Homes, threw themselves into the mission with a determination that was well rewarded in the result. The cases of blessing recorded were many and interesting. It is not desirable to identify individuals by minute details, but the exceeding brightness of some of the converts augurs well for their future usefulness.

The annual "May Breakfast" of local Christian workers happened to fall due on Sunday morning, and a very happy and profitable time was spent. (The Y.M.C.A., by the way, which was active in the arranging of it, has recently acquired enlarged premises at considerable outlay, but sadly needs funds for a paid secretary to devote his whole time to develop and consolidate the work.)

At the close of the afternoon address, after-meetings were held separately for men and women, at each of which inspiriting testimonies were given of the work of God in many hearts (not only during this mission, but at previous visits of Major Whittle, as well as of Messrs. Moody and Sankey), it was grand to hear man after man—mostly, now or formerly in the army—rise and joyfully confess Christ. The same may be said of the women's gathering.

Rev. J. Wilson, pastor of the tabernacle in which the meetings were held, is solving the problem of "How to reach the masses" by holding forth the attraction of a pure and simple Gospel. As a consequence the building is filled Sunday by Sunday with some 2000. Oh, the pity of it that so many offer the husks of advanced thought and criticism to lean and hungry congregations, when it has been demonstrated a thousand times that the people will flock to hear the good tidings of the blessed God!

Pastor J. Wilson writes: "I have just come from the committee-meeting. The workers are delighted. I never saw Christian workers in higher spirits; 120 cards were sent in, and one remarked, 'If all the Christians who have received blessing had sent in cards what a number we should have had!' There are many who have been groping their way, who are now rejoicing in the light. Altogether it has been a blessed and fruitful mission. It has brought Christians of different denominations into the closest fellowship."

Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins sail for America this week, but Major Whittle hopes to preach at the Conference Hall, Stratford, next Lord's Day, and at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, on May 16. Being somewhat wearied with the winter's campaign, he is resting on the weekdays, and expects to sail for home on May 22.

A good many Church Members are like Lazarus when he got out of the sepulchre—bound hand and foot.—D. L. Moody.

Evangelistic Notes.

MR. H. POWERS, of Hull, has held a mission in the Dunn Hall, Paisley, in connection with the U.P. church of which Principal Hutton is minister. Much blessing has been the result.

Gospel services conducted at Harbertonford, Devon, by Mr. John Elliott, have been well attended, The numbers increasing night after night, it was thought well to go on another week. People have walked several miles from other villages to attend the meetings.

Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, has completed a month's services in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, London, E. This was the first visit of Mr. Collins to Mr. Charrington's work, and it was evident from the beginning that his efforts would be blessed. The great hall was crowded on Sundays, and the week-night services were above the average. All Mr. Collins's addresses are well thought out, and delivered with power. Night after night men and women sought assistance in the inquiry room, and many records have been made of those who have professed to decide for Christ. On Wednesday week the area of the great hall was crowded to hear his last address, and at the close many pressed forward to wish Mr. Collins God-speed in his work.

The Glasgow Open-air Gospel Mission has concluded a visit to Dumfries. Meetings were held in the railway station waiting-room, and in the Dumfries Baptist Church. Many professed to receive blessing.

The work at Lincoln April Fair was greatly blessed. The evangelists, Messrs. Neech and Willy, with the assistance of Rev. G. Goodchild, Skegness, and Mr. Fall, the Y.M.C.A. secretary, reached the crowds in a remarkable manner.

Mr. H. M. Barnett has conducted a four days' mission at the Christian Community Hall in High-street, Poplar. His labours were so much appreciated that a second mission, to be held this month, was arranged.

Temperance Notes.

A GROCER'S shop at Fleetwood, which is only rated at £25 10s. rental, lately sold for £5,900 because it had an "off licence"!

Miss Agnes Slack, hon. sec. National British Women's Temperance Association, has addressed fifty-one meetings since her return from America in December.

In last week's issue the Temperance Record shows from recent painful facts how "holidays as at present made use of by large numbers are not a blessing, but a curse."

At a meeting in Manchester the Archbishop of Canterbury said the temperance reform had outgrown ridicule, and had convinced many members of the medical profession; what they wanted now was perseverance.

At the Glasgow Licensing Court, last week, it was stated a publican in the city had attempted to influence the bench by sending to one of the magistrates a sum of £40. The matter is to be dealt with as a criminal offence.

Dr. Talmage says:—"It seems to me that it is about time for the 17,000,000 professors of religion in America to take sides. It is going to be an out-and-out battle between drunkenness and sobriety, between heaven and hell, between God and the devil."

The annual meetings of the B.W.T.A. will be held on May 30 to June 3. On the Sunday numerous services will be held throughout London; a central gathering at Union Chapel, Islington, will be addressed by Mrs. Harrison Lee. The public meeting at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, is fixed for Wednesday evening, June 2, and will take the form of a demonstration in aid of the Duxhurst Industrial Farm Colony.

Cruelty to Horses.—A correspondent writes to us describing the grossly cruel treatment meted out to worn-out horses at Prato, near Florence, where the animals are done to death in diabolical ways, and their remains scattered about to enrich the olive groves. It is proposed to institute a place in Florence where these noble animals, after their time of useful service is past, may be humanely killed. Friends in this country wishing to help such a good object may communicate with MRS. HARFORD ADLAM, the Manor House, Chew Magna, Somerset.

The Y.M.C.A.

ON the invitation of Mr. W. D. Hodges, a social gathering was held on Friday evening in the Trevor Chapel schoolroom of the members of the Brompton and South Kensington Y.M.C.A., which is shortly entering new rooms in the Brompton Road.

At the annual meeting of the Worcester Association, a cordial welcome was given by a large gathering to the newly elected president, Mr. J. A. McNaught, who delivered an excellent address. Mr. F. C. Bennett, travelling secretary for the Midlands, took part.

A meeting of much interest took place at the Aldersgate centre, on the evening of April 29, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, when opportunity was taken to welcome Mr. Basil Hewer to his new sphere of labour. There was a large attendance of members and associates. Addresses bearing upon Mr. Hewer's past usefulness in the association, and welcoming him to his new sphere were delivered by Mr. W. H. Mills, Mr. J. Steinle (Eastbourne), Mr. Seagram, Mr. R. Burn, Mr. W. Hind Smith, Mr. J. H. Putterill, and others.

The Y.W.C.A.

THERE will shortly be opened in Long Island (U.S.A), a large picturesque summer house, as a "Rest Home Annexe" of the Brooklyn Association. About fifty young women can be accommodated at one time.

There was a large attendance of the members of the Newport Association, held on April 23, when the spring social meeting was held. The report showed that a practical interest had been shown in missionary enterprise.

The members of the Longforgan Association assembled at Castle Huntly to a large and influencial gathering of friends of the Institute. Lord Kinnaird delivered a short address, in which he referred to the painful influence of light literature, and advocated the claims of the "home-study" department of the Y.W.C.A.

Progress in Central Africa.

A SERIES of remarkable returns have been received showing the progress of the Livingstonia Mission under Dr. Robert Laws and his colleagues. Along the west shore of Lake Nyassa and up to the watershed where the Congo has its origin, the Scottish and Scoto-Dutch teachers have more than 80,000 in 80 schools under daily training in their mother tongue—chiefly Nyanja—in English and in handicrafts. The best of the students, young men and young women, are drafted to the new Livingstonia Institution, which Dr. Laws has organised on the healthy uplands above Florence Bay. There, on a site granted by the British South Africa Company in what is known as Northern Rhodesia, 127 youths are under instruction, drawn from all the tribes around to the number of fifteen. Future catechists are working at theology, a dozen more are receiving practical instruction in teaching, others are apprenticed to printing, telegraphy, and surgical dressing and dispensing.

The African is sharp at two things—he is a born linguist, especially in speaking and writing English; and he is a born musician. The printing press is not only turning out illustrated school and reading books, which are eagerly bought, but has produced a newspaper of eight quarto pages, The Aurora, to appear every two months. Science and agriculture are cared for by experts. At Mwenso, on the Talganyika plateau, the climate and the crops are like those of England.—Dundee Advertiser.

Work at Epsom Races.

DEAR SIR,—At the Epsom spring races last week the agents of the Open-air Mission, joined by a goodly band of the London City Mission male choir, took their stand. The Gospel was preached with no uncertain sound to throngs of people, while thousands of booklets were distributed. Epsom summer races take place later. From Sunday, May 30, to Friday, June 4, we hope to be there, in number about seventy men.

For the smaller gathering our ordinary funds have sufficed, but they are utterly unable to bear the strain involved in the concentration of so many men for nearly a week; in the consequent railway and other expenses; and in the purchase of the Gospel literature necessary. May we not hope for earnest prayer on our behalf, and for more gifts from the Lord's stewards?—Yours faithfully,

FRANK COCKREM, Secretary.

11, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 16.

PAUL PREACHING TO THE GENTILES.—Acts. xiv. 11-22.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Acts xiii. 47.

IN connection with this lesson it will be well for the teacher to trace on the map the whole course of this first missionary journey, pointing out each place mentioned, and associating with it some fact of the Bible story. Previous lessons have dealt with their leaving Antioch in Syria, going to the island of Cyprus, thence to Asia Minor, and particularly to Antioch in Pisidia. From Antioch they journeyed to Iconium, in Lycaonia. This is the modern Konieh, and was situated about forty-five miles south-east of Antioch, and at the foot of Mount Taurus. Here, as at Antioch, they met with persecution, yet were successful in forming a Christian church (1-4).

Lystra, the scene of this story, was over twenty miles south of Iconium. The people are described as "wild and lawless." "The hill people bore the name of being the most confirmed brigands. Cicero speaks of the population as a race of savages."—Geikie. Tell the story of the miracle wrought upon the impotent man (8-10). It is not surprising that upon such a people this miracle should make a profound impression. It is with the result of this miracle this lesson deals.

Dwell only on two things:—

I. THE SUPERSTITION OF THE PEOPLE (11-13).—They said, in the speech of Lycaonia (now unknown), "The gods are come down," etc. (11). The statement is, first, an evidence of their ignorance. They were probably familiar with the story which represents Jupiter and Mercury visiting the people of that region, seeking entertainment, but treated almost everywhere with ridicule. Finally two peasants, Baucis and Philemon, received them into their hut, and immediately their little shed became a stately temple. This was the only idea of incarnation they had. It is not surprising, therefore, that they should explain this miracle by supposing that Barnabas, who was probably the more imposing in appearance, was Jupiter, and that Paul, who had preached the Gospel, was Mercurius, the messenger and attendant of Jupiter, and the spokesman of the gods (12).

But their mistake, next, suggests a deep want of the human heart. Bethlehem and the Incarnation are necessary to men. Hindus have their false incarnations, and are still expecting another. We have already what the heart needs. Apply the lesson: we know the true God, and that He has come down "in the likeness of men." Have we been as much concerned to welcome Him as these heathen were to pay their worship to these supposed deities? How was Christ received at his very birth? Are we still refusing to make room for Him?

II. THE FAITHFULNESS OF THE APOSTLES (14-22). This was manifested in many ways. (1) In their rejection of this mistaken worship.—It was a subtle form of temptation; far more likely to injure them than the bitterest form of persecution. Meeting persecution is like fighting an enemy you can see; but such a temptation is a foe in the garb of a friend. Contrast the Apostles with the wicked King Herod (xii. 23), and with the Church dignitaries who claim to be their successors. But there are other ways of falling into this snare. Whenever the servant consents to receive honour which belongs only to his Lord he has yielded to this temptation. It needs a spirit jealous for the glory of God to resist such a temptation.

(2) In their endurance of suffering for the sake of Christ (19, 20).—They were living examples of the truth they taught to others (22), and show us how to endure as "good soldiers of Jesus Christ." The persecution was stirred up by others (19), but "the people" were easily persuaded to stone the man whom they had just sought to worship. "Once was I stoned," says the Apostle (2 Cor. xi. 25). This was the occasion; and the stoning was so thoroughly done that he was left for dead. His recovery was clearly miraculous (20). Again enforce the lesson: Be faithful even unto death. Care nothing for the opinions of men. Value not their praise—dread not their wrath. Opportunities for endurance are found in every life.

(3) In their perseverance in the work (21, 22).—Neither flattery nor stoning turned them aside. They returned to the very cities in which they had been most bitterly persecuted, and sought to confirm the work in each place. The secret of such fidelity lay in the fact that God was working with them. Note that the Apostles "rehearsed all that God had done with them" (27). That conviction may be ours also. Cultivate the consciousness of his presence with you, and of your oneness with Him in life and service. What can you do without Him? What may you not do with Him?

Obituary.

REV. WM. FRITH.

The death is announced of Rev. Wm. Frith, pastor of the Spurgeon Memorial Church, Westcliffe, South-end-on-Sea. Mr. Frith laboured for many years in and around the Metropolis, and was highly esteemed for his sturdy Protestantism. He was the author of several books and many tracts. After an illness extending over about three months, Mr. Frith passed away on Thursday last, at the age of sixty-two.

REV. GEO. POPLE, CONGO MISSIONARY.

The Baptist Missionary Society has received intelligence of the death of Rev. George R. Pople, missionary on the Congo. The cable gives nothing more than this bare fact. Mr. Pople was trained at Bristol College, and he first went out to the mission field in 1892. It is less than three months since Rev. Albert Wherrett, another agent of the Society, died while labouring in the same field.

MR. THOS. BUTT.

This Joyful News evangelist has met his death by drowning in Pondo Land, South Africa. He endeavoured to cross a swollen river by swimming, in order to obtain letters from home, and was swept away by the current. Mr. Butt went out eighteen months ago, and after staying for a time with Mr. Chiswell at Umzamba began work at the Mthlenzi, where, the people being sympathetic, there appeared every prospect of a successful mission.

DEAN GOULBURN.

The death is announced of Dr. Goulburn, for many years Dean of Norwich. The son of a sergeant-at-law, he early gave promise of a distinguished career. He was for a time head master of Rugby School, was appointed Dean of Norwich in 1866, and retired in 1889, taking up his residence at Tunbridge Wells, where he died on Monday. He was Bampton lecturer in 1850, and the author of several learned and useful works. For years the Dean was a familiar figure in Evangelical circles.

REV. GEORGE WILSON.

We regret to have to record the sudden death, at the Bible House, last week, of Rev. George Wilson, the literary superintendent of the British and Foreign Bible Society. Mr. Wilson was for some years a Presbyterian pastor in London previous to his appointment in connection with Bible work, and was possessed of fine literary gifts. He had prepared the usual statements for presentation at the annual meeting of the Society this week, and his sudden call deprives the work of a valued helper. His remains were interred at Kensal Green on Monday afternoon.

DR. SMYLY, DEAN OF DERRY,

The death is announced of Very Rev. Andrew Ferguson Smyly, Dean of Derry, which took place a few days ago in the house of his sister, Miss Smyly, Upper Merrion-street, Dublin. He had been suffering for a long period from an affection of the heart, which at last assumed a serious form with fatal results. His unexpected death will cause general regret in Ireland, but more especially in the diocese of Derry and Raphoe, where the whole of his ministerial life was spent. The restoration and enlargement of the cathedral was largely due to his liberality and persevering energy. To him Derry owes also excellent new schools.

MR. JOHN ADAM NORRIE.

In Edinburgh and Oxford many are mourning the death of Mr. John Adam Norrie, at the early age of twenty-five. Coming of a Christian family resident in the first-named city, the young man had a brilliant university career, carrying off many prizes and distinctions, and entered the Indian Civil Service, coming out first in successive competitions. With every prospect of a life of usefulness and noble influence, he went to India in 1892, and took up active religious work as well as important official duties. One who enjoyed his friendship has testified that "during the few years of his life spent in India he did more good by the example he set to those around him than very many who had lived to an old age in that country." Weakened by an illness last year Mr. Norrie was hardly prepared for the extra pressure of the famine times. He fell an easy prey to cholera at Bahraich, Oudh, on April 5, leaving a young wife and a large circle of sorrowing friends.

MR. ROBERT CREWDSON, J.P.

This Christian brother, residing at Rydal Mount, Ambleside, entered into his rest on Sunday morning, April 25, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was for years a co-worker in Manchester with the late Canon Stowell, Canon Bardsley, Bishop Frazer, and others. He was an active member of the committee of Manchester City Mission. Bible, missionary, and tract societies found in him a generous giver, and his calm, clear judgment in times of difficulty and trial were most valuable. His later years have been spent almost in retirement at Rydal. Amongst his special objects was a work in the slate districts of the Landales, where he built a mission hall and employed two missionaries and a colporteur, and frequently on summer evenings he would himself address the congregation. Perhaps his greatest characteristic was his love and study of the Bible; he devoted from two to four hours each day to this object.

Personalia.

Mr. C. J. Brooks, evangelist, will be glad to engage in Gospel work in needy villages. Friends desiring his services should address, care of Mr. Hitchcock, 20, Fishpool-street, St. Albans, Herts.

Dr. Norman L. Walker, editor of The Free Church of Scotland Monthly, is on a visit to Egypt and Palestine. In the May number of the Monthly he describes Gibraltar and the work of the Presbyterians there.

Evangelist Gipsy Smith having engaged to work for twelve months (beginning September next) with the "National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches," arrangements for his services for the present must be made with Rev. Thomas Law, Memorial Hall, London, E.C.

Miss Swift, widely known as Brigadier Susie F. Swift, has left the Salvation Army to enter the Roman Catholic Church. Miss Swift has been head of the Auxiliary League of the Army in America, and has edited All the World in London. She joined the Army in Edinburgh some twelve years ago.

Trevandrum City Mission.

IN his report for last year, Mr. H. T. Wills (L.M.S.) says:—

Trevandrum with its suburbs occupies a district of some twenty square miles. The population varies from about 60,000 to perhaps 100,000 or more on special occasions, while great numbers of merchants, labourers, and others are constantly visiting the city. This affords us a grand opportunity for the wide diffusion of the Gospel message. In the city proper the work is maintained by constant preaching at our reading-room, and in the open-air by roadside and market-place. Sites are very much needed in the crowded parts of the city to act as centres for our work, but there are no funds available.

We have been led to open some ten school chapels in the suburbs, and in connection with these we have some 750 people, most of whom have left devil worship or other degrading superstitions for the light and love of the Gospel of Christ, within the past three or four years. They belong chiefly to the lowest classes, who are still virtually, though not theoretically, slaves of the higher castes. From these they suffer great persecutions, which, however, they bear well. The progress they make is simply astounding to those who do not know the uplifting power of the Gospel of Christ.

The people are saved body and soul. As heathen they have acquired filthy and evil habits and are generally thriftless. All hope of ever bettering themselves is extinguished. Fate rules everything. Hence they make little or no effort to help themselves, and when famine or disease comes they just lie down and die like sheep. The Gospel of Christ makes men of them, gives them hope, and so enables them to face life with all its anxieties.

It is my firm belief that to give India the Gospel is by far the best way of dealing with the difficulties which are constantly coming up. And surely the spiritual need of men is far more urgent than their mere bodily need, however acute. Feed the body if you can, but at all costs save the soul. Would that the people of God would realise the importance of this!

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to the London Mission House, Blomfield-street, London, E.C., or to Mr. S. D. Wills, J.P., Castle Green, Bristol.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on a Mission to Jews and Gentiles by Mr. W. R. Lane, in the Central Hall, Philpot-street, Whitechapel, from May 9 to 14.

Christ must be loved for Himself. Let us not so much trouble ourselves about signs as be careful to do our duty to Christ, and then will Christ discover his love clearly unto us.—Sibbes.

An old coloured woman, who was an earnest Christian, lay dying. Someone asked her why God would save an old sinner like her. She answered, "God is g'wine to p'int the angels to me, and tell 'em to see what the grace of God can do."

The Discipline of Suffering.—I have always found that the more I had of trial the better it was for me. We had rather suffer with Christ than be at ease in the world. The more we think of his sufferings, the less we shall think of our own.—Dr. John Cairns.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

CAMBRIDGE.

THE main feature of the May term promises to be the series of addresses on "The Historical Evidences of Christianity," by Rev. W. Cunningham. The first was delivered last Sunday, the subject being "The Nature and Importance of the Evidence." The text was Heb. xi. 1. The cure of infidelity about unseen realities, he said, is rather in the deepening of our personal experience than in arguments drawn from a single side of human life. Dr. Cunningham's qualifications for his task are well known in and outside University circles.

The University sermon was preached by Dr. G. S. Gibson, of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Bishop Assistant of Cape Colony. The text was, "Go ye into all the world," etc., and it was one of the most powerful missionary sermons that has recently been heard in Cambridge.

Scottish Notes.

A CONFERENCE on unity in faith and work was held last week in the Albert Hall, Stirling.

Two Forfarshire pastors, Rev. J. Cæsar, of Parbride, and Rev. J. Anderson, Kirkden, this week attain their ministerial jubilee.

There are over 114,000 scholars in connection with the Glasgow Sabbath School Union, the annual meeting of which was held last week.

During the past month gifts of £500 and £250 have been given by Glasgow friends towards the cost of Mr. Quarrier's Consumptive Hospitals at Bridge of Weir.

The Glasgow Home Mission Union last year by its visiting agents secured the adhesion of 480 lapsed members, besides inducing over 1400 careless persons to attend some church or mission service.

The annual meetings of the U.P. Synod and of the Congregational Union of Scotland are being held this week. The question of union with the Free Church will be considered at the former assembly.

The new hall in Bridge-street, Alexandria, which is the gift of Mr. A. Orr Ewing, of the C.I.M., and which is built on the site of the old Evangelistic Hall, was recently opened by a largely-attended conference on Christian life and work. During these special services much blessing was experienced.

Irish Notes.

AT the Mission Church of the Society for Irish Church Missions in Dublin a reception of fifteen converts from the Church of Rome took place on Sunday week.

The friends in Dublin of the due observance of the Lord's Day are making efforts to counteract the evils attending athletic and other sports that are permitted to be held in and around the city.

During the past week Dr. A. T. Pierson, of New York, delivered two addresses each day in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Belfast. The meetings were well attended, and the addresses were listened to with deep attention.

The annual meetings on behalf of the Church Missionary Society were held in the Gregg Memorial Hall, Dublin, last Friday, and were well attended. Upwards of fifty sermons were preached last Sunday in Dublin churches in aid of the Society.

Work for Chinese Women.

IN a recent letter Mrs. Dalziel, writing from 21, Whangpoo-road, Shanghai, China, says:—

